5. Homicide 🔑309(1)—Instruction defining phrase "without due caution and circumspection" and relating to finding of commission of lawful act in unlawful manner held ambiguous (Pen. Code, § 192).

Instruction in a prosecution under Pen. Code, § 192, for manslaughter, based on involuntary killing defining phrase "without due caution and circumspection" as the doing of an act otherwise lawful, in a culpable or reckless manner, and requiring finding beyond reasonable doubt that defendant drove his automobile in a reckless manner at the time of the accident in order to warrant conviction on theory that defendant performed lawful act in an unlawful manner, held properly refused as being ambiguous.

6. Criminal law 🔑829(4)—Question as to conduct to be pursued by automobile driver confronted with emergency held sufficiently covered by instruction given (Pen. Code, § 192).

In prosecution for manslaughter under Pen. Code, § 192, based on killing of pedestrian by defendant while driving an automobile, refusal of instruction relating to conduct defendant should pursue when confronted with an emergency held not erroneous as being sufficiently covered by instruction given.

7. Criminal law 🔑781(4)—Instruction as to observing verbal statements or alleged admissions with caution, held properly refused as too general.

Instruction that, in respect to all verbal statements or alleged admissions, it might be observed that these ought to be observed with caution, held properly refused as being so general as to be meaningless.

8. Criminal law 🔑1130(2)—Appellate court is not required to decide points as to refusal of instructions identified only by reference to pages of transcript.

Where many requested instructions refused by trial court were identified only by reference to pages of clerk's transcript on which instruction occurred, appellate court was not required to decide points so meagerly presented.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edward Henderson, Judge.

Charles E. Lloyd was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Thos. P. White, of Los Angeles (A. P. G. Steffes, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and James S. Howie, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

WORKS, P. J. Defendant was charged with the crime of manslaughter, and was convicted. He appeals from the judgment and from an order of the trial court denying his motion for a new trial.

The killing which led to appellant's conviction was involuntary. The catastrophe occurred at about 10 o'clock at night. Immediately preceding the tragic event appellant, along with a large number of other drivers of automobiles, was held on Wilshire boulevard, in the city of Los Angeles, at the easterly line of Western avenue, by the automatic traffic signals maintained at the intersection. As the assembled cars stood, in several lines, appellant was at the extreme left and at or near the middle line of Wilshire. Upon proper signal, the cars moved forward in a body, crossed Western and moved westward along Wilshire. A short block west of Western, and parallel to it, Manhattan avenue enters Wilshire from the north, but is not prolonged across it. One Lloyd Youmans had parked his automobile at the south curb of Wilshire immediately opposite the confluence of Manhattan with that thoroughfare. He had crossed Wilshire afoot for the purpose of doing some shopping on the north side of the boulevard. This duty having been performed, he was returning to the south side of Wilshire along an imaginary prolongation of the easterly sidewalk of Manhattan. He reached a point at or near the middle of Wilshire as the traffic lately released from the Wilshire-Western intersection approached from the eastward. At the middle of Wilshire, and upon an imaginary prolongation of the easterly curb line of Manhattan, a traffic "button" was embedded in the pavement. At or near this point Youmans stopped and looked toward the west, but apparently not toward the east. He was then run down by the car driven by appellant and was killed. There was much evidence that, because of the great number of headlights approaching the Wilshire-Manhattan intersection from both directions, along Wilshire, it was very difficult to see Youmans as he stood near the traffic button. Indeed, the drivers of some cars did not perceive him until an instant before he was struck down. Appellant says he saw him when he was about 16 feet from appellant's car and directly ahead. However, there was ample evidence that at the moment of the catastrophe a part of appellant's car was 2 or 3 feet southerly from the traffic button, that appellant was driving at the rate of 40 miles an hour, and that he was intoxicated.

[1] Appellant complains that the trial judge refused to give to the jury various instructions proffered by him, and no other points are made for a reversal. In defending one of the refused instructions, appellant says that, the killing of Youmans by him having been shown by the prosecution, the burden was cast upon appellant to excuse or mitigate his apparent offense, and that the instruction was offered for the purpose of acquainting the jury with a rule of law to the effect that the excuse or mitigation need not be shown beyond a reasonable doubt, nor even by a preponderance of the evidence. The instruction was unnecessary, as no such burden as appellant contemplates is cast upon a defendant in a manslaughter case. Section 1105 of the Penal Code reads: "Upon a trial for murder, the commission of the homicide by the defendant being proved, the burden of proving circumstances of mitigation, or that justify or excuse it, devolves upon him, unless the proof on the part of the prosecution tends to show that the crime committed only amounts to manslaughter, or that the defendant was justifiable or excusable." This section seems so plain as to completely answer appellant's contention. As the burden to which appellant refers is not imposed upon the defendant when the charge is murder, and the evidence of the prosecution tends to show only that he is guilty of manslaughter, it would seem obvious that the Legislature did not intend to cast the burden upon a defendant when the original charge is manslaughter. Certainly, the section does not say that the burden is cast upon one charged with the latter crime. However, it has been decided that, under a charge of assault with intent to commit murder, section 1105 has no application, as the "principle of the shifting of the burden of proof in cases of homicide is purely a creation of the statute, and must be limited to the words of the statute." People v. Gordon, 88 Cal. 422, 26 P. 502. See, also, People v. Lopez, 81 Cal. App. 199, 253 P. 169. The mandate of the section, by its express terms, is limited to "a trial for murder." The instruction was properly refused.

[2] Appellant offered an instruction designed to acquaint the jury with the general rule that the making of a criminal charge against one raises no presumption of his guilt, and it was refused. After saying that an indictment does raise such a presumption under certain circumstances, appellant proceeds in his brief: "This presumption, however, does not apply during the trial of a defendant before a petit jury. The reasoning of the rule adopted by the courts is that the facts of the case have been passed upon by a grand jury of reputable citizens and that their verdict, we might say, expressed by the filing of their indictment is sufficient to create a presumption of guilt for certain purposes. The trial jury in this case having been apprised of the indictment of the defendant by the grand jury, should in the interests of justice have been cautioned concerning this matter of such great importance to the defendant." We think the proffered instruction was unnecessary, and that it was therefore properly refused. The jury was instructed fully as to the presumption of innocence, and concerning the doctrine of reasonable doubt. Particularly the text of section 1096 of the Penal Code was given. This section contains the statement that "a defendant in a criminal case is presumed to be innocent until the contrary is proved," and it exhibits a satisfactory definition of "reasonable doubt." Section 1096a of the same code, as added by St. 1927, p. 1039, reads: "In charging a jury, the court may read to the jury section 1096 of this code, and no further instruction on the subject of the presumption of innocence or defining reasonable doubt need be given."

[3] One of appellant's claims of error relates to a lengthy instruction which was offered, but which was refused. It is necessary to quote but a part of this proposed instruction in order completely to justify the action of the trial judge in declining to present it to the jury: "The Court instructs the jury that under the provisions of Section 20 of the Penal Code of this State, in every crime of public offense there must exist a union, or joint operation of act and intent, or criminal negligence. Now, in cases of this kind, where the Indictment charges manslaughter, the overt act, of course, consisting in the driving of the automobile, and, of course, there is no deliberate intent charged against a person in a manslaughter case such as this one; that the defendant deliberately intended to kill the deceased; but the law says that one may be guilty of a crime, to-wit, manslaughter, if as a result of their act a person is killed, although they may not have any intent to kill the person, provided only, however, if they are guilty of criminal negligence. In this case, therefore, in order to sustain a conviction, the prosecution must prove to your satisfaction beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant was guilty of criminal negligence, and unless the prosecution does prove to your satisfaction beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant Charles E. Lloyd was guilty of criminal negligence then he is entitled to an acquittal; because unless there was criminal negligence on the part of the defendant Charles E. Lloyd, then there is no joint operation of the act and intent, or criminal negligence, necessary to constitute a criminal offense. Now the word negligence, according to Subdivision 2 of Section 7 of our Penal Code, means a want of such attention to the nature or probable consequences of the act or omission as a prudent person ordinarily bestows in acting in his own concerns. Therefore, before you can be convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that this defendant Charles E. Lloyd was guilty of criminal negligence you must be convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that he did not use due caution or circumspection on the night of the accident, to the extent of culpability." This language—and there was nothing in the remainder of the proffered instruction to correct it—was bound, if read to the jury, to give that body an incorrect understanding of the law. The request was, in effect, that the jury be told that, in order that a conviction might result, it must be found that appellant was guilty of criminal negligence. Such a finding was not necessary as a prelude to a verdict of guilty. The jury might have refused to believe that appellant was driving at an excessive rate of speed at the time of the catastrophe, and that he was on the left side of the thoroughfare, and yet might have convicted him under a finding that he was driving his car while in a state of intoxication. That part of section 192 of the Penal Code which relates to actions like this is to the effect that involuntary manslaughter may occur "in the commission of an unlawful act, not amounting to felony; or in the commission of a lawful act * * * in an unlawful manner, or without due caution and circumspection." If the jury had determined to convict appellant solely because he was driving while intoxicated, its verdict would have resulted under that part of section 192 relating to the "commission of an unlawful act, not amounting to felony" and not under that part of it which follows the language just quoted, as section 367d of the Penal Code makes it a misdemeanor to drive an automobile while intoxicated, while under section 112 of the Motor Vehicle Act (Stats. 1923, p. 517; Deering, Gen. Laws, 1923 ed., Act 5128) the offense may be either a misdemeanor or a felony. It seems a contradiction of terms to say that criminal negligence is predicable of an act which is a crime, and we have found no definitions to the effect that negligence is an element or a characteristic of any act positively denounced as a crime. Indeed, subdivision 2 of section 7 of the Penal Code seems to indicate directly the contrary. The section declares the signification to be accorded certain words found in the Code, and the subdivision reads: "The words 'neglect,' 'negligence,' 'negligent,' and 'negligently' import a want of such attention to the nature or probable consequences of the act or omission as a prudent man ordinarily bestows in acting in his own concerns." It can hardly be said that an act which constitutes a positive crime can bear any relation to the want of attention a prudent man, acting in his own concerns, ordinarily bestows "to" the nature or probable consequences of his acts or omissions. Crimes like those defined by section 367d of the Penal Code and 112 of the Motor Vehicle Act do not spring from lack of prudence, but from a willful disobedience of the express mandates of penal laws. We do not fail to observe that these considerations may make it necessary some time to determine whether section 20 of the Penal Code, referred to in the proposed instruction, comprises at the present day a complete statement of the point which the Legislature assumed to treat when the section was enacted. If one driving an automobile while intoxicated is not guilty of criminal negligence—and it may be observed here, in addition to what has already been said, that at some stages of drunkenness some men may drive with great caution and circumspection—if, we say, he is not guilty of negligence, then is there, when he is charged with manslaughter, "a union or joint operation of act and intent"? There is an intent to drive while intoxicated, but is that intent of interest when the charge is involuntary manslaughter? Can intent ever be of interest under such a charge, when death has resulted through the "commission of an unlawful act," as to which act itself the intent is clear? We do not answer these questions at present, but it appears not to be improper now to state them.

[4] The trial judge refused to give, upon the request of appellant, an instruction which contained the following: "I instruct you that in order to convict the defendant of the crime of manslaughter charged in this Indictment on the ground that the defendant was engaged in the commission of a lawful act, the prosecution must prove that the lawful act was one which might produce death, and which did produce death, and the prosecution must go further and prove to your satisfaction beyond a reasonable doubt that the lawful act was done in an unlawful manner. Before you can convict this defendant of the crime of manslaughter as charged in this Indictment on the theory that the defendant was engaged in the commission of a lawful act without due caution and circumspection, you must be convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that the actions and conduct of the defendant on the night in question were culpable, that is to say, that he, and he alone, was to blame for the accident." It will be observed that the first sentence of this quotation closes with the statement that "the prosecution must go further and prove * * * that the lawful act was done in an unlawful manner." This is not a correct statement of the law. By the terms of section 192 of the Penal Code an involuntary manslaughter may result from the commission of a lawful act either "in an unlawful manner" or "without due caution and circumspection." The second sentence in the quotation we have made from the proffered instruction adds ambiguity and uncertainty to the inaccuracy of statement inherent in the first. The first sentence refers, generally, to the commission of a lawful act and says, as we have seen, that it must have been committed in an unlawful manner. The second sentence refers, specifically, to a lawful act committed without due caution and circumspection, and assumes to state a rule of law as to such an act committed in that manner. In other words, the first sentence positively excludes a lawful act committed without due caution and circumspection, while the second, immediately following this shutting of the door, proceeds to treat of the excluded subject. The jury could not have understood such an instruction, and it was therefore properly refused.

[5] Appellant proposed the following instruction, which was refused: "The phrase, 'without due caution and circumspection,' as used in the definition of manslaughter, means the doing of an act, otherwise lawful, in a culpable or reckless manner. I therefore charge you that before you can find the defendant guilty of manslaughter on the theory that he performed a lawful act, which might produce death, in an unlawful manner, without due caution and circumspection, you must be convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant drove his automobile in a reckless manner, that is to say, in disregard of the rights of pedestrians and other vehicles upon Wilshire boulevard at the time of the accident, and unless you are so convinced, then I charge you that you should acquit the defendant." That this instruction is ambiguous, and that, if given, it must have confused the jury, is to us patent. The phrase, "without due caution and circumspection," is first defined, and the proffered instruction then therefore charges what must be shown the jury before it can convict because of the commission of a lawful act "in an unlawful manner, without due caution and circumspection," whereas, under the language of the statute, the meaning of the phrase "without due caution and circumspection" bears no relation to the idea conveyed by the phrase "in an unlawful manner." The statute, in so far as it is touched upon in the proposed instruction now under examination, as we have already pointed out, contemplates the crime of manslaughter as arising from a lawful act committed in an unlawful manner or without caution and circumspection. It will be observed that the proffered instruction is also complicated by the omission of this word "or" in the place in which it ought to occur. The instruction was properly refused.

[6] The trial judge refused to give the following proposed instruction: "The court instructs the jury that where doubt exists as to what conduct a defendant should have pursued in a particular case, and intelligent men and women differ as to the proper action to be had, the law does not impute guilt to anyone, if, from the omission to adopt one course instead of another, fatal consequences follow. Therefore, if in the situation which confronted this defendant at the time of the accident in question, you feel that he made an error of judgment in the course which he took, and you feel that by taking another course that was open to him the accident could have been avoided, but that he did not commit an unlawful act, not amounting to a felony, or do a lawful act, which might produce death in an unlawful manner, and that he did not act without due caution or circumspection, then I instruct you that your verdict should be for the defendant and you should acquit him." Appellant complains of the refusal because of the presence in the offered instruction of the language relating to the conduct which a defendant in such a case as this should pursue when confronted with an emergency. We think the point was sufficiently protected by an instruction which the judge gave, and which reads thus: "The court instructs the jury that if from the evidence you believe that at the time of the accident in question the defendant was not guilty of negligence and was exercising that care, circumspection and caution which an ordinarily prudent man, seeing what the defendant saw, confronted with what confronted the defendant, surrounded by traffic and other conditions as was the defendant, would have exercised, then I instruct you it is your duty to return a verdict of not guilty." We refer to this instruction merely as meeting the point made here by appellant, without considering whether it was in all respects proper.

[7] Appellant asked for the following brief

instruction: "In respect to all verbal statements or alleged admissions, it may be observed that these ought to be observed with caution." The request was refused, and appellant contends that the ruling was error. We think it was not. The offered instruction is so general as to be meaningless. We think the jury could not possibly have understood what was meant by it if it had been given.

[8] The closing portion of appellant's brief commences thus: "Without burdening this court with an extended quotation of the several other instructions requested by the defendant that were refused by the trial court, we shall merely refer to the pages of the clerk's transcript upon which these instructions occur. We would request permission in the event that the same becomes necessary to argue these points on oral argument to demonstrate their applicability to the issues presented to the jury." From this beginning it was not to be expected that the points made upon "the several other instructions requested" would be so presented as to require us to decide them, and they are not. Not "several," but many, requested instructions are laid before us either without sufficient means of identification of their contents or without appreciable argument, sometimes without either. We are not called upon to decide points so meagerly presented. The oral argument referred to in the quotation has never been requested, and the statement concerning it has first come to our attention since the submission of the cause for decision.

Judgment and order affirmed.

LECKEY v. HOLST. (Civ. 5560.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. March 20, 1929.

1. Brokers 🔑53—Broker is "procuring cause," when he brings together owner and person ready, able, and willing to purchase or lease on terms fixed.

When broker has found a purchaser or lessee ready, able, and willing to buy or lease on terms fixed, and either procured from that person a valid contract binding him to purchase or lease, or brought the parties together, thus enabling the lessor to secure a contract, had he so desired, broker is "procuring cause" of transaction.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Procuring Cause.]

2. Brokers 🔑60—That lease was void, and memorandum insufficient under statute of frauds, is immaterial, where principal agreed to pay broker "for her efforts."

In broker's action to recover commission, where principal contended that lease was invalid, and memorandum thereof insufficient under statute of frauds (Civ. Code, § 1624, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1973), doubt as to sufficiency of agreement is resolved in favor of broker, where principal subsequently agreed to pay broker "for her efforts" in securing lease, and it was not error to admit agreement in evidence.

3. Brokers 🔑60—After bringing parties together, broker's right to commissions is not affected by failure to execute valid lease.

Fact that property owner and proposed tenant, brought together by broker, execute writing which is not binding as between themselves, does not affect broker's right to recover commission for services rendered.

4. Appeal and error 🔑1071(6)—Failure to find that broker, suing for commissions, did not secure tenant, was not prejudicial, where court found broker rendered services in securing tenant.

In action for broker's commissions for bringing parties together, failure to find on affirmative allegation in answer that broker did not secure tenant for owner was not prejudicial, where court did find that broker rendered services to owner in securing tenant.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George H. Thompson, Judge.

Action by Roberta Paxton Leckey against Anna A. Holst. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. D. Taggart and Timon E. Owens, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

N. B. Nelson, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

YORK, J. Plaintiff, a real estate broker, brought this action to recover broker's commission. The defendant was the owner of property on Western avenue, in the city of Los Angeles, which she was desirous to improve with a building and to lease the same for a term of years. With this in mind, defendant (appellant here) made an oral agreement with plaintiff to secure a tenant for her property, whereupon the plaintiff introduced appellant to Sid Grauman, who wished to open a theater in the neighborhood of appellant's lot on Western avenue. The appellant, in company with the plaintiff, called at the office of Mr. Grauman on April 1, 1921, and an agreement was executed by the terms of which appellant agreed to build a theater and lease it to Mr. Grauman for a period of 15 years at a monthly rental of $850. Mr. Grauman was to furnish certain equipment, and the plans and specifications were to be subject to his approval.

On April 14, 1921, appellant made a contract with Arthur H. O'Brien, an architect, to furnish plans and specifications for the proposed theater building at an agreed price of $600, $500 of which was subsequently paid to him by appellant. On May 31, 1921, plaintiff and appellant had a conference, at which time appellant asked plaintiff to pay her $350, which was commission due to her from plaintiff upon a prior transaction made between them. Plaintiff refused to make settlement of the $350, until appellant would give her note or a writing promising to pay plaintiff the $1,000 commission for the lease of the Western avenue lot. After some discussion, an agreement was drawn whereby appellant agreed to pay plaintiff the sum of $1,000 "for her efforts in securing the lease; the said amount of $1,000 to be paid when agreement is signed, or else to be paid $50 per month for a period of 22 months for first 2 years of the rental period, which begins when the theater is completed."

July 20, 1921, appellant signed an acceptance of the Edwards Building Company's proposal to erect a theater building on the Western avenue lot. On January 28, 1922, Sid Grauman paid appellant $500 to reimburse her for the amount she had paid to Architect O'Brien for plans and specifications, whereupon appellant agreed to release Grauman from any obligation accruing under the agreement to lease of April 1, 1921, and he wrote the word "Canceled" across the face of same. On February 4, 1925, plaintiff commenced this action. The trial court rendered judgment in favor of plaintiff, and appellant appeals from such judgment.

Appellant contends that the writing of April 1, 1921, which was attached to and made a part of plaintiff's complaint and introduced in evidence as Plaintiff's Exhibit 1, is not only an insufficient memorandum to satisfy the statute of frauds (Civ. Code, § 1624, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1973), but is also insufficient to create a valid lease, for the reason that it is indefinite and uncertain, in that it does not state when the term of the tenancy would begin, and contained no agreement as to the character of the building to be erected, and that therefore—since it fails to contain all the vital and essential elements of a lease—it is fatally defective and void.

[1] Appellant maintains that, in order for plaintiff to collect her commission, she must have been the procuring cause of securing a valid and enforceable lease between the appellant and the lessee. Unquestionably the law is that a broker is the procuring cause of a transaction, when he has proved that he found a purchaser (or lessee) ready, able, and willing to buy or lease the property upon the terms fixed, and either that he procured from that person a valid contract binding him to purchase or lease, or that he brought the parties together, thus enabling the lessor to secure a contract, had he so desired. 4 Cal. Jur. p. 585, § 26, and cases there cited.

[2] Any doubt as to the sufficiency of the agreement of April 1, 1921, is resolved in favor of the respondent, because the appellant on May 31, 1921, at a time when she was negotiating with Mr. Grauman as to the plans and specifications of the theater building and before he had approved them or bound himself to proceed with the lease, signed the agreement promising to pay plaintiff $1,000 for her efforts in securing a tenant for the proposed building.

Appellant contends that the trial court erred in overruling her objection to the admission in evidence of the April 1 agreement on the ground that it was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and maintains that, since the agreement did not contain all of the essential terms of a lease, expressed with such degree of certainty that it could be understood without recourse to parol evidence to show the intent of the parties as to the time the term should begin, it did not satisfy the statute of frauds, and that this defect could not have been cured by plaintiff, even though appellant had made a more specific objection to its introduction into evidence. We believe this contention has been answered by the statements hereinbefore made.

Appellant contends that finding numbered 3 is not supported by the evidence. This finding is to the effect that respondent accepted employment and rendered services to appellant in securing a tenant on the terms and conditions acceptable to and accepted by appellant, and that thereupon appellant made an agreement with the tenant. Appellant urges that such finding is dependent upon the sufficiency of the agreement of April 1, 1921, to constitute a lease.

[3] The evidence conclusively shows that plaintiff brought appellant and Sid Grauman together to negotiate a lease, and that an agreement to lease was drawn. Plaintiff was not required to go further, and the fact that the appellant and the proposed tenant executed a writing, which was not binding as between themselves, cannot affect plaintiff's right to recover her commission for the services which she rendered. We are of the opinion that there is sufficient evidence in the record to support this finding of the trial court.

Appellant next contends that the finding of the trial court as to the account stated between the parties is not supported by the evidence. It was undisputed that the two parties had had prior business dealings, and that the plaintiff was indebted to the appellant in the sum of $350; that the appellant asked plaintiff to pay her this amount, but plaintiff refused to do so until appellant signed the writing of May 31, in which she promised to pay plaintiff $1,000 for her efforts in securing a tenant for the proposed building. It is undoubtedly true that this writing is ambiguous as to the time and manner of payment, but an examination of the record will show that there was ample evidence to support the finding of the trial court as to an account stated between these parties.

[4] Appellant maintains that the trial court erred in failing to find upon the affirmative allegation in the answer to the effect that plaintiff did not secure for the defendant any lessee or tenant, etc. We are of the opinion that finding numbered 3, which finds that plaintiff rendered services to the defendant in securing a tenant as lessee of said premises, etc., sufficiently covers this situation, so that no prejudice resulted because of failure to make a specific finding upon this point.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

We concur: HOUSER, Acting P. J.; CRAIL, Justice pro tem.

PEOPLE v. ALBORI. (Cr. 1732.) ★

Rehearing Denied March 28, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 11, 1929.

1. Criminal law 🔑1173(1)—In prosecution for assault with intent to murder, refusal to instruct that offense of assault was necessarily included held not prejudicial error.

In prosecution for assault with intent to murder, refusal to instruct that offense of assault was necessarily included held not prejudicial error, where indictment charged assault with deadly weapon, limiting proof to that particular kind of assault, especially since refusal to so instruct, if erroneous, was not harmful to defendant.

2. Assault and battery 🔑96(3)—Evidence justified instruction that self-defense plea is unavailable, where assault is brought on person by his own procurement.

In prosecution for assault with deadly weapon, evidence held to justify instruction that plea of self-defense is unavailable, when assault is brought on person by his own procurement, or under appearance of hostility which he himself creates.

3. Assault and battery 🔑96(3)—Self-defense instruction, though subject to criticism standing alone, because of emphasis on intent of assailant, held not erroneous in view of other instructions.

In prosecution for assault with deadly weapon, instruction that one assaulted by another without intent to kill or to do great bodily harm, and who was not deceived as to character of assault, would not be justified in using deadly weapon in self-defense, though subject to criticism standing alone, because of emphasis on intent of assailant, held not erroneous, in view of instructions preceding and immediately following it.

4. Criminal law 🔑761(7)—Self-defense instruction held not erroneous for assumption of facts or comment thereon.

In prosecution for assault with deadly weapon, instruction that person assaulted without intent to kill or to do great bodily harm, who was not deceived as to character of assault, would not be justified in using deadly weapon in self-defense, held not erroneous for assumption of facts or comment thereon.

5. Criminal law 🔑829(5)—Refusal of self-defense instruction held not error, where subject-matter was covered by instructions given.

In prosecution for assault with deadly weapon, refusal of instruction that, if defendant were assailed by another with fists under circumstances leading reasonable man to apprehend great bodily injury, he would have right to defend himself as reasonable man would, held not error, where subject-matter was covered in instructions given.

6. Assault and battery 🔑95—In prosecution for assault with deadly weapon, whether defendant provoked attack on himself, and whether circumstances would have excited fears of reasonable man, held properly submitted to jury.

In prosecution for assault with deadly weapon, questions whether attack on defendant with fists was provoked by defendant, and whether circumstances of it were of such character as to excite fears of reasonable man, held properly submitted to jury.

7. Assault and battery 🔑96(3)—Self-defense instruction, requiring circumstances to be such that reasonable man would believe himself in danger, held not erroneous.

In prosecution for assault with deadly weapon, instruction as to self-defense, requiring circumstances to be such that reasonable man, situated as defendant was, would be justified in believing himself in danger, and instructing that no man can be exclusive judge of reasonableness of appearances on which he acts, held proper.

8. Assault and battery 🔑96(2)—Instruction relative to right of one to defend friend who had been assaulted held properly refused under evidence (Pen. Code, § 197, subd. 3).

In prosecution for assault with deadly weapon, refusal of instruction that one not related to another, coming on such person after he has been assaulted, has no right to use force on another whom he believes guilty of assault on his friend, held not error under evidence, notwithstanding Pen. Code, § 197, subd. 3.

9. Criminal law 🔑830—Court need not separate proper from improper portion of requested instruction.

In criminal case, court is not bound to separate proper from improper portion of requested instruction.

11. Criminal law ⚿1158(3)—Trial court's conclusion, supported by substantial showing that juror was not guilty of misconduct, cannot be disturbed.

Trial court's ruling that juror was not guilty of misconduct cannot be disturbed, where such ruling was by denial of motion for new trial, and there was substantial showing to uphold it, especially where proof of misconduct was on information and belief, and by evidence of statements of juror himself.

12. Criminal law ⚿1035(3)—Any misconduct of judge in commenting on facts is not reversible, if not called to his attention at time.

Any misconduct of trial judge in commenting on facts is not reversible error, where counsel did not call it to court's attention at time, and give him opportunity to correct harm, if any was done.

13. Criminal law ⚿995(6)—Refusal to make sentences for assaults with deadly weapon run concurrently held not error (Pen. Code, § 669, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1056).

In prosecution for assaults with deadly weapon on two persons, refusal to entertain motion that sentences be made to run concurrently held not error, under Pen. Code, § 669, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1056.

14. Assault and battery ⚿92—Evidence held to support conviction for assaults with deadly weapon.

Evidence held sufficient to support conviction for assaults with deadly weapon, where defendant shot two persons after fist fight.

15. Criminal law ⚿747—Under conflicting evidence, it is jury's province to determine who is telling truth.

Where evidence was conflicting in criminal prosecution, it was jury's province and duty to determine who was telling truth, and not province of reviewing court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Wm. C. Doran, Judge.

Marco Albori was convicted of assaults with a deadly weapon, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Hearing denied by Supreme Court; PRESTON and LANGDON, JJ., voting for a hearing.

Thomas P. White and Otto Christensen, both of Los Angeles (Vincent C. Hickson and A. P. G. Steffes, both of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

THOMPSON, J. Two indictments were returned by the grand jury of Los Angeles county against the defendant, both of them charging him with assault with intent to commit murder; one of them alleging that he did commit an assault with a deadly weapon upon the person of one Dominick Conterno, and the other that he committed an assault with a deadly weapon upon the person of Harry Judson. Verdicts of guilty of assault with a deadly weapon were returned by the jury, and this appeal is from the judgments pronounced upon the verdicts and from an order denying the defendant's motion for a new trial.

[1] Before reviewing in detail the testimony which appellant says is insufficient to support the verdicts, we shall address ourselves to the other specifications or assignments of error in the order set out in his brief, the first of which is that the court erred in refusing to give an instruction requested by him to the effect that the offense of assault is one necessarily included in the offense charged in the indictments, and instructed the jury that the defendant might "be convicted of either the crime of assault with a deadly weapon with intent to commit murder, or the crime of assault with a deadly weapon." It is well for us to note at this juncture that Conterno and Judson were both shot and injured during the disturbance out of which the charge against appellant arose. The Attorney General asserts that it was this act of shooting for which the appellant was put on trial, and not for a fist fight which preceded it. We have already observed that, while the indictments charged the offense of assault to commit murder, yet they stated the facts constituting the assault by saying that appellant did "willfully, unlawfully, feloniously and with malice aforethought, commit an assault with a deadly weapon upon the person," etc. (Italics ours.)

Our first consideration, therefore, is to determine the effect of this language in the indictment. In People v. Owens, 3 Cal. App. 750, 86 P. 980, it is said: "By placing the words 'with a deadly weapon' in the indictment the people were limited to proving that particular kind of an assault, and the defendant was informed of the particular character of the assault which he was to meet." In view of the established fact that Conterno and Judson were both injured by pistol shots, the language above quoted that "the people were limited to proving that particular kind of an assault" would seem to indicate that the indictments here were drawn for the express and sole purpose of trying appellant to determine whether he fired the shots. The statement of the Supreme Court in People v. Madden, 76 Cal. 521, 18 P. 402, is also illuminating. It reads: "The defendant having fired his pistol at Jacobson during the fight which occurred at Ferris' saloon, if guilty at all, was guilty of something beyond a simple assault. In this view we think defendant sustained no injury in the refusal to direct the jury that they might render a verdict against defendant of a simple assault." There are numerous authorities to the effect that, where the evidence is such as to make it clear that if the defendant is guilty at all, he is guilty of the offense charged, and not of any included offense, it is proper to refuse to instruct the jury that they may convict of an included crime. People v. Swist, 136 Cal. 524, 69 P. 223; People v. Wright, 93 Cal. 564, 29 P. 240; People v. Barry, 90 Cal. 41, 27 P. 62; People v. Tolli (Cal. App.) 268 P. 1078; People v. Di Donato (Cal. App.) 265 P. 978.

These cases are helpful in aiding us to arrive at a conclusion upon the effect of the language employed in these indictments. Had it been established beyond any doubt that the appellant had fired the pistol which injured Conterno and Judson, a refusal to instruct on simple assault would have been proper under the authorities cited. By parity of reasoning the logic of the language employed in and quoted from People v. Owens, supra, becomes apparent. The indictments charged the appellant with having fired the shots, and with nothing less; the people were limited by their choice of words to proof of an offense not less than "assault with a deadly weapon."

Flowing from this situation there is another reason why the appellant may not complain of the refusal of the court to instruct the jury that it might find appellant guilty of assault. In People v. Lopez, 135 Cal. 23, 66 P. 965, we read: "Again, the instruction complained of was not harmful to the defendant. The jury were fully instructed as to the ingredients of the offense of an assault with intent to murder and of an assault with a deadly weapon, and were then, in effect, told that, if they were not satisfied that defendant was guilty of one of these offenses, they must acquit him altogether. It will be presumed that they heeded this instruction and performed their whole duty in accordance with it. If they had not been satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant was guilty of either of the higher crimes, but were satisfied that he was guilty of assault, under the instructions they would have acquitted him. The error, then, if any was committed, was favorable to defendant, and the case should not be reversed on account of it." Almost identical language is again employed by the Supreme Court in the case of People v. Watts, 198 Cal. 776, 796, 247 P. 884, where the defendant was charged with murder, and the jury were told to find him guilty of murder in the first degree or acquit him. These authorities so aptly state the situation here, and so effectually conclude appellant, that further comment is unnecessary.

[2] The next three assignments of error by the appellant are all based upon the instructions given and refused relative to the question of self-defense. He first notes an objection to an excerpt from the instruction on this subject which reads as follows: "Whenever an assault is brought upon a person by his own procurement, or under an appearance of hostility which he himself creates, with a view of having his adversary act upon it, and he so acts, the plea of self-defense under such circumstances is unavailable." Appellant's assertion that this portion of the instruction is erroneous is based upon his statement that there was no evidence which justified it. He concedes that it states a correct principle of law.

There is testimony that prior to the firing of the shots the appellant asked a Mr. Freeman while they were in the washroom of the ship café, where the disturbance began, "who the jane was" with whom Freeman was dancing, and when the appellant was told that it was none of his business he knocked Freeman down, cutting his mouth, and causing the blood to run; that a few seconds later, when Freeman re-entered the café, the appellant knocked him down again and said, "Get up, and I will give you a right." Following this incident, Conterno testified that he "approached Freeman while he was still on the floor and said, * * * 'What is the matter, Mr. Freeman?' or 'Who hit you?' and somebody had said, 'Why, the man to your left,' and, just as I turned and looked, why I saw this man" (appellant), "pretty good sized man there, and at that instant he made a pass at me, as though he wanted to hit me, and at that instant I got in a fight myself with him."

It cannot be successfully argued that the testimony to which we have just made reference did not justify the jury in finding as a matter of fact that the appellant had instigated the fight which led up to the shooting, and thereby had put himself in a position where the "plea of self-defense" was unavailable to him under the law as stated in the instruction.

[3-6] Appellant next complains because the court instructed the jury as follows: "The court instructs the jury that a person, on whom another is making a mere assault with the fist, not with the intent to kill or do great bodily harm, and who is not deceived as to the character of such assault, is not justified in using a deadly weapon in self-defense," and because the court refused to give two instructions, requested by the appellant, to the effect that, if he were assailed by another with his fists under such circumstances as to lead a reasonable man to apprehend great bodily injury, he would have the right to defend himself as a reasonable man would, and, if he so acted, would be entitled to an acquittal.

Standing alone, the instruction of which the appellant complains would be subject to criticism, because of its emphasis of the intent of the assailant, which is not the governing factor; but it was immediately preceded and immediately followed by instructions covering the proper subject-matter of the instructions requested by the appellant, and, when the instructions covering the right of self-defense are read as a whole, it is apparent that the jury could not have misunderstood its purport. In no less than five other instructions they were told that if, on the night in question, the defendant had reasonable ground to and did believe that he was in danger of great bodily injury, or of having a felony committed upon him, he was entitled to use such force in self-defense as a reasonable man would have used under such circumstances.

Considering the instructions as an entirety, they covered the subject fully and fairly, and the one complained of could only have been interpreted by the jury as meaning that, if the appellant did not have reasonable grounds and did not actually believe that he was in danger of great bodily harm from an assault with fists, he was not justified in using a deadly weapon in self-defense. As thus viewed, the instruction does not violate the law relating to self-defense. Nor do we find in the language attacked the assumption of facts or comment thereon which counsel asserts. The instruction states only a hypothetical situation, which may or may not have been found by the jury actually to have existed. It is sufficient to assert that one view of the testimony adduced would support the jury's conclusion that an attack upon the appellant was provoked by him, and that his assailants did not indicate to him, or to a reasonable mind, a threat of doing great bodily injury.

As already noted, the subject-matter of the requested instruction was covered in instructions given to the jury, with the possible exception that the trial judge did not in express words say that "great bodily injury may be inflicted by use of the fists." He did say to them, however, that "'necessary self-defense' includes every case where there is reasonable ground to apprehend a design to commit a felony or to do some great bodily injury, and where the circumstances are sufficient to excite the fears of a reasonable man." (Italics ours.) For the court to have stated that "great bodily injury may be inflicted by use of the fists" would have been the statement of a commonplace, a situation comprehended by the instruction which said that self-defense is available in "every case" where a reasonable man would be fearful of great bodily injury. Whether the attack with fists was not provoked by appellant, and whether the circumstances of it were of such a character as to excite the fears of a reasonable man, were questions properly submitted to and left with the jury under the instructions. Nothing additional was necessary.

[7] Appellant also contends that the court committed error when it gave the following instruction: "A person may have a lively apprehension that he is in imminent danger, and believe that his apprehension is based on sufficient cause and supported by reasonable grounds; that such apprehension is reasonable and warranted from appearances as they present themselves to him. If, however, he acts on these appearances, he does so at his peril, because the law leaves it to no man to be the exclusive judge of the reasonableness of the appearances upon which he acts, but prescribes a standard of its own, which is not only, did the person acting on the appearances himself believe that he was in deadly peril of his life or of receiving great bodily harm, but would a reasonable man, situated as the defendant was, seeing what he saw, and knowing what he knew, be justified in believing himself in danger?" and in connection therewith refused to give three instructions proposed and requested by him.

With respect to the instruction given appellant says that it was telling the jury that the "law gives no man the right to determine for himself the character of the imminent danger," and then argues that the law does not punish an honest mistake concerning the extent of the danger which may have confronted him. He relies upon People v. Thomson, 145 Cal. 717, 79 P. 435, to support his argument, but we think that one short quotation from that case, expressing the central point of the opinion, is sufficient to refute the argument. It reads: "If the appearances are such as to justify a reasonable man in believing that it is necessary to instantly kill another in order to save himself from death or great bodily injury, and he does so believe, he is not required to exercise any 'due care' and 'circumspection' as to the manner of killing." (Italics ours.)

The instruction here given did not limit the right of self-defense by imposing the requirement that the manner of the shooting had necessarily to be with due care and circumspection, but it did with all propriety fix the standard by which to judge the necessity of self-defense to be the actions of a reasonable man under all the apparent circumstances, and quite properly denied the appellant the right to be the sole judge of his course of action. That there can be no doubt as to the correctness of the instruction, reference may be had to the language of the Supreme Court in People v. Glover, 141 Cal. 233, 74 P. 745. Of the instructions which were not given in this particular it may be said generally that they were covered by the instructions given, and of one of them we observe that it was redundant, and inclining to the argumentative. Therefore, if it had been given, it would have confused and tended to befog the jury's mind upon the standard of action required of one acting in self-defense. There was no error in their refusal.

[8, 9] The defendant requested the court to give an instruction as follows: "The court instructs the jury one who is not related to another, and comes upon that person after such person has been assaulted, but when the assault is completed and is not in progress, has no right to use force upon another whom he believes was guilty of an assault upon his friend. Subdivision 3 of section 197 of the Penal Code of California restricts the right of self-defense to the person himself who is assaulted, or when committed in the lawful defense of a wife or husband, parent, child, master, mistress, or servant of such person."

The appellant now maintains that it was error for the court to have refused to give the instruction. There is no testimony that Conterno used force or assaulted the appellant in the defense of Freeman. The prosecution theory and testimony supporting it is that, while the appellant was inviting Freeman to arise and receive "a right," Conterno came upon the scene, whereupon the appellant gave indication of attacking Conterno. The defense testimony tends to establish an assault by Conterno without provocation, but not in defense of Freeman. There is no situation which the jury might have found to which the latter part of the offered instruction would have been applicable. And, had the court given the instruction in the form proposed, it could not have failed to befuddle the mind of the jury with respect to the issues of the trial, and incidentally with the plea of self-defense interposed by the defendant. Under such circumstances, it was proper for the court to refuse the instruction. The court is not bound to separate the proper from the improper portion. People v. Davis, 135 Cal. 162, 67 P. 59; People v. Wagner, 29 Cal. App. 363, 155 P. 649.

[10] The appellant, while conceding that it was proper for the trial court to have instructed the jury upon the issue of transferred intent, says that it should have incorporated in the instruction, as was done in the one proposed by him, but not given by the trial judge, a statement that if the assault were justifiable—that is, done in the exercise of appellant's right of self-defense—there would have been "no transferred intent." We have already observed that the jury were fully instructed upon the law and right of self-defense, and it is inconceivable that they could have understood that, if they believed appellant was acting in self-defense, they should do other than acquit him. This is especially true, in view of the fact that in the instructions with respect to the verdicts of assault with intent to murder or assault with a deadly weapon, which might be returned by the jury, the trial judge instructed them that it was necessary for them to determine that the assault was not committed in self-defense before either verdict might be found. Under these circumstances it was not improper for the court to refuse the requested instruction or to fail to incorporate its substance in the one given.

[11] Appellant very insistently urges that he was deprived of an orderly trial by jury, and that the jury received evidence out of court. The record upon which he bases this argument was made up for use and was used upon his motion for a new trial. He filed three affidavits, in one of which one of his counsel averred that on the fourth day after the verdict was returned he (counsel) had a conversation with the deputy district attorney who prosecuted the defendant, wherein the deputy told affiant that he knew that the defendant would never get an acquittal, because a juror named Henderson was absolutely against him; that the trial judge had told him "the other day that the bailiff had told" the trial judge "that this juror Henderson was saying among the other jurors that your witness Perry * * * had received $5,000 from Marco to testify for him in the first trial, and that he [juror Henderson] knew your witness Perry, and knew that he was a friend of Marco's, and that he had only testified because Marco paid him the $5,000." An affidavit by the deputy district attorney, filed in response to the one from which we have just quoted, denied that the conversation took place at the time mentioned or at any other time.

Two additional affidavits were filed by the defendant, in which the affiants (one of them being one Grainger and the other the witness Perry) stated that they called on juror Henderson on September 13, 1928; that Perry told Henderson that he had heard that the latter had stated that he, Perry, had received $5,000 for giving his testimony, and that Henderson had made this statement in the presence of other jurors prior to the return of a verdict; that in response to these statements Henderson replied that he had so stated, and that he had heard the rumor from "a crowd in Inglewood"; that "other jurors knew of others who were getting paid"; it "was a rotten mess, and we wanted to clean them up." The state presented the affidavit of Henderson in reply to those filed by the defense, in which this juror denied that at any time he had had the conversation with Perry and Grainger set forth by them, and denied that he had discussed the witness Perry with any of the jurors, or stated to them, or any of them, that Perry had received $5,000 for testimony given at the first trial.

It is obvious that the facts upon which both of appellant's claims are founded were squarely put in issue by the affidavits filed by the prosecution. The affidavit of Henderson denied that he had made the statement to other jurors, and the affidavit of the deputy district attorney denied that he had ever quoted the trial judge as saying that he had information from the bailiff concerning any misconduct. Under these circumstances it was incumbent on the trial judge to determine the issue. Undoubtedly, if he had believed that the jury had received testimony in any manner other than through the regular channels of trial procedure, he would have granted a new trial. By his denial of the motion for a new trial he evidenced his conviction that the juror was not guilty of misconduct, and where, as here, there is a substantial showing to uphold that conclusion, the ruling cannot be disturbed. In the case of People v. Sing Yow, 145 Cal. 1, 78 P. 235, quoted with approval in People v. Oxnam, 170 Cal. 211, 149 P. 165, after determining that a motion for a new trial is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial judge, it is said with respect to counter affidavits:

"As has already been shown, it is well settled in this state that it is for the trial court to determine whether or not the newly discovered evidence is of such a character as to make it reasonably probable that it would produce a different result on another trial, and in the determination of that question we can conceive of no good reason why the trial court should be limited to a consideration of the affidavits offered by defendant and the record of the trial. Such certainly has not been the practice in this state. In People v. Fice, 97 Cal. 459 [32 P. 531], the record shows that the counter affidavits were entirely devoted to a contradiction of the alleged facts proposed to be proved by the newly discovered witnesses, and this court said: 'Upon the ground of newly discovered evidence it is sufficient to say that the affidavits offered in support thereof were fully contradicted by counter affidavits on the part of the prosecution, and for that reason the court below exercised a proper discretion in refusing to grant the motion.' See, also, Thompson v. Thompson, 88 Cal. 110 [25 P. 962]; People v. Mesa, 93 Cal. 580 [29 P. 116]; Merk v. Gelzhaeuser, 50 Cal. 631; Doyle v. Sturla, 38 Cal. 456. It has been held in many cases in other states that it is entirely competent to show by counter affidavits on motion for new trial that a newly discovered witness is unworthy of credit. Williams v. Baldwin, 18 Johns. [N. Y.] 489; Parker v. Hardy, 24 Pick. [Mass.] 246; Pomroy v. Columbia Ins. Co., 2 Caines [N. Y.] 260; Erskine v. Duffy, 76 Ga. 603; Greenleaf v. Grounder, 84 Me. 50 [24 A. 461]; Moore v. State, 96 Tenn. 209 [33 S. W. 1046]; 1 Graham and Waterman on New Trials, *p. 485. In other cases, counter affidavits as to the alleged facts to be testified to by new witnesses were allowed. Coast Line R. R. Co. v. Boston, 83 Ga. 387 [9 S. E. 1108]; Harmon v. Charleston, etc., Ry. Co., 88 Ga. 261 [14 S. E. 574]; Harris v. Rupel, 14 Ind. 209; Searcy v. Martin-Woods Co., 93 Iowa, 420 [61 N. W. 934]; Ames v. Howard, 1 Sum. 482; Lorig v. Davenport, 99 Iowa, 479, 68 N. W. 717; Finch v. Green, 16 Minn. 355 (Gil. 315); State v. Burd, 115 Mo. 405 [22 S. W. 377]; Burlingame v. Cowee, 16 R. I. 40 [12 A. 234]; Dignowitty v. State, 17 Tex. 521 [67 Am. Dec. 670]; Nicholas v. Commonwealth, 91 Va. 741 [21 S. E. 364]; Holland v. Huston, 20 Mont. 84, 49 P. 390; Hammond, etc., Ry. Co. v. Spyzchalski, 17 Ind. App. 7, 16 [46 N. E. 47]. In a note, in volume 14 of the Encyclopedia of Pleading and Practice, p. 913, it is said that it is uniformly held that on the hearing of such a motion the court may examine counter affidavits to determine whether a new trial would promote justice or result in a different judgment."

That there is a further fatal defect in the argument of counsel upon the question now under consideration is patent from the language employed in People v. Kady, 60 Cal. App. 661, 214 P. 293, where a very similar objection was under scrutiny. The court says: "One of the grounds upon which the motion for a new trial was based was that of misconduct of the jury, consisting first, in an alleged experiment, made by one of the jurors while the trial was in progress to determine how long it would take a box, similar to those in which merchandise of the defendants had been placed, to burn after being ignited. The sole evidence offered in support of this ground was an affidavit of the attorney for the appellant. While this affidavit contained the preliminary phrase that the affiant offered the same, 'based upon his personal knowledge of the facts therein contained,' at the hearing of the motion it was admitted by said counsel that he had no actual knowledge of the facts, but that the latter were intended to be stated upon information and belief, from statements made by the jurors. The district attorney very properly objected to a consideration of the affidavit on the ground that the law required direct proof of the facts sought to be presented, and that any statement made solely upon information and belief would not be proper evidence. The position of the prosecutor on that question is fully sustained by the decisions. People v. Findley, 132 Cal. 301, 64 P. 472; Gay v. Torrance, 145 Cal. 144, 78 P. 540. Defendant asked leave to call the jurors to the witness stand to require them to testify as to the alleged misconduct, to which procedure the court properly sustained objection. Nothing in our law is more firmly established than that the verdict of the jury may not be impeached by the evidence of the jurors themselves, with the single exception that it may be shown by the jurors that the verdict was determined by chance. The early cases are reviewed and the rule restated in People v. Azoff, 105 Cal. 632, 39 P. 59, to which citation may be added People v. Findley, supra, and the case of People v. Chin Non, 146 Cal. 561, 80 P. 681."

[12] The appellant also asserts that the trial judge was guilty of misconduct and deprived appellant of a fair and impartial trial by commenting on the facts. The asserted misconduct is said to have been committed by the judge, when he asked a defense witness on cross-examination four short questions concerning his knowledge of the time daylight occurred on June 27, and his comments during a discussion with counsel, based upon his judicial knowledge concerning the twilight period before the sun rises, and that one-half hour before sunrise it is sufficiently light for a hunter to shoot ducks. Assuming that there was misconduct, and we are unable to perceive any, it is a sufficient answer to say that counsel did not call it to the court's attention at the time, and give him an opportunity to correct the harm, if any was done. Under a familiar rule, to support which it is unnecessary to cite authorities, the assignment must be disallowed.

[13] It is next argued that the court erred in refusing to entertain a motion that the sentences be made to run concurrently. Section 669 of the Penal Code (amended by St. 1927, p. 1056) discloses a legislative intent that the terms of imprisonment should ordinarily run consecutively; it being there stated in a proviso, however, "* * * that in exceptional cases the judgment, in the discretion of the court, may direct that such terms of imprisonment, or any of them, shall run concurrently." That the trial judge entertained an idea that the term which a defendant is required to serve rests with the prison board is not the controlling factor. There is nothing in this case to make of it the "exceptional case" mentioned in the statute. Had appellant been convicted of the offenses charged, instead of the lesser and included offenses, there might possibly have been room for argument; but the offense of assault with a deadly weapon in a room filled with people, any one of whom was apt to be fatally injured, is of such a serious character that we see no reason why appellant should not pay the price of both shots. Certainly the situation is not one demanding exceptional solicitude for fear of overpunishment.

[14, 15] Finally we are brought to the point where it is necessary to dispose of appellant's contention that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdicts. We have already mentioned the bullet wounds received by Conterno and Judson. There was ample testimony supporting the conclusion that appellant fired the shots which inflicted the injuries. We have also referred to testimony which supports the belief that appellant was the aggressor in the fight with Freeman, as well as the one which followed with Conterno. Without going into too great detail, the testimony of the witness Freeman sufficiently evidences the fact that there was support for the view of the jury that appellant did not shoot in self-defense. This witness says that, during the fist fight between Conterno and appellant, some one grabbed Conterno's tuxedo coat and ripped it; that Conterno let go of appellant, pulled off his coat, throwing it into the lobby, and started back toward appellant, whereupon the latter said something about cleaning out the "'rat joint'" or something of that sort; pulled his gun real quick, and fire the shots which caused the injuries. The testimony of this witness would be sufficient, but there is other evidence supporting the conclusion of the jury that the shots were not fired in self-defense. And, although the evidence was badly in conflict, and all of the prosecution witnesses did not agree upon the details, it was the jury's province and duty to determine who was telling the truth, and not the province of this court.

Judgments and orders affirmed.

BOWMAN v. BOWMAN et al. (Civ. 3730.)★

Rehearing Denied April 17, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 16, 1929.

1. Divorce 🔑167—Second wife held entitled to notice of divorced wife's motion to vacate decree, and hearing of application to vacate order granting it (Civ. Code, § 61; Code Civ. Proc. § 389).

Second wife held entitled to notice of divorced wife's motion to vacate decree, as one whose rights were prejudicially affected by granting thereof, within Civ. Code, § 61, and to hearing of her application to set aside such order for divorced wife's fraud in concealing from court fact that she had acquiesced in decree, under Code Civ. Proc. § 389, whether or not she was necessary or proper party to proceeding.

2. Divorce 🔑167—Divorced wife held guilty of laches barring suit to annul husband's second marriage, and estopped to apply for annulment of divorce decree.

Divorced wife, not moving to vacate final decree until about ten months after first learning of its entry, but acquiescing in and expressing satisfaction with it and accepting support, maintenance, etc., granted her thereby, after learning of husband's second marriage, held barred by laches from suing to annul second marriage, and estopped to apply for annulment of decree.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. P. Cary, Judge.

Suit by Frances C. Bowman against Horace D. Bowman and Bryan Houston Bowman, who filed a cross-complaint against plaintiff and defendant Horace D. Bowman. From a judgment for plaintiff and cross-defendants, cross-complainant appeals. Reversed and remanded, with directions.

Hearing denied by Supreme Court: RICHARDS and LANGDON, JJ., voting for a hearing.

Hill Morgan & Bledsoe, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Sample & Harden, F. F. Grant, and Wright & McKee, all of San Diego, for respondents.

McDANIEL, Justice pro tem. This appeal is from the judgment on the judgment roll alone. Frances C. Bowman, as plaintiff, sued the defendants for annulment of the marriage of defendants Horance D. Bowman and Bryan Houston Bowman. The defendant Horace D. Bowman entered his voluntary appearance in the action, and by his answer admitted each and every of the allegations of the complaint herein and waived notice of the time of trial.

The defendant Bryan Houston Bowman answered with appropriate denials the averments of the complaint, and set up in separate counts certain affirmative defenses. She also filed a cross-complaint, making both the plaintiff, Frances C. Bowman, and the defendant Horace D. Bowman cross-defendants. They duly answered the cross-complaint. Each of them filed an answer to the cross-complaint. The court made findings of fact, conclusions of law, and entered judgment in favor of plaintiff, vacating, annulling, and setting aside the marriage of Horace D. Bowman and Bryan Houston Bowman, which was duly solemnized April 21, 1925, and denying the application of Bryan Houston Bowman, the cross-complainant for relief. Judgment was entered December 31, 1926.

The appeal presents the question as to whether or not the conclusions of law were supported by the findings, and whether or not, in view of the findings of fact, the cross-complainant should have been granted the relief prayed for in her cross-complaint. The findings show the action was tried August 27, 1926, by the court without a jury; the parties were represented by counsel. The court found that respondents Frances C. Bowman and Horace D. Bowman intermarried October 16, 1915, and ever since have been and now are husband and wife; that on September 28, 1923, in the superior court of San Diego county, California, Frances C. Bowman, as plaintiff, commenced an action, numbered 40,202, and obtained an interlocutory decree October 13, 1923, entitling her to a final decree of divorce from Horace D. Bowman, after the lapse of one year; that on or about July 27, 1924, the said Horace D. Bowman and Frances C. Bowman, said husband and wife, became reconciled; that she forgave him the offenses constituting her said cause of action, and they lived together as husband and wife until October 22, 1924, when they again separated, she going to Pasadena to live and he to Los Angeles; that they were not living together as husband and wife at the time of the entry of the final decree, October 28, 1924.

The remaining findings of fact and conclusions of law will be set out verbatim:

"IV. That at all times said defendant and cross-complainant Bryan Houston Bowman knew of the reconciliation and separation of the said Frances C. Bowman and the said Horace D. Bowman, and of the facts recited in paragraph III hereof.

"V. That on or about October 28, 1924, the said defendant Horace D. Bowman caused to be entered in the records of the superior court of the county of San Diego, state of California, in said action No. 40,292, a final decree of divorce, wherein and whereby it was purported to be decreed that the bonds of matrimony theretofore existing by and between the said Frances C. Bowman and the said Horace D. Bowman were dissolved; that said final decree of divorce further provided for the awarding of the custody of the minor children of the said marriage of the said Frances C. Bowman, and for the payment of certain sums of money for the support and maintenance of said children; that the said Horace D. Bowman procured said final decree of divorce to be entered as aforesaid in the following manner:

"That on or about October 28th, 1924, the said Horace D. Bowman requested his attorney, David P. Hatch, to call by long distance telephone, the attorney for the said Frances C. Bowman, and to request the said attorney for the said Frances C. Bowman to have said final decree of divorce entered; that the said Horace D. Bowman did not tell or notify the attorney for the said Frances C. Bowman that he, the said Horace D. Bowman, and the said Frances C. Bowman had, prior thereto, became reconciled subsequent to the entry of the interlocutory decree of divorce in said action, or that the said parties had, after becoming reconciled, separated, and were at said time living separate and apart; that the said Horace D. Bowman did not notify the said attorney for the said Frances C. Bowman of any facts or matters, or make any statements or representations to him, other than to request him to have said final decree of divorce entered; that the said attorney for the said Frances C. Bowman thereupon, pursuant to the request of the said Horace D. Bowman, caused said final decree to be entered, by preparing said final decree and presenting it to the court for signing; that the said attorney for said Frances C. Bowman did not make any statements or representations to the court at the time of presenting the said final decree of divorce for the signature of the court, and did not make any disclosures to the court as to the prior reconciliation and separation of the said parties, and that at the time of the signing, filing and entering of said final decree of divorce, the court did not know that the said parties had, prior thereto, become reconciled, and had lived together as husband and wife, or that the said parties had thereafter, and prior to the signing, filing and entering of said final decree of divorce, separated, and were at said time living separate and apart.

"VI. That from and after the separation of the said Horace D. Bowman and the said Frances C. Bowman on or about the 22nd day of October, 1924, the said Horace D. Bowman and the said Frances C. Bowman continued to live separate and apart, and that the reconciliation previously effected by and between them on or about said date terminated, and that at the time of the signing, filing and entering of said final decree of divorce, the said parties were not living together as husband and wife, and that they continued to live separate and apart thereafter until long after the marriage of the said Horace D. Bowman and the said defendant and cross-complainant Bryan Houston Bowman.

"VII. That the said Horace D. Bowman did not notify the said Frances C. Bowman of the fact that he had, through her attorney, caused said final decree of divorce to be signed, filed and entered on or about October 28th, 1924, until some time during the early part of January, 1925; that in causing said final decree of divorce to be signed, filed and entered as aforesaid, the attorney for the said Frances C. Bowman did not, prior thereto, inquire of the said Frances C. Bowman as to whether or not she desired said final decree of divorce to be signed, filed and entered, and did not thereafter notify her of the fact that said final decree had been signed, filed and entered; that the said Frances C. Bowman first knew of the fact that said final decree had been filed and entered about or during the first part of January, 1925; that thereafter the said Frances C. Bowman made no effort whatsoever to cause said final decree of divorce to be set aside or vacated until after the marriage of the said Horace D. Bowman to the said Bryan Houston Bowman, but, on the contrary, the court finds that the said Frances C. Bowman, upon being informed of the fact of the entry of the said final decree of divorce in the early part of January, 1925, acquiesced therein, expressed satisfaction therewith, and was willing and desirous that said decree stand as a valid and subsisting final decree of divorce until after the marriage of the said Horace D. Bowman and the said Bryan Houston Bowman, when for the first time said Frances C. Bowman manifested any desire to, or did make any effort whatsoever to have said final decree of divorce set aside, annulled or vacated.

"VIII. That on the 21st day of April, 1925, the said Horace D. Bowman and the said defendant and cross-complainant Bryan Houston Bowman were intermarried, and thereafter to and until about the 1st day of October, 1925, lived together as husband and wife; that the said Frances C. Bowman became aware of the marriage between the said Horace D. Bowman and the said defendant and cross-complainant Bryan Houston Bowman on or about the 1st day of May, 1925; that at all times after said marriage of the said Horace D. Bowman and the said Bryan Houston Bowman, the said parties resided in the city of Santa Monica as husband and wife up to or about the 1st day of October, 1925, and that during all of the said period the said Frances C. Bowman was also residing in the said city of Santa Monica; that on or during the month of August, 1925, the said Horace D. Bowman and the said Bryan Houston Bowman began to have difficulties, and thereafter the said Horace D. Bowman entertained the idea of having the marriage of himself and the said Bryan Houston Bowman annulled; that thereupon the said Horace D. Bowman and the said Frances C. Bowman entered into an agreement and conspiracy in which they conspired and agreed that the said Frances C. Bowman should appear before the superior court of the county of San Diego in the aforesaid divorce action No. 40,292, and represent to the court in said action that the said final decree of divorce, filed and entered in said action, had been obtained against her consent, and that at the time of the filing and entry of said final decree of divorce, that she and the said Horace D. Bowman were reconciled, and were living together as husband and wife, and that she, the said Frances C. Bowman, never at any time desired said final decree of divorce to be filed and entered, and that she had never acquiesced therein, and that she, upon learning of the filing and entering of said final decree of divorce, proceeded with due diligence to have said final decree of divorce vacated, annulled and set aside, and it was further agreed by and between the said Horace D. Bowman and the said Frances C. Bowman that the appearance and motion of the said Frances C. Bowman for the annullment and vacation of the said final decree of divorce should be kept secret from the said Bryan Houston Bowman, and that the said Bryan Houston Bowman should not be notified thereof, and that the said Horace D. Bowman would make no opposition to said appearance or said motion, but would acquiesce therein, and would do all that he could to aid and assist the said Frances C. Bowman in procuring and obtaining an order annulling and setting aside said final decree of divorce.

"IX. The court further finds that thereafter, pursuant to said agreement and conspiracy, the said Frances B. Bowman filed in the superior court of the county of San Diego, in the aforesaid divorce action No. 40,292, a notice of motion that she, the said Frances C. Bowman, would, on November 2, 1925, move said court for an order vacating and setting aside the final decree of divorce theretofore filed and entered in said action; that in support of said motion, the said Frances C. Bowman filed, and caused to be filed, certain affidavits, including an affidavit signed and sworn to by her; that in said proceedings the said Frances C. Bowman was represented by F. F. Grant, an attorney at law, who had been her attorney of record at all times in said action; that no notice of said motion was given to the said Bryan Houston Bowman, and no papers or process served upon her, but that said proceedings were kept secret from the said Bryan Houston Bowman, and that she had no knowledge or information thereof; that in the affidavit signed and filed by the said Frances C. Bowman in support of said motion to set aside and vacate said final decree of divorce, the said Frances C. Bowman, pursuant to said agreement and conspiracy with the said Horace D. Bowman, alleged and set forth, that subsequent to the interlocutory decree of divorce, there had been a reconciliation between her and the said Horace D. Bowman, and that at the time of the entry of said final decree of divorce, to wit, on October 28, 1924, that she and the said Horace D. Bowman were reconciled and living together as husband and wife; that she did not know of or consent to the entering of said final decree of divorce; that she did not want a divorce; that the said defendant did not tell her that he had entered a final decree of divorce, but that later she learned that he had secured a final decree of divorce 'away back in the month of October, 1924'; that the said Frances C. Bowman further recited in said affidavit that very soon after she learned that the final decree of divorce had been entered, she began to find out what she could do about setting aside said final decree of divorce, and that she consulted with friends and some attorneys concerning the possibility of having said final decree of divorce set aside and vacated; that the said Frances C. Bowman did not, by affidavit or otherwise, inform the court, on the hearing of said motion to set aside and vacate said final decree of divorce, that at the time of the entry of said final decree of divorce, that she and the said Horace D. Bowman were living separate and apart, or that their prior reconciliation had been terminated, nor did she, by affidavit or otherwise, inform the court, on the hearing of said motion, nor was the court informed by any one, that the said Frances C. Bowman upon hearing of the filing and entering of said final decree of divorce during or about the 1st day of January, 1925, acquiesced therein or expressed satisfaction therewith, or that she, the said Frances C. Bowman, did not, for a period of seven or eight months thereafter, make any effort, or take any steps, to have said final decree of divorce set aside, annulled or vacated; that the said Horace D. Bowman did not make any opposition to the granting of said motion, nor file any contest thereto, but, on the contrary, pursuant to his agreement and conspiracy as aforesaid with the said Frances C. Bowman, the said Horace D. Bowman, by his silence and acquiescence and failure to contest, and by actively aiding the said Frances C. Bowman in the filing of said motion, and in keeping secret from the said Bryan Houston Bowman all knowledge or information concerning said proceedings and motion, permitted the court to believe on the hearing of said motion that he had perpetrated a fraud upon said court in having said final decree of divorce signed, filed and entered.

"X. The court further finds that the purpose and motive of the said Horace D. Bowman in conspiring and agreeing with the said Frances C. Bowman as aforesaid, and in doing, and failing to do, the things aforesaid, was to enable him, the said Horace D. Bowman, to obtain a decree of annulment, annulling and setting aside the marriage which he had prior thereto contracted with the said Bryan Houston Bowman, and to enable him, by so doing, to defeat and defraud the said Bryan Houston Bowman of her rights growing out of said marriage, and that the motives of said Frances C. Bowman were to enable her and the said Horace D. Bowman to defeat and defraud the said Bryan Houston Bowman of her rights growing out of the said marriage, and to enable her to maintain this action to annul and set aside said marriage; that thereupon and pursuant thereto, and without being advised as to all of the true facts, the superior court of San Diego county, in said case No. 40292, granted the motion of the said Frances C. Bowman, and caused an order to be signed, made, filed and entered, setting aside, vacating and annulling the final decree of divorce theretofore entered in said action on October 28, 1924; that the said defendant, Bryan Houston Bowman, was not present at the hearing of said motion, nor was she represented by counsel, or any one; that she had no opportunity to be present at the hearing of said motion, and had no knowledge thereof, and no opportunity to defend herself.

"XI. The court further finds that pursuant to the said conspiracy and agreement by and between the said Horace D. Bowman and the said Frances C. Bowman, the said Frances C. Bowman, after obtaining said order setting aside and annulling said final decree of divorce, commenced this action to annul and set aside the marriage between the said Bryan Houston Bowman and the said Horace D. Bowman, and that the said Horace D.

Bowman, although a party defendant in this action, has at all times during the pendency of this action, actively aided and assisted the said Frances C. Bowman in the prosecution of this action against the said defendant and cross-complainant, Bryan Houston Bowman.

"XII. The court further finds that subsequent to the signing, filing and entry of the said final decree of divorce in said action No. 40292, the said plaintiff, Frances C. Bowman, accepted the provisions and benefits of said final decree of divorce, by receiving and accepting from the said Horace D. Bowman the amounts of money provided in said decree for the support and maintenance of the children named in said decree until said decree was set aside and annulled, as hereinbefore set forth.

"As conclusions of law from the foregoing findings of fact the court finds:

"First. That the said defendant and cross-complainant, Bryan Houston Bowman, was not a necessary or indispensable party to the proceedings had in the superior court of San Diego county in case No. 40,292, wherein the said Frances C. Bowman sought and obtained an order setting aside, annulling and vacating the final decree of divorce theretofore filed and entered in said action, and was not entitled to notice of said proceedings, nor to the service of any of the papers therein, and is not entitled to complain of the procuring of the order setting aside and vacating said final decree.

"Second. That the said Bryan Houston Bowman is not entitled to a judgment vacating or annulling the order of said Superior Court setting aside said final decree of divorce in said action, nor is she entitled to a judgment that said final decree of divorce be restored or declared to be a valid and subsisting final decree of divorce, nor is she entitled to any relief whatsoever.

"Third. That the said plaintiff, Frances C. Bowman, is entitled to a judgment vacating, annulling and setting aside the marriage between the said Horace D. Bowman and the said Bryan Houston Bowman. That each party pay his or her costs. Let judgment be entered accordingly."

Appellant contends that the learned trial court erred and judgment should be reversed for the following reasons: (1) That the appellant, Bryan Houston Bowman, was a necessary and indispensable party in the action or motion to set aside the final decree of divorce; (2) irrespective of whether appellant was a necessary or proper party to the proceeding to vacate the final decree of divorce, she is entitled, as one whose rights have been injuriously affected thereby, to complain of the fraud practiced upon the court, and to have said order set aside in an independent suit in equity; (3) that the fraud practiced in procuring the setting aside of said final decree of divorce was extrinsic and not intrinsic fraud; (4) that the respondents, under the facts found by the court, were estopped to attack or in any way set aside said final decree of divorce.

Respondents, in their reply brief, call attention to an omission in appellant's statement of facts of a fact admitted in appellant's answer, to wit, "The trial court was informed at the hearing on the motion to vacate the final decree of divorce that Horace D. Bowman had entered into a second marriage with Bryan Houston Bowman," and argues, in support of the order in the proceedings for vacating the final decree and the judgment in this suit, "that the order setting aside the final decree was in all respects a proper order, that no fraud was committed in procuring the said order, and that, therefore, such order must be permitted to stand."

Respondent, although not an appellant, criticizes the findings of the trial court herein to the effect that Horace D. Bowman and Frances C. Bowman, the first wife, entered into a conspiracy to set aside the final decree and to institute the annullment action. After quoting the definition of conspiracy as being, "a combination of two or more persons by concerted action to accomplish an unlawful purpose or to accomplish a lawful purpose by unlawful means," and citing in this connection the case of Pettibone v. U. S., 148 U. S. 197, 13 S. Ct. 542, 37 L. Ed. 419, argues, in reliance upon said authority, that the trial court should have found herein that Frances C. Bowman and Horace D. Bowman, acting in concert, did absolutely nothing in connection with the setting aside of the final decree or the bringing of this action, except to take legal and lawful steps; that the court found improperly that they conspired together or entered into a conspiracy.

That contention seems to overlook the charge herein in that the respondents conspired to accomplish the unlawful purpose of defrauding the second wife, Bryan Houston Bowman. Briefly stated, said respondent further argues that the said final decree of divorce was procured by extrinsic fraud upon the court; that the fact that the reconciliation had terminated had no bearing upon the questions of law involved; that the order setting aside the final decree was properly made; that no fraud was committed upon the superior court of San Diego county in obtaining the order setting aside the final decree; that the fact of Horace D. Bowman's second marriage did not deprive the court of power to set aside the final decree; that no grounds were shown herein sufficient to invalidate the order setting aside the final judgment, and, in conclusion, urges some general considerations expanding, recapitulating and adding to his said several points.

[1] The foregoing statement of facts and arguments indicates interesting features of this suit, but our conclusion upon the essential legal propositions involved make it unnecessary to follow respective counsel in all their able and well-presented points and authorities. We determine that, irrespective of whether appellant was a necessary or proper party to the proceeding to vacate the final decree, she was entitled to notice of the application, as one whose rights as a wife have been injuriously affected by the order vacating the final decree of divorce, and that she is entitled to complain of the fraud practiced upon the court and upon herself, and, by her cross-complaint in equity, have the said order set aside and annulled.

In Bennett v. Wilson, 122 Cal. 509, 55 P. 390, 68 Am. St. Rep. 61, the court said: "The general rule is, that none but the parties to a judgment can have it set aside. But this rule is not without its exceptions, and third parties—persons not nominal parties—who are necessarily affected by the judgment, may be protected from its operation." This rule is reaffirmed by the Supreme Court in the same case. Bennett v. Wilson, 133 Cal. 379, 65 P. 880, 85 Am. St. Rep. 207. Carlisle v. Carlisle, 96 Mich. 128, 55 N. W. 673, was a case where the plaintiff obtained a decree of divorce which subsequently was set aside. Anna E. Carlisle, the second wife, who had not been given notice of the proceedings to set aside the decree of divorce, intervened, and on her petition, the order vacating the decree was set aside.

In that case, as in the case at bar, it was contended that as the second wife was not a party to the original suit of divorce, and, therefore, not a party to subsequent proceedings in that case, she was not entitled to notice, and could not intervene, even though the effect of the proceeding would be to destroy her rights as a legal wife. The court held she was entitled to notice of the proceeding to vacate the decree and, also, to maintain an independent action to set aside the judgment. The court said, in part, after an exhaustive review of the authorities: "To hold that in such a case the second wife, who had in good faith relied upon the decree sought to be set aside, was not entitled to notice, and had no right to intervene, would be rank injustice."

Respondent herein, on page 26 of his brief, says: "When the superior court knew that Bowman had remarried, it then became the province and duty of the court to consider the interests of the second wife." Respondent then quotes with approval 2 Bishop, Marriage, Divorce and Separation, § 496, relating to the sacred obligation upon the trial court in a divorce proceeding to look after the interest of all who cannot be present, as well as the rights of the public, and then continues: "The foregoing rules are of universal application in divorce actions. When it was once brought home to the trial court that Horace D. Bowman had remarried, that court must of necessity have taken that fact into consideration and weighed that fact in exercising its discretion. The court might, had it so desired, brought the second wife before it or made such further investigation as the judge thereof deemed necessary to reveal those facts which would govern it in the exercise of a sound, judicial discretion." (Italics ours.)

It is further argued that as the court knew of the reconciliation, there was little else in the way of information, which could have been given, which would have affected the court's discretion, which it exercised in giving due consideration to the rights and status of all parties concerned. We agree with the propositions of law pertaining to the sacred duty of the trial court to protect all concerned. If, however, under the facts as stated by respondent it was a matter of discretion, we are convinced that the exercise of a wise and sound discretion would have required the court to issue its order that the second wife, Bryan Houston Bowman, be given her day in court and the application to be heard under the provisions of section 389, Code of Civil Procedure.

The granting of the motion to vacate the final decree prejudiced the rights of the cross-complainant, because it ipso facto destroyed her marriage. Section 61, Civ. Code. Rowland v. Horst, 188 Cal. 772, 207 P. 373, cited by appellant, is as follows: "Necessary parties to an action in the capacity of defendants are those who are interested in resisting the demands of the plaintiff either immediately or consequently and whose rights would be prejudicially affected by the controversy." See, also, Wickersham v. Comerford, 96 Cal. 433, 31 P. 358; Bergin v. Haight, 99 Cal. 52, 33 P. 760; Estate of Seaman, 51 Cal. App. 409, 196 P. 928; Murray v. Murray, 115 Cal. 266, 47 P. 37, 37 L. R. A. 626, 56 Am. St. Rep. 97. Other authorities having more or less bearing on this point will be referred to later.

[2] The second reason we find which would indicate that the judgment in this case should be reversed is that, in our view, the order made in the proceedings in the divorce suit after the entry of the final decree was void, as being in excess of the jurisdiction of the court, because (1) Frances C. Bowman was guilty of laches, as affirmatively appears in findings VII and IX, in delaying her application for suit herein from the early part of January, 1925, when it is found she first knew of the entry of said final decree, until November 2, 1925, a delay of approximately ten months; (2) she was estopped from the right to make application for an annulment of the final decree, as it affirmatively appears from said findings that when she first learned of the final decree in the early part of January, about three months after her own counsel had applied for and obtained the said decree on October 28, 1924, she acquiesced therein, expressed satisfaction therewith, and was willing and desirous that said decree should stand as a valid and subsisting decree. After she learned of the marriage of Horace D. Bowman to Bryan Houston Bowman, which took place in April, 1925, Frances C. Bowman accepted all of the benefits granted her by the said decree in the way of support, maintenance, and the custody of minor children, etc. She thereby confirmed and ratified the action of her attorney, Mr. Grant, in causing the issuance of said final decree. She made no effort thereafter to have said decree set aside until November 2, 1925, more than a year after its issuance, by which time the trial court had lost jurisdiction to vacate it or set it aside, under the well-established law of this state.

Wheelock v. Superior Court of San Diego County, 67 Cal. App. 601, 227 P. 931, was a proceeding in prohibition to restrain the superior court from vacating a final decree of divorce. The court therein said: "If the motion which was finally made to respondent court more than seven months after the entry of the final decree of divorce be regarded as one invoking the inherent power of the court to set aside orders and judgments procured through fraud, irrespective of the provisions of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, it was unseasonably late." That case is based on facts similar in some respects to those involved in the proceedings before the trial court on the motion to vacate the final decree of divorce. It reviews many California decisions and we believe is controlling in principle upon the issue here. We cite, also, Consolidated Construction Co. v. Pac. Electric Ry., 184 Cal. 244, 193 P. 238; 19 Cor. Jur. 170, § 424.

In her application to the trial court in the divorce proceedings to vacate the final decree Frances C. Bowman concealed from the court the fact that she had accepted, acquiesced in and expressed satisfaction with said final decree, and her wish and desire that it stand as a valid and subsisting decree for months after its issuance. That concealment was fraud practiced by her upon the court and undoubtedly fraudulent as to the cross-complainant and appellant herein. Whether or not this was extrinsic and not intrinsic fraud need not here be decided. As shown, there are other ample grounds for the reversal of the judgment in this case.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to the trial court to enter its judgment against the plaintiff, Frances C. Bowman, denying her prayer for annulment of the marriage of Bryan Houston Bowman with Horace D. Bowman. It is further ordered that judgment be entered in favor of Bryan Houston Bowman, appellant and cross-complainant, as prayed for in her cross-complaint, against both the said cross-defendants; and that the order made in action entitled "Frances C. Bowman v. Horace D. Bowman," No. 40,292, in said superior court, purporting to set aside and vacate the final decree in said action, be set aside, vacated and annulled, and that the said final decree of divorce therein stand as a subsisting and valid decree of divorce, dissolving the bonds of matrimony formerly existing between Frances C. Bowman and Horace D. Bowman, and that appellant have and recover all her costs herein.

BOTTI et al. v. SAVILL. (Civ. 6591.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. March 13, 1929.

1. Automobiles 🔑244(6, 58)—Evidence held to justify finding that automobilist was free from negligence, and pedestrian killed while attempting to cross highway at night was guilty of contributory negligence proximately causing his death.

In action for death of one struck by automobile while attempting to cross highway at night, evidence that there was sufficient space in center of highway for deceased to have remained there safely while defendant's automobile passed, and that deceased had been drinking intoxicants, held sufficient to warrant jury's finding that defendant was free from negligence, and that deceased was guilty of contributory negligence proximately causing his death.

2. Appeal and error 🔑1033(5)—Instruction submitting public or private character of lane crossing highway held more favorable than prejudicial to plaintiffs, suing for death of one struck by automobile.

In action for death of one struck by automobile, where answer denied there was an intersection at place of accident, thus placing burden on plaintiffs to prove an obstructed view of approaching intersection, but plaintiffs introduced no evidence on issue, and all evidence showed accident occurred north of intersection, and that view was not obstructed, held, that instruction submitting public or private character of lane intersecting with highway was more favorable to plaintiffs than prejudicial.

3. Trial 🔑295(6)—Instructions on duty of motorist crossing intersection, when read together, held not misleading.

In action for death of one struck by automobile, instruction that Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 517), as amended, did not require defendant to reduce speed until he was actually crossing intersecting highway, when considered in connection with other instructions on duty of motorist under Motor Vehicle Act, § 113a, and necessity of motorist having control of automobile, held not misleading.

4. Trial 🔑296(4, 5)—Instruction that motorist had right to assume pedestrian would not unnecessarily expose himself to danger held not misleading, in view of evidence and other instructions.

In action for death of one struck by automobile, instruction that defendant had right to assume that deceased would not voluntarily and unnecessarily expose himself to danger held not to have been misleading, in view of evidence, and of other instructions making it duty of defendant to observe highway ahead and operate automobile in a careful manner.

5. Negligence 🔑141(8)—Instruction that, if decedent was guilty of "contributory negligence," even in slightest degree, which "negligence" proximately contributed to accident, plaintiffs were not entitled to recover, held not erroneous.

Instruction, in action for death of one struck by automobile, that if decedent was guilty of "contributory negligence," even in the slightest degree proximately contributing to cause of accident, plaintiffs were not entitled to recover, held not erroneous, as a failure to exercise requisite amount of care under any circumstances, is "negligence," and term "contributory negligence" in itself implies a want of ordinary care.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; George H. Buck, Judge.

Action by Delina Botti, individually and as guardian ad litem for certain minors, against E. J. Savill. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Roland J. White and Cooley & Gallagher, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

J. E. McCurdy, of San Mateo, and Redman & Alexander, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NORTON, Justice pro tem. This action was brought by the plaintiffs to recover damages for death claimed to have been caused through the negligent operation of an automobile by the defendant. The plaintiffs are the widow and minor children of Louis Botti, who was struck and killed by the defendant's automobile while crossing the state highway in San Mateo county.

Defendant denied the alleged negligence, and affirmatively charged the deceased with contributory negligence. The case was tried before a jury, which returned a verdict in favor of defendant. Motion for a new trial was made and denied, and this is an appeal from the judgment under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure. Insufficiency of the evidence, and that the court erroneously instructed the jury to the prejudice of the appellants, are the grounds relied upon for a reversal.

[1] The accident occurred about 11 o'clock p. m. on the night of December 26th, while deceased was crossing the state highway in San Mateo county at a point a few feet north of Ludermann lane, Lomita Park. The highway runs north and south, and the lane intersects it from the west. There is evidence to show that the deceased on the night of the accident had entertained Lee Mazzotti and his wife at his home, located on the east side of the state highway; that about 11 o'clock that night the deceased and Mazzotti started for the home of a friend of the deceased, who lived on the west side of the state highway. They entered the highway from its easterly side a few feet north of its intersection with Ludermann lane. It was the intention of deceased and Mazzotti to cross to the westerly side of the highway and proceed westerly up Ludermann lane. The paved portion of the highway at the place where the accident happened is 40 feet wide, with four traffic lanes to accommodate two cars abreast in each direction.

The defendant was driving south on the highway in the extreme westerly lane, with the right wheels of his automobile from three to five feet from the west edge of the paved portion of the highway. There were no cars ahead of him or alongside of him; but there was a car traveling south behind him on the inside traffic lane, and a few feet from the center line of the pavement, and approximately 50 feet behind the defendant's car. The defendant was traveling between 25 and 30 miles an hour. His lamps illuminated the highway for a distance of 75 feet ahead of his machine and at a distance of 40 feet ahead he could see the road from 3 to 5 feet to his left. The deceased and his companion, Mazzotti, saw the defendant's automobile when they first entered the highway, and when it was from 600 to 900 feet away, and as they proceeded across the highway and at the time of the accident there was a double line of cars going north in the two traffic lanes on the east side of the pavement. The deceased and Mazzotti, with deceased to Mazzotti's left, together walked and ran through the northbound traffic, paused momentarily when they reached the center of the highway, and then ran 15 feet past the center of the highway and immediately in front of defendant's automobile, then from 40 to 50 feet distant and approaching at a speed of between 25 and 30 miles per hour. Decedent and Mazzotti then separated. Mazzotti jumped forward and westerly, out of the way of defendant's automobile. Decedent stopped and stood still upon the pavement in front of the machine, and was struck by the left front fender of the car as the defendant turned to the west in an effort to avoid him without running down his companion.

The deceased knew that defendant's car was approaching the path he was pursuing at the time he started to cross, and could have seen it if he had looked from the time he emerged from the northbound traffic when he reached and stopped in the center of the highway and at all times thereafter. The defendant could not see the deceased until he emerged from behind the northbound traffic and was past the center line of the highway, and came into the space made visible by his lights. Deceased was then 40 or 50 feet ahead of him. He then applied both the service and emergency brakes and swerved to the right, in an effort to avoid the accident. The line of traffic coming from the south was from 3 to 5 feet east of the center line of the highway. There was sufficient space for deceased to have remained there in safety until the defendant's automobile had passed.

There is evidence in the record from which the jury could have concluded that deceased had been drinking intoxicants. There is sufficient evidence in the record for the jury to have found that defendant was free from fault and that the negligence of the deceased was the proximate cause of the accident resulting unfortunately in his death.

[2] The appellants first complain of an instruction that submitted the public or private character of Ludermann lane to the jury. The character of the lane was immaterial, unless in approaching it the view was obstructed, and this question was submitted to the jury by another instruction requested by appellants.

The answer denied that there was "an intersection at the place of the accident" and the burden rested upon the appellants to prove an obstructed view in approaching the intersection if they relied on the fifteen-mile-per-hour limit. They introduced no evidence upon the issue, and in their opening statement to the jury based their right to recover upon a different theory, and all the evidence in the case showed that the accident occurred north of the intersection, and there was an entire absence of evidence that the view was obstructed. Therefore submitting the question to the jury was more favorable to appellants than prejudicial.

[3] In the next instruction complained of the trial court instructed the jury to the effect that, if they believed Ludermann lane was a public highway, the Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 517, as amended), did not require the defendant to reduce his speed until he was actually crossing it, and "that he was not required to reduce his speed while he was approaching it." This instruction was given in connection with the instruction proposed by appellants as to the speed in traversing an intersection where the view is obstructed, and had no reference to the general duty of the defendant to exercise due care under section 113a of the Motor Vehicle Act. The jury could not have understood the instruction to mean that the defendant was licensed to travel at the speed limit under all circumstances.

The court, moreover, gave an instruction in the language of section 113a, and further instructed the jury that it was the duty of an operator of an automobile to operate the same at such rate of speed and in such manner as will enable him to retain control over the same, and to seasonably stop it or check its speed in the event it is necessary to do so. The instructions must be considered as a whole, and in their proper relation to the other instructions given in the case, and, so considered, these instructions could not have been misleading.

[4] The court instructed the jury that the defendant had the right to assume and act upon the assumption that the deceased "would not voluntarily and unnecessarily expose himself to danger." While the instruction is open to the construction placed upon it by the appellants that the defendant had a right to assume that the road was clear, the evidence in this case is such that the jury could not have so understood it, or have been misled by it, in view of the other instructions given at appellants' request as to the duty of defendant to observe the highway ahead and operate his automobile in a careful and prudent manner, so as to avoid injury to the deceased, and hence could not have resulted in harm to appellants.

[5] We are not impressed by the argument of appellants criticizing the instruction requested by the defendant and given by the court, to the effect that, if the jury found that the decedent was guilty of contributory negligence, even in the slightest degree, and that such negligence on his part proximately contributed to the cause of the accident, appellants were not entitled to recover. Negligence is the failure to exercise ordinary care, and it is inaccurate to refer to degrees of negligence in cases of this character. A failure to exercise the requisite amount of care under any circumstances is negligence, and the term "contributory negligence" in itself implies a want of ordinary care. Steinberger v. California Electric Garage Co., 176 Cal. 386, 168 P. 570; Metcalfe v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 63 Cal. App. 331, 218 P. 486. In our opinion, the trial court committed no error in giving the last instruction objected to.

The judgment is ordered affirmed.

In the Matter of the Petition of Carrie A. LEWIS, for Appointment of Trustee. Cornelia J. MURRAY, Paul Stewart and A. T. Stewart, Appellants, v. Carrie A. LEWIS, Respondent. (L. A. 9772.)

Supreme Court of California. March 13, 1929.

In Bank.

Appeal from a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County; Elias v. Rosencranz, Judge, in an action for the appointment of a trustee. Affirmed.

Stewart & Stewart, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Faucett & Ring, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LANGDON, J. Carrie A. Lewis, filed a petition in the superior court, setting forth the following facts:

That on May 29, 1925, H. W. Hopkins, as trustee, and Cornelia J. Murray and petitioner, as cestui que trustent, made and executed a certain trust agreement covering certain described real property, a copy of which is attached to the petition; that by the terms thereof it was provided that, in the event of the demise or resignation of the said H. W. Hopkins as said trustee, R. F. Davis was to succeed him in said trusteeship; that prior to the filing of the petition Hopkins resigned, his resignation was accepted, and immediately thereafter Davis succeeded Hopkins as trustee, and ever since has been and now is the trustee of said trust estate; that on October 25, 1926, said Davis tendered his resignation as trustee in writing, and said petitioner accepted said resignation, subject to the approval of the court; that no property or assets of any kind has come into the possession or control of said Davis, and no accounting is necessary. It is then alleged that petitioner is in all respects competent to nominate a trustee, and that one Emma L. Wagner is a fit and proper person for such trustee, and it is prayed that she be appointed as such. It appears that the trust is, primarily, to furnish support and maintenance to petitioner during her lifetime, with the remainder after her death to Cornelia J. Murray, or her estate.

Cornelia J. Murray, Paul and A. T. Stewart filed an answer and counter petition, in which they deny the resignation of Hopkins as trustee and the incumbency of Davis as such; deny the extent of the property as set forth in the petition, and assert that Hopkins is chargeable as trustee; deny that petitioner is competent to nominate a trustee; and deny that Emma L. Wagner is a fit and proper person for trustee. It is then asserted that by an agreement dated May 26, 1926, the parties to the original trust instrument, and in addition thereto, Paul and A. T. Stewart, entered into another agreement, whereby Hopkins was directed and consented to deed all the property of the trust estate to Emma L. Wagner, for the necessary care and support of Carrie A. Lewis during her lifetime, and the remainder to be divided, two-fifths to the Stewarts and three-fifths to Cornelia J. Murray. It is alleged that Emma L. Wagner made it appear to counter petitioners that she had assumed control of said property under said agreement. There are also other allegations to the general effect that Emma L. Wagner was conspiring with petitioner, and was not a fit and proper person for the trustee under the trust.

The evidence adduced on the hearing is not before us, as the appeal is on the judgment roll alone. The trial court, however, found that all the allegations of the petition were true, except that an additional parcel of real property was included in the trust. It finds with reference to the agreement of May 26, 1926, that it was ineffectual for any purpose, and null and void and of no effect. There is no intimation in the record of the basis of this finding, and respondent has not seen fit to favor the court with a brief. The trial court also found that Emma L. Wagner was a fit and proper person to be appointed as trustee; that, upon the resignation of Hopkins, Davis became and continued trustee until October 25, 1926, subject to the power of the court to require an accounting from either of them. Emma L. Wagner was appointed trustee, accordingly, from which order an appeal has been taken.

There is nothing in the record to show any error in the proceedings. Appellant asserts that a question of law alone is presented, but, for aught that appears in the record, the evidence may have shown that the purported agreement of May 26, 1926, was never signed by petitioner or Hopkins, or that it was signed under duress, mistake or undue influence.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

YORK, J. This is an appeal from a judgment rendered in favor of the defendants in an action instituted by the administrator of the estate of Charles B. Mullaly, deceased, brought for the benefit of Mary Bley, the divorced wife of decedent and the only creditor of the decedent's estate.

An examination of the transcript discloses that there was sufficient evidence introduced in the trial court to support each and all of the findings made by the trial court. The findings made by the trial court were sufficient to support the judgment. There are no objections here made by appellant to the introduction of evidence that merit discussion in this opinion.

The judgment is affirmed.

CRAIL, Justice pro tem. Defendant appeals from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $3,800 in an action brought to recover said sum alleged to be due him for salary as president.

Defendant contends that there was not sufficient evidence to sustain the findings, that the trial court erred in certain rulings on the admission of evidence, and also that it erred in denying defendant's motion for nonsuit interposed at the conclusion of plaintiff's case. However, there was substantial evidence to sustain the findings, there were no prejudicial errors in the rulings on the admission of evidence, and the motion for nonsuit was properly denied.

WEST v. WEST. (L. A. 8935.)

1. Husband and wife 🔑298½—Where wife merely sought to have sufficient personal property sequestered to pay alimony, finding that property was husband's separate property held unauthorized (Civ. Code, §§ 137, 140, 141).

In action by wife for separate maintenance, in which wife merely sought to have "home place" set apart to her in fee and as to the balance of defendant's property sought no further relief except payment of permanent alimony and sequestration of sufficient quantity of defendant's personal property to secure regular payment thereof, question whether personal property referred to in complaint was community property or separate property of husband was immaterial, and determination of trial court that it was husband's separate property was unauthorized under Civ. Code, §§ 137, 140, and 141, where defendant's cross-complaint for divorce, which was denied made no averment as to status of properties outside of home place and sought no affirmative relief as to such properties.

2. Husband and wife 🔑298½—Court denying husband divorce was relieved of determining any issue raised by prayer of his cross-complaint as to status of personal property.

Trial court, by denying divorce to defendant on his cross-complaint in wife's action for separate maintenance, was thereby relieved of necessity or duty of determining whether personal property was community or separate estate of husband, even if such issue was presented by application for general relief in cross-complaint.

3. Husband and wife 🔑299(4)—Provision, in judgment for separate maintenance, that receivership of husband's property cease upon wife's death or further order, held not erroneous (Civ. Code, §§ 137, 140, 141).

In wife's action for separate maintenance under Civ. Code, §§ 137, 140, 141, provision in judgment that upon wife's death, or upon further order of court, receivership of husband's property for collection and payment of alimony should cease, held not erroneous, since award of alimony would cease to be effective after wife's death and same result would follow upon making of subsequent order.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ira F. Thompson, Judge.

Action by Mary W. West against Amos L. West for separate maintenance. From the judgment, plaintiff appeals. Reversed in part, and affirmed in part.

Robert A. Morton and Lawler & Degnan, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Todd, Pawson & Watkins, of Long Beach, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. The plaintiff commenced this action against her husband, the defendant, for divorce, alleging as the basis for the action the infliction upon her by the defendant of grievious bodily injury and grievious mental suffering amounting to extreme cruelty. She further alleged that she and the defendant were the owners and possessed of a large amount of community property, a portion of which consisted of real estate of the value of $7,500, which had theretofore been occupied by them as their family residence; and of personal property, consisting largely of promissory notes secured by mortgages, amounting in value, according to the information and belief of the plaintiff, to a sum in excess of $150,000; and that the defendant had also as his separate estate certain other personal property of a like character, alleged to be of a value in excess of $40,000, and from which community and separate estate he was deriving an income in excess of $1,000 per month. The plaintiff further alleged herself to be without any means for her support and maintenance and without the necessary means for the maintenance of her said action. She prayed that the bonds of matrimony existing between herself and the defendant be severed; that the real property and dwelling thereon be assigned to her; that the remaining community property be divided between herself and the defendant in such proportions as the court should deem just; that the defendant be required to pay such sum as the court should deem reasonable for the support of plaintiff during the pendency of this action and thereafter during her natural life; and that the defendant be further required to pay plaintiff's attorneys' fees and the costs and expenses incident to the prosecution of her said action. To this complaint the defendant filed an answer, denying the averments thereof as to any alleged cruelty on his part. He admitted the ownership of the dwelling house property and the alleged value thereof, but denied that the same was community property, and, on the contrary, alleged that it and all of the other personal property of which the plaintiff alleged defendant to be the owner were his separate property. The prayer of his answer was that plaintiff take nothing by her said action. Subsequent to the filing of said answer the plaintiff, by leave of court, presented an amended and supplemental complaint, wherein she changed the nature and purpose of her action from one for divorce to one for separate maintenance. She repeated and amplified her averments with respect to the defendant's various acts alleged to amount to extreme cruelty. She also repeated and amplified her averments with respect to property, alleging the dwelling house to be of the cost value of $12,500, repeating her allegations as to the amount and value of the personal property held in possession by the defendant, and in addition thereto alleging that the defendant was concealing and refusing to reveal to the plaintiff the exact nature and value of said last-named properties, and was conveying and transferring large portions thereof to persons unknown to plaintiff, with the intent and purpose of depriving the plaintiff of her rightful share and interest therein and was also conspiring to transfer a large part of said property beyond the jurisdiction of the court, with a view to rendering any judgment which might be made in respect thereto ineffectual. She therefore prayed for a decree of separate maintenance and that she be awarded the dwelling house property and the furnishings thereof, and that the court award for her support and maintenance the sum of $500 per month together with her costs and counsel fees incurred in the action. She further prayed for a restraining order preventing the defendant from concealing or disposing of any portion of the community property or from removing the same outside the state of California, and that in order to render said restraining order effectual the defendant be required to deposit a sufficient amount of said community property and personal property as security for whatever sums the court might award her by way of separate maintenance, and for such other relief as might be meet in the premises. The defendant responded to this amended and supplemental complaint with a cross-complaint, alleging desertion on the part of the plaintiff, and otherwise repeating by reference the averments and denials of his aforesaid answer, except that he expressly admitted that the family dwelling place was community property. The cause came to trial upon the issues as thus reframed, and, upon the completion thereof, the court made its findings of fact and conclusions of law wherein, upon the issue of cruelty, the findings of the court were in the plaintiff's favor, and upon the issue of the plaintiff's desertion of the defendant were also in her favor. Having thus found that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for separate maintenance, the court, in its findings, proceeded to deal with the issues affecting the property rights and interests of the parties to the action. In so doing the court found that the family dwelling house was community property of the parties and awarded the same, together with the furnishings thereof, to the plaintiff in fee. The court further awarded to the plaintiff for her support and maintenance the sum of $250 per month, payable monthly, until the further order of the court. As to the remaining properties of the parties the court proceeded to make specific findings to the effect that all of said properties, amounting approximately to a value of $120,000, were the defendant's separate property; that at the time of the marriage of the parties in the state of Missouri in the year 1901, in which state the parties then resided, the defendant was possessed of real and personal property of the value of not to exceed $45,000 and which property was his separate estate and so continued to be down to the time of the removal of the parties to California in the year 1919; that the said property of the defendant and the accretions thereof while the parties continued to reside in the state of Missouri were the separate property of the defendant, subject only to certain dower rights existing in the wife under the laws of said state; that upon removing to California the defendant either brought with him or shortly thereafter sent for said property, which, with its accretions, amounted at that time approximately to a valuation of $100,000, and which latter sum the defendant invested in a loan and mortgage business in the city of Long Beach to which he gave his personal attention, and which at the time of the institution of this action amounted approximately to a valuation of $120,000. The court further found that the defendant was threatening to make such dispositions of said property as would prevent the same becoming or being made available for the plaintiff's support and maintenance, and that in order to insure to the plaintiff the payment of such sums as had been thus awarded to her, it was necessary that an amount of the properties of the defendant equivalent to a face value of $50,000 be impounded, and that for that purpose a receiver be appointed to take possession of so much of the properties of the defendant as would represent such valuation, and to pay the plaintiff from the increment thereof the sum of $250 per month for her support and maintenance until the further order of the court. The court, in its conclusions of law, further concluded that as to the properties thus impounded the receiver upon the death of the plaintiff or further order of the court should return the same to the defendant, his heirs or assigns. The judgment of the court followed its foregoing findings of fact and conclusions of law. Thereafter the plaintiff moved to vacate the judgment upon the ground that the conclusions of law upon which the same was predicated were not sustained by the findings of fact in so far as the same related to the property interest of the respective parties. Wherefore plaintiff moved that the court should make and enter its conclusion of law to the effect that the entire property held in possession by the defendant was community property and should make and enter its judgment in accordance with such substituted conclusions of law. The court upon the hearing upon said motion denied the same. The plaintiff's motion for a new trial was also denied. Whereupon plaintiff gave notice of her appeal to this court from that portion of the judgment wherein it was adjudged and decreed that the personal property, and the whole thereof as set forth in the findings of the court, was the defendant's separate estate. The plaintiff further appealed from that portion of the judgment directing the return of the impounded properties of the defendant to him or his heirs or assigns upon the plaintiff's death or further order of the court. Said appeal was taken and is presented to this court upon a bill of exceptions which embodies practically the entire evidence in the case.

[1, 2] The main contention of the appellant herein is to the effect that that portion of the findings and judgment of the trial court wherein it was undertaken to find and to adjudge the status of that portion of the properties involved in this action, other than the real property comprising the dwelling place of the parties, to be either the community or the separate property of the spouses was an immaterial issue in the instant action, and was therefore an issue which the trial court had neither the power nor the duty to determine, and hence that the findings and judgment of the trial court determining that the defendant was the owner and entitled to the whole of said personal property as his separate estate should be reversed on this appeal. We are of the opinion that the appellant herein is correct in this contention. This action, as finally framed by the plaintiff herein, is an action for separate maintenance, and for that form of relief alone, in so far as the plaintiff is concerned. In her amended and supplemental complaint herein, while the plaintiff alleges that all of the property, both real and personal, held and possessed by the defendant, constitutes community property, she only seeks to have that portion thereof which is described as the "home place" set apart to her in fee. As to all of the rest of said property she asks for no further relief than that out of the proceeds thereof she be awarded separate maintenance in the form of permanent alimony, amounting to $500 a month; and in order to secure the payment of such sum she asks for the sequestration in the hands of a receiver of a sufficient quantity of said personal property to assure the regular payment to her thereafter of her required support. Upon such a pleading upon the wife's part it would seem clear that the question as to whether the personal properties referred to in her said amended and supplemental complaint are the community properties of the parties to the action, or are the separate properties of the husband, would be an immaterial issue for the reason that no determination thereof is necessary; and for the further reason that under the provisions of sections 137, 140, and 141 of the Civil Code the trial court, in cases for separate maintenance, is given power to enforce its orders in that regard by recourse either to the community property of the spouses or to the separate property of the husband, and in the exercise of such power had authority to compel obedience to its said orders by the appointment of a receiver or by any other remedy applicable to the case. It is thus apparent that in so far as the plaintiff is concerned, and in so far as it was necessary to make an award to her of the precise relief she sought, the trial court was not required to make any determination as to whether the personal property referred to in her pleadings herein was as to any portion thereof community property or was as to the whole thereof the separate property of the defendant. When we turn to the pleadings of said defendant, we find that while it is true that he presented a cross-complaint seeking a divorce from the plaintiff upon the ground of desertion and in said cross-complaint averred that the only community property of the parties consisted of the dwelling house property or the "home place," he made no other averment as to the status of the remaining properties and as to such properties sought no affirmative relief. It thus appears that as to the pleadings of the defendant and cross-complainant herein no triable issue was presented as to whether the personal property held or possessed by said defendant was or was not his separate estate. And even if such issue could be held to have been presented by the application in his cross-complaint for general relief, the trial court by its denial to him of a divorce upon the ground sought relieved itself of the necessity or duty of making any determination as to the status of said property, and as to whether or not the same or any portion thereof was community or separate estate. Such being the nature of the action, such the pleadings of the parties, and such the determination of the court as to the relief to which each or either of said parties was entitled, the question as to whether the personal properties sought to be involved in said action were, as to the whole or any portion thereof, the community properties of the parties or the separate property of the husband, was one which the trial court was not called upon to determine in order to grant the plaintiff the full relief which she sought and obtained; and this being so, we are constrained to hold that it was beyond the power of the trial court in this action and in respect to the material issues presented therein to find and to determine by its decree that the whole of the personal properties referred to by the pleadings herein constituted the defendant's separate estate, to the ownership of which he was declared to be entitled by the findings and decree of the court. The question as to the status of said property involving, as it does, a number of interesting problems of both law and fact, we do not for the foregoing reasons feel called upon to consider or determine in this limited form of action, and upon the present appeal.

[3] As to appellant's further contention that the trial court was in error in that portion of its judgment wherein it was, in substance, decreed that upon the plaintiff's death, or upon other or further order of the court, the receivership provided therein should cease, we find no merit in this contention, since in the event of the appellant's death the provision of the trial court with regard to her separate maintenance and the award of alimony would cease to be effective and the same result would follow upon the making of any later order by the trial court materially modifying its former direction in that regard; and thus in either event the trial court would retain, as in fact it did retain by that portion of said judgment, full power to restore to the defendant the aforesaid property, regardless of whether he now held or was thereafter to hold the same as community property or as his separate estate.

It follows from the foregoing that as to that portion of the conclusions of law and judgment of the trial court which purport to determine the status of the personal properties referred to therein and to find and decree that the same and the whole thereof are separate property of the defendant herein, the said judgment is reversed, and as to all other portions thereof the judgment is affirmed.

ERNSTING et al. v. UNITED STAGES, Inc., et al. (L. A. 8983.)★

Rehearing Denied April 25, 1929.

1. Judgment 🔑725(3)—Judgment determining ownership of auto stage franchise in injunction suit held to bar subsequent suit between parties for more amplified relief based solely upon franchise ownership.

Judgment, in suit by corporation to determine priority of its claim to auto stage franchise and exclusive right to operate thereunder, so as to relieve it from requirement of certificate of convenience and necessity under St. 1917, p. 330, and for the use of name "Auto Stages" and for injunctive relief, in which defendants likewise pleaded ownership of franchises, held to bar subsequent proceedings between same parties, where no appeal was taken from former judgment, and where relief sought in subsequent action, though wider and more amplified, depended solely on question of ownership of franchise, which was previously determined.

2. Judgment 🔑720—Judgment not appealed from is binding on parties as to all issues properly involved and disposed of thereby.

Where no appeal is taken, judgment, even if erroneous, is nevertheless final and effective as to all issues properly involved therein and disposed of thereby, and parties having failed to seek review by appeal are foreclosed from taking further proceedings on such issues.

3. Judgment 🔑732—Judgment determining plaintiff's ownership of auto stage franchise held conclusive determination against defendants of their claims of ownership not specifically disposed of.

Court, on rendition of judgment for plaintiff in injunction suit involving ownership and exercise of auto stage franchise, decided claims of ownership asserted in cross-complaints, though claims were not specifically disposed of, and judgment was bar to subsequent proceedings by defendants involving same issue.

4. Judgment 🔑725(1)—That prior judgment determining ownership of auto stage franchise rested solely upon order of railroad commission did not entitle parties to relitigate issue.

That judgment, in prior action determining ownership of auto stage franchise as between claimants, rested solely upon order of railroad commission, did not entitle parties to prior proceedings to have issue of ownership thereof again litigated.

5. Judgment ⚷649—Character of evidence supporting a judgment or reasons assigned for rendering it are immaterial as regards estoppel thereby.

In determining whether prior judgment operates as estoppel, the provisions of the judgment control, and not the character of the evidence introduced to support it, and the reasons assigned by the trial court for its findings and judgment are not proper matters for consideration.

6. Judgment ⚷678(7)—Individuals pleading right to do business as association were bound by judgment, in subsequent suit by same parties acting as association.

Where parties in former action involving ownership of auto stage franchise pleaded their right to do business as association, they could not avoid estoppel of former judgment by claiming that in former proceedings they were acting individually, whereas in present action they were acting as association.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Frank P. Collier, Judge.

Action by Frederick Ernsting and others, doing business under the name "United Stages," an unincorporated association, against the United Stages, Inc., and others, for an injunction. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Robert G. Hill, of El Centro, for appellants.

MacDonald & Thompson and H. W. Kidd, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PRESTON, J. The judgment in this case is affirmed. This results from our firm belief that the plea of res adjudicata interposed by the defendants must be sustained. The basis for this conclusion will now be briefly set forth:

This is a second appeal. On the former hearing the efficacy of the fourth amended complaint against general demurrer was under review, and it was held that a cause of action against such an attack was stated. Ernsting et al. v. United Stages, Inc., 194 Cal. 171, 228 P. 4. Litigation of various types has engaged the opposing parties hereto for several years. The present action was instituted on the 3d day of June, 1920. Rival claims to the ownership of and the right to operate under auto stage franchises along certain public highways in Imperial and San Diego counties constitute the subject of the litigation. To be more specific, the actual issue between the respective parties was originally this: Which set of them was in good faith on May 1, 1917, operating auto stages over these routes to such an extent and in such a manner as to exempt them from the requirement of a certificate of public convenience and necessity under the "Auto Stage and Truck Transportation Act" (Stats. 1917, chap. 213, p. 330)?

The claim of appellants here is that defendant Thomas Morgan, while acting as their agent, did in fact act in violation of his trust and in the interest of himself and the other defendants in securing from the railroad commission of the state of California operative rights for said franchises; that what he did as such agent, instead of redounding to the benefit of defendants, should be held to have been done for the interest and benefit of appellants. An extended review of the facts set forth in the complaint is unnecessary, as such review was had in the former action, to which reference is hereby made. The record shows that the claim of priority to these franchises was the subject of a special inquiry by the railroad commission of the state of California, which said body on the 1st day of June, 1923, made its findings and order enjoining and restraining appellants from further operating stages along and upon any of said highways and holding that any rights that the appellants might have had respecting said franchises had been abandoned prior to the said 1st day of May 1917. The commission took occasion however, to say that the claim of appellants to any portion of the value of the business should be administered in the civil courts.

A review of this order was sought in this court by appellants and with the result that it was in all respects sustained. Notwithstanding this ruling, certain of the appellants here resumed the operation of auto stages on certain of the highways and between certain termini to which they had been forbidden by the said order of the railroad commission, whereupon the United Stages, Inc., a corporation (respondent here), filed pending the first appeal in the present action, a complaint against appellants here, being cause No. 8597, in the county of Imperial. In said action United Stages, Inc., set up the priority of its claim to said auto stage franchises and their value; the order of the railroad commission in its favor respecting the ownership thereof; the exclusive right to operate thereunder; the exclusive right to the use of the name United Stages; the unlawful use of said name by defendants in violation of the terms of said order of the commission; the operation of certain stage lines in violation of the terms of said order; injuries suffered from such illegal acts, ending with a prayer for injunctive relief and for damages.

To this complaint each of the appellants here, acting as individuals, filed a separate answer and cross-complaint in identical language, differing only as to the particular route or highway to which rights were claimed, each of which claims was to a part of the system claimed by the United Stages, Inc. Said answers and cross-complaints set forth the facts relating to the controversy in all respects substantially as in the complaint in the action before us. The ownership of said franchises was pleaded; their ownership by United Stages, Inc., was denied, and ownership of a certain part of the system was alleged to be in each of said cross-complainants; the right to use of the name "United Stages" was put in issue; the alleged perfidy and bad faith of the defendant Morgan and the facts charging him as a trustee were also set up; and prayer was made for an injunction retraining said United Stages, Inc., from operating auto stages on said public highways, together with damages in large amounts for the use of said franchises and for costs and for "all proper relief."

The affirmative allegations of the said respective cross-complaints were put in issue by appropriate denials in answers thereto. The action came on for trial before Hon. John W. Shenk, now a member of this court, then a judge of the superior court of the state of California in and for the county of Los Angeles, on December 3, 1923. The cause was tried on its merits. The proceedings before the railroad commission were introduced. Certain testimony was offered and rejected. Findings of fact and conclusions of law were made upon which a judgment was entered, which said judgment was to the effect that United Stages, Inc., plaintiff there, was entitled to the relief prayed for as against five of the seven plaintiffs here, and to the effect that said defendants there (plaintiffs here) were enjoined perpetually from using or aiding and abetting the use of the name "United Stages"; that said defendants there take nothing by reason of their respective cross-complaints. The cross-complaints of defendants J. O. Moore, W. H. Updegraff, and J. O. McClung were not specifically disposed of by said judgment. Said judgment became final.

Following this, by proper amendments to the answer in the present action, said proceedings and judgment were set up and pleaded as res adjudicata of the issues tendered by the appellants in their complaint herein. This cause came on for trial on the 26th day of January, 1925, before Hon. Frank C. Collier, whereupon the judgment roll in the action above set forth was introduced in evidence and held sufficient to constitute a plea of res adjudicata and judgment thereupon followed for the defendants.

[1, 2] From this brief narrative of the complicated facts in this case it is evident that the action of the court below was correct. The causes of action and the parties are the same. The case was heard on the merits. The sole foundation upon which cause No. 8597 rested was the ownership of these franchises. The same ownership is the sole issue tendered by the complaint herein. If appellants were the owners of said franchises when said first cause of action arose, they were entitled not only to the relief there sought, but also to the relief prayed for in the present action and if dissatisfied with the pronouncements of the court in said first action, it was their duty to see that a review of that judgment was had upon appeal. Failing to do this, the judgment, even were it erroneous, is nevertheless final and effective as to all issues properly involved therein and thereby disposed of.

The only difference between the two causes of action that we can discern is that in the present action wider and more amplified relief is prayed for, but such relief, as above stated, depends solely upon the issues of ownership of said franchises, which said question was determined adversely to appellants here in the previous action. Appellants apparently have a misconception of the binding effect of the issues disposed of by the former hearing. It seems to be their contention that inasmuch as they did not ask for relief of the specific kind here prayed for, they may have another hearing on the merits for the purpose of seeking such relief. This is not the holding of this court. In the recent case of Price v. Sixth District Agricultural Ass'n, 201 Cal. 502, 258 P. 387, that question was before the court and was there disposed of as herein stated. See, also, Creditors' Adjustment Co. v. Newman, 185 Cal. 513, 197 P. 334; Bingham v. Kearney, 136 Cal. 175, 177, 68 P. 597, and Quirk v. Rooney, 130 Cal. 505, 62 P. 825.

[3] Appellants also insist that inasmuch as the prior judgment did not deal with the claims of defendants Moore, Updegraff, and McClung, it is not res adjudicata as to them. However, said defendants filed their cross-complaints and tendered the issue, and while the court did not specifically dispose of their claims, by its silence it nevertheless decided said claims against them. Lamb v. Wahlenmaier, 144 Cal. 91, 77 P. 765, 103 Am. St. Rep. 66; Soule v. Soule, 4 Cal. App. 97, 106, 87 P. 205; Calegaris v. Calegaris, 4 Cal. App. 264, 266, 87 P. 561.

[4, 5] The claim that appellants have never had their day in court cannot be sustained, for it was their duty at the previous hearing to tender each item of evidence tending to support their claims, and if the decision was unfavorable to seek review by appeal. Having failed to do so, they are now foreclosed from such action. They have had their day in court. Price v. Sixth District Agricultural Ass'n, supra. It follows that the contention that the judgment in said prior action rested solely upon the order of the railroad commission, and nothing else, cannot avail appellants at this time, as the provisions of the judgment control, and not the character of the evidence introduced to support it. Nor are the reasons assigned by the trial court for the making of its findings and the rendition of its judgment proper matters for consideration. Appellants say that respondents are guilty of fraud and that res adjudicata cannot be invoked to sustain a fraud, citing Spencer v. Vigneaux, 20 Cal. 442, 449, and similar cases. This is, of course, a misconception also, for the fraud alluded to here is fraud in the procurement of the judgment pleaded such as would vitiate it; but fraud in the procurement of the former judgment is not shown or claimed.

[6] The claim that these parties are acting in an association in bringing this suit, whereas they were acting individually in the prior action, is without merit, for in the former action they pleaded their right to do business as the "United Stages," an association, and it was there in issue and determined adversely to them. Moreover, in reality the present suit is a suit by the individuals and not by the association.

Nothing in this opinion should be taken as the expression of a view that said order of the railroad commission is or is not in and of itself res adjudicata of the issues tendered by this action.

Hence the judgment first above announced.

FARIA et al. v. BRANDON et al.

Supreme Court of California. March 25, 1929.

Judgment 🔑725(3)—Injunction against execution sale of surplus over homestead exemption of realty, adjudged to have been conveyed to wife by judgment debtor to defraud creditors, held properly denied.

Where judgment in prior action between same parties and others adjudged that husband of one of plaintiffs and father of others, when he was insolvent, conveyed to wife without consideration the realty involved for purpose of hindering, delaying, and defrauding his creditors, and that any interest which other plaintiffs had in property was acquired by them without consideration through deed executed by their mother, court properly denied preliminary injunction against sale under execution on judgment against husband of surplus of said property not entitled to homestead exemption claimed by wife.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; John J. Allen, Judge.

Action by Adeline Faria and others against A. Brandon and another. From an order denying a preliminary injunction against the sale of realty under execution, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

O. H. Speciale and Owen D. Richardson, both of San Jose, for appellants.

E. H. Christian, of Oakland, for respondents.

LANGDON, J. This is an appeal from an order denying plaintiffs relief in an action brought to secure a preliminary injunction against the sale by the sheriff of certain real property in Alameda county, California, under execution issued upon a judgment in favor of defendant Brandon and against one Frank F. Faria, the husband and father of the plaintiffs, and their predecessor in interest in the property. The judgment thus sought to be enforced was for $2,829.53. A declaration of homestead had been filed upon the property by Adeline Faria, and the judgment creditor, the defendant Brandon in the present action, had petitioned the court to appoint appraisers of the property claimed as a homestead, and to subject the surplus, if any, over the statutory amount, to execution upon his judgment. It was found by the appraisers that the property could be readily divided, the dwelling house, outhouses, and a portion of the land to the value of $5,000 being separable as a homestead for the claimant, and the balance of the land, of a value of approximately $14,000, being available to satisfy the claims of the judgment creditor.

Upon this hearing there was also introduced in evidence the judgment roll in a prior action between the parties hereto and some additional ones, in which the same creditor had sought to subject this same property to payment of a judgment against Frank Faria in the sum of $432, and in which action the court had found that the property was liable for the amount of the judgment against Frank Faria, as the property in question had been granted by him to his wife, Adeline Faria, without consideration, at a time when he was insolvent, and with the intent to hinder, delay, and defraud creditors. Upon the introduction of this judgment roll in the prior action, the trial court stated to counsel that the parties were the same in both actions, and it appears that no dissent was made by counsel. Thereupon the court refused to grant the injunction staying the execution.

We think the action of the trial court in this matter was entirely proper under the circumstances. Plaintiff Adeline Faria has been secured in her homestead right, and the surplus only of the property is subjected to the payment of the judgment against Frank Faria. It has been duly adjudged that Faria conveyed to his wife without consideration, and when he was insolvent, and for the purpose of hindering, delaying, and defrauding his creditors. The court has also found that any interest which the other plaintiffs herein have in the property was acquired by them without consideration through a deed executed by their mother, Adeline Faria.

It is stated by counsel for respondents that the question involved here is now moot, as the sale under execution has already taken place, and this statement is uncontradicted by the appellants. If this be true, it but furnishes an additional reason for the affirmance of the judgment and order appealed from.

The judgment is affirmed.

RAGIN v. ZIMMERMAN. (L. A. 9854.)

Supreme Court of California. March 25, 1929.

1. Physicians and surgeons 🔑18(4) — Allegation that dentist's servant so negligently and unskillfully took X-ray picture that she caused burns described held sufficient allegation of general damages.

In action against dentist for damages from X-ray burns, allegation of complaint that defendant's servant "so carelessly, negligently, and unskillfully conducted herself (as servant) in performing the operation of taking the X-ray picture that she caused the said plaintiff to become violently electrified, shocked, burned, bruised, and wounded, in that said plaintiff sustained first and second degree burns," describing extent of burns, held sufficient allegation of general damages.

2. Words and phrases —"Second degree burns" leave permanent scars; "first degree burns" leave no permanent marks.

"Second degree burns" are such as leave permanent scars, while "first degree burns" leave no permanent marks.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Third Series, Second Degree Burns; First Degree Burns.]

3. Appeal and error 🔑1071(3)—Where evidence was ample to support judgment for personal injuries, it was not disturbed on appeal, though finding as to certain face injury was not sustained by evidence.

Where evidence that plaintiff suffered second degree burns on other parts of her body, and the shock, pain and mental suffering as described by her and found by court were alone amply sufficient to support judgment for her even if she received no second degree burns on her face as found by court, judgment was not disturbed by appellate court.

4. Physicians and surgeons 🔑18(8)—Evidence held to sustain finding that negligence of dentist's employee in operating machine caused X-ray burns.

In action against dentist for X-ray burns, evidence held to sustain finding that defendant's servant so carelessly, negligently, and unskillfully conducted herself in operating the X-ray machine as to cause the injuries complained of.

5. Physicians and surgeons 🔑16—Dentist held liable for negligence of employee in operating X-ray machine under doctrine of respondeat superior.

The doctrine of respondeat superior rendered dentist civilly responsible for the negligence of his employee in operating X-ray machine causing X-ray burns and injuries to patient.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hugh J. Crawford, Judge.

Action by Dorothy Ragin against A. Zimmerman. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Perry F. Backus, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Samuel A. Rosenthal, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SEAWELL, J. Respondent herein, a young woman stenographer, brought this action in the superior court of the county of Los Angeles to recover damages on account of electric burns, shock, and physical and mental pain inflicted upon her by and through the negligent and careless operation of an X-ray machine by the dental nurse, who was also the X-ray operator, employed by appellant, in an attempt to take a radiograph of respondent's chin. Appellant was a regularly licensed and practicing dentist in the city of Los Angeles, and in connection with the practice of dentistry conducted an X-ray laboratory in which X-ray photographs were taken as a means of determining the condition of the alveolar process and other related parts of the dentigerous anatomy.

Said cause was tried by the court, a jury having been expressly waived. Upon the submission of the case the trial court gave judgment for plaintiff in the sum of $1,250, which gross sum included the specific sums of $25 for medical attention and medicines, $15 as damages to wearing apparel caused by X-ray burns, and $100 on account of respondent's being unable to pursue her usual employment for a period of four weeks. The court further found that respondent would be subject to future expenditures for medical treatment by reason of the injuries inflicted upon her, the exact amount of which could not then be ascertained.

The verified complaint alleged that plaintiff employed the defendant to advise her with respect to an abscess on the right side of her chin due to an infected condition of her teeth, and that defendant placed her in charge of a servant in his employ, with directions that said employee take an X-ray photograph of the affected area; that in attempting to do so said employee so carelessly and negligently conducted herself and operated said X-ray machine that plaintiff became violently electrified, shocked, and burned so as to cause her much pain and suffering, by reason of which she was rendered less efficient in the performance of the duties of a stenographer. The injuries specifically enumerated by plaintiff were first and second degree burns on the left side of her face, first and second degree burns on the left side of her chest and breast, and burns on the thigh and on the ring finger of the right hand and on the index finger of the left hand at the first joints of said enumerated fingers. It is alleged that said burns have left scars that have caused plaintiff great mental pain and anguish. The physical pain caused by shock is also described, but as the amount of damages awarded is small, it becomes unnecessary to repeat the allegations of the complaint or the evidence adduced at the trial to rebut any claim that the judgment was the result of passion or prejudice.

[1] The complaint was demurred to upon several special grounds. The deficiency of the complaint specially stressed by defendant is: That the following allegation does not contain facts sufficient to constitute a statement of general damages, viz., "* * * that said servant so carelessly, negligently, and unskillfully conducted herself (as servant) in performing the operation of taking the X-ray picture that she caused the said plaintiff to become violently electrified, shocked, burned, bruised, and wounded, in that said plaintiff sustained first and second degree burns, * * *" describing the extent of said burns. That the foregoing language is a sufficient allegation of general damages there can be no doubt. It is also equally certain that it is sufficient in cases of this class to plead that the thing done was negligently done. This question has been set at rest by a long line of decisions of this court. It was recently passed upon in Dunn v. Dufficy, 194 Cal. 383, 228 P. 1029, and further citations would be merely cumulative.

[2] By his verified answer defendant positively denied that the respondent "placed herself in any manner or at all under the care of this defendant as a physician, or otherwise than for the purpose of procuring an X-ray picture of plaintiff's teeth"; denies that the defendant advised plaintiff to have an X-ray plate made of her jaw; and alleges that she requested him to make such a plate. Defendant denied in positive terms that "the said or any burns had left marks or scars either visible or otherwise on plaintiff's anatomy at any place, or at all." The only physician who testified in the case described the burns plaintiff had received on the face and on one of her fingers as first degree burns, and those on her chest and right leg as second degree burns. Second degree burns are such as leave permanent scars, while first degree burns leave no permanent marks.

[3] In its findings the court found, contrary to the physician's testimony, that the plaintiff sustained first and second degree burns on the left side of her face. It is objected that this finding as to second degree burns on the face is not supported by the evidence. If it had been, the small award of damages would not have been adequate to the injury suffered. There was testimony, however, that plaintiff did suffer second degree burns on other parts of her body, and the shock, pain and mental suffering, as described by her and found upon by the court, was alone amply sufficient to support the judgment though she received no second degree burns on the face.

[4] Appellant has devoted a great part of his argument to combating the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur to malpractice cases. There is nothing in the record to indicate that the court decided the case by the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur or was influenced by that doctrine in rendering its decision. The trial court simply held, and there was evidence in the record to sustain its finding, that the operator of the X-ray machine so "carelessly, negligently and unskillfully conducted herself in performing the operation of taking the said X-ray picture that she caused the plaintiff to became violently electrified, shocked. * * *" Appellant, upon examining respondent's teeth, placed her in charge of the young lady who operated the X-ray machine, with directions that a radiograph be taken. She was then conducted by the operator to the X-ray machine room and placed in a recumbent position for the taking of the radiograph. The operator's version of what followed is that she instructed respondent to remain very quiet and forewarned her against becoming alarmed at the slight clicking noise which she would hear as soon as the X-ray mechanism was set in motion, and as she pulled the second switch respondent raised her knee so that it either came in contact with or was brought into very close proximity to the X-ray tube, which carries a high voltage of electric current, and that she next observed an electric spark flash from the lower part of the tube toward respondent's knee. Respondent then leaned forward and in an attempt to extricate herself from her peril wrapped herself around the tube, which extended at slight elevation over the body from the extremities to her face. It is admitted that when bodies are brought within certain given distances of said tubes electric sparks are arced, or jump from said tubes and produce burns and cause damage to bodies into which they are inducted. The operator admitted that she placed said highly charged electric tube not more than ten inches above the knees of respondent as she arranged her in the chair for the purpose of taking the picture.

Respondent, who had no technical knowledge as to the operation or mechanism of an

X-ray machine, denied that the operator cautioned her against raising her knees or forewarned her as to the slight clicking noise that would be produced upon turning the switch, and positively denied that she raised her knee or otherwise changed her position before she was shocked and burned by the electric flashes. A piece of her dress, which would rest normally upon her knee, was burned. Besides, she received burns on the left side of her face, chest, certain fingers of both hands, and on the thigh. The primary cause of the burns and shock is more consistently explicable on the theory that the electric sparks were arced from the tube to the face or upper portion of the body, thereby causing the respondent, either in pain or in fright, to move her lower limbs in an attempt to throw the tube a safe distance from her body or to carry herself from the zone of danger, than on the theory that the slight clicking sound, against which appellant claims respondent had been cautioned, so terrified her that she voluntarily elevated her knee to the extent of ten inches, thus bringing it in contact or near contact with the high voltage electric appliance. The claim of appellant that the first electric current to enter respondent's body was caused by her raising her knees approximately ten inches upon becoming startled at the slight clicking sound which followed the turning of the switch is not, in the light of the situation, consistent with human conduct and the trial court, no doubt, rejected appellant's version and gave credence to the respondent's account of her conduct up to the time that she received the first electric shock. If it be conceded, in the absence of any evidence sustaining such a concession, that the knee burn was the first received by respondent, that circumstance would not be sufficient to exculpate appellant of negligence. There is ground sufficient for holding that the tube was brought by the operator even closer to respondent's knee than she admitted bringing it. Appellant's witnesses admit that electric sparks would arc from the tube if it was brought within 3¾ inches of respondent's body. Indisputably sparks did arc, and respondent testified that she did not move her body in any way as she sat in position for the operator to take the radiograph. It therefore follows that the electric burns which respondent received were the result of defendant's negligence.

Appellant has cited a number of cases to the effect that the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is not applicable to malpractice cases brought against physicians, surgeons and dentists for errors of judgment committed in the treatment of disease. Such cases have no application whatsoever to the facts of the instant case. Appellant here was not engaged in employing an X-ray as a treatment for disease. He thus stoutly repudiates its use as a curative means in his answer: "* * * Denies that plaintiff placed herself in any manner or at all under the care of this defendant as a physician, or otherwise, than for the purpose of procuring an X-ray picture of plaintiff's teeth." (Italics supplied.) His contention now is that the res ipsa loquitur doctrine, as applied to physicians, should be extended to include X-ray operators. We are satisfied that the negligence of appellant, as found by the trial court, is supported by the case as presented, and recourse to the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is not necessary. If it were necessary, however, to invoke it, we would not hesitate to apply it to the facts described by the evidence in the instant case. See discussion of application of rule to electrical devices, 10 Cal. Jur. 199, 200. It may well be said here, as was said in Phœnix Assur. Co. v. Texas Holding Co., 81 Cal. App. 61, 252 P. 1082, in applying the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur to the facts of a case not so typically illustrative of the reason of the rule as the instant case: "We think this doctrine may be urged with more than plausibility. Everything in the present case which in any way contributed to the accident was under the management of the defendant; * * * and that in the ordinary course of things the accident would not have happened if those having the management had used proper care"—citing the cases of Judson v. Giant Powder Co., 107 Cal. 549, 40 P. 1020, 29 L. R. A. 718, 48 Am. St. Rep. 146, O'Connor v. Mennie, 169 Cal. 217, 146 P. 674, and Van Horn v. Pac. Ref., etc., Co., 27 Cal. App. 105, 148 P. 951.

In Evans v. Clapp (Mo. App.) 231 S. W .79, the doctrine was applied in an action to recover for the negligent use of X-ray machines in taking radiographs, in the following language: "It is manifest * * * that it cannot be said the jury could not reasonably find that plaintiff received an X-ray burn at the hands of the defendants, and that it was negligently administered. It is a dangerous agency, exceedingly capable of producing serious injury unless administered with care and caution. State v. Lester, 127 Minn. 282, 149 N. W. 297, L. R. A. 1915D, 201. As hereinbefore stated, the X-ray was not applied in this case for purposes of treatment, but merely to ascertain the cause of plaintiff's headaches, and this was disclosed at the first examination. There is no room, therefore, for the application of any theory of mere honest mistake in the careful application of a treatment intended to be applied in the accomplishment of a result similar to the one produced but not to the extent thereof. On the contrary, the X-ray was to be used only to discover a condition which was at once shown, and the many other exposures were not made in the interest of the patient but for other purposes. Examinations, when carefully and properly made, do not produce burns; hence when a burn is produced, this fact is of itself some evidence from which the jury may find that the degree of care and skill ordinarily exercised by persons of like profession and using such agencies was not exercised in that particular case. George v. Shannon, 92 Kan. 801, 808, 142 P. 967, Ann. Cas. 1916B, 338; Shockley v. Tucker, 127 Iowa, 456, 103 N. W. 360. Of course the rules governing the duty and liability of physicians and surgeons in the performance of professional services are applicable to them in the use and manipulation of an X-ray machine. 21 R. C. L. 386." Holt v. Ten Broeck, 134 Minn. 458, 159 N. W. 1073, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 256, and cases therein cited, hold to the same effect.

[5] The doctrine of respondeat superior clearly renders the appellant civilly responsible for the negligence of his employee, the operator of the X-ray machine.

The judgment is affirmed.

KENYON v. JOHNSON, County Auditor.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. March 14, 1929.

1. Justices of the peace 🔑15—Stockton township held to exist as distinct identity irrespective of city of Stockton, as regards right of justice of peace of Stockton township to recover salary (Const. 1849, art. 11, §§ 4, 9, and art. 6, § 9, as amended in 1862; Const. 1879, art. 11, § 4, and art. 6, § 11, amended in 1911; Code Civ. Proc. § 103; Pol. Code, § 4015).

In view of Const. 1849 establishing county and town governments, article 11, §§ 4 and 9, article 6, § 9, amended in 1862, Const. 1879, art. 11, § 4, and art. 6, § 11, as amended 1911, Code Civ. Proc. § 103, and Pol. Code, § 4015, recognizing townships as distinct identities, Stockton township exists as a distinct identity, irrespective of the existence of the city of Stockton, as regards right of justice of peace of Stockton township to recover salary provided by such office.

2. Justices of the peace 🔑2—Constitution held not to manifest intention to abolish townships, justices' courts, or justices' courts of townships (Const. art. 11, § 8½; Const. art. 11, § 8).

Const. art. 11, § 8½, so far as the office of justice of the peace is concerned, relates only to such office of a city organized and chartered under Const. art. 11, § 8, and does not manifest an intent to abolish townships, justices' courts, or justices' courts of townships.

Application for writ of mandate by Cyril Kenyon, directed to Fred H. Johnson, as Auditor of the County of San Joaquin. Writ granted.

Nutter, Hancock & Rutherford and A. P. Hayne, all of Stockton, for petitioner.

Guard C. Darrah, Dist. Atty., and Tom H. Louttit, Asst. Dist. Atty., both of Stockton, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. This cause is before us upon the application of the above-named petitioner for a writ of mandate praying that the respondent, Fred H. Johnson, as auditor of the county of San Joaquin, be commanded and directed to issue and deliver to the petitioner a warrant upon the county treasurer of the county of San Joaquin for the sum of $300 in full compensation due said petitioner for his salary as justice of the peace of Stockton township in the county of San Joaquin, for the month of February, 1929.

To this petition the respondent has filed a general demurrer. The record before us shows that Stockton township now is, and for a long time prior to the beginning of this action has been, a subdivision of the county of San Joaquin regularly organized, designated, and delineated as a part and parcel of the territorial township divisions of said county, and is now existing under the legislative and constitutional provisions of this state. The record also shows that Stockton township, as so organized, existing and delineated, and circumscribed as a part of the territorial area of the county of San Joaquin, lies wholly within the territorial limits of the city of Stockton, a city regularly chartered under the provisions of section 8 of article 11 of the Constitution. The record further shows that the petitioner is the duly appointed, qualified, and acting justice of the peace of Stockton township, and was such during the entire period of the month of February, 1929, and that his salary was fixed by law in the sum of $300 per month, payable monthly, on the 1st day of each and every month, and that on the 1st day of March, 1929, the respondent, as auditor of the county of San Joaquin, declined and refused to issue a warrant to said petitioner as and for payment of his salary for the month of February, 1929. The basis of the auditor's refusal is that under the provisions of section 8½ of article 11 of the Constitution as now amended, there is no justice of the peace of Stockton township, as said township, as herein stated, lies wholly within the territorial limits of the city of Stockton. Is the auditor's refusal well founded? The answer to this question is to be found, not in whether there is what is called a municipal court created by the charter of the city of Stockton, but whether, under the constitutional and general laws of the state, there exists such an entity as Stockton township, and such officer as a justice of the peace thereof.

[1] From the very beginning of the history of California as a state, there has existed such an entity or agency of government as townships. The Constitution of 1849 specified that the Legislature should establish a system of "county and town governments." This language appears in section 4 of article 11, and section 9 of the same article provides that each county, town, city, and incorporated village shall make provision, etc. And section 9 of article 6, as amended in 1862, authorized the Legislature to determine the number of justices to be elected in each city and township of the state and fix their powers and duties. It will be noticed that the framers of the Constitution of 1849 used the words "town and township" interchangeably, following, undoubtedly, the custom of many of the eastern states where townships consisting of only six miles square of territory are called "towns," meaning, as commonly used, "townships." The Constitution of 1879 drops the word "town" and uses only the word "township" when a certain subdivision of counties is intended. Section 11 of article 6 of that Constitution (1879), as originally adopted, reads: "The legislature shall determine the number of justices of the peace to be elected in townships, incorporated cities and towns," etc. As amended in 1911 that section now reads: "The legislature shall determine the number of each of the inferior courts in incorporated cities and towns, and in townships, counties, or cities and counties, according to the population thereof." The specific name of the court or of the officer as justice of the peace is transmuted into the term "inferior courts," but the legislative provision for a court for a township is maintained and continued operative. Section 4 of article 11, relative to the subject under discussion, reads: "The legislature shall establish a system of county governments, which shall be uniform throughout the State; and by general laws shall provide for township organizations," etc. While it would be permissible under the Constitution to provide for a system of township government, the Legislature has gone no further than to provide for the election of justices of the peace and constables as township officers. Section 103 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that there shall be at least one justice's court in each township of the state, for which one justice of the peace shall be elected by the qualified voters of the township. This section further provides for the election of justices of the peace in the cities of the state, according to their classification, and that there shall be such officer in every city of the second and three-fourths class, which classification applies to the city of Stockton. In construing this section of the Code, and section 8½ of article 11 of the Constitution, it would appear that the auditor has held the city of Stockton and the township of Stockton identical, and that as section 8½ of article 11 of the Constitution has been construed to eliminate that portion of section 103 of the Code of Civil Procedure providing for the election of a justice of the peace in a city of the class to which Stockton belongs, there is no such officer as justice of the peace of the township of Stockton. The fallacy of this reasoning lies in the assumption that the city of Stockton and the township of Stockton are one and the same. As we have shown by the constitutional provisions to which we have referred, townships are segregated, separated, and delineated subdivisions of counties, for specific purposes. These subdivisions have no relation whatever to incorporated or chartered cities; they exist in and of themselves, to all intents and purposes as distinctly as though there were no cities whatsoever; and the subdivision or part of the governmental territory of the state of California known as Stockton township, in the county of San Joaquin, stands alone and upon its own basis, irrespective of the existence of the city of Stockton, of the classification referred to in section 103 of the Code of Civil Procedure. As stated in 38 Cyc. 599, the word "township" is used in two senses; "in one sense it is used to denote a territory six miles square surveyed and platted by the government surveyors, divided into thirty-six sections, while in another sense it is employed to describe a subdivision of the county, created by the state legislature and vested with certain powers of local government." As stated, in some of the states in this latter sense the word "township" as used is synonymous with the word "town," even though it refers to and describes only six miles square of territory, but as shown by the references to the Constitution of this state, it is now referred to simply as a "township." The cases cited in the note which we have quoted from Cyc. illustrate the history and existence of the entity known as a township, separate and apart from incorporated and chartered cities. In 24 Cal. Jur. 607, we find the following in relation to townships: "A township is a subdivision of a county and, in many states, possesses certain powers of local government. Some courts construe the word 'township' as synonymous with 'towns,' but this view has never been adopted in California. Here 'township' is nothing more than a geographical subdivision of a county principally for the purpose of electing Justices of the Peace and constables." This court, in the case of Platnauer v. Board of Supervisors, 65 Cal. App. 666, 225 P. 12, has recognized the distinction of townships as separate identities from cities, although the territorial limits of the two identities may be coincident. It was there held that the offices of a justice of the peace of the city of Sacramento and a justice of the peace of the township of Sacramento were separate and distinct, even though the city of Sacramento and the township of Sacramento embraced the same territory.

Section 4015 of the Political Code likewise recognizes townships as distinct identities. That section reads: "The Board of Supervisors of each County, as public convenience may require, shall divide their respective counties into townships for the purpose of electing Justices of the Peace and Constables," etc. We do not find, nor has our attention been called to, any legislative enactments eliminating the office of justice of the peace of townships. The only change that has been made with reference to the existence of the office is by the respective amendments to the Constitution by which a township justice is now a legislative matter instead of a constitutional position.

[2] Only one further inquiry remains: Has section 8½ of article 11 of the Constitution, as amended, abolished the office of justice of the peace of Stockton township? An examination of that section discloses that, so far as the office of justice of the peace is concerned, it relates only, and can relate only, as to that office, in so far as it affects a justice of the peace of a city organized and chartered under section 8 of article 11 of the Constitution. Subdivision 1 of section 8½ of article 11 authorizes cities, in the adoption of charters, to provide for the constitution, regulation, government, and jurisdiction of police courts, etc.; likewise, for the establishment, constitution, regulation, government, and jurisdiction of municipal courts and judges thereof. And then, further, in the same subdivision, it is provided that "in any city or any city and county, when such municipal court has been established, there shall be no other court inferior to the Superior Court," etc. No reference is made to justices' courts of townships, nor is there any language used in the section from which the inference could be drawn that there was any intent in the adoption of section 8½ of article 11, as now amended, to abolish townships, justices' courts, or justices' courts of townships. The reference and the power granted in the establishment of courts, whether called police courts or municipal courts under this section, is to inferior courts existing within, as, and of city courts, not courts existing by virtue of townships created pursuant to the Constitution and legislative enactments to which we have referred. The limitation in the Constitution as amended, if at all, affects only that portion of section 103 of the Code of Civil Procedure which provides for the creation of justices of the peace in and for cities. In this behalf our attention has been called to the case of Robertson v. Langford (Cal. App.) 273 P. 150. An examination of the Robertson Case discloses that it deals only with the office of justice of the peace of the city of San Jose. It does not purpose to deal with the office of the justice of the peace of San Jose township. It may be here stated that the Blue Book of the State of California sets forth the existence of two justices of the peace of San Jose township, and so far as the Robertson Case is concerned, there is nothing said therein which in anywise tends to question the existence of said court. If it be admitted that the establishment of a court by the city of Stockton, under the provisions of section 8½ of article 11 of the Constitution, the office of justice of the peace for such city is eliminated, as would necessarily follow if the case of Robertson v. Langford, supra, is applicable, the conclusion that the office of justice of the peace of Stockton township is also abolished is unwarranted for the simple reason that the office of justice of the peace of Stockton township is an office of a distinct and separate identity from the city of Stockton. The case of Robertson v. Langford, and the authorities therein cited, establish that the office of justice of the peace is not abolished. The constitutional provision, when given its widest latitude, only abolishes the office of justice of the peace of cities having adopted charters and established a court as provided for under section 8½ of article 11 of the Constitution. The municipal court referred to in section 8½ of article 11 of the Constitution is not the municipal court referred to and authorized to be established by the amendment to the Constitution adopted in 1925, and relates only to courts created by city charters.

It necessarily follows from what we have said that the office of justice of the peace of Stockton township must be held to be a valid and subsisting office, and that the petitioner is the legally qualified and acting incumbent thereof and is entitled to the salary provided by law, payable monthly, and that the auditor was unwarranted in refusing to draw and deliver to petitioner a warrant therefor. Respondent's demurrer is overruled.

The respondent is hereby ordered to draw and deliver a warrant in favor of the petitioner for the sum of $300 as and for his salary as justice of the peace of Stockton township, for the month of February, 1929, and a peremptory writ of mandate commanding him so to do is hereby granted.

SCHAINMAN v. ALL PERSONS, etc.

SCHAINMAN v. HUNTER et al.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. March 15, 1929.

Taxation 🔑769—Where taxes before date of purchase were paid, tax deed passed title, and error in recitals regarding the matter could be corrected.

Taxation statutes do not specifically require recital in tax deed that all taxes levied and assessed to date of purchase were paid, but statutes do require that such taxes must be paid, and, where such taxes were paid, tax deed was sufficient to pass title, and error in recitals made by tax collector regarding payment of taxes before purchase could be corrected at any time, to make recitals conform to facts.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Louis H. Ward, Judge.

On petition for rehearing. Rehearing denied.

For former opinion, see 275 P. 225.

Frederic Appelman, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Clarence A. Linn, of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The petition for rehearing is denied. The appellants complain because we did not, in the opinion heretofore filed, rule on the question as to the validity of the original tax deed. They now state that at the time of the trial they stipulated that the matter of an accounting for rents, issues, and profits of the property in suit could be heard at any time after judgment of the trial court, or after the filing of the remittitur following the judgment on appeal, and that it is necessary for that purpose to have an adjudication of the validity of that deed.

Our opinion followed the opinion in Morton v. Sloan (Cal. App.) 275 P. 223, which was filed on the same day as the opinion herein, and we assumed that it was sufficient to refer to the discussion of the validity of the original tax deed in the Morton opinion as the facts were practically identical. As pointed out in the Morton opinion, the taxation statutes do not specifically require a recital in the tax deed that all taxes levied and assessed to the date of purchase have been paid. These statutes do require that such taxes must be paid, and, as the fact of payment is conceded in this case, there can be no question but that the original tax deed was sufficient to pass title, and that the error in the recitals made by the tax collector was one which could be corrected at any time to make the recitals conform to the facts. If the stipulation relating to an accounting depends upon the original tax deed being void, then no accounting need be had, because such deed was sufficient to pass title to the respondent as of its date.

FITZPATRICK v. SONOMA COUNTY et al.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. March 16, 1929.

1. Counties 🔑215—County sued as defendant may not have case transferred to neutral county under statute where it does not appear that plaintiff resides in any county in state (Code Civ. Proc. § 394).

County sued as defendant is precluded from asking transfer of suit to neutral county under Code Civ. Proc. § 394, where it does not appear from record that plaintiff is resident of county in which suit was brought or of any other county in state.

2. Counties 🔑215—One suing county has no arbitrary right to select county in which trial should be had (Code Civ. Proc. § 394).

One suing county has no right, under Code Civ. Proc. § 394, to commence and proceed to trial in particular county, where no reason exists for selection of that county; statute being valid under Const. art. 4, § 25.

3. Courts 🔑39—Court must in first instance determine whether it has jurisdiction (Code Civ. Proc. § 430).

Court in any case must in first instance determine question of its jurisdiction, under Code Civ. Proc. § 430.

4. Evidence 🔑40—Courts take judicial notice of extent and boundaries of territory over which they exercise jurisdiction.

Every court, by virtue of its organization, takes judicial notice of extent and boundaries of territory over which it can exercise jurisdiction, as well as subject-matter over which jurisdiction has been conferred.

5. Venue 🔑5(5)—Constitutional provision as to local actions must be strictly construed, and does not apply to actions for injuries to real estate (Const. art. 6, § 5).

Const. art. 6, § 5, providing that all actions for recovery of possession or quieting title to, or enforcement of liens upon, real estate shall be commenced in county where land is situated, must be strictly construed, and cannot be enlarged to include actions for injuries to real estate.

6. Counties 🔑215—One suing county may not, by instituting suit in neutral county, take case from court having proper original jurisdiction (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 392, 394).

Right to have trial outside of county which is itself a litigant and outside of county in which other litigant resides, under Code Civ. Proc. §

394, does not give plaintiff in suit against county right to deprive court of proper original jurisdiction delegated to it under Code Civ. Proc. § 392, but counties in which suit may be brought must have jurisdiction.

7. Counties ⚷215—In action against county and county supervisors for damages for injury to real property located in county, defendants held entitled to have venue changed from neutral county to defendant county (St. 1923, p. 675; Code Civ. Proc. §§ 392, 393, subd. 2, and §§ 394, 395).

In action against county under Gen. Laws, Act 5619, § 2 (St. 1923, p. 675), and supervisors of county individually for damages for injury to real property situated in county, all defendants held entitled to change of venue from outside county in which suit was instituted to defendant county itself, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 392, 393, subd. 2, and section 395; provisions of section 394 relative to venue in suits in which county is litigant being inapplicable.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Percy S. King, Judge.

Action by Josephine E. Fitzpatrick against Sonoma County and others for damages for injury to real property and for the abatement of a nuisance. From an order denying a motion for change of venue, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Carl Barnard, Dist. Atty., of Santa Rosa, and E. J. Dole, Asst. Dist. Atty., of Petaluma, for appellants.

Otto G. Kuklinski, of San Francisco, for respondent.

WARD, Justice pro tem. This action was commenced in the city and county of San Francisco. The cause of action is damage by injury to real property situated in the county of Sonoma, and the abatement of a nuisance therein. This is an appeal from an order denying a motion for change of venue, made "upon the ground that the real property affected by said action is situated in the County of Sonoma, and for that reason said cause is proper to be tried in said county, and upon the further ground that all of the defendants, other than the County of Sonoma, are residents and live within said County of Sonoma and that they are entitled to have said trial therein."

Section 394, Code of Civil Procedure, upon which respondent relies, provides as follows: "An action or proceeding against a county, or city and county, may be commenced and tried in such county, or city and county, unless such action or proceeding is brought by a county, or city and county, in which case it may be tried in any county, or city and county, not a party thereto. Whenever an action or proceeding is brought by a county, city and county, or city, against a resident of another county, city and county, or city, or a corporation doing business in the latter, the action or proceeding must be, on motion of either party, transferred for trial to a county, or city and county, other than the plaintiff, if the plaintiff is a county, or city and county, and other than that in which the plaintiff is situated, if the plaintiff is a city, and other than that in which the defendant resides or is doing business or is situated. Whenever an action or proceeding is brought against a county, city and county, or city, in any county, or city and county, other than the defendant, if the defendant is a county or city and county, or, if the defendant is a city, other than that in which the defendant is situated, the action or proceeding must be, on motion of the said defendant, transferred for trial to a county, or city and county, other than that in which the plaintiff, or any of the plaintiffs, resides, or is doing business, or is situated, and other than the plaintiff county, or city and county, or county in which such plaintiff city is situated, and other than the defendant county, or city and county or county in which such defendant city is situated. In any action or proceeding, the parties thereto may, by stipulation in writing, or made in open court, and entered in the minutes, agree upon any county, or city and county, for the place of trial thereof. This section shall apply to actions or proceedings now pending or hereafter brought."

[1] When extricated from its mass of cumbersome phraseology, and particularly eliminating, when necessary, the words "proceeding," "city and county," "city," corporation," etc., and retaining the language applicable to the instant case, the section provides: "An action * * * against a county * * * may be commenced and tried in such county * * * unless such action * * * is brought by a county * * * in which case it may be tried in any county * * * not a party thereto. Whenever an action * * * is brought by a county * * * against a resident of another county * * * doing business in the latter, the action * * * must be, on motion of either party, transferred for trial to a county * * * other than the plaintiff * * * and other than that in which the defendant resides or is doing business or is situated. Whenever an action * * * is brought against a county * * * in any county * * * other than the defendant * * * county * * * the action * * * must be, on motion of the said defendant, transferred for trial to a county * * * other than that in which the plaintiff * * * resides, or is doing business, or is situated, * * * and other than the defendant county. * * *" The framers of this section evidently endeavored to cover any case wherein a county, etc., was the plaintiff, wherein a county, etc., was the defendant, or where the plaintiff was a county, etc., and likewise where the defendant was a county, etc. Under section 394, Code of Civil Procedure, a plaintiff, other than a county, etc., is permitted to commence and proceed to trial in an action or proceeding against a county, etc., in such defendant county. If a county, etc., brings an action against a resident of another county, etc., either plaintiff or defendant has the right to demand that the cause be transferred to a neutral county. If a plaintiff other than a county, etc., institutes an action against a county, etc., in another county, the action or proceeding may be transferred to a neutral county, but only upon motion of the defendant. In this case, under section 394, Code of Civil Procedure, plaintiff could have filed the complaint in Sonoma county, but she selected the city and county of San Francisco. Defendant Sonoma county is precluded from asking a transfer to a neutral county, as it does not appear from the record that plaintiff is a resident of the city and county of San Francisco or of Sonoma county or of any other county in the state. It does appear that she is the owner of a ranch situated in the county of Sonoma.

The constitutionality of section 394, Code of Civil Procedure, was upheld in Mono Power Co. v. Los Angeles, 33 Cal. App. 675–677, 166 P. 387. Subsequently the act was amended, as it appears herein, to give the right to a plaintiff, if such plaintiff was a county, city and county, or city, or a corporation doing business in the latter, to move for a change of place of trial, and again it was claimed that the section was violative of article 4, § 25, of the Constitution, but the court said, in City of Stockton v. Ellingwood, 78 Cal. App. 121, 248 P. 272: "It cannot be held that there is no reasonable and substantial basis for such legislative determination or that a like bias would probably exist against an individual plaintiff in an action commenced by him in a county other than that of his residence against a municipality situated therein or against the county itself. As a rule there is no general public opinion at all respecting the merits of an action brought by an individual against a county or a municipality therein. There being a reasonable basis of distinction between the two classes of cases, the provision for a change of venue in the one class and not in the other cannot be deemed a special law within the constitutional inhibition."

[2] In City of Stockton v. Wilson, 79 Cal. App. 424, 249 P. 836, it was held that "from the terms of section 394, viewed in the light of other sections relating to venue, it seems clear that its provisions were intended to apply to actions in proceedings commenced in a plaintiff county, the county in which a plaintiff city is situated, or the county of a defendant's residence." That was a case in which the city of Stockton brought suit in the county of San Joaquin in eminent domain against individual defendants, residents of San Francisco county, and filed the complaint in Calaveras county, the situs of the land. The court held Calaveras to be a proper place for trial. In the same case it was held: "* * * It is not to be presumed that the Legislature intended by section 394 to give either party the right to a transfer in cases where no reason exists therefor." By the same method of reasoning, we conclude that a plaintiff has not the right to commence and proceed to trial in an action in a county where no reason exists for the selection of that particular county.

[3-5] The first question which must be determined by a court in any case is that of jurisdiction. Section 430, Code Civ. Proc. Every court, by virtue of its organization, takes judicial knowledge of the extent and boundaries of the territory within which it can exercise jurisdiction as well as the subject-matter over which jurisdiction has been conferred upon it. In the case of Rogers v. Cady, 104 Cal. 288, 38 P. 81, 43 Am. St. Rep. 100, it was held that "matters of which a court takes judicial knowledge are uniform and fixed, and do not depend upon uncertain testimony; and the failure or refusal of a court to take such notice does not prevent the appellate court from giving proper effect thereto." Section 5 of article 6 of the Constitution of California provides "that all actions for the recovery of the possession of, quieting the title to, or for the enforcement of liens upon real estate, shall be commenced (italics ours) in the county in which the real estate, or any part thereof, affected by such action, * * * is situated." It is silent as to where actions for damage for injuries to real property shall be commenced. This being a constitutional provision, it must be stsrictly construed, and its scope must not be enlarged to include injuries. The Codes are also silent as to where such actions shall be commenced, and so are our statutes. We must needs, therefore, go back to the common law, with the result that we find such actions brought only in their local jurisdictions. To overcome this, when the injury is also a trespass, as in the case at bar, some states have made a special provision that, in the case of a trespasser leaving the locus of his act, suit may be commenced against him at any place where he may be found. We have no such provision in California. A distinction must be made between where a suit may legally be commenced, and where, by the special powers given it by the court, it may be tried.

Section 392, Code of Civil Procedure, provides, in part: "Actions for the following causes must be tried in the county in which the subject of the action, or some part thereof, is situated, subject to the power of the court to change the place of trial, as provided in this code: 1. For the recovery of real property * * * and for injuries to real property." The power of what court? The power of the court in which the action has been legally commenced. Sonoma county is the situs of the real property alleged to be injured, and it is there the action must be tried, subject to the power of the court of that county to change the place of trial. Courts must always be jealous of their powers and rights. It is intolerable that the court of the county in which the real property is situated, in an action that is local and not transitory, should be deprived of its right and power to change the place of trial by the act of a plaintiff alone in bringing an action in a county of her own choice. The complaint alleged that the injury occurred in Sonoma county. A reading of section 392, Code of Civil Procedure, shows the underlying intention that the action should be brought in the county where the property is situated, subject to the power of the court in such county to change it.

[6] Section 394, Code of Civil Procedure, affects only those cases properly brought in other counties, permitting fair play between the litigants by giving the option to the defendant county to have its cause tried away from the county of the residence of the plaintiff, with its local sentiments, and it gives the plaintiff the same right of trial outside of the county defendant. But those cases brought in other counties must, as a primary basis, be jurisdictionally properly within those counties. It certainly was never designed to permit a plaintiff by any act of his to deprive a court of proper original jurisdiction of power delegated to it.

[7] So far we have been considering this case as though the county of Sonoma was the sole defendant, and alone to be given consideration. This, however, is not the case. There are five other individual defendants, and the complaint alleges acts of commission and omission against each of them and prays for a judgment "against said defendants and each of them" in the sum of $2,000. The individual defendants are therefore vitally interested parties. The complaint refers to these individual defendants as "the duly elected, qualified and acting supervisors of said Sonoma County." Section 393, Code of Civil Procedure, provides: "Actions for the following causes must be tried in the county where the cause, or some part thereof, arose, subject to the like power of the court to change the place of trial: * * * 2. Against a public officer. * * *" Need anything more be said than that, if the defendants, as supervisors of Sonoma county, had been sued alone, without the addition of "Sonoma County" as a defendant, this motion for a change of venue would have been granted?

These five defendants are also vitally interested personally under section 395. If the municipal corporation was not a party they would unquestionably be entitled to have the motion for change of venue made by them granted, Sonoma county being their place of residence. Section 395, Code of Civil Procedure, provides, in part: "In all other cases the action must be tried in the county in which the defendants, or some of them, reside at the commencement of the action, or if it be an action for injury to person, or property, * * * in the county where the injury occurs. * * *" The place of the alleged injury to property in this case was Sonoma county. That is a substantial right, particularly in an action for damages for trespass; a trial by jury, unless waived, is also a right, and every man has, if he desires, a right of trial by his peers and neighbors, provided the wrong, civil or criminal, is committed within his own locale.

Under section 2 of Act 5619, General Laws of California, Statutes of 1923, p. 675, counties are liable for injuries to property resulting from such acts of omission or commission as are set out in the complaint herein, if proven. There can be no reasonable doubt that, if proven, the county of Sonoma could and would respond in damages, but, notwithstanding that, the plaintiff has voluntarily elected to join with it those other certain individual defendants, and to ask individual judgments against each of them. Is it possible that a plaintiff, by voluntarily joining them with a defendant municipal corporation, and bringing the action in a county other than the county of their residence, and the county of the situs of their acts complained of officially and individually, can thereby deprive them of their statutory right to be heard in the county of their residence and alleged official and individual reprehensibility? It would be establishing a very unwise precedent to put a party plaintiff in a position where, on the one hand, he could control the place of trial, overreaching the power of the court of the situs of the cause of action, and, at the same time, destroy a statutory right of each defendant and harass and annoy him with perhaps vexatious litigation in a stranger county.

Our attention has not been called to any case directly in point involving a municipal corporation when joined with individual defendants. We are therefore constrained to reason by analogy. A nonresident corporation is by law permitted to be sued in any county in the state, but, when joined with individual defendants, it has been held that individual defendants have a right to a change of venue. "The right * * * to sue them * * * could exist only in a case where they were the only defendants (section 395, Code Civ. Proc.), and hence it appears that there are two other defendants, * * * both of whom are residents of the state." See Ludington Exploration Co. v. La Fortuna, etc., 4 Cal. App. 369, 88 P. 290. In Wood Curtis & Co. v. Herman Mining Co., 139 Cal. 713, 73 P. 588, it was held that, when all the defendants were nonresidents of the county in which the action is brought, any of the defendants residing in another county are entitled to a change of the place of trial, notwithstanding the opposition of other defendants.

In this case the individual defendants are entitled to a change of venue to Sonoma county. Section 394, Code of Civil Procedure, does not provide that a plaintiff may commence the action in a neutral county or that a plaintiff may select its own forum. Concluding that the provisions of section 394, Code of Civil Procedure, do not apply as we find the record in this case, it is necessary to consider the other sections pertaining to venue, and, from what has been said heretofore, all defendants are entitled to a change of venue to Sonoma county.

The order appealed from must be reversed. It is so ordered.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KNIGHT, J.

Questions presented by claims, which appellants state in their opening and closing briefs that they abandon, are moot, and need not be considered.

2. Navigable waters ⚷36(7)—Evidence held to support trial court's finding, in action to quiet title to submerged land, that defendants had no right of way over it.

In action to quiet title to submerged land, defendants' testimony that they claimed no interest in land, but only a right to use wharf, which they used in common with many others as landing place and to reach their boats from shore owned by them, held to support trial court's finding that they had no right of way over submerged land, in absence of evidence that such use was hostile or adverse to plaintiffs, rather than in subordination to their title.

3. Navigable waters ⚷36(7)—Defendants in action to quiet title to submerged land had burden of proving all elements of alleged prescriptive title to right of way over wharf.

In action to quiet title to submerged land adjoining defendants' land, burden was on defendants to prove all elements of alleged prescriptive title to right of way over wharf used by them in common with many others in going to and from their boats.

Appeal from Superior Court, Marin County; Edward I. Butler, Judge.

Action by Thorn Kashow and others against Sydney L. Plant and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Henry B. Lister, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Johnson & Shaw, of Oakland, and R. W. Palmer, of San Francisco, for respondents.

NORTON, Justice pro tem. This is an action by the plaintiffs to quiet their title to a strip of submerged land under the waters of San Francisco bay in the town of Tiburon, Marin county. It is a portion of a larger tract of submerged tide lands and is a narrow parcel, 75 feet long and 17 feet wide, upon which is located a wharf, 67½ feet in length and 8 feet in width, extending into the waters of the bay from the shore to a point beyond the line of low tide.

The defendants are the owners of the upland adjoining the land which is the subject of this controversy.

In their answer to the complaint the defendants admit that the title to the strip is in respondents, and set forth that they have acquired by prescription the following easements and riparian right in the land described in the complaint, viz: The right of fishery, a right of way over said land from the bay of San Francisco to their lands, and the right of having the waters of the bay flow over the strip in question to defendants' lands.

A motion for new trial was made and denied, and the appeal is from the judgment.

[1, 2] In their opening and closing briefs the appellants state that they abandon their claim as to the right of fishery and to have the waters of the bay to continue to flow over defendants' land to their land. These questions therefore have become moot and need not be considered. The trial court found that the appellants had no right of way over the strip in question, and this finding is supported by the evidence. Only two of the defendants were witnesses at the trial and they both testified that they claimed no interest in the land, but a right to use the wharf.

[3] The evidence shows that the land is a submerged strip of land and that the only use that the defendants could make of it was in connection with the wharf. They used the wharf in common with many others as a landing place for their boats and to reach their boats from the shore and to pass over the wharf for that purpose, but there is no evidence to show that this use of the wharf was hostile or adverse to the respondents and not in subordination to respondents' title, and the burden of proving all the elements of a prescriptive title was upon the appel-

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. March 20, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ⚷931(1)—Findings of trial court must, if possible, be reconciled so as to support judgment.

Findings of trial court must on appeal be reconciled so as to support judgment if that can be done.

2. Appeal and error ⚷1071(1)—Findings showing fee-simple title and acquisition thereof by mistake, in action to quiet title, being in irreconcilable conflict, judgment must be reversed.

In action to quiet title, where general finding, that estate of which plaintiff was administrator had title in fee simple to property involved, was in irreconcilable conflict with finding to the effect that decedent obtained decree quieting title to same property against defendant under McEnerney Act (St. 1906, Ex. Sess. p. 78), by mistake and with no intention of barring defendant's estate in remainder, judgment must be reversed.

3. Records ⚷18(10)—Mistake is ground for equitable relief against decree quieting title under McEnerney Act.

Person kept out of court by mistake of one quieting title under McEnerney Act (St. 1906, Ex. Sess. p. 78) is entitled to equitable relief against decree.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by John E. Boyle, as administrator of the estate of Hannah Boyle, deceased, against Annie T. Boyle, wherein defendant filed cross-complaint. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Roland C. Becsey and Paul A. McCarthy, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Thomas T. Califro, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KOFORD, P. J. Defendant appeals from a decree in favor of plaintiff as administrator quieting the title of Hannah Boyle, deceased, to a piece of property in the city and county of San Francisco. The appeal is upon the judgment roll alone.

The complaint alleged that the deceased at the time of her death, January 18, 1920, was the owner in fee simple of the property described. It also alleged that on the 9th day of November, 1911, said decedent in her lifetime obtained a decree quieting title against all persons under the provisions of what is commonly known as the McEnerney Act. St. 1906 (Ex. Sess.) p. 78. It also alleged that defendant claimed some right in the property, but that said claim was without foundation. The defendant filed an answer and also a cross-complaint. The findings of the court found nearly all of the cross-complaint to be true, but some of the allegations of the cross-complaint were omitted from the findings—that is, they were neither found to be true or untrue.

It is the claim of the appellant that, notwithstanding the general findings and conclusion of the court that the estate of Hannah Boyle, deceased, was the owner in fee simple of the property described, the other findings of the court responding to the allegations of the cross-complaint are such that judgment should have been given for the defendant.

The cross-complaint pleaded that Hannah Boyle obtained the McEnerney quiet title decree without in any manner notifying the appellant; that she did this by mistake and in ignorance of the legal effect of such a decree upon the title of appellant to said property.

We take the facts from the findings of the court. On June 2, 1905, Hannah Boyle, a widow, signed, acknowledged, and delivered to appellant, who was her only unmarried daughter and who lived with her during her whole lifetime until the death of her said mother, a deed of gift to said property, reserving unto herself a life estate in the same. Following the fire of 1906, which destroyed the public records of the city and county of San Francisco, the decedent obtained the McEnerney decree quieting title, November 9, 1911. The remainder of the findings necessary to be considered are as follows:

"That said Hannah Boyle did all of the things in connection with said suit under and with the advice of competent legal counsel; that said deed to defendant in remainder had not then been recorded, and said Hannah Boyle knew that said deed had not been recorded; that in her affidavit filed in said action said Hannah Boyle did not name this defendant as having any interest in said real property adverse to plaintiff and did not in said affidavit disclose the existence of said deed of gift to this defendant, but the omission of said Hannah Boyle so to do was not fraudulent; that neither at the time of the commencement of said action by said Hannah Boyle to establish and quiet the title to said property, nor prior thereto, nor subsequent thereto during the pendency of said action, nor for more than one year thereafter, did this defendant know of said action or of the pendency thereof, nor of the entry of any decree establishing said title in said Hannah Boyle; that said Hannah Boyle repeatedly, both before and after the entry of said decree establishing the title to said property, acknowledged to this defendant and to others that said property belonged to this defendant, subject to the life estate of said Hannah Boyle, and repeatedly, both before and after the entry of said decree, requested and exhorted this defendant to record the said deed of gift.

"That during the whole of this defendant's lifetime she resided with said Hannah Boyle, in the City and County of San Francisco, said state, and, as the only unmarried daughter of said Hannah Boyle, this defendant and said Hannah Boyle, her mother, during all of the lifetime of this defendant had intimate and confidential relations with each other, and that at all times after the date of the delivery of said deed from said Hannah Boyle to this defendant, to-wit, the 2nd day of June, 1905, this defendant reposed great confidence in her said mother, the said Hannah Boyle, and therefore refrained from recording said deed of gift during the life of said Hannah Boyle, knowing fully that said Hannah Boyle would not do anything to affect the rights granted to and acquired by this defendant by and through the said deed."

There is no finding of the court with respect to laches or the statute of limitations.

It will be seen from the foregoing that, although the mother and daughter resided together in the same house upon intimate and confidential relations with each other, that the mother obtained the decree quieting title without any knowledge upon the part of her daughter, but that the omission of the deceased to notify her daughter or in any manner to make her a party to the action was not fraudulent. Those allegations in the cross-complaint, which are not found upon in any way whatever by the court, are to the effect that the decedent did not understand the effect of the decree upon the unrecorded deed of gift which she had executed to her daughter.

[1, 2] The findings of the court must be reconciled so as to support the judgment if that can be done. Respondent stands strictly upon the McEnerney decree, claiming that thereby, as found by the court, the appellant is estopped from asserting her title under her deed. He has not suggested any theory upon which the findings can be reconciled, nor attempted to point out how these probative facts could be true without it also being true that Hannah Boyle obtained the decree against her daughter by mistake. We have been unable to think of any such theory to reconcile the findings. Hannah Boyle must have been laboring under the mistaken belief that her decree would not affect her daughter's title or that her daughter's title would not come into being until after her death or until the deed was recorded. It is a definite fact in this case that during all the proceedings of the McEnerney suit the daughter was the owner of the property subject only to the life estate of her mother, yet the latter obtained the decree against her daughter without notice and without making her a party, which decree if allowed to stand would have the effect of making the mother the owner in fee, thereby divesting all title from the daughter. This all happened without fraud and while the two were living together upon intimate and confidential relations. There is no rational inference to be drawn from the findings which explains these facts except that of mistake.

[3] The cross-complaint was a direct attack upon the McEnerney decree. Follette v. Pacific L. & P. Corp., 189 Cal. 193, 208 P. 295, 23 A. L. R. 965. If appellant had been kept away from court by fraud of her mother so that she never had her day in court, she would be entitled to equitable relief against the decree for extrinsic fraud. U. S. v. Throckmorton, 98 U. S. 65, 25 L. Ed. 93; Bacon v. Bacon, 150 Cal. 477, 89 P. 317; Holmes v. O'Brien, 28 Cal. App. 264, 151 P. 1151. Mistake is just as potent as fraud as a ground for such equitable relief against a judgment where that mistake has prevented a defendant from having his day in court. Martin v. Parsons, 49 Cal. 100; Bacon v. Bacon, 150 Cal. 477, 89 P. 317.

We conclude, therefore, that the findings are irreconcilably in conflict. The judgment is therefore reversed.

CARTER v. GREEN et al., Councilmen of City of Albany. (Civ. 6778.)★

Rehearing Denied April 13, 1929.

1. Municipal corporations 🔑34—Affidavits of those circulating petition for consolidation of cities are not required to be attached to petition (St. 1909, p. 282; St. 1913, p. 577).

Affidavits of those circulating petition for consolidation of cities are not required to be attached to petition, either under Consolidation Act of 1909 (St. 1909, p. 282), or Act of 1913 (St. 1913, p. 577).

2. Mandamus 🔑164(3)—General denial did not raise issue as to whether election petition for consolidation of cities was signed by requisite number of electors (Municipal Consolidation Act of 1913, § 2).

General denial was insufficient to raise issue as to whether election petition for consolidation of cities under Municipal Consolidation Act (St. 1913, p. 577) § 2, was in fact signed by one-fourth of the qualified electors of municipality, as alleged in the verified petition.

3. Mandamus 🔑74(2)—Duty of calling election for consolidation of cities after prerequisite facts are established may be compelled by mandamus (Municipal Consolidation Act of 1913, § 2).

Where prerequisite facts for calling of election to determine whether cities should be consolidated in accordance with Municipal Consolidation Act (St. 1913, p. 577) § 2, exist and are established by sufficient proof, the duty is mandatory, and its performance may be compelled.

4. Municipal corporations 🔑34—Proceedings for election to determine consolidation of cities are not rendered void merely because dates of signing by electors were not affixed by them (Municipal Consolidation Act of 1913, § 2).

Where officer whose duty it is to determine sufficiency of petition for special election to determine whether cities should be consolidated in accordance with Municipal Consolidation Act (St. 1913, p. 577) § 2, has found the same to be signed by requisite number of qualified electors, the fact that dates of signing were not affixed by them but by another will not render void the proceedings based thereon.

5. Municipal corporations 🔑34—Petition for special election to determine consolidation of cities, wherein large number of signers did not affix date of signing, was insufficient (Municipal Consolidation Act of 1913, § 2).

Petition for calling of special election pursuant to Municipal Consolidation Act (St. 1913, p. 577) § 2, for consolidation of cities, wherein a large number of signers did not affix dates of signing, held not in substantial compliance with requirements of statute so as to require calling of election.

Original proceeding in mandamus by G. V. Carter against Lisle S. Green and others, as Councilmen of the City of Albany. Writ denied.

Clark, Nichols & Eltse, of Berkeley, for petitioner.

Lovett K. Fraser, of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. A proceeding in mandamus to compel respondents above named to call a special election in the city of Albany for the purpose of determining whether that city shall be consolidated with the city of Berkeley. The two cities are contiguous, the city of Berkeley having the greater population and the larger number of electors.

Section 2 of the Municipal Consolidation Act of 1913 (Stats. 1913, p. 577) provides as follows: "Whenever a petition, signed by not less than one-fourth in number of the qualified electors of any municipal corporation, as shown by the registration of electors of the county in which such municipal corporation is situated, is filed with the legislative body thereof, asking that such municipal corporation and any other municipal corporation contiguous thereto, designated in such petition, and having a greater population, be consolidated, such legislative body must, without delay, call a special election and submit to the electors of such municipal corporation the question whether such municipal corporations shall be consolidated. * * *" It is admitted that on October 1, 1928, there was filed and presented to respondents at their regular meeting a petition, purporting to be signed by 1,557 qualified electors of the municipality, requesting respondents to call a special election and submit to the electors the above question. While the statute requires no action by the city clerk nor any certificate by him as to its sufficiency (Hirons v. Clare, 38 Cal. App. 608, 177 P. 291; People v. Town of Ontario, 148 Cal. 625, 84 P. 207), respondents, as they might do (Wolfskill v. City Council, etc., 178 Cal. 610, 174 P. 45), referred the petition to him for the purpose of ascertaining the number of qualified electors who had signed the same. It is admitted that the number of such signers necessary to call the election was 1,135. The clerk, in a communication addressed to respondents, stated that he had examined the signatures attached to the petition, and found that 42 names thereon did not appear on the great register; that 7 signatures did not compare with those on the pages of the register; that 11 names were duplicated, and that 1,211 signers did not affix the date of signing. Whether the names of the signers last mentioned appeared on the registration records was not stated. He also certified that no affidavits by the persons who circulated the petition were attached thereto; and, further, that it did not appear therefrom under what act of the Legislature petitioner wished the election called. Respondents thereupon rejected the petition and refused to call the election.

[1] Neither the Consolidation Act of 1909 (Stats. 1909, p. 282) nor the Act of 1913 (Stats. 1913, p. 577) requires the affidavits of those who circulate the petition to be attached, and the petition filed with respondents sufficiently shows that petitioner was proceeding under the latter act.

[2-5] The verified petition in the present proceeding alleged that the election petition was in fact signed by over one-fourth of the qualified electors of the municipality. This allegation was met by a general denial by respondents, which was insufficient to put the matter in issue (Hirons v. Clare, supra); but this court notwithstanding caused the petition to be referred to the superior court of Alameda county for determination, and, according to its findings, the petition was signed by more than one-fourth of such electors within two weeks preceding its presentation to the board. It is not claimed by petitioner that the signatures of 1,211 signers referred to in the clerk's statement were dated by them. It, however, appears that dates were affixed thereto, but by whom is not shown. In passing upon the sufficiency of such a petition with respect to the number of qualified electors who have signed the same the statute expressly limits the source of information "to the registration of electors of the county in which such municipal corporation is situated" (Stats. 1913, p. 578, § 2); and in determining the question the council acts in a ministerial capacity (Wolfskill v. City Council, supra). Here, as in other cases where the duty is ministerial, the obligation to call the election depended upon the determination of prerequisite facts; but where such facts exist and are established by sufficient proof the duty is mandatory and its performance may be compelled. Tulare Water Co. v. State Water Commission, 187 Cal. 533, 202 P. 874; Puterbaugh v. Wadham, 162 Cal. 611, 123 P. 804; Stockton R. R. Co. v. Stockton, 51 Cal. 328; People v. Supervisors, 45 Cal. 395; Hirons v. Clare, supra. Respondents contend, however, that section 1083a of the Political Code, which provides that, "Wherever, by the constitution or laws of this state, any initiative, referendum, recall or nominating petition or paper, or any petition or paper, is required to be signed by qualified electors, * * * such signer shall at the time of so signing such petition or paper affix thereto the date of such signing," not having been complied with by a number of the signers equal to one-fourth of the qualified electors of the municipality, the petition was properly rejected. The purpose of the statute was to guard against signatures by persons who are not qualified electors at the time of signing the petition (Chester v. Hall, 55 Cal. App. 611, 619, 204 P. 237), and it has been held that noncompliance therewith is a justification for refusal by the proper officer to certify as sufficient the names of the signers as to whose signatures the dates of signing are not affixed (Boggs v. Jordan (Cal. Sup.) 267 P. 696; Chambers v. Glenn-Colusa Irrigation Dist., 57 Cal. App. 155, 206 P. 773). But, as was in effect held in the above cases, where the officer whose duty it is to determine the sufficiency of the petition from the registration records found the same to have been signed by the requisite number of qualified electors, the fact that the dates of signing were not affixed by them but by another will not render void the proceedings based thereon. This was not equivalent, however, to holding the above provision to be merely directory, or that such officer would be bound to act notwithstanding the signers had failed to comply with the statute; for, as the court said in Chambers v. Glenn-Colusa Irrigation Dist., supra: "The requirement is, of course, plain and unequivocal, within the power of the Legislature to prescribe, and there is no good reason for holding it to be otherwise than mandatory."

It is contended that it inferentially appears from certain letters written by the clerk to the attorneys for the petitioner, and which were set forth in his petition to this court, that the former did in fact ascertain from the registration records that the election petition was signed by the requisite number of qualified electors, and that having done so the board was not justified in refusing to act thereon. But whatever may have been the fact known to the clerk, so far as shown, he did not so certify to the board. The question here presented is, what did the petition with the statement made by the clerk as to its sufficiency show to respondents; and we are to determine whether the writ should issue by a consideration of the situation as presented to them. Chambers v. Glenn-Colusa Irrigation Dist., supra.

In view of the foregoing we feel bound to hold that the petition did not substantially comply with the requirements of the statute, and that it was consequently not the duty of the respondents to act thereon.

The writ is denied.

POMPER et al. v. BEHNKE et al.★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. March 18, 1929.

Rehearing Denied April 17, 1929.

1. Appeal and error 🔑113(1)—Order denying motion for new and different judgment is appealable.

An appeal lies from an order denying a motion to enter a new and different judgment.

2. Appeal and error 🔑348(1)—Failure to serve notice of new trial or motion to vacate on defendant left unaffected by denial thereof did not defeat jurisdiction of appellate court (Code Civ. Proc. § 663a).

Where position of defendant brought in as a party under order of the trial court and against whom final judgment was rendered was left unaffected by denial of motion for new trial if he were in fact in any sense an adverse party without contemplation of Code Civ. Proc. § 663a, the failure to serve notice of new trial or motion to vacate on such defendant did not defeat jurisdiction of appellate court.

3. Pleading 🔑34(4)—Language of pleading must be construed strictly against pleader.

Court must construe the language of a pleading most strongly against the pleader.

4. Contracts 🔑88—Presumption of consideration for written instrument may be overthrown by evidence to contrary (Civ. Code, §§ 1614, 1615, 3442).

Presumption of consideration for a written instrument in accordance with Civ. Code, § 1614, is a disputable one, and may be overthrown by evidence to the contrary, though party seeking to avoid instrument has burden of showing want of consideration under section 1615, nor can any transfer or charge be adjudged fraudulent, under section 3442, solely on ground that it was not made for valuable consideration.

5. Evidence 🔑383(7)—Statement that certain sum has been paid as consideration for deed may be accepted as prima facie evidence of its truth.

Statement in deed that a certain sum has been paid as consideration is an admission or acknowledgment of grantor, and may be accepted as prima facie evidence of its truth.

6. Gifts 🔑49(4)—Inadequacy of nominal consideration for deed held to warrant inference that it was transfer by way of gift.

Inadequacy of nominal consideration for deed compared with value of property held to warrant an inference, not that transaction was fraudulent, but that it was a transfer by way of gift.

7. Marriage 🔑50(4)—Hearsay statement that person had said he and another were married was insufficient proof of marriage (Civ. Code, § 68 et seq.).

Hearsay statement that witness had heard party say that he and another were married was insufficient, of itself, as proof of marriage under the Marriage Law as it existed in 1896 after amendment in 1895 to Civ. Code, § 68 et seq.

8. Husband and wife 🔑262(1)—Presumption is that lands purchased during marriage were community property.

Where lands were purchased during marriage relationship, presumption is that they were community property.

9. Husband and wife 🔑264—Presumption that lands purchased during marriage were community property can be overthrown only by clear, certain, and convincing evidence.

Presumption that lands purchased during marriage relationship were community property can be overthrown only by evidence of a clear, certain, and convincing character establishing the contrary.

10. Husband and wife 🔑262(2)—One claiming separate character of property purchased during marriage has burden of overcoming presumption that it was community property.

One claiming separate character of property purchased during marriage relationship has burden of introducing evidence of clear and convincing character sufficient to overthrow presumption that it constituted community property.

11. Deeds 🔑194(2)—Court properly ruled that there had been due delivery of deed found with grantee's personal effects after her death.

Where deed was found with personal effects of grantee after her death, the court properly ruled that there had been due delivery thereof to grantee.

12. Deeds 🔑82—Deed was effective as transfer from grantor to grantee without recordation.

Recordation was not necessary to make deed effective as a transfer from grantor to grantee.

13. Husband and wife 🔑265—Gift of community property by husband without wife's consent was not void but voidable at election of wife (Civ. Code, § 172 as amended in 1891).

Under Civ. Code, § 172, as amended in 1891, relating to right of husband to make a gift of community property or convey the same without consideration, a gift of community property by husband without the wife's consent was not void but voidable only at election of wife; the property vesting in donee subject to right on part of wife to have it revoked.

14. Husband and wife 🔑267(1)—Wife, in case of transfer of community property by husband without her consent, could recover only one-half of property so conveyed (Civ. Code, § 172, as amended in 1891).

Where husband transferred community property without consent of wife in violation of Civ. Code, § 172, as amended in 1891, the wife could recover only one-half of property conveyed by husband.

★Rehearing denied.

15. Appeal and error 🔑1058(1)—Exclusion of corroborative evidence, though technically erroneous, held harmless.

Exclusion of evidence which was merely corroborative or cumulative of other evidence, though technically erroneous, where no ground of objection was stated, held harmless.

16. Quieting title 🔑10(1)—One failing to show title or possession or right to possession could not complain that some one else asserted interest therein.

One claiming property, having failed to show title or possession or right to an undivided one-half thereof, was not in position to complain that some one else, even though without title, asserted an interest in property, and defendant may effectually resist a decree against himself by showing simply that plaintiff is without title.

17. Deeds 🔑15—Neither recital of consideration nor consideration in fact is necessary to support voluntary deed.

Neither a recital of consideration nor a consideration in fact is necessary to support a deed as a valid conveyance of land, if executed voluntarily with knowledge of its contents and with intent to convey.

18. Deeds 🔑17(2)—Mere inadequacy of consideration is not sufficient grounds for setting aside deed.

Mere inadequacy of consideration is never of itself sufficient ground for setting aside a deed.

19. Deeds 🔑207, 208(6)—One denying valid transfer has burden of proving by preponderance of evidence that there was no conveyance or acceptance.

One denying valid transfer to holder of realty conveyance has burden of proving that there was no conveyance or acceptance by preponderance of evidence.

20. Quieting title 🔑42—Plaintiff, prevailing to extent of recovering undivided one-half of real property described in complaint and one-half of rents, was entitled to costs.

Where plaintiff, in suit to quiet title, prevailed to extent that she was entitled to judgment quieting title to undivided one-half of real property described in complaint and to one-half of sum found by receiver and referee for rent, she was entitled to judgment for costs.

Suit by Emelia Pomper, also known as Emelie Auguste Pomper, and others, against Alfred A. Behnke and others. From an interlocutory judgment in favor of plaintiff and judgment denying defendant's motion to retax costs, and a final judgment in favor of plaintiff against certain defendants, and an order denying defendant's motion for another and different judgment, defendants separately appeal; the three appeals being consolidated and considered and determined together. Affirmed in part, and in part reversed with directions.

John F. Poole and H. E. Gleason, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

McDANIEL, Justice pro tem. There are three appeals pending herein, numbered, respectively, as above indicated. Civil No. 3720, L. A. No. 9382, is an appeal from an interlocutory judgment in favor of plaintiff. Civil No. 3721, L. A. No. 9383, is an appeal from a judgment denying the motion of defendants to retax costs. Civil No. 3722, L. A. No. 9999, is an appeal from a final judgment made and entered in favor of plaintiff against certain defendants and from an order denying defendants' motion for another and different judgment. By stipulation of respective counsel, and by order of the Supreme Court, the three appeals have been consolidated, together with the respective records thereof, which are here on bills of exceptions, and are to be considered and determined as upon the last-named appeal.

This is a suit to quiet title. Its history shows that it was commenced on September 29, 1920, by one Emelia Pomper to quiet her title to a certain piece of real property described in the pleadings and judgment herein as residence property on Flower street in the city of Los Angeles, Cal. The defendant in the action was one Behnke. On motion for new trial, same was granted, which resulted in a judgment in favor of the plaintiff. Another motion for a new trial was made and granted, and thereupon the case was taken before the Supreme Court on certiorari to review the action of the lower court in granting the said motion. After affirmance of the said order granting the new trial, the case was tried for the third time by the superior court, judgment rendered, and appeal taken as above indicated.

The facts are as follows: The plaintiff Emelia Auguste Pomper and Frederick Emil Pomper (also known as Fritz Pomper) were married in Germany, September 5, 1881, and lived together as husband and wife until August, 1891, during which time there were born their five children, of whom two have died, leaving three daughters surviving, named Anna Wanda Loeffler, Anna Auguste Herold, and Freda Camila Rudolph, now named as plaintiffs and respondents herein. They are all of adult age and married. The names given above are their present surnames. In the year 1891 the said Fritz Pomper left his home in Germany and came to America. Either at the same time, or within two or three years later, the said Emelia Lenk also came to America and began to live with Fritz Pomper in the city of Chicago, whence they removed to the city of Los Angeles, Cal. They continued to reside together until the death of Fritz Pomper in June, 1918. In the year 1905 Fritz Pomper purchased the property in question from one Eichholz, paying down the sum of $500 and executing a note and mortgage in the principal sum of $4,500 as and for the balance of the full purchase price of $5,000 agreed to be paid for said property; the said note and mortgage were also signed by Emelia Lenk, who used the name, in so signing, of "Emelia Pomper"; and the balance of the purchase price thereafter was paid during the time that Fritz Pomper and Emelia Lenk Pomper were living together. On September 8, 1908, Fritz Pomper executed a deed to Emelie Pomper (Emelia Lenk Pomper of Los Angeles), which was, in form, a grant deed describing the property in question, which was found after the death of Emelie Pomper with her effects contained in her trunk, which may have been, prior to his death, the trunk of both Fritz and Emelia Lenk. (It may be noted, parenthetically, that throughout all the documentary evidence, pleadings, and judgment, the name of "Emelia Lenk" of Los Angeles, also known as "Emelia Pomper" of Los Angeles, and the name of "Emelia Pomper" of Germany, have been spelled in various ways. For convenience hereafter the two names, respectively, will be spelled in a uniform manner.) The consideration named in said deed was the sum of $10. The said deed was recorded November 10, 1920, by one of the defendants, Adelina Heinze. On September 20, 1915, Fritz Pomper executed a deed of gift of said property to Emelia Pomper, which was recorded on September 21, 1915, in the records of Los Angeles county, Cal. Emelia Lenk Pomper died September 7, 1919, and at the time of her death resided with defendant Heinze. In August, as before noted, the respondent Emelia Pomper commenced this suit, and later, by amendments, the other parties plaintiff were added. The appellants, in their bill of exceptions, specified certain rulings of the court, in the admission or rejection of testimony and evidence, as error. Error is also predicated upon the refusal of the court, after judgment rendered, to enter a new and different judgment.

[1, 2] At the outset respondent raises the objection that the order denying a motion for a new and different judgment last referred to is not appealable. It is well settled, however, in this state that an appeal lies from an order denying motion to enter a new and different judgment. Gittelson v. Gandolfo (Cal. App.) 259 P. 340; Condon v. Donohue, 160 Cal. 749, 118 P. 113. Respondent also argues that this court has no jurisdiction of the appeals, wherein he contends, "no notice of a new trial or motion to vacate" was served on Frank Bryson, administrator of the estate of Fritz Pomper, deceased, a defendant brought in as a party under order of the trial court. With respect to this objection as to jurisdiction, we believe it to be without merit. The notice of appeal in this case appears to have been within due time after denial of the motion for new trial. The trial court's final judgment was against the said defendant Bryson. The motion for new trial was denied. Bryson's position was left unaffected if he were, in fact, in any sense an adverse party within the contemplation of section 663a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

As will more fully appear hereafter, the public administrator, as the administrator of the estate of Fritz Pomper, did not interpose any special defense, nor, after judgment, take any appeal from any order, and no averments may be found in the pleadings seeking any other relief than to quiet any title that might by law vest in him as such administrator.

The notice of intention to move for a new trial in this proceeding was addressed only to plaintiffs, and served on them alone, and filed within the specified time. This may have been upon an erroneous theory, possibly, that Bryson was not an adverse party. Nevertheless, upon the authority of the Estate of Nutt, 180 Cal. 419, 181 P. 661, the appeal was filed within the statutory time after the denial of the motion for a new trial, after due hearing.

[3] The following statement of appellants' position on this appeal may be taken as a basis for the discussion of the facts and the law applicable to this case, which will follow: (a) Appellants contend that error appears by the record here, as follows: I. That the evidence is wholly insufficient to sustain the basic and essential findings: a. That the real property, the subject-matter of this action, was community property of Fritz Pomper and the respondent Emelia Pomper. b. That the deed of 1908, Fritz Pomper to Emelia Pomper, was without consideration and that it was recorded subsequent to filing of lis pendens in this action. c. That the conveyances under which appellants claim were made with intent to defraud respondent. II. That the court erred in refusing to permit evidence showing consideration to Emelia Pomper of Los Angeles for deed to appellants. III. That even if said property was community property, Fritz Pomper made a valid conveyance to one-half thereof, and that therefore order to enter another and different judgment was proper. IV. No estate or interest is shown in respondent children. V. That the item of costs sought to be stricken from the cost bill was not properly taxed against appellants. Under stipulation, all the claimants herein would deraign their title through the deed above named executed by Eichholz and his wife, Emma Eichholz, granting the property in dispute to Fritz Pomper of Los Angeles. Throughout their carefully prepared brief, appellants seem to base their arguments that the plaintiff Emelia Pomper of Germany has no right, title, or interest to even a community property right to the property, upon the fact that the evidence discloses, at least from the year 1896 to the date of his death, Fritz Pomper and Emelia Lenk lived together in the same house. If the evidence herein disclosed that a marriage between Fritz Pomper and Emelia Pomper of Los Angeles had been solemnized in any manner, or at all, as required by the law of California, the case on this appeal would present an aspect different than that which it now presents; but it is not claimed in the pleadings nor in the argument that there is any evidence in the case that any marriage ceremony ever had taken place between those two persons. It is, of course, claimed that they lived together as husband and wife, and upon that fact alone, together with the many years during which the two resided together, appellants base their argument that the property having been acquired as the fruits of their joint industry, by analogy at least, must be considered a sort of a community property as between themselves, and that the first Emelia Pomper, although never divorced from Fritz Pomper, had in no wise contributed to the acquiring of said property, and therefore had no community interest therein. The argument, as stated, has been ingenious and elaborate. He cites, in support of same, Tibbetts v. Fore, 70 Cal. 242, 244, 11 P. 648; Ord v. De La Guerra, 18 Cal. 67, 74; Schneider v. Schneider, 183 Cal. 335, 191 P. 533, 11 A. L. R. 1386; Coats v. Coats, 160 Cal. 671, 675, 118 P. 441 [36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 844]; Brenchley v. Brenchley, 96 Wash. 223, 164 P. 913, L. R. A. 1917E, 968; Barkley v. Dumke, 99 Tex. 150, 87 S. W. 1147—which are cases where the second wife of a void or voidable marriage is seeking to establish her right to an equitable share of the property acquired while the marriage subsisted, and they do not deal with conflicting equities between a first wife, still the legal wife of the husband, and the alleged rights to an interest in the property of the so-called putative wife. It is deemed unnecessary to discuss each of the citations and arguments made by appellants in much detail or at great length, for the reason that we believe they have themselves, by their pleadings, cut the grounds from under their own argument. In paragraph 1 of the second defense in their answer to the amended complaint defendants affirmatively allege the marriage of Fritz Pomper and Emelia Pomper of Germany, and the continuance of the marriage relationship between those two to the date of Fritz Pomper's death in June, 1918. The paragraph referred to is as follows: "That these defendants are informed that plaintiff at all times mentioned in the complaint was and still is a resident of Gloesa, Chemnitz, Germany, and that she and one Frederick Emil Pomper, sometimes known as Fritz Pomper and sometimes known as Fred E. Pomper, intermarried at Gloesa, Chemnitz, Germany, on September 25, 1881, and remained husband and wife until the death of the said Fritz Pomper in Los Angeles, California, on or about the 10th day of June, 1918." Construing the language, as we must, most strongly against the pleader, it must be regarded as an admission of the unbroken marriage relationship between Fritz Pomper and Emelia Pomper of Germany from its inception in 1881 to June 10, 1918. To make this admission doubly strong appellants in their reply brief herein, in their recapitulation of the case, after mentioning the date when Fritz Pomper acquired the property by purchase in 1905, state: "At that time, and at all times thereafter, until his death, June 10, 1918, Fritz Pomper and the respondent Emelia Pomper (of Germany), were husband and wife." This point will be further noticed later.

(b, c) Appellants assail the court's findings numbered VII, VIII, IX, XI, XIV, and XV as not supported by the evidence. In substance finding VII is that defendants make claim to the property by reason of the deed dated September 8, 1908, of Fritz Pomper to Emelia Pomper of Los Angeles; that there was not any valuable, or adequate, or any sufficient consideration for said deed; that a nominal consideration of $10 was recited; that the deed was not filed for record until subsequent to the commencement of this action and the filing of lis pendens herein, when recorded by defendant Heinze without right or authority.

Finding VIII is that defendants have no right whatever in or to the property in question.

Finding IX is that the property was community property of Fritz Pomper and his wife Emelia Pomper (of Germany), having been acquired during coverture, at the price of $5,500, paid by Fritz Pomper from his wages and earnings.

Finding XI is that Emelia Lenk (Emelia Pomper of Los Angeles) knew at all times of the existence of the true wife and her children, the children, also, of Fritz Pomper.

[4-6] In looking at appellants' criticism of finding VII, we keep in mind the Code sections: "A written instrument is presumptive evidence of a consideration." Civ. Code, § 1614. "The burden of showing a want of consideration sufficient to support an instrument lies with the party seeking to invalidate or avoid it." Civ. Code, § 1615. "* * * Nor can any transfer or charge be adjudged fraudulent solely on the ground that it was not made for a valuable consideration." Civ. Code, § 3442. The presumption as to a valuable consideration, however, is a disputable one and may be overthrown by evidence to the contrary. Proof was adduced at the trial that the property in question had a reasonable value of $5,000. Being but the sum of $10, it is apparent on the face of the transaction that the named consideration was an inadequate and not a valuable one. "The statement in the deed that a certain sum has been paid as the consideration is an admission or acknowledgment of the grantor that such is the fact, and such statement may be accepted as prima facie evidence of its truth." 2 Devlin on Deeds (2d Ed.) § 817. Paraphrasing a statement of the late Justice Hart of this court, in an opinion written by him, viz., Kinsell v. Thomas, 18 Cal. App. 683, at page 692, 124 P. 220, 224, it may be said here: "There is no evidence in the record rebutting the inference that the amount recited in the deed as the consideration for the conveyance to Emelia Pomper of Los Angeles in 1908, viz., the sum of $10 was the sum actually paid by her to Fritz Pomper for the realty." The inadequacy of the nominal consideration, compared with the value of the property, warrants an inference, not that the transaction was fraudulent, but that it was a transfer by way of gift. That inference is strengthened by the execution of the second deed by the same grantor to the same grantee in 1915, purporting to convey the same real property. The deed of 1915 is one of gift to Emelia Pomper, designated therein as his wife, for and in consideration of love and affection. In finding III the trial court finds this was a purported deed of gift executed by Fritz Pomper to Emelia Lenk, also known as Emelia Pomper.

[7-12] Appellants urge the view that the property was not community property of Fritz Pomper and Emelia Pomper of Germany, but rather was community property of Fritz and Emelia Lenk, also known as Emelia Pomper of Los Angeles. It is said on page 31 of their opening brief that, "It appears that there was the ceremony of marriage between the parties in 1896, and that thereafter they continued to live as man and wife." That statement is not supported by the record. It may be noted that notwithstanding the admissions in the pleadings and the arguments to the contrary, there was offered in evidence a certain paper purporting to be a marriage certificate issued by some person as a justice of the peace, but upon proper objection to the offer, because there was no identification of signatures nor proof of authenticity, the document was not admitted in evidence. The only other showing in this respect in the record is a statement of Mrs. Heinze (now deceased) that she had heard Fritz Pomper say that he and Emelia Lenk were married in Chicago in 1896. Of course, that hearsay statement alone is not sufficient proof of marriage under the marriage law of California as it existed in 1896 after amendment in 1895 to section 68 et seq., Civil Code. Appellants' argument on this point is not sound; the marriage of Fritz Pomper and Emelia Pomper of Germany being a subsisting marriage when Fritz acquired the property, it stood of record in his name. From the case of In re Boody's Estate, 113 Cal. 682, 45 P. 858, we quote from page 686 (45 P. 859): "The purchase of the lands having been made during marriage, the presumption is that it was community property, and this presumption could be overthrown only by evidence of a clear, certain, and convincing character establishing the contrary; and the burden of this showing rested with the parties claiming the separate character of the property. In the absence of such proof the presumption as to the community character of the property was absolute and conclusive." When the deed of 1908 of Fritz Pomper to Emelia Pomper of Los Angeles was admitted in evidence, the court properly ruled there had been due delivery thereof to the grantee, as it was found when she died, with her personal effects. Recordation was not necessary to make it effective as a transfer from grantor to grantee.

The finding as to a lis pendens and the recordation thereof by respondent prior to the recordation of the deed of 1908 is immaterial. The gift deed of 1915, if of any effect. merely confirmed the prior deed of 1908, and was recorded long before this litigation was commenced and lis pendens recorded.

[13, 14] We come now to appellants' point III. It having hereinbefore been shown that the property was community property of respondent and her husband Fritz, when he executed the deed of 1908 as a gift and without having received for it any valuable consideration, the transaction will be regarded in the light of the law of community property, as it was in the year 1908. Section 172, Civil Code, at that time, with respect to transactions like those herein involved, stood as amended in 1891. It provided that a husband could not make a gift of community property or convey the same without consideration unless the wife, in writing, consent thereto (5 Cal. Jur. 341), citing Spreckels v. Spreckels, 116 Cal. 343, 48 P. 228, 36 L. R. A. 497, 53 Am. St. Rep. 170, and many others. "Though the husband is forbidden by the statute to give away any part of the community property without the wife's consent in writing, yet a gift made by him in contravention of the statute is not a nullity. On the contrary, the property vests in the donee, subject to the right on the part of the wife to have it revoked. Moreover, since the gift is voidable only at the election of the wife, it binds the husband and his successors. Accordingly, the wife may recover in case of transfer in violation of the amended section, only one-half of the property conveyed by the husband." 5 Cal. Jur. 642; Dargie v. Patterson, 176 Cal. 714, 169 P. 360.

[15] In arguing their point II, appellants contend that the court erred in rejecting certain testimony, which is set forth as follows: "Gustav F. Heinze, recalled on behalf of defendants in surrebuttal, being first duly sworn, testified as follows: Direct examination by Mr. Pacht: On or about the 20th day of September, 1915, Mrs. Emelia Pomper of Los Angeles resided at 213 North Flower. During the last year and a half of Mrs. Pomper's life she lived with us, me and my wife. We took care of her. She was approximately 45 or 48 years old at the time of her death. Q. Did she know what her condition of physical health was about a year and a half prior to the time of her death? To which question plaintiff objected. Which objection was sustained. Whereupon defendants offered to prove by said witness that said Mrs. Pomper was taken care of by Mrs. Heinze for a year and a half prior to her death; that she boarded with her; all tending to the effect of consideration of said deed. Plaintiff objected to the introduction thereof, which objection was sustained." It will be noticed from the above quotation that no grounds of objection were stated by counsel, and yet they were sustained. Technically, this was erroneous. The question itself suggests many objections that might have been interposed, all of which would be good; but upon the matter of the offer made by defendants and appellants to prove that Emelia Lenk Pomper was taken care of by Mrs. Heinze for a year and a half prior to the former's death, and that she boarded with Mrs. Heinze, that is probably admissible as having some bearing upon the consideration of the deed executed by Emelia Lenk Pomper to Heinzes by the mesne conveyance to the Behnkes. However, we are of the opinion that the deed of Emelia Lenk to Alfred A. Behnke and wife, followed by the mesne conveyance of Behnke and wife to Heinze and wife, as under the Code sections heretofore cited, is presumed to have been for a valuable consideration. The evidence, if it had any bearing upon the consideration, was merely corroborative, perhaps merely cumulative upon that subject, and its exclusion would be harmless.

[16-19] Plaintiffs, in their complaint, anticipating the defense founded upon the execution of these deeds by Emelia Lenk, alleged that said Emelia Lenk deceased, was weak-minded and incompetent and under the absolute domination and control of said Fritz Pomper up to the time of his death in 1918; that said Emelia Lenk could not read or write the English language, and could comprehend very little, if any, German reading or writing; that the defendants Gustav Heinze, Alfred A. Behnke, Eleanor Behnke, and especially the defendant Lena Heinze, who is of a strong will and strong personality, subsequent to the death of Fritz Pomper, took possession of and dominated and controlled the said Emelia Lenk and imprisoned her and hedged her so about that no one could get in touch with her; that while having the said Emelia Lenk under their control and mastery, they forced and compelled said Emelia Lenk, without knowledge on her part and against her will, and through fraud and misrepresentations, to sign an alleged conveyance to Alfred A. Behnke, which conveyance was recorded in Book 6837, page 21, of deeds, records of Los Angeles county, on the 8th day of March, 1919, which deed was purported to be of date September 18, 1918; that at the time of said signing said Emelia Lenk, sometimes known as Emelia Pomper, did not know that she was signing a purported conveyance of any property or anything, but was informed and was led to believe, and was coerced into believing, that said instrument was a will by which she left all her property to her three sisters in Germany; that there was no consideration for said deed and the consideration mentioned therein is false; that said purported conveyance was taken in the name of said Behnke on behalf of Lena Heinze, who was endeavoring by said means to obtain said property for her own use and benefit without giving any consideration therefor, by the said misrepresentations to and coercion of said weak-minded Emelia Lenk, also known as Emelia Pomper; that any conveyance made by said Behnke to defendant Heinze was for the purpose of perfecting the aforesaid scheme and purposes of defendant Heinze. We have searched the record, without success, for any evidence supporting the averments as to fraudulent misrepresentations, domination or control, imprisonment, mastery, or coercion of said Emelia Lenk. It is true there is evidence that she was ignorant of the English language and not well educated even in her native German language. It is shown that when she received from her companion, friend, and supposed husband Fritz Pomper, the deed of 1908, she did not have the prudence or knowledge to cause the instrument to be duly recorded, but there is nothing in the testimony of any of the witnesses in the case to indicate any undue influence exercised upon or against her to execute the deed to Behnke, and the witness Alfred Behnke's testimony indicates that she knew that the property was to be, by himself and his wife, again conveyed to Mr. and Mrs. Heinze. He said that no money was paid himself as a consideration for the deed, while the deed itself recites a consideration of $4,000, but Behnke stated that he merely acted as a dummy in the transaction because there had been a prearranged understanding and agreement with reference to the execution of said instrument, between Emelia Lenk and Mrs. Heinze. Quoting from his testimony: "Q. By Mr. Poole: You say you were supposed to take it over to protect her interest. To protect her interest in what? A. Well, she was—it was a prearranged affair between Mrs. Heinze and Mrs. Pomper that I was supposed to take this property over in my name to safeguard her interest so she would not give it away or sell it or dispose of it for little or nothing." The trial court, with reference to this deed, made its finding that it was executed without consideration. Even if this were true, in so far as she held a valid legal title to Fritz Pomper's one-half of the community property of himself and his wife, he had a right to make a gift of the property, and the plaintiff Emelia Pomper is not in a position to quiet the title of the defendants because, as to one-half of the property, she had and held no interest whatsoever. In other words, the plaintiff, having failed to show title or possession or right of possession to an undivided one-half of the property, is not in position to complain that some one else, even though without title, asserts an interest in the property. "A defendant in such an action may always effectually resist a decree against himself, by showing simply that the plaintiff is without title." Williams v. City of San Pedro, 153 Cal. 44, 94 P. 234, and cases cited therein, all cited in Rockey v. Vieux, 179 Cal. 683, 178 P. 712. Neither a recital of the consideration, nor a consideration in fact, is necessary to support a deed as a valid conveyance of land if executed, voluntarily, with knowledge of its contents and with intent to convey. Tillaux v. Tillaux, 115 Cal. 663, 47 P. 691; Lieman v. Golly, 178 Cal. 544, 174 P. 33. Mere inadequacy of consideration is never of itself sufficient ground for setting aside a deed. Driscoll v. Driscoll, 143 Cal. 528, 77 P. 471; 9 Cal. Jur. 140, § 41, and notes. "One denying a valid transfer to a holder of a realty conveyance has burden to prove no conveyance or acceptance by a preponderance of evidence." Hodoian v. Garabedian, 79 Cal. App. 762, 251 P. 227.

We hold, as to appellants' point III, that if the property in question was the community property of Fritz Pomper and his real wife, Emelia Pomper, that Fritz Pomper conveyed a valid title only to an undivided one-half, and that the trial court erred in refusing to enter another and different decree. As we have shown, the law of this state upholds appellants' position in this regard. Directly in point is the case of Dargie v. Patterson, supra.

In considering appellants' point IV, we are convinced that the final judgment of the trial court that the children of said respondent Emelia Pomper and Fritz Pomper are now, with their mother, the owners in fee, and entitled to the possession of the described real property, was and is erroneous, and in fact is without any evidence to support it. All the transactions involved in this litigation occurred before the amendment to Civil Code section 1401 as it now stands.

[20] As to appellants' point V, we are satisfied that the trial court's refusal to retax costs, as requested, was proper. The ultimate judgment that should have been rendered in this case, in our opinion, was correctly rendered in so far as it adjudged that the plaintiff Emelia Pomper was entitled to judgment quieting her title to an undivided one-half of the real property described in the complaint, and also entitled to one-half of the sum found by the receiver and referee, for rents. It follows therefore that, having prevailed to that extent at least, plaintiff would be entitled to judgment for costs. Witherill v. Brehm, 74 Cal. App. 286, 289, 240 P. 529.

It is ordered that the judgment in civil action No. 3721 is affirmed. Judgment in civil action No. 3722, including consolidated civil action No. 3720, is reversed, with directions to the trial court to enter judgment that the plaintiff Emelia Pomper of Germany is the owner of an undivided one-half interest in the real property involved in this litigation, and that the defendant Gustav Heinze is the owner of the other undivided one-half thereof. The rents which have accrued during the pendency of this litigation should, by the terms of the new and modified judgment herein, be equally divided between the said plaintiff Emelia Pomper and said defendant Gustav Heinze. The other defendants, Eleanor Behnke and Alfred A. Behnke, should be dismissed hence. The plaintiffs Anna Wanda Loeffler, Anna Auguste Herold, and Freda Camila Rudolph take nothing by their action. The appellants in civil action No. 3722 are entitled to their costs on appeal.

FRIOUX v. JOHNSON, County Auditor.★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. March 19, 1929.

Rehearing Granted April 17, 1929.

1. Constitutional law ⇔56—Jurisdiction of police court established under original provisions of city charter continues unaltered, if court was in fact municipal court (Stockton City Charter, art. 21, §§ 1, 2, 4, and § 3 as amended by St. 1927, p. 2151; Const. art. 11, §§ 8, 8½).

Jurisdiction of police court at time of establishment under original provisions of Stockton City Charter (St. 1923, p. 1321) art. 21, §§ 1, 2, 4, continued irrespective of subsequent charter amendment to section 3 by St. 1927, p. 2151, if police court was municipal court within meaning of Const. art. 11, §§ 8 and 8½, under which municipal courts cannot be deprived of jurisdiction given inferior courts.

2. Justices of the peace 🔑2—Police court of city given concurrent jurisdiction with justice court in civil and criminal proceedings constituted "municipal court" which precluded existence of justice court (Stockton City Charter, art. 21, §§ 1, 2, 3, 4; Const. art. 11, §§ 8, 8½, subd. 1; Code Civ. Proc. § 103).

Police court of city of Stockton, created under Charter (St. 1923, p. 1321) art. 21, §§ 1–4, pursuant to Const. art. 11, § 8, and given jurisdiction concurrently with justice court in all civil and criminal proceedings which might be tried in justice court, held municipal court within meaning of term as used in Const. art. 11, § 8½, subd. 1, providing that in cities where municipal court has been established there shall be no other inferior court, and under such circumstances there could be no justice court in city, notwithstanding Code Civ. Original proceeding by George E. Frioux for writ of mandate to be directed to Fred H. Johnson, as Auditor of San Joaquin County, to require him to deliver a warrant to petitioner for salary as justice of the peace. Writ denied.

Nutter, Hancock & Rutherford and A. P. Hayne, all of Stockton, for petitioner.

Guard C. Darrah, Dist. Atty., and Tom H. Louttit, Asst. Dist. Atty., both of Stockton, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. This cause is before us upon the original application of the petitioner for a peremptory writ of mandate commanding and directing the respondent, as auditor of the county of San Joaquin, to issue and deliver to the petitioner a warrant for the sum of $200, as and for the compensation alleged to be due the petitioner on account of salary as a justice of the peace of the city of Stockton, county of San Joaquin, for the month of February, 1929.

The respondent demurred to the petition, alleging generally, that facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action are not set forth therein.

The record before us shows that the city of Stockton is a municipal corporation of the two and three-fourths class, and is incorporated as such under a freeholder's charter adopted by the voters of the city of Stockton and ratified and approved by the Legislature of the state of California in the year 1923 (Stats. 1923, p. 1321), and that said charter went into effect on July 1st of that year.

The petition then sets forth that at a general election held in said county of San Joaquin on the 2d day of November, 1926, he was elected to the office of justice of the peace of the city of Stockton; that the board of supervisors of said county thereafter caused an official certificate of election to said office to be issued to the petitioner; that the petitioner duly qualified as such justice of the peace by taking the oath of office and filing a bond as prescribed by law; that petitioner thereupon entered upon the discharge of his duties as such justice of the peace, and has continued to discharge the same ever since the 3d day of January, 1927, to and including the month of February, 1929; that the annual salary attached to said office is the sum of $2,400, payable in equal monthly installments of the sum of $200; that on the 1st day of March, 1929, the respondent declined and refused to issue a warrant to said petitioner in payment of his salary for the month of February, 1929, alleged to be due him, as hereinbefore stated.

The right of the petitioner to a warrant herein depends upon whether there is such an office as justice of the peace of the city of Stockton. The petitioner's claim is based upon the provisions of section 103 of the Code of Civil Procedure, wherein it is provided that in cities of the class to which Stockton belongs, there shall be one justice of the peace. If this provision is operative in the city of Stockton, the petitioner's claim is valid; if inoperative, the petitioner is not entitled to any salary by reason of any allegations contained in his petition.

Sections 1, 2, 3, and 4 of article 21 of the Charter of the City of Stockton, adopted and approved as herein stated, contains the following provisions relative to the establishment of a police court:

"Sec. 1. There is hereby created a police court in and for the City of Stockton, which is vested with all judicial powers granted by law to police courts of chartered municipalities, and which shall be presided over by the police judge.

"Sec. 2. The police judge must be qualified to practice in all the courts of the state of California, and must have been so qualified for at least two years next preceding the day of his election.

"Sec. 3. Said police court shall have jurisdiction concurrently, with the justices' courts of all actions and proceedings, civil and criminal, arising within the corporate limits of the city, and which might be tried in such justices' courts; and shall have exclusive jurisdiction of all actions for the recovery of any fine, penalty, or forfeiture prescribed for the breach of any ordinance of the city, of all actions founded upon any obligation or liability created by any ordinance, and of all prosecutions for any violation of any ordinance. The rules of practice and mode of proceeding in said police court shall be the same as are or may be prescribed by law for justices' courts in like cases; and appeals may be taken to the superior court of San Joaquin County, from all judgments of said police court, in like manner and with like effect as in cases of appeals from justices' courts.

"Sec. 4. The police judge shall be judge of the police court, and shall have the powers and perform the duties of a magistrate. He may administer and certify oaths and affirmations, and may take and certify acknowledgments."

In 1927 the Legislature approved certain amendments to the charter of the city of Stockton, whereby section 3 of article 21 of the charter was purported to be amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 3. Said police court shall have exclusive jurisdiction of all misdemeanors punishable by fine or by imprisonment or by both such fine and imprisonment committed within the corporate limits of the city. It shall also have exclusive jurisdiction of all actions for the recovery of any fines, penalties or forfeitures prescribed for the breach of any ordinance of the city, of all actions founded upon any obligation or liability created by any ordinance and of all prosecutions for any violation of any ordinance. Said police court shall have jurisdiction, in all civil cases, concurrently with the justices' court of all actions and proceedings arising within the corporate limits of the city and which might be tried in such justices' court. The rules of practice and mode of proceeding in said police court shall be the same as are or may be prescribed by law for justices' courts in like cases; and appeals may be taken to the superior court of San Joaquin County, from all judgments of said police court, in like manner and with like effect as in cases of appeals from justices' courts." Stats. 1927, p. 2151.

The city of Stockton is a municipal corporation regularly chartered under the provisions of section 8 of article 11 of the Constitution, and section 8½ of article 11 is therefore applicable. That section reads, so far as pertinent here, as follows:

"Sec. 8½. It shall be competent, in all charters framed under the authority given by section eight of this article, to provide, in addition to those provisions allowable by this Constitution, and by the laws of the state as follows: 1. For the constitution, regulation, government, and jurisdiction of police courts, and for the manner in which, the times at which, and the terms for which the judges of such courts shall be elected or appointed, and for the qualifications and compensation of said judges and of their clerks and attaches; and for the establishment, constitution, regulation, government and jurisdiction of municipal courts and judges thereof, with such civil, criminal and magisterial jurisdiction as by law may be conferred upon inferior courts and judges thereof; and for the manner in which, the times at which and the terms for which the judges of such courts shall be elected or appointed, and for the qualifications and compensation of said judges and of their clerks and attaches; provided, such municipal courts shall never be deprived of the jurisdiction given inferior courts created by general law.

"In any city or any city and county, when such municipal court has been established, there shall be no other court inferior to the superior court; and pending actions, trials, and all pending business of inferior courts within the territory of such city or city and county, upon the establishment of any such municipal court, shall be and become pending in such municipal court, and all records of such inferior courts shall thereupon be and become the records of such municipal court."

The amendment to section 3 of article 21 of the charter of the city of Stockton, as above set forth, purports to eliminate or take from the jurisdiction of the court criminal cases. In the original section the jurisdiction is given in these words: "Said police court shall have jurisdiction concurrently, with the justices' courts of all actions and proceedings, civil and criminal," etc. In the amended section jurisdiction is given in these words: "Said police court shall have jurisdiction, in all civil cases, concurrently with the justices' court of all actions," etc. The attempted limitation, if at all, is upon the exercise of jurisdiction in certain unspecified criminal cases.

[1] Whether the amendment to the charter of the city of Stockton adopted in 1927, as above stated, does in fact attempt a limitation or change of the jurisdiction granted the court referred to by the provisions of the charter adopted in 1923, is wholly immaterial in so far as the issues before us are involved. By the terms of section 8½ of article 11 of the Constitution, the jurisdiction of the court established under the original provisions of the charter of the city of Stockton must be held to be the jurisdiction of that court as it now exists, in so far as the charter granted to such court jurisdiction theretofore exercised by inferior courts, if the court as originally established partakes of the nature and comes within the terms of the section of the Constitution where it speaks of municipal courts. In this particular the Constitution reads: "Such municipal court shall never be deprived of the jurisdiction given inferior courts created by general law." The court itself may be abolished, but the jurisdiction given inferior courts by general law remains vested as long as the court exists.

[2] With this preliminary basis to reason from, we have only to determine whether the court originally established by the charter of the city of Stockton was endowed with the jurisdiction bringing it within the definition of a municipal court as defined in paragraph 1 of section 8½ of the Constitution, as the second paragraph of that section reads: "In any city or any city and county, when such municipal court has been established, there shall be no other court inferior to the superior court," etc. While the section of the Constitution uses the words "police court" and "municipal court," it is helpful to examine the general meaning of the words "municipal court." In 42 Corpus Juris, 1414, we find the following: "In the judicial organization of several states, courts are established under this name, whose territorial authority is confined to the city or community in which they are created. Such courts shall have a criminal jurisdiction corresponding to that of a police court, and in some cases possess civil jurisdiction in small causes." And in Uridias v. Morrill, 22 Cal. 474, it is said: "The term 'municipal courts' has a legal meaning and signification, and clearly includes Mayors' and Recorders' Courts, as those were well known and universally recognized as being of that character." And as further illustration of the meaning of the words "municipal courts," we refer to the case of Mathie v. McIntosh, 40 Wis. 120, where it is said: "The charter of the city of Wausau provides for a police justice, whose term of office is two years, and who has the power and jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, and exclusive jurisdiction of all cases arising under the city charter and ordinances," etc., was held to be a municipal court. In the case of In re Baxter, 3 Cal. App. 716, 86 P. 998, the District Court of Appeal of the Second District adopts an opinion by Judge Bledsoe, approving the definition of a municipal court, as supported by the cases just cited.

From what we have said it is clear that the general definition of a municipal court includes, as well, a court ordinarily named a police court, as where the words "municipal court" are used in describing the court to which reference is made, or upon which certain jurisdiction is conferred. A careful reading of subdivision 1 of section 8½ of article 11 of the Constitution would lead to the conclusion that the distinction between the two courts there referred to is really one of power and not of name, and if upon the court named as a police court, jurisdiction, civil, criminal, and magisterial is conferred as by law may be conferred upon inferior courts, then and in that case a municipal court, to all intents and purposes, is established within the meaning of the Constitution, irrespective of name or designation.

[3, 4] By the sections of article 21 of the charter of the city of Stockton, establishing a police court, civil and criminal jurisdiction is bestowed upon the court thereby established, to all intents and purposes as fully and completely as though the words "municipal court" had been used instead of "police court," which brings the name of the court so established within the meaning of the words "municipal court" as used in section 8½ of article 11 of the Constitution, and gives it the position, standing, and exclusive existence, within the city of Stockton, contemplated by the section of the Constitution; unless there are some words in the charter, as originally adopted, limiting the full application of the section of the Constitution. The petitioner contends that this limitation appears in the use of the word "concurrently," where section 3 referred to reads: "Said police court shall have jurisdiction concurrently," etc. It is argued that this word renders the section unconstitutional. In support of this contention the petitioner cites the case of Robert v. Police Court, 148 Cal. 131, 82 P. 838, where it was held that that portion of the freeholders' charter of the city of San Francisco reading "concurrent jurisdiction with the Superior Court" was void. In that case an attempt was made to give the police court concurrent jurisdiction with the superior court over certain offenses. The decision in that case, however, is not applicable here, for the simple reason that the concurrent jurisdiction there referred to was an attempt to trench upon the jurisdiction of the superior court. While the decision is based upon cases having to do with section 5 of article 6 of the Constitution, it might also have been based upon section 11 of article 6, where, in speaking of inferior courts, it is further said: "Provided, such powers shall not in any case trench upon the jurisdiction of the several courts of record," except in certain cases there mentioned. The use of the word "concurrent" in the San Francisco charter, just referred to, was not found by the court in the Robert Case to be the vital defect, but it was in the attempt made to trench upon and limit the jurisdiction of the superior court. Where there are no constitutional restrictions limiting the power of the Legislature, concurrent jurisdiction may be conferred upon different courts, and such has been held to be the law in this state.

In the Matter of Yee Kim Mah, 31 Cal.

App. 196, 159 P. 1060, this court, speaking through Mr. Justice Hart, had occasion to examine the meaning of the word "concurrent" as applied to the jurisdiction of inferior courts existing and exercising jurisdiction within the limits of the city of Sacramento. The case is too lengthy to quote therefrom to any extent, but in substance the holding is that the words "concurrent jurisdiction" meant that either one of the inferior courts there referred to might exercise jurisdiction.

To the same effect is the case of Ex parte Dolan, 128 Cal. 460, 60 P. 1094, where the words "concurrent" and "exclusive" were considered in acts conferring jurisdiction. It was there held that jurisdiction existed in the two courts referred to, and the word "exclusive," purporting to give one court sole jurisdiction, should be read out of the charter.

In 15 Cal. Juris. 1130, the power to confer concurrent jurisdiction is thus set forth: "The legislature may confer upon a court jurisdiction concurrent with that of another court, where such act is a legitimate exercise of the power conferred upon the legislature, having regard also to such jurisdiction as may be conferred upon the latter court by the Constitution of the state, so if the jurisdiction conferred upon the court by the Constitution is not exclusive, concurrent jurisdiction may be conferred upon another court. If, however, the jurisdiction so conferred is exclusive, an act of the Legislature conferring the same jurisdiction upon another court will be unconstitutional." The word "concurrent," as defined in 12 C. J. 393, is as follows: "Coincident or contemporaneous; acting in conjunction; running together; running with; cooperative; accompanying, etc.; having the same authority; operating upon the same objects; coextensive, and the like." The word is further described, when referring to jurisdiction, as authorizing different tribunals to deal with the same subject-matter.

In line with the foregoing citations and definitions, the conclusion appears to us unavoidable that the word "concurrently," as it appears in section 3 of article 21 of the Charter of the City of Stockton, was intended to and does give to the court organized by the sections of the charter to which we have referred, equal and like jurisdiction to that which justices' courts could and were entitled to exercise under general law, and, being so entitled to exercise such jurisdiction under the terms of the second paragraph of subdivision 1 of section 8½ of article 11 of the Constitution, no room was left for the creation or the attempted creation of such a court known as the justices' court of the city of Stockton, and the provisions of section 103 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as to cities of the classification of the city of Stockton, become, and at all times since the adoption and ratification of the charter of the city of Stockton were, inoperative and ineffective as a basis for such court. In other words, under the charter and the Constitution the jurisdiction of the court created under the charter was all-absorbing, and there was nothing left for such a court, as was attempted to be created in the case at bar, to act upon. The civil jurisdiction thus conferred upon the court by the city charter is defined by section 106 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Though relied upon by the petitioner, we find nothing in the case of Platnauer v. Board of Supervisors, 65 Cal. App. 666, 225 P. 12, which supports the contention that there is any basis in law to support a court known as the justices' court in and for the city of Stockton. In the Platnauer Case this court, in referring to the charter of the city of Sacramento, pointed out that the charter conferred no civil jurisdiction upon the court established by such charter, and in so doing used these words: "The Sacramento charter makes no provision for a municipal court." This sentence must be read and construed in connection with the failure of the charter of the city of Sacramento to clothe the court created by the charter with the necessary jurisdiction prescribed in the concluding sentence of subdivision 1 of section 8½ of article 11 of the Constitution. In general language, and as shown by the authorities which we have here cited, the court created by the charter of the city of Sacramento was and is a municipal court, but it was not endowed with the jurisdiction which precluded the establishment of another inferior court, to be and operate and exercise judicial functions as and for the same territory and identity known as the city of Sacramento.

The foregoing review, we think, brings this case and all the attendant circumstances clearly within the principles discussed and applied in the case of Robertson v. Langford (Cal. App.) 273 P. 150, and in view of that case, which it is not necessary to consider at length herein, there is no escape from holding that there is no room under the Constitution and the charter of the city of Stockton for such a court as is alleged to exist by the petitioner herein, and that the attempted bringing into existence of such a court by the alleged election of the petitioner as a justice of the peace thereof at the general election held in the year 1926, and the taking of an oath of office, and the assumption of jurisdiction as a justice of the peace of the city of Stockton by the petitioner, had and has no legal basis whatsoever, and therefore the petitioner is not entitled to an order of this court directing the respondent, as the auditor of the county of San Joaquin, to draw a warrant in his favor in the sum of $200, or any other sum, as and for his compensation alleged to have been earned by him as a justice of the peace of the city of Stockton.

The demurrer of the respondent is sustained, and the application of the petitioner for a peremptory writ of mandate is denied.

BLUME v. BERRY et al. (Civ. 5166.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. March 28, 1929.

1. Attachment 🔑350—Judgment against sureties, on bond to pay full value of property released from attachment, could not stand without evidence as to value of property released.

Where bond signed by defendants for release of property taken under attachment did not require signers to pay judgment or any unsatisfied portion thereof, but required that they would pay to plaintiff full value of property released, held that, in absence of any evidence as to value of property released, judgment for plaintiff against said sureties could not stand.

2. Attachment 🔑350—Testimony, that demand was mailed to one of sureties on attachment bond in care of some one else, held inadmissible.

In action against sureties on attachment bond, testimony, that witness mailed demand to one of sureties in care of some one else, held inadmissible over objection on ground of lack of foundation and want of authority, where there was no evidence that said defendant authorized mailing of demand in such manner, that he received demand, or that place to which demand was sent was address of either defendant.

3. Appeal and error 🔑176—Defendants having stipulated for overruling demurrer to complaint, demurrer will not be considered by appellate court.

Where defendants stipulated that demurrer to complaint should be overruled, appellate court will not consider discussion in defendant-appellant's brief respecting demurrer.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

Action by George H. Blume against Jesse Berry, also known as Jesse L. Berry, and another. From an adverse judgment, defendants appeal. Reversed.

L. E. Dadmun, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

James L. Hansen, of Huntington Beach, and John A. Harvey and Milburn G. Harvey, both of Santa Ana, for respondent.

STEPHENS, Justice pro tem. In an action entitled Blume v. Huntington Mutual Oil Company the defendants herein signed a bond for the release of certain property taken under attachment. The plaintiff recovered judgment in that action, and not having collected the full amount thereof from the judgment debtor, he brought suit against these defendants on the bond for the balance. At the conclusion of plaintiff's case defendants submitted a motion for nonsuit, which was denied. The defendants offered no evidence, and the judgment went against them. They appeal, assigning several reasons which they claim support their prayer for a reversal of the judgment.

[1] Inasmuch as we think the judgment must be reversed for an obvious error, we shall notice it first, and then refer but briefly to the other assignments. The error upon which we base the reversal is that the bond does not require that the signers shall pay the judgment or any unsatisfied portion thereof, but that they will "pay to the said plaintiff the full value of the property releases," and there is no evidence whatever of the value of the property released. It seems too plain for argument that, there being no evidence on the very basis of the obligation, the judgment cannot stand.

[2] A Miss Kurrle testified that she mailed a demand to defendant Berry in care of some one else, but there is no evidence that he ever authorized this, or that he ever actually received the demand. This testimony was objected to on the ground of lack of foundation, and that there never was any authority for mailing any notice or demand in care of any one. There was no evidence that the place to which the demand was sent was the address of either of the defendants. We think the objection should have been sustained.

A Mr. French, a deputy sheriff, made an oral demand upon defendant Berry, individually and as president of the Huntington Mutual Oil Company, for the amount of the judgment or the unpaid balance thereof, and for a redelivery of the attached property. The complaint and the findings are to the effect that the demand was for the "reconveyance," instead of the "redelivery," of the attached property. We think the meaning is clear that a redelivery was intended, and that the proof supported both the complaint and the finding.

Defendants contend that the judgment should be reversed, because the judgment entered in the case, out of which the attachment issued, was and is erroneous. This is a collateral attack on the judgment, and cannot be allowed.

Defendants argue that a number of the findings are unsupported by the evidence. We think the evidence does not support finding No. III, for there is no evidence of a leasehold interest in the property attached; nor Nos. IX and XI, for the only evidence supporting the dates contained therein was admitted erroneously; nor finding No. X, for the reason that there is no testimony as to the value of the attached property; nor finding No. XIII, for, from what has just been said.

it is obvious that all of the material allegations of the complaint are not true, and that all of the material allegations of the answer are untrue.

[3] A demurrer to the complaint was interposed in the case by the defendants and overruled by the court. Defendants devote a good part of their brief on appeal to the discussion of this demurrer, but, inasmuch as they stipulated that it should be overruled by the court, no good cause can be subserved by devoting any time thereto. We do think, however, that the complaint should be amended so as to allege the bond obligation more clearly, before a new trial is had.

Judgment reversed.

HENRIQUES v. BANK OF COTTONWOOD.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. March 22, 1929.

1. Sheriffs and constables 🔑129—Attaching officer taking property found in possession of defendant or mortgagor is not liable in damages without notice of third party's claim (Code Civ. Proc. § 689).

Where personal property is found in possession of defendant or in possession of mortgagor, presumption of ownership attaches, and sheriff or attaching officer is entitled to notice of third person's claim before he can be held liable in damages to such third person, under Code Civ. Proc. § 689.

2. Chattel mortgages 🔑292(1)—Chattel mortgagee cannot take up cattle not embraced in mortgage and recover from third party owner expenses of caring for them.

Mortgagee in chattel mortgage cannot take up cattle not embraced in such mortgage and belonging to third party and then recover from such third party expenses of taking up and caring for cattle, where third party notified mortgagee of his ownership and made oral demand for property, since owner of property is entitled to its recovery so long as its identity remains.

Appeal from Superior Court, Shasta County; Walter E. Herzinger, Judge.

Action to recover possession of cattle by Frank Henriques against the Bank of Cottonwood. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Carter & Smith, of Redding, for appellant.

Chenoweth & Leininger, of Redding, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. The plaintiff had judgment in an action brought to recover the possession of 26 head of cattle. From this judgment the defendant appeals.

As stated in respondent's brief: "The only point involved in this appeal is whether a mortgagee in a chattel mortgage may take up cattle not prescribed or embraced in the chattel mortgage and belonging to a third party, and then recover for the expenses of taking up and caring for such cattle, when the third party notifies the mortgagee of his ownership and makes oral demand for the same."

It appears from the record that the appellant, as the holder of a chattel mortgage executed in its favor by one William Henriques, gathered up 26 head of cattle belonging to the plaintiff, which cattle were not described in the chattel mortgage; that these cattle were gathered up on the range where they were running and ranging, and not in the visible possession of anyone; that after the cattle were gathered up, the appellant proceeded to pasture the same, and also to feed the said cattle a quantity of hay. For the expense of gathering up the cattle, pasturing and feeding, the appellant filed a cross-complaint and sought to recover from the plaintiff the sum of $500 on account of the expenses incurred in pasturing and feeding the cattle. The cattle were taken from the range in the late summer and early fall of the year 1924, and were kept by the appellant until on or about the 21st day of March, 1925, when, under a stipulation, the cattle were delivered to the possession of the plaintiff, to remain in his possession subject to the determination of whether the cattle did or did not belong to the plaintiff.

The court found, upon testimony amply sufficient to sustain the same, that during all the times mentioned in this proceeding the plaintiff was the owner of 25 head of cattle (by the term "cattle" we include all ages) branded "J8" on the left hip and marked with a swallow fork and upper bit in the right ear and under half crop in the left ear, and also a certain black cow branded "KK." As the plaintiff had possession of the cattle at the time of the entry of judgment, the judgment really confirmed the plaintiff's title. The findings also show that the cattle covered by the mortgage held by the appellant and executed to it by William Henriques were branded "J8" on the left hip and circle 6 on the right hip, those branded "J8" on left hip being marked with a swallow fork and upper bit in the right ear and under half crop in the left ear, and those branded circle 6 on the right hip being marked with a crop and upper half crop in the right ear and two splits in the left ear; that William Henriques was not the owner of said brand "J8" on the left hip; that on the 23d day of July, 1920, William Henriques made and executed a promissory note to the appellant, and as security therefor executed a chattel mortgage to the appellant, in which chattel mortgage the cattle were described as branded with the brand belonging to William Henriques which we have just mentioned. The court further found that the cattle mentioned and described in the chattel mortgage are not the cattle described in plaintiff's complaint, and that no cattle branded "J8" on the right hip were described or included in said chattel mortgage, and, also, that none of said cattle were given, and none of said cattle were intended to be included, in said chattel mortgage. The court further found that on or about the month of August, 1924, the defendant and appellant wrongfully took possession of the cattle belonging to the plaintiff herein, and wrongfully retained possession thereof until on or about the 21st day of March, 1925; that the cattle belonging to the plaintiff, and so wrongfully taken possession of by the appellant, were ranging and grazing on their usual summer range in western Shasta county, along with cattle which were owned by William R. Henriques.

The court further found that the defendant did not believe, and had no reason to believe, that any of the cattle described in the complaint, and found to belong to the plaintiff, were the property of the mortgagor William Henriques. The court also found that in the latter part of August, 1924, the plaintiff demanded possession of said cattle from the defendant, and that the defendant refused to deliver the same; that plaintiff thereafter, and on other occasions, made demand of defendant and of the receiver who had been appointed to take charge thereof, for the possession of said cattle, but that the defendant and the receiver appointed at its instance refused to deliver the same to the plaintiff until on or about the 21st day of March, 1925. The court further found that it was not true that after said cattle were gathered up the plaintiff sat idly by and permitted the defendant to expend large or any sums of money in gathering, feeding, or keeping said cattle, but that in the latter part of August, 1924, when the plaintiff learned that his cattle had been taken up by the defendant, plaintiff made demand that said cattle be released; that during all the time from August, 1924, until March 21, 1925, the plaintiff had an abundance of range and feed for said cattle; and that the cattle were taken up without the knowledge or consent of the plaintiff, and kept by the defendant against his will and without his consent. The court further found that it was not necessary for the defendant to expend any money in gathering, keeping, caring for and in the preservation of, or for keeping or caring for said cattle. In addition to the oral demand, the record shows that on or about the 18th day of March, 1925, the plaintiff made a written demand for the delivery of possession of said cattle to him, and that thereafter, on the 21st day of March, 1925, under stipulation, the possession of said cattle was delivered to the plaintiff. No damages for the detention of said cattle were allowed the plaintiff, by reason of the fact that the court found that the plaintiff had suffered no damage, and that all the cattle had been restored to him, save and except one cow that had died, apparently not through the neglect of any one connected with this cause.

Upon this appeal no serious contention is made that the finding of ownership of the cattle to be in the plaintiff is not amply sustained by the testimony, and therefore we do not need to lengthen this opinion by a consideration of the question of ownership.

[1, 2] The first point made by appellant is that there was no sufficient demand for the return of the property, made by the plaintiff, and a number of cases are cited wherein it was held that the demand made upon the sheriff was not sufficient to charge him with damages by reason of having taken possession of the property under a writ of attachment or under execution; that all these cases rest upon a peculiar circumstance which is absent from the case at bar. This is illustrated by the holding of the court in the principal case of Killey v. Scannell, 12 Cal. 73. It is there said: "Defendant [sheriff], having seized the property by virtue of his office and process, while in the possession of the party defendant mentioned in the writ, was entitled to notice and demand from plaintiff before he can be held liable to an action for the possession or value." This language is approved in the case of Fuller Desk Co. v. McDade, 113 Cal. 360, 45 P. 694, and likewise in a number of other cases cited in appellant's brief. By noting the italicized words in the quotation above set forth, it will be seen that the demand is necessary when the sheriff has taken possession of property which he finds in the possession of the person named as defendant in the action in which the writ was issued. It does not apply when the sheriff or any other party goes out and takes possession of property not found in the possession of the defendant, and especially when the taking of possession is under the terms of a chattel mortgage and the property is neither described in the chattel mortgage nor found in the possession of the person named as mortgagor therein. Under such circumstances the property is not taken possession of by reason of the property being described in the writ or mortgage or by reason of being found in the possession of the defendant or mortgagor. When personal property is found in the possession of a defendant or in the possession of a mortgagor, the presumption of ownership attaches, and the sheriff or attaching officer is entitled to notice of what is called the third party claim, before he can be held liable in damages. Just as stated in 15 California Jurisprudence, 1061, "A sheriff who has seized property in the possession of a debtor is entitled to notice of a third party's claim, and in the absence thereof, may not be charged with damages for the seizure," etc., it would appear that section 689 of the Code of Civil Procedure was enacted for the benefit of the sheriff or other attaching officer. See notes to that section in Kerr's Cyc. Codes. In the case at bar the sheriff is not a party to the action. No damages are claimed against any attaching officer. No damages were awarded the plaintiff as against the defendant. The question of title only was involved, and while the court has found that demand was made for the return of the property, it is really a moot question in this case, for the simple reason that under the stipulation turning the property over to the plaintiff, the only questions reserved for determination were the title to the property and whether the appellant might recover on its cross-complaint for its alleged expenses incurred in pasturing and feeding the cattle.

The court's finding that the defendant and appellant wrongfully took charge of the property is clearly supported by the testimony, and this brings the case to the determination of the one question stated in respondent's brief which we have hereinbefore quoted, to wit: Can a party wrongfully taking possession of cattle recover for pasturing and feeding the same? The question would seem almost to answer itself, and that no compensation can be recovered under such circumstances. Were it otherwise, the door would be left wide open for any one having pasturage for sale to take up stock, pasture the same, and then recover from the owner of the stock compensation for such wrongful act. The appellant, however, cites a number of cases where personal property has been taken possession of in good faith and improvements made thereon, and the expenses so incurred allowed to be recovered as against the true owner, in actions prosecuted by the true owner for the recovery. The cases cited show that where a defendant has cut and removed timber from land and manufactured it into lumber, the defendant in an action brought for the recovery of the lumber is entitled to be reimbursed for his services, and for money expended in good faith in manufacturing the timber into lumber. The case of Keystone Lumber Co. v. Kolman, 103 Wis. 300, 79 N. W. 224, also reported in 94 Wis. 465, 69 N. W. 165, 34 L. R. A. 821, 59 Am. St. Rep. 905, likewise the case of Acree v. Bufford, 80 Miss. 565, 31 So. 898, illustrate the application of the rule where the defendant was entitled to recover where the property has been changed in form and rendered more valuable. In the case at bar the property has not been changed in form, nor has anything been added thereto. If it has increased in value it is by reason of growth or perhaps change in market value, but not by reason of any necessary act of the appellant. The court found that the acts of the appellant were not necessary for the preservation of the property. Again, the appellant cannot take advantage of the plea of good faith. The record shows, and the court found, that the plaintiff at all times after the taking possession of the property by the appellant, was claiming the same, notified the appellant that he was the owner thereof, and demanded a return of the property. The only excuse that appears in the record is the argument that the oral demand made by the plaintiff was not sufficient in law. If it be admitted that a demand for return of the property was necessary to enable the plaintiff to recover damages, it does not follow, where no damages were awarded the plaintiff, that the appellant is entitled to recover for pasturage and feed, in face of the fact that it at all times knew that the ownership of the property was claimed by the plaintiff. We do not need to discuss the law as argued by the respondent that so long as the identity of the property remains the owner of the property is entitled to its recovery. That principle is too well founded to necessitate citation of authorities.

The record further shows that at the time of the trial of the action a stipulation was entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant that, regardless of the pleadings, the judgment of the court should determine the ownership and right of possession of the property.

Finding no cause for reversal, the judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

HAND et al. v. EL DORADO IRR. DIST. et al. (Civ. 3679).

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. March 22, 1929.

1. Waters and water courses 🔑158(2)—Water rights acquired by contract are governed by agreement solely, and cannot be enlarged, or changed without mutual consent.

Water rights acquired by contract are governed by terms of agreement solely, and may not be enlarged or changed except by mutual consent.

2. Waters and water courses 🔑226—Contract for water for mining purposes during winter months held not to justify mandate to exclude land from irrigation district (Irrigation District Act, § 78).

Landowners' contract for 50 miners' inches of water from sources independent of irrigation district system from December 1 to June 1, to be used for mining purposes only, held not to justify mandate to exclude land from district under Irrigation District Act, § 78 (St. 1897, p. 279), on ground that such supply might first be employed for mining purposes and then stored for irrigation purposes during summer months.

3. Waters and water courses 🔑226—Irrigation District Act does not contemplate exclusion of land from district merely because owner has plan to acquire independent means of irrigation (Irrigation District Act § 78).

Irrigation District Act, § 78 (St. 1897, p. 279), which should be reasonably construed, does not contemplate exclusion of land from irrigation district merely because owner has a plan for acquiring a future independent means of irrigation.

4. Waters and water courses 🔑226—Testimony as to ample water from several springs on land to irrigate from 60 to 80 acres held insufficient to warrant interference with order refusing to exclude land from district (Irrigation District Act § 78).

Landowner's testimony that "quite a head of water," ample to irrigate "from 60 to 80 acres" of land, comes from "several springs" thereon, held too indefinite as to quantity of water accessible or location of land supplied therewith to warrant interference by writ of mandate with order of irrigation district board of directors refusing to exclude 517 acres of land from district, under Irrigation District Act, § 78 (St. 1897, p. 279).

5. Waters and water courses 🔑226—Decision, affirming judgment on findings of capacity of irrigation ditch and landowner's right to half of water therein, held not to warrant interference with order refusing to exclude land from district (Irrigation District Act, § 78).

Supreme Court decision, affirming judgment based on findings that capacity of ditch on certain land was 63 inches of water "at the present time," without indicating season referred to, and that owner was entitled to divert and use half of such quantity, held not to justify interference with irrigation district's board's discretion in refusing to exclude land from district under Irrigation District Act, § 78 (St. 1897, p. 279), in view of preliminary recitation of fact that ditch carried 12 inches of water during irrigation season.

6. Waters and water courses 🔑226—Owner, seeking to exclude land from irrigation district, must prove that it will not be benefited or has other ample water supply available (Irrigation District Act, § 78).

Burden is on owner, seeking to exclude land from irrigation district under Irrigation District Act, § 78 (St. 1897, p. 279), to show by fair preponderance of evidence that it will not be benefited by proposed system or that it has other ample water supply available.

7. Waters and water courses 🔑226—Whether land will be benefited by irrigation system is essentially fact question (Irrigation District Act, § 78).

Question whether portion of land, sought to be excluded from irrigation district under Irrigation District Act, § 78 (St. 1897, p. 279), will be benefited by proposed irrigation system, is essentially one of fact.

8. Waters and water courses 🔑226—Evidence that portion of tract lies above irrigation district's highest available water supply held not to warrant mandate to exclude it from district (Irrigation District Act, § 78).

Evidence that 287 acres of 517-acre tract, sought to be excluded from irrigation district under Irrigation District Act, § 78 (St. 1897, p. 279), lies above district's highest available water supply, held not to warrant writ of mandate requiring exclusion thereof, in absence of showing as to whether district can or proposes to construct other ditches, reservoirs, or pumping systems to irrigate such portion, or any description whereby board or court may segregate such portion from entire tract.

9. Waters and water courses 🔑226—Entire tract, substantial portion of which is properly included in irrigation district, must be included, unless portion not benefited can be reasonably defined and segregated (Irrigation District Act, § 78).

If substantial portion of tract, sought to be excluded from irrigation district under Irrigation District Act, § 78 (St. 1897, p. 279), is properly included therein, entire tract must be included, unless portion not benefited can be reasonably defined and segregated from rest of tract.

10. Waters and water courses 🔑226—Irrigation district board's functions respecting exclusion of land from district are quasi judicial (Irrigation District Act, § 78).

Legislature having delegated to irrigation district board of directors power to hear and determine merits of application by landowners within district to exclude certain property therefrom by Irrigation District Act, § 78 (St. 1897, p. 279), inquiry is local to district, and board's functions are quasi judicial.

11. Mandamus ⚷73(1)—Reasonable exercise of irrigation district's board's discretion to exclude land from district will not be interfered with by mandate, unless conclusions are unsupported by substantial evidence or discretion was abused (Irrigation District Act, § 78).

A reasonable exercise of discretion, conferred on irrigation district board of directors by Irrigation District Act, § 78 (St. 1897, p. 279), to hear and determine application for exclusion of land from district, will not be interfered with by writ of mandate, except in absence of substantial evidence to support its conclusions or for abuse of such discretion.

Appeal from Superior Court, El Dorado County; George H. Thompson, Judge.

Petition by Charles E. Hand and another for a writ of mandate to the El Dorado Irrigation District and the trustees thereof. From a judgment denying the petition, petitioners appeal. Affirmed.

Charles L. Gilmore, of Sacramento, for appellants.

Thomas Maul, of Placerville, for respondents.

THOMPSON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of the superior court of El Dorado county denying a petition for a writ of mandate to require the exclusion of 517 acres of land from the El Dorado irrigation district on the ground that the tract would not be benefited by the proposed district irrigation system for the reason that the petitioners already had access to an adequate independent supply of water for all useful and necessary irrigation purposes.

April 7, 1925, the El Dorado irrigation district was duly organized, including within its territory petitioners' 517-acre tract of land. Subsequently the petitioners filed with the board of directors of said district their application to exclude this entire tract from the district on the grounds above mentioned. This petition was duly noticed, heard, and denied. From the order of the board of directors refusing to exclude this tract of land from the irrigation district, the petitioners sued out a writ of mandate in the superior court. Upon hearing in that court, the proceedings which were taken before the board were introduced in evidence and additional testimony was adduced. The superior court denied the writ, adopted findings, and entered judgment against the petitioners. From this judgment an appeal was taken.

The appellants assert that the evidence taken before both the board and the superior court conclusively establishes the fact that they previously had access to an ample supply of water from sources other than those controlled by the proposed system of the irrigation district for all useful and necessary purposes, and that their lands would not be benefited by being included within the district, and should therefore have been excluded under the provisions of section 78 of the California Irrigation District Act of 1897, p. 254, and subsequent amendments thereto; that in any event, it appeared without conflict that 287 acres of that tract were partly timber land and was all situated above the highest available water supply of said district and could in no way receive a benefit from said irrigation system; and that this portion of the tract at least should have been excluded from the district. Section 78 of the California Irrigation Act provides, in part: "If, upon the hearing of any such petition, * * * or if the evidence fail to sustain said petition, or if the board deem it not for the best interest of the district that the lands, or some portion thereof, mentioned in the petition, should be excluded from the district, the board shall order that said petition be denied as to such lands; but if the said board deem it for the best interests of the district that the lands mentioned in the petition, or some portion thereof, be excluded from the district, * * * then it shall be the duty of the board to, * * * make an order that the lands mentioned and described in the petition, or some defined portion thereof, be excluded from said district; provided, that [the lands so excluded must consist of property] * * * which cannot be irrigated from, or which are not susceptible to, * * * irrigation * * * from a common source, or by the same system of works with the other lands of said district, or from the source selected, chosen, or provided, or the system adopted for the irrigation of the lands in said district, or which are already irrigated, or entitled to be irrigated, from another source or by another system of irrigation works."

The independent sources of water supply which the petitioners contend they possess, and which they assert were ample to irrigate their 517-acre tract of land, consists of: (1) Fifty miners' inches of water per day acquired by contract from the El Dorado Deep Gravel Mining Company accessible "from the first day of December to the first day of June each and every year * * * to be used * * * for mining purposes only; * * * When said party of the second part * * * has no use for said water for said mining purposes upon said lands, the same shall belong to said party of the first part and flow down in its canal;" (2) eight additional miners' inches of water derived from the same source, to be used the year round for any and all purposes; (3) an uncertain quantity of water to which appellants claim title as determined on appeal from a judgment in their favor (Hand v. Cleese, 202 Cal. 36, 258 P. 1090); and, (4) an indefinite amount of water which flows from certain springs situated on the premises in question.

[1-3] The respondent concedes that appellants have access to eight miners' inches of water, independent of the irrigation district system, subject to use for any purpose, at all times, on any portion of the premises. But the evidence shows this quantity of water was adequate to irrigate not more than 25 acres of land. Mr. Wildman testified that it was sufficient to irrigate only 15 acres of land. The respondents also concede that appellants have access to 50 additional miners' inches of water, from sources independent of the irrigation district system, from December 1st to June 1st of each year, to be used for mining purposes only. The contract for this quantity of water clearly so limits the use of this source of supply. It would appear, however, that this last-mentioned water supply would be of litle benefit to appellants for agricultural purposes for the reason that its use was limited strictly to mining purposes. Even for this purpose its use was restricted to the winter and spring months, during which irrigation was unnecessary. Mr. Wildman testified that: "Irrigation season is from the middle of May to the middle of September." Water rights which are acquired by contract are governed by the terms of the agreement solely, and may not be enlarged or changed except by mutual consent. 26 Cal. Jur. 238, § 444; Southside Imp. Co. v. Burson, 147 Cal. 401, 81 P. 1107. Appellant's contention that this 50-inch supply of water might first be employed for mining purposes and then stored for use for irrigation during the summer months is unreasonable. There is no evidence of the existence or prospect of any mining enterprise connected with said premises for which they could utilize this water. There is no evidence of the existence of reservoirs or apparatus suitable for storing water or of an intention on the part of appellants to construct such receptacles. The possibility of such future use is contrary to the clear meaning of the contract and is highly speculative and remote. Section 78 of the California Irrigation District Act does not contemplate the exclusion of land merely because the owner may have a plan for acquiring a future independent means of irrigation. Lands may be excluded "which are already irrigated, or [now] entitled to be irrigated, from another source." The act should, of course, have a reasonable construction. If the owner possessed water rights which he was entitled to resort to for irrigation purposes, and the evidence showed that he proposed to construct a storage plant or other apparatus within a reasonable period of time with which to utilize the water, that might be sufficient evidence upon which to support an order of the board excluding the lands. But the record in the present case with respect to the appellants' right to the use of the 50-inch supply of water for mining purposes certainly will not justify an interference by mandate with the board's discretion in refusing to exclude the land.

[4] While there is some testimony of the existence of springs from which some land may be irrigated, there is no satisfactory evidence of either the quantity of water which may be so supplied, or the particular locality or area of the land which the appellants claim these springs will irrigate. Mr. Hand testified: "There are several springs * * * quite a head of water comes out down below the barn on the frontage. * * * We have always figured that there is ample water there to irrigate the property in the front. * * * I don't know the exact acreage. It runs from 60 to 80 acres. * * * (These springs) are located in several places on the land." This is too indefinite as to the quantity of water which is accessible or the location of the land so claimed to have been supplied with water to warrant an interference with the order of the board.

[5] The appellants strongly rely upon the case of Hand v. Cleese, 202 Cal. 36, 258 P. 1090, affirming a judgment in their favor by the terms of which they claim title to 31½ miner's inches of water flowing from "Johnson's North Canyon" through a ditch upon their lands. Assuming it be a fact, without deciding the question, that the decision in the case of Hand v. Cleese is controlling in this proceeding, it still leaves in grave doubt the question as to the quantity of water secured to these appellants thereby. In what appears to be a recital of the findings of the trial court, which may be assumed to have been approved, since the judgment was affirmed, it is said: "The capacity of said ditch as constructed by the said Johnson was in excess of 100 inches of water measured under a four-inch pressure. The capacity of said ditch at the present time is 63 inches of water measured as aforesaid." Obviously, a ditch may have a capacity or capability of holding 63 or 100 inches of water and still be empty. It will be observed that the trial court finally found that "the capacity of said ditch at the present time is 63 inches of water." There is no way of determining what season "the present time" referred to. It may have been the flood time of winter, or it may have been the period of time during the drought of summer. All that we find regarding the actual quantity of water to be found in this ditch is in the preliminary recitation of facts, wherein it is said: "Said ditch * * * now used to convey a portion of the waters flowing in said Johnson's North Canyon, said canyon (not the ditch) * * * having therein and flowing at the head of said ditch a stream of natural water varying in quantity according to the season of the year from 12 inches, miner's measurement, during the summer and fall to a larger quantity at other seasons of the year." It will thus appear that the maximum quantity which this ditch actually carried in the irrigation season was 12 inches of water. Nowhere in the court's findings or in the opinion of the court is a definite quantity of water found to have actually existed in this "Johnson's ditch." However, the court does find that the plaintiff in that case, who was one of the appellants in this case, is entitled to "divert and use" one-half of 63 inches of water "flowing therein at the head or intake of said Johnson's ditch." This language hardly furnishes satisfactory evidence that the ditch actually contained 31½ inches of water during the irrigation season, to which the appellants were entitled to resort. Even though it might warrant this inference, it cannot be said that this amount of water, plus the additional 8 inches heretofore referred to, is ample upon which this court may be warranted in interfering with the discretion of the board in refusing to exclude the entire tract of land.

[6-9] Finally, the appellants contend that even though the board may have been justified in including within the district a portion of the irrigable land of this tract, the undisputed evidence discloses the fact that more than one-half of the 517-acre tract, or 287 acres thereof, is nonirrigable land, for the reason that it lies above the highest available water supply of the irrigation district. In seeking to exclude land from an irrigation district, the burden is upon the petitioner to show by a fair preponderance of the evidence that his land will not be benefited by the proposed irrigation system, or that it has other ample water supply which is available. The question as to whether a portion of the land will be benefited by an irrigation system is essentially one of fact. Fallbrook Irrigation Dist. v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112, 17 S. Ct. 56, 41 L. E. 369. In the present case there is no showing as to whether the irrigation district is able, or whether it proposes, to construct other ditches, reservoirs, or a pumping system by means of which this upper portion of the tract may be irrigated. But assuming that the 287 acres are not susceptible of irrigation, neither the petition nor the evidence furnishes any description or method by which a court is able to segregate or distinguish this upper portion from the entire tract. It is apparent that if the upper 287 acres of land is not in fact benefited by the irrigation district and can reasonably be segregated from the tract sought to be excluded, in justice this should be done. But the record furnishes no description by which the board or a court can do this. Section 78 of the California Irrigation Act specifically provides that upon a proper showing the board may exclude "the lands, or some portion thereof mentioned in the petition." Again, it is provided in that section that the board under such circumstances "shall [exclude] the lands mentioned and described in the petition, or some defined portion thereof." This language infers, and reason prompts the conclusion, that if a substantial proportion of the tract sought to be excluded is properly included in the district, the entire tract must be included unless the portion which is not benefited can be reasonably defined and segregated from the tract. Shull v. Merced Irrigation District (Cal. App.) 265 P. 965, determines this very question adversely to the appellants in this case.

[10, 11] Where the Legislature has delegated to a board of directors of an irrigation district the power to hear and determine the merits of an application on the part of landowners within the district to exclude certain property, the inquiry is in its nature local to the district, and the functions of the board in such matters are quasi judicial. Imperial Water Co. v. Supervisors, 162 Cal. 17, 120 P. 780; Suckow v. Alderson, 182 Cal. 247, 250, 187 P. 965. A reasonable exercise of the discretion which is conferred upon the board except in an absence of substantial evidence to support its conclusions, or for an abuse of such discretion, will not be interfered with by mandate. 16 Cal. Jur. 814, § 31; 26 Cal. Jur. 360, § 573; Harelson v. South San Joaquin Irr. Dist., 20 Cal. App. 324, 334, 128 P. 1010; Inglin v. Hoppin, 156 Cal. 483, 105 P. 582. In Shull v. Merced Irr. Dist., supra, it is said: "The plaintiff has apparently taken the position that this court has the same right to pass upon the evidence introduced before the board of directors * * * as the law vests in the board. * * * The law is well established that a writ of mandate cannot be made to serve the purpose of a writ of error. In this proceeding we have only to consider the questions of law, not questions of fact." 16 Cal. Jur. 822, § 35.

In 26 Cal. Jur. 360 it is said: "The inclusion of lands within an irrigation district constitutes a determination by the board of supervisors that such lands will be benefited by the proposed irrigation. Since the question of benefits is one of fact, a finding with reference thereto, if supported by competent evidence, is conclusive, though erroneous. * * * However, if a finding is based upon no evidence, or is contrary to all the evidence before the board, it is subject to review."

In the present case, since it cannot be said as a matter of law that the appellants' land is not benefited by the irrigation system, and since the evidence as to whether it was previously adequately supplied with water is conflicting as to a part of the tract, and as to the remainder there is no description which will enable this court to segregate it with any degree of accuracy, it becomes necessary to affirm the judgment.

The judgment is, accordingly, affirmed.

GREENE v. RIORDAN. (Civ. 6598.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. March 11, 1929.

Rehearing Denied April 10, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 9, 1929.

1. Vendor and purchaser 🔑54—Vendor's failure to deposit title to certain land to obligate purchaser to reconvey portion of land conveyed vested title thereto in purchaser.

Where vendor agreed to execute deed concurrently with agreement to sell land and to deliver it when purchaser made down payment, and agreement also provided that, if vendor furnished deed to certain parcel of land within 30 days, purchaser was to reconvey all of certain portion of land purchased, when vendor failed to deposit deed, title in property originally conveyed vested in purchaser, so that judgment quieting purchaser's title was not erroneous.

2. Mortgages 🔑32(1)—Agreement, that, if vendor furnished title to certain parcel, purchaser would reconvey certain land, and, if vendor could not furnish title, purchaser could elect not to consummate agreement, held deed.

Where purchaser agreed to pay balance of purchase price within 60 days, and at time he actually offered to pay, if vendor was unable to convey clear title, purchaser had option of refusing to consummate agreement, of demanding return of down payment, and of suing for damages, and vendor by agreement, and not by deed, mortgaged interest in lots conveyed to secure repayment of down payment, court did not err in declaring purported deed a deed and not a mortgage, since, because purchaser never exercised option, agreement did not become effective as mortgage.

3. Vendor and purchaser 🔑22—Deed, describing property by metes and bounds and reference to recorded map, held not void, because sale agreement referred to unrecorded map (St. 1907, p. 290).

Deed, describing property fully by metes and bounds, as well as by reference to a recorded map, held not void, because agreement of sale was alleged to violate a statute of March 15, 1907 (St. 1907, p. 290), by its reference to an unrecorded map.

4. Appeal and error 🔑173(6)—That agreement to sell land was void cannot be first asserted on appeal.

It cannot be asserted on appeal to District Court of Appeal that agreement to sell land was void, where the point was not raised at trial of cause.

5. Vendor and purchaser 🔑44—Vendor, contending agreement of sale was void, because referring to unrecorded map, must show nonrecordation.

Vendor, suing to have an instrument in form a deed declared a mortgage, and for alleged balance due under contract of sale of real property, held to have burden of showing, as contended by him, that map referred to in agreement of sale was unrecorded, where he contended agreement was therefore void.

6. Vendor and purchaser 🔑79—Obligation of purchaser, agreeing to reconvey certain land, if vendor should deposit clear title to certain property, held limited to reconveyance.

Where purchaser of land agreed that, if vendor should convey him clear title to certain parcel of land, he would reconvey to vendor certain of the land conveyed, purchaser's obligation was limited to reconveyance upon deposit of title, and he was not obligated to pay purchase price on the condition of deposit.

7. Action 🔑6—Court, fully adjudicating controversies adversely to vendor, in suit to declare deed a mortgage, performed full duty (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1060–1062).

Where controversies between parties to action were as to whether deed should be construed as a mortgage, and whether vendor was entitled to secure balance of purchase price from grantee, and both controversies were fully adjudicated adversely to plaintiff vendor, court was required to do no more, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1061, providing that court may refuse to exercise powers granted it in any case, under chapter containing section referred to, and sections 1060 and 1062, relating to authority of one to ask declaratory relief, where it is unnecessary under circumstances.

8. Appeal and error 🔑839(1)—Appellate court, in concluding parties to suit to declare deed a mortgage were in positions of vendor failing to tender deed and purchaser failing to timely pay price, could properly do no more.

District Court of Appeal, having concluded that parties to vendor's suit, to have deed declared a mortgage and to recover balance of money named as purchase price, were in same position as parties to ordinary contract of sale, where purchaser fails to tender balance of purchase price within time provided, and where seller fails to tender deed conveying clear title, did all it properly can do in determining rights of parties.

9. Vendor and purchaser 🔑78—Stipulation, that time is essence, is applicable only to purchaser's agreement to pay, for benefit of vendor who may rescind or enforce contract.

Stipulation in contract, that time be made essence of contract, is applicable only to agreement of purchaser to pay purchase money, and is intended for benefit of vendor alone, who may elect either to rescind or enforce contract.

10. Vendor and purchaser 🔑107—Purchaser cannot work rescission of contract, of which time is essence, by merely his default to pay.

Where it is stipulated that time be made essence of contract, purchaser cannot work a rescission by mere default on his part in payment of purchase money; stipulation being for benefit of vendor alone who may elect to rescind or enforce contract.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

★Rehearing denied. Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

Action by George W. Greene against John H. Riordan. Judgment adverse to plaintiff, and he appeals. Affirmed, with findings corrected as ordered.

Goldman, Nye & Spicer, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Louis V. Crowley, and Thomas J. Riordan, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

LUCAS, Justice pro tem. In this case there is pending before the court a motion to affirm the judgment of the lower court by reason of appellant's alleged failure in his duty to print in his brief or in the supplement thereto all portions of the record necessary to be considered by this court. The motion is denied, and the appeal will be heard on its merits.

Plaintiff, George W. Greene, sued on three counts: First, to have an instrument, in form a grant deed, declared a mortgage; second, for a judgment for $33,000, alleged balance due under a contract of sale of real property, and, third, for a judgment declaratory of the respective rights and duties of the parties under said contract. By way of cross-complaint, defendant, John H. Riordan, sought to quiet title to the lands described in plaintiff's first cause of action. In its judgment the trial court adjudged the instrument alleged to be a mortgage to be in fact a deed, quieted title of defendant to the lands described in said deed, and decreed that plaintiff take nothing by his action, but otherwise made no declaration of the rights of the parties.

From this judgment plaintiff appeals on four grounds, contending respectively that the judgment quieting Riordan's title is erroneous, that the finding and judgment that the deed is not a mortgage is erroneous, that the agreement of sale was void, and that the court erred in determining the rights of the parties thereunder. At the trial considerable oral evidence was received tending to show the intent of the parties, but, since such evidence was somewhat conflicting and the first three points raised by appellant can be disposed of by analyzing the rather involved agreement, together with the acts of the parties subsequent to its execution, such analysis will be given first consideration.

By agreement dated September 4, 1925, and signed shortly before noon on September 5, 1925, the said Greene agreed to sell, and the said Riordan agreed to buy, that portion of five San Francisco city blocks (1259 to 1263, both inclusive) lying north of a red line shown on a diagram attached to the agreement. The purchase price was $55,000, payable by Riordan as follows: $22,000 to the City Title Insurance Company for the account of Greene on or before September 5, 1925, at 12 o'clock noon; the balance of $33,000 to said title company for the account of Greene on or before 60 days after date of the agreement. The title company was forthwith (i. e., upon receipt of the $22,000) to pay the same to one Lizzie Lobree upon receipt from her of a deed reconveying (to Greene) all of blocks 1259 and 1260, excepting a portion or "strip" of block 1259 owned by one Carl Larsen.

Greene agreed to convey clear title to all of said property, and, if unable to do so, Riordan, when he was ready and offered to pay the balance of the purchase price, could elect not to consummate the agreement. In such event Greene promised to repay to Riordan the sum of $22,000, with interest from September 5, 1925, at the rate of 1 per cent. per month. To secure such repayment by Greene "upon such event," the agreement provided that Greene "hereby mortgages" (to Riordan) "all his interest in all of said blocks 1259 to 1263, both inclusive." Riordan retained any right which he might have for damages for Greene's failure to perform.

Greene further agreed that, should he fail to deposit with said title insurance company on or before September 5, 1925, at 11:30 a. m., a deed conveying to him clear title to the strip of land owned by said Carl Larsen in block 1259, he would grant to Riordan all of blocks 1259 and 1260, excepting the Larsen strip in block 1259, in consideration of the above-mentioned sum of $22,000 having been paid by Riordan at the time and in the manner above specified.

Greene also agreed to execute concurrently with this agreement a deed conveying said property (all of blocks 1259 and 1260, excepting the Larsen strip in 1259) to Riordan, and to deposit the same with said title insurance company, with instructions to record the same upon Riordan's request. It is to be noted that this includes not only that portion of blocks 1259 and 1260 lying north of the red line shown on the diagram above referred to, but that portion lying south of said red line as well.

In the event that Greene deposited with said title company on or before 30 days from date, i. e., 30 days from September 4, 1925, a deed conveying to him (Greene) clear title to all of the Larsen strip in block 1259, together with a deed conveying to Riordan clear title to all of the portion of blocks 1259 to 1263, both inclusive, lying north of the above-mentioned red line, then and in that event Riordan was to reconvey to Greene all of blocks 1259 and 1260 lying south of said red line. Time was made of the essence of the agreement.

Comparing the promises of the parties to do, as shown by the above agreement, with what they actually did, as shown by the evidence, we find:

1. Riordan promised to pay $22,000 to the title company for Greene's account on or before 12 o'clock noon on September 5, 1925. He kept his promise, and paid the money.

The title company followed instructions, paid this money to Lizzie Lobree and received from her the proper deed of reconveyance.

2. Greene agreed to execute concurrently with the agreement a deed conveying to Riordan all of blocks 1259 and 1260, excepting the Larsen strip, and to deposit said deed with the title company. He kept his promise by executing and so depositing such instrument. In accordance with their instructions, the title company, at Riordan's request, placed the deed of record.

3. Greene promised that, should he fail to deposit with the title company on or before September 5, 1925, at 11:30 a. m., a deed giving him title to the Larsen strip, he would grant to Riordan all of blocks 1259 and 1260, excepting said strip, in consideration of Riordan's above-mentioned payment of $22,000. He failed so to deposit the deed to the Larsen strip. In fact, the record shows that at the time he signed the agreement he knew he would be unable to do so. He now seeks to avoid his promise to grant Riordan blocks 1259 and 1260 in consideration of the said $22,000 payment, and to avoid the effect of the deed he executed in accordance with such promise, by claiming the deed executed and delivered, as stated in paragraph 2 above, to be a mortgage.

4. Riordan promised to reconvey to Greene all of blocks 1259 and 1260 lying south of the red line, if Greene should, within 30 days from September 4, 1925, deposit with the title company a deed to the Larsen strip, together with a deed conveying to Riordan all of blocks 1259 to 1263 lying north of the red line. Greene did not deposit with the title company either of these conveyances within the 30-day period. Riordan accordingly did not execute his deed of reconveyance. His promise to do so being conditional and the conditions being unfulfilled by Greene, his failure so to do does not constitute a broken promise on Riordan's part.

5. Riordan promised to pay the balance of the purchase price of that portion of the five blocks lying north of the red line, to wit, $33,000 on or before 60 days after September 4, 1925. He failed to do so.

6. Greene promised to convey to Riordan clear title to all of the five lots lying north of the red line at the time Riordan was ready and offered to pay the balance of the purchase price. Riordan was never ready, and never offered to pay said balance. Greene neither tendered nor deposited at any time a deed to the northerly part of said blocks, but did on the last day of the 60-day period deposit with the title company a deed to the Larsen strip, with instructions that it be delivered on conditions entirely foreign to anything contained in the original agreement. This deed he withdrew the following day.

[1] With these facts in mind the court is of the opinion that the judgment quieting Riordan's title to blocks 1259 and 1260 was not erroneous. The effect of the agreement and the execution and delivery of the concurrent deed, in consideration of the down payment of $22,000, was to vest the title to these two blocks in Riordan on September 5, 1925, when Greene failed to deposit a deed to the Larsen strip. The title having vested, Greene lost all rights therein other than the right to a reconveyance of the southerly portion of said blocks in the event a deed to the Larsen strip and a deed to the northerly portion of the five blocks were deposited by him within 30 days. The obligation of Riordan to reconvey was extinguished by Greene's failure to deposit said deeds within the 30-day period, and he was therefore entitled to quiet his title against Greene.

Nor was the position of the parties any different with respect to these two blocks during the time intervening between the expiration of the 30-day period and the end of the 60-day period given Riordan in which to pay the balance of the purchase price of the northerly portion of all five blocks. During such intervening time Riordan held his completed title to blocks 1259 and 1260, with the additional right to terminate the whole contract, should Greene's title fail at the time the balance of the purchase price was tendered. This was a privilege given exclusively to Riordan, but one which he was never able to exercise because of his failure to make such tender.

[2] We are also of the opinion that the trial court did not err in its finding and judgment that the purported deed was in fact a deed and not a mortgage. As pointed out above, Riordan promised to pay the balance of the purchase price of the northerly portion of the five blocks within 60 days. At the time he was ready and actually offered to pay such balance, should he find Greene unable to convey a clear title, he had the option of refusing to consummate the agreement, of demanding the return of his $22,000 with interest, and of suing Greene for damages. By the agreement (not by the deed) Greene mortgaged all of his interest in the five blocks (not merely blocks 1259 and 1260) to secure the repayment of the $22,000 and interest, in the event Riordan chose to exercise his option.

As to blocks 1259 and 1260, Greene had nothing to mortgage, for, concurrently with the execution of the agreement to mortgage the five blocks, he had executed and delivered a deed to blocks 1259 and 1260, the effect of which, as seen above, was to vest the fee thereto in Riordan, subject only to Greene's right (upon certain conditions which he failed to fulfill) to a reconveyance of the southerly portion thereof within the 30-day period. As to the remaining three blocks, the mortgage feature of the agreement was to become effective only in the event of Riordan exercising his option to terminate the contract and demanding the return of his money upon Greene's failure or inability to perform. Since Riordan never offered to pay, and never exercised his option to terminate, the agreement never became effective as a mortgage.

Appellant points out certain facts and circumstances in addition to the agreement itself upon which he relies as proof that the deed is a mortgage, namely, retention of possession of the property by Greene; payment of taxes by Greene; the disparity between the amount paid for blocks 1259 and 1260 and the value thereof (although the testimony as to value is conflicting); Greene's bad financial condition; and the fact that the $22,000 paid by Riordan went wholly to discharge an existing incumbrance. Such weight as might be given this testimony is more than offset by the testimony of Riordan and that of Greene's own attorneys (who advised him at all times during the negotiations preliminary to and at the time of the execution of the agreement) that the deed was never intended to be a mortgage.

[3-5] In the argument urged in support of the third ground of appeal, namely, that the agreement of sale was void, we find no merit. It is contended that the agreement was violative of the statute of March 15, 1907 (St. 1907, p. 290), in that the agreement of sale was made by reference to an unrecorded map. The deed to blocks 1259 and 1260, however, could not be void for this reason, because this deed describes the property fully by metes and bounds as well as by reference to a recorded map. Neither can it be successfully contended that the agreement for the sale of the balance of the property is void, because the point was not raised at the trial of the cause, and, even if applicable to a case of this kind where the purchaser himself prepared the agreement, the record is silent as to whether or not the map and diagram in question was actually recorded. The burden of showing nonrecordation is upon the plaintiff and appellant.

[6] In the final ground of appeal urged by appellant, it is contended that the court erred in determining the respective rights and duties of the parties under the agreement of sale and deed, first, by making erroneous findings, and, second, by failing to find at all on certain points.

As to alleged erroneous findings, appellant cites as error that portion of finding 9, wherein the court found that Riordan agreed to pay $55,000, on condition that Greene deposit with the title company within 30 days a deed to the Larsen strip, together with a deed to the lands agreed to be purchased. Appellant's contention in this regard the court believes to be sound. Riordan's obligation, upon Greene depositing with the title company within the 30-day period a deed to the Larsen strip, together with a deed to all of blocks 1259 to 1263 lying north of the red line, was limited to a reconveyance by him to Greene of all of blocks 1259 and 1260 lying south of the red line. Greene's failure to so deposit said deeds within the 30-day period relieved Riordan of his obligation to reconvey said southerly portion of said two blocks, but did not, in the opinion of the court, relieve Riordan of his obligation to pay the balance of the purchase price for the northerly portion of the five blocks upon receipt of a clear title thereto.

In conformity with this opinion it is ordered that all of finding 9, beginning with line 19 on page 36 of the filed transcript on appeal down to and including the word "and" in line 10 on page 37 thereof be, and the same hereby is, stricken from the record, and that after the word "performed" in line 16, page 37 of said transcript, there be inserted the words "except that it is true that defendant did not pay to plaintiff the sum of $33,000."

Likewise, in accordance with the views herein expressed, it is ordered that there be stricken from finding 10 all of lines 22, 23, 24, and line 25 ending with the figures "1259," as the same appear on page 38 of said filed transcript.

It is further ordered that the words "and the defendant would" be stricken from line 20, page 39 of said transcript, and that there be inserted in lieu thereof a period and the words "Defendant agreed."

It is further ordered that the words "and without any further or other obligation on the defendant in the premises" be stricken from lines 21 and 22 on page 40 of said transcript; and there is hereby ordered inserted in finding 8, after the word "defendant" in line 25, page 35 of said transcript, the following words: "Subject only to the right of a reconveyance of that portion of said blocks 1259 and 1260 lying south of the said red line upon plaintiff depositing within thirty days from September 4, 1925, with the said title company, a deed to the said Larsen strip, together with a deed conveying to defendant all of blocks 1259 to 1263, both inclusive, lying north of said red line."

[7] As to plaintiff's assertion, that the trial court failed to find at all upon certain points, it is contended that the court should have construed the agreement and deed, and should have determined whether or not the agreement was still subsisting and subject to performance; whether either appellant or respondent was in default; and what were the further rights and obligations of the parties at the time of the trial. Appellant's contention in this regard the court believes to be unsound.

The authority for asking for declaratory relief is to be found in sections 1060, 1061 and 1062 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which follow:

1060: "Any person interested under a deed, will or other written instrument, or under a contract, or who desires a declaration of his rights or duties with respect to another, or in respect to, in, over or upon property, * * * may in cases of actual controversy relating to the legal rights and duties of the respective parties, bring an action in the superior court for a declaration of his rights and duties in the premises, including a determination of any question of construction or validity arising under such instrument or contract. He may ask for a declaration of rights or duties, either alone or with other relief; and the court may make a binding declaration of such rights or duties, whether or not further relief is or could be claimed at the time. The declaration may be either affirmative or negative in form and effect, and such declaration shall have the force of a final judgment. Such declaration may be had before there has been any breach of the obligation in respect to which said declaration is sought."

1061: "The court may refuse to exercise the power granted by this chapter in any case where its declaration or determination is not necessary or proper at the time under all the circumstances."

The main controversy between the parties to the contract of September 4, 1925, and the deed of September 5, 1925, was as to whether or not the deed to blocks 1259 and 1260 should be construed as a mortgage. This question was fully adjudicated by the trial court and determined adversely to appellant.

The next controversy between the parties was as to whether or not Greene was entitled to secure the sum of $33,000 from Riordan. This question was likewise fully adjudicated by the trial court, and determined adversely to appellant.

Having made such adjudication, and in so doing having placed a construction upon and determined the validity of the written instruments in question for the guidance of the parties, the trial court was, under section 1061, Code of Civil Procedure, above quoted, required to do no more. This court agrees with the trial court in its construction of the instrument of September 5, 1925, by holding it to be a deed rather than a mortgage, and, while differing to some extent from the trial court in its construction, has fully construed the agreement of sale of September 4, 1925.

[8] If the construction placed by this court upon said agreement of sale is, as we believe it to be, correct, so far as this court can determine from the record the parties thereto are in no different position from that occupied by parties to an ordinary contract of sale in which time is made of the essence, where the purchaser fails to tender the balance of the purchase price within the limit of time provided by the agreement, and where the seller fails at all times to tender a deed conveying clear title to the lands under contract.

Having so concluded, this court is of the opinion that it has done all that it properly can do in determining the rights and duties of the parties.

[9, 10] It would appear from an examination of the record, although but little attention was given to the subject of declaratory relief at the trial of the cause, that the agreement of sale was in effect, at least to some extent, at the time of trial. The stipulation in a contract, that time be made of the essence of the contract, has been held to be applicable only to the agreement on the part of the purchaser to pay the purchase money, and is intended for the benefit of the vendor alone, who may elect either to rescind or enforce the contract, and that the purchaser cannot work a rescission by mere default on his part in payment of the purchase money. See Newton v. Hull, 90 Cal. 487, 27 P. 429.

Whether or not the agreement of sale is still effective for any purpose depends largely upon the solution of the question as to whether or not the provision therein making time of the essence has been waived by the acts of the parties. The acts of the parties subsequent to the time of trial may have entirely altered their rights and duties. It would therefore avail nothing to remand the case to the trial court for a declaration of the present rights and duties of the parties. With the construction and validity of the agreement determined, and with the facts of the case peculiarly within their knowledge, the parties to this action are now in a position to secure through ordinary legal procedure not a mere declaration, but a final, exclusive, and presently enforceable determination of their rights and duties, should the facts warrant the court in determining that any exist.

With the findings corrected as hereinabove ordered, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

JOHNSON v. SMITH et al. (Civ. 6204.)★

Rehearing Denied April 23, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 23, 1929.

1. Mechanics' liens ⟹139(3)—Failure of lien claim to specify kind of materials held not to invalidate lien, without finding intent to defraud or injury to innocent third party (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1187, 1203).

Even if claim of lien for materials furnished was defective in containing no specification of the "kind" of materials, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1187, defect did not invalidate lien where, by trial court's findings, it did not appear that error was made with intent to defraud or that an innocent third party suffered by reason of such error, as required by section 1203 to invalidate lien.

2. Mechanics' liens ⟹48—That flooring furnished contractor was removed because defectively laid held not to affect materialman's right to lien.

That hardwood flooring sold by plaintiff to contractor constructing residence for defendants, because of the defective manner in which flooring was laid, was torn out and other flooring laid in its place by order of defendant's architect, held not to defeat plaintiff's right to mechanic's lien, since he was not responsible for defective installation.

Appeal from a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Victor R. McLucas, Judge, in an action to foreclose mechanic's lien. Affirmed.

Action by Arthur Johnson, conducting business as the Diamond Hardwood Company, against E. M. Smith and others. From an adverse judgment, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

W. W. Wallace, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HOUSER, Acting P. J. This is an appeal by the defendants from a judgment rendered against them in an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien.

[1] Appellants urge that the claim of lien was invalid because it failed to comply with the requirement of the statute that (among other things) it contain "a general statement of the kind of work done or materials furnished." Section 1187, Code Civ. Proc. An examination of the claim of lien upon which the action depended discloses the fact that it was for "materials furnished." By section 1203 of the Code of Civil Procedure it is provided that: "No mistake or errors in the statement of the demand, * * * shall invalidate the lien, unless the court finds that such mistake or error * * * was made with the intent to defraud, or the court shall find that an innocent third party, without notice, direct or constructive has since the claim was filed, become the bona fide owner of the property liened upon, and that the notice of claim was so deficient that it did not put the party upon further inquiry in any manner."

If it be conceded that the claim of lien for "materials furnished" was defective in that it contained no specification of the "kind" of materials, since by the findings of the trial court it does not appear that the error was made with "intent to defraud," or that an innocent third party suffered by reason of such error, it is clear that the defect is not of vital importance. Furthermore, notwithstanding the effect of some of the authorities to which appellants direct attention, it appears that, even before the enactment of section 1203 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in construing an earlier and somewhat similar lien statute, the rule had been announced in the case of McClain v. Hutton, 131 Cal. 132, 136, 63 P. 182, that "it was unnecessary to state specifically the kind of materials furnished or the prices of the several items"—citing authorities. See, also, Jewell v. McKay, 82 Cal. 144, 150, 23 P. 139; Brennan v. Swasey, 16 Cal. 141, 76 Am. Dec. 507; Selden v. Meeks, 17 Cal. 131; Heston v. Martin, 11 Cal. 41; Davis v. Livingston, 29 Cal. 283, 287. In the last-cited case it is said: "The second of the three notices is claimed to be defective for four distinct reasons, viz.: that it does not state of what the 'materials' named therein consisted. * * * None of these objections are well taken. The particular character of the materials need not be stated in the notice. The statute does not expressly require it, and the 'nature and extent of the claim' may be as well understood without the aid of such detail as with it"—citing cases. It follows that the error of which appellants complain cannot be sustained.

Appellants specify further error in effect that the findings of fact, which were all contrary to the position assumed by appellants at the trial in the lower court, were not supported by the evidence. It would serve no useful purpose to set forth the evidence upon which the findings to which objection is here made are predicated. Suffice it to say that, on consideration of such findings with relation to the evidence adduced at the trial, it satisfactorily appears that the findings are not properly subject to said criticism.

[2] The "materials furnished" by plaintiff consisted of hardwood flooring intended for a residence which was being constructed by a contractor for the defendants. The contract for furnishing such flooring and laying it in the building was sublet to a third person, who purchased the flooring from plaintiff. On account of the defective manner in which the flooring was laid, by order of the architect employed by the defendants, nearly all of it was torn out and other flooring laid in its place. Appellants contend that, because the "materials" furnished by plaintiff were not finally used by the defendants in the construction of the building for which such materials were originally purchased, plaintiff was not entitled to maintain a lien on the premises. By some of the authorities cited by the appellants the rule is announced that where a building under construction is completely destroyed by fire the right of lien does not attach to the premises. Humboldt L. M. Co. v. Crisp, 146 Cal. 686, 81 P. 30, 106 Am. St. Rep. 75, 2 Ann. Cas. 811; Watson v. Alta Investment Co., 12 Cal. App. 560, 108 P. 48.

In the case of Pacific Sash & Door Co. v. Bumiller, 162 Cal. 664, 666, 124 P. 230 [41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 296] in principle it was held that the removal from a building of materials furnished for and used in its alteration did not affect the right of lien for the value of such materials. In part the court said: "* * * However, we know of no statute or decision declaring that the removal of an alteration to a building after it is completed and used, destroys the lien which the statute gives to persons furnishing materials or labor for such alteration, even if such removal is made before the filing of the lien. If the materials are actually used in and the work is actually done upon the alteration, and the change made is of such a character that it comes within the terms of the statute giving a lien for alterations upon a building, and it is completed and put to use as altered, we are of the opinion that the lien cannot be defeated by a subsequent removal of that portion of the building comprising the alterations and the restoration of the building to its original state."

In the case of California Portland Cement Co. v. Wentworth Hotel Co., 16 Cal. App. 692, 708, 118 P. 103, 110, it was held that a lien was properly allowed for screen doors and windows which had been attached to the building, "and the fact that they were, for some one's convenience, taken down and piled up, would not destroy the right of lien acquired by the materialmen so furnishing them."

In the case of Hammond L. Co. v. Gordon, 84 Cal. App. 701, 258 P. 612, the facts were that the owner of certain real property leased the second floor of a building located thereon to one Squadrelli, who entered into a contract with defendant Gordon for the construction of certain balconies on the leased premises, which balconies were to be so constructed as to be "removable at any time." The plaintiff furnished certain materials of which the balconies were constructed, but had no knowledge of the fact that by agreement between Squadrelli and Gordon the balconies were to be "removable." The owner of the property had no part in ordering the materials of which the balconies were constructed, but did have knowledge of the fact that they were being built. However, no notice of nonresponsibility, as provided by section 1192 of the Code of Civil Procedure, was given by the owner. Although the balconies were so constructed that, as a matter of law, they constituted fixtures (section 660, Civ. Code), nevertheless "it appears as a matter of fact they were removed from the building." Held that the plaintiff was entitled to a foreclosure of a mechanic's lien on the property.

Authorities are not lacking to the effect that in order to become entitled to a lien, a materialman who furnishes material to a contractor to be used in the construction of a building is under no obligation to the owner of the premises to see that the contractor complies with the terms of his contract with the owner. 17 Cal. Jur. 20. The syllabus in the case of Howe v. Schmidt, 151 Cal. 436, 90 P. 1056, which is sustained by the text of the opinion (page 441 [90 P. 1058]), is that: "A materialman is not required to ascertain whether or not material ordered by a building contractor for use in a building conforms to the requirements of the agreement between the contractor and the owner. His contractual relations are solely with the contractor dealing with him and he simply furnishes material as directed by the party with whom he contracts. He is under no legal obligation to the owner to see that the contractor complies with his contract, and so far as his right to a lien is concerned, is warranted in assuming that the contractor is fulfilling his contract with the owner. This is true, in the absence of bad faith on his part, notwithstanding he may know that material ordered may not be in all respects as provided by the written contract on file."

The authorities cited by appellants are distinguishable from those cited by respondent, in that where a building under construction is destroyed by fire, so far as the owner of the premises is concerned, the act by which the materials furnished by the lien claimant are destroyed is involuntary; whereas, where the owner either personally or through his agent directs the removal from the building of attached materials or fixtures furnished by a lien claimant the act is plainly voluntary. In the instant case apparently the fault of the flooring lay entirely with the manner in which it was laid—not with the boards or material of which it was constructed. That part of the work was done, not by plaintiff or by his employees, but was done by the defendants or their agents or employees. The fact that by the act of the owner of the building the "materials furnished" may have been rendered useless should not defeat the rights of an innocent materialman, who had no knowledge or notice of defective or poor workmanship in the installation of the materials.

The judgment is affirmed.

ARMSTRONG v. MAUPAS. (Civ. 6704.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. March 21, 1929.

Limitation of actions ⚷146(3)—Defendant's letters to plaintiff held insufficient to constitute new promise, removing bar of limitations against claim for services (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 337, 339, 360).

In action for services, in which bar of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 337, 339, was interposed, letters signed by defendant and addressed to plaintiff held insufficient to constitute new promise, within section 360, where they contained nothing amounting to admission of existing debt, for which writer was liable or willing to pay.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hugh J. Crawford, Judge.

Action for services by Anna Armstrong against Marie Maupas. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

James W. Bell, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

George Beebe, of Los Angeles (J. Marion Wright and Bernard L. Herlihy, both of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent.

PER CURIAM. An action to recover the reasonable value of work and labor alleged to have been performed by the plaintiff for the defendant between May 15, 1905, and September 15, 1918. The action was commenced on October 28, 1925, the complaint alleging that on August 18, 1924, the defendant, in a writing signed by her, acknowledged the indebtedness. The defendant denied the allegations of the complaint, and pleaded as a bar to the action the provisions of sections 337 and 339 of the Code of Civil Procedure. After a trial the court ordered judgment for the defendant, and, findings having been waived, a judgment, from which the plaintiff appealed was entered.

It is conceded that the claim was barred by the statute, unless certain letters signed by the defendant and addressed to the plaintiff were sufficient within the provisions of section 360 of the Code of Civil Procedure to constitute a new promise. The letters were written in French, the translations being as follows:

"San Bernardino, August 18, 1924. Dear Sister. It is with pleasure that I received your letter, knowing that you are well, and I can say that I am the same. Dear sister, you asked me to pay you. Send me the account of what you have received and as to how you want to arrange it. You will answer me. Good bye. I will close. Hoping to have some news from you. Best regards from the part of Frank. Marie."

"San Bernardino, California, October 29, 1924. Dear Sister. I received your letter yesterday, knowing you are well excepting that you have a bad cold. That happens in order to advance matters. I gave the papers to fix up and I have not received them as yet, and will then call on you. I received the news from home, but a little sad, also that father is not able to get up on account of his age. That is all for the present, in the meantime receive my best wishes on the part of your sister. Marie. And the boy of Chester's, how is he?"

"Dear Sister. I see that you have received the check. It is the $40 for which Frank 'phoned me about coming for the month of April in 1921. Credited to the account that you have received it makes $1,836.02. You have criticized me on all sides. You have taken the old man for that. Very well. That is all. I leave. You have insulted me. You also say that you have sent me a card when the baby was born. I received none. I find it out by others."

With respect to the sufficiency of writings offered for the above purpose it was held in Concannon v. Smith, 134 Cal. 14, 66 P. 40, that while the statute does not prescribe any form in which the new promise shall be made the writing must show that the writer regards or treats the indebtedness as subsisting, the law implying therefrom a promise to pay; and in Searles v. Gonzalez, 191 Cal. 426, 216 P. 1003, 28 A. L. R. 78, that the writing must contain some reference to the debt which, either of itself or with the aid of competent evidence of extraneous facts in explanation, amounts to an admission of an existing indebtedness to the person to whom the writing is sent, for which the debtor is liable and which he is willing to pay. While part payment alone is insufficient as an acknowledgment within the above rule (Clunin v. First Federal Trust Co., 189 Cal. 248, 253, 207 P. 1009), such payment when accompanied by a writing signed by the debtor, which recognizes the debt as subsisting, is relevant on the question of the writer's willingness to pay. Here, however, the letters contained nothing amounting to an admission of an existing debt for which the writer was liable or willing to pay (Powell v. Petch, 166 Cal. 329, 136 P. 55); nor was the reference therein to the sum of $40 relevant on the question as it manifestly had no connection with the claim sued upon, but to an amount which according to the letter became due the plaintiff in 1921, long subsequent to the time when the services involved in the present action are alleged to have been rendered.

We are satisfied that the conclusions of the trial court were correct, and the judgment is accordingly affirmed.

DANIEL et ux. v. ASBILL. (Civ. 3702.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. March 22, 1929.

Rehearing Denied April 22, 1929.

1. Jury 🔑131(4)—Counsel may ask jurors questions reasonably necessary to ascertain their freedom from bias or interest.

Counsel may ask jurors such questions as may be reasonably necessary to ascertain whether they are free from bias or interest that may affect their verdict.

2. Trial 🔑108½—Counsel may ask whether jurors are interested in liability insurance company, but not in manner necessarily conveying impression that defendant has such insurance.

To ascertain whether jurors are free from bias or interest that may affect their verdict in tort action, counsel may, in good faith, ask each whether he is interested as agent, stockholder, or creditor in specified casualty company or any company insuring against liability for negligence, but questions must be propounded in such manner as not necessarily to convey impression that defendant is so insured.

3. Appeal and error 🔑1060(4)—Attorney's framing of questions as to jurors' interests in insurance company, in manner conveying impression that defendant has liability insurance, is prejudicial, if verdict is excessive or defendant's liability doubtful.

If amount of verdict for plaintiff is large, as compared with nature of injuries sustained, or defendant's liability is a close question, misconduct of plaintiff's counsel in framing questions to jurors as to their interest in insurance company, in manner conveying impression that defendant is insured against liability for negligence, is prejudicial and ground for reversal.

4. Trial 🔑108½—Counsel's statement, that verdict for plaintiffs would affect jurors' interest, if stockholders in insurance company, was misconduct warranting reversal, if jury was influenced thereby.

Statements of plaintiffs' counsel to court during impanelment of jury, that verdict for plaintiffs would affect jurors' interests, if they were stockholders in named insurance company, was misconduct, constituting ground for reversal of judgment on verdict for plaintiffs, if jury was influenced thereby, though it was not error to ask them if they owned stock in such company.

5. Trial 🔑127—Cross-examination of physician, as to examination of plaintiff at insurance company's request, held improper.

In action for injuries in automobile collision, plaintiff's cross-examination of physician, as to who requested examination of plaintiff by him, for purpose of showing that it was made at request of insurance company, held improper.

6. Appeal and error 🔑1050(1)—Admission of testimony as to defendant's statement, after automobile collision, that he was late and wanted them to hurry, held not prejudicial error.

In action for injuries in automobile collision, admission of testimony as to defendant's statement, after accident, that he was late for supper and wanted them to hurry, held not prejudicial error; objection going to weight of such statement as tending to corroborate testimony that defendant was driving at rapid rate of speed.

7. Automobiles 🔑244(36)—Evidence held to support jury's finding that defendant's negligence was proximate cause of automobile collision at highway intersection.

In action for injuries in automobile collision at highway intersection, evidence held sufficient to support jury's finding that defendant's negligence was proximate cause of accident.

8. Automobiles 🔑244(43)—Evidence held to warrant finding, in action for injuries in automobile collision at highway intersection, that plaintiff was not contributorily negligent.

In action for injuries in automobile collision at highway intersection, evidence held to warrant jury's finding that plaintiff was not guilty of contributory negligence.

9. Negligence 🔑122(1)—Contributory negligence is defense, burden of proving which rests on defendant.

Contributory negligence is a defense, burden of proving which rests on defendant, and it is not incumbent on plaintiffs to establish affirmatively that they were free from negligence.

10. Appeal and error 🔑1064(1)—Negligence 🔑138(2)—Instruction, that contributory negligence is defense, burden of proving which rests on defendant, held not erroneous nor harmful.

Instruction, that contributory negligence is defense, burden of proving which rests on defendant, and that it is not incumbent on plaintiffs to establish affirmatively that they were free from negligence, held not erroneous nor harmful, though not containing proviso, "unless it be shown or can be inferred from the evidence adduced in support of the plaintiffs' case."

11. Automobiles 🔑246(25)—Instruction, that, if plaintiff failed to look or see whether it was safe to drive automobile across highway, and such failure substantially contributed to collision, she was contributorily negligent, and verdict must be for defendant, substantially told jury that she could not recover if contributorily negligent.

ant's automobile, she was guilty of contributory negligence, and verdict must be for defendant, substantially told jury that she could not recover, if they found her guilty of contributory negligence, even if jury were not instructed as defendant claimed they should have been.

12. Appeal and error ⚷1060(4)—References of plaintiff's counsel to insurance company in impaneling jury and cross-examining witness held not prejudicial error, in view of evidence justifying verdict and nature of injuries.

Misconduct of plaintiffs' counsel in stating, during impanelment of jury, that verdict for plaintiff would affect juror's interest, if they were stockholders in insurance company, and cross-examination of physician to show that his examination of plaintiff was made at such company's request, held not prejudicial to defendant, in view of evidence justifying verdict for plaintiff, who was 32 or 33 years old, and nature and extent of injuries to her arm and hand, which were reasonably certain to be permanent.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sutter County; E. P. McDaniel, Judge.

Action by F. O. Daniel and wife against Hugh Asbill. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. Hampton Hoge, of San Francisco, and W. E. Davies, of Marysville (Enid Childs, of Berkeley, of counsel), for appellant.

Alvin Weis and W. P. Rich, both of Marysville, for respondents.

MONCUR, Justice pro tem. Plaintiffs are husband and wife, and brought this action to recover damages from defendant for injuries to plaintiff, F. O. Daniel's automobile and damages for physical injuries to plaintiff Mrs. Bertha Mae Daniel, as the result of a collision between the said automobile and the automobile of defendant. The case was tried before a jury, and resulted in a verdict awarding plaintiff F. O. Daniel the sum of $185 as damages to his automobile, and Mrs. Daniel was awarded the sum of $7,804.60 as damages resulting from the injuries suffered by her. From the judgment entered upon the verdict, defendant, in due time, moved for a new trial, which was denied.

The appellant urges as grounds for a reversal: (1) Reference to an insurance company upon the impanelment of the jury, and at other times as being prejudicially erroneous; (2) plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law; (3) the court gave an erroneous instruction upon the question of contributory negligence; (4) the court erred in admitting in evidence statements made by defendant prior to the collision.

At the commencement of the trial defendant moved for a continuance upon the ground that his attorney, J. Hampton Hoge, was occupied in the trial of an action in San Francisco, and unable to be present. The motion was submitted on affidavits, and the court stated that the motion would be granted upon the payment of costs incurred by plaintiff, by reason of the continuance, and fixed the amount of such costs at the sum of $343. The motion was presented by Mr. W. E. Davies, acting for defendant, and, the defendant having determined that the amount of costs fixed as the basis for granting a continuance was more than he cared to pay, the motion was thereupon withdrawn by Mr. Davies, and Mr. Davies was associated in the case as attorney for the defendant.

It is not contended that there was any error in the ruling of the court on the motion for a continuance, and defendant only urges this proceeding for consideration upon this appeal in connection with the alleged errors occurring during the trial.

We will consider the several grounds urged for a reversal in the order in which they are presented in the briefs, except that the fourth ground will be considered in place of the third, and the third ground will be considered last. In doing so, it seems advisable to state, as briefly as possible, the circumstances under which the collision occurred, and also to state the damages resulting therefrom.

It appears from the evidence that on the 21st day of September, 1926, at about the hour of 5:20 in the afternoon, plaintiff Bertha Mae Daniel was driving her husband's Ford coupé automobile in a northerly direction on the highway, known as the Sutter Basin road, which extends between Sutter Basin and O'Banion Corners, Sutter county. There were riding with her at the time of the accident a Mrs. Goetz and a Mrs. W. Holm. At the same time defendant was driving his Flint touring car in a westerly direction on the highway, known as the Tudor road, which intersects the Sutter Basin road at a point about two miles south of the O'Banion corners. Mrs. Daniel had been driving at the rate of about 15 to 18 miles per hour, but as she entered the intersection she slowed down to approximately 10 miles per hour, and had passed the center of the intersection by approximately 8 feet when defendant drove his car into the intersection at a rate of speed of about 40 miles per hour and crashed into the Ford coupé being driven by Mrs. Daniel. As a result of the collision, the Ford car was driven about 40 feet northwesterly of where it was struck, and landed bottom side up near the ditch alongside of the road.

At the time of the collision the sun was low and was shining directly in defendant's eyes as he drove in a westerly direction along the highway. The tracks of defendant's automobile, just after he reached the intersection, showed that he skidded for approximately 53 feet before hitting the Ford car, and that he swerved slightly toward the north just before the collision.

As a result of the accident the Ford coupé was considerably damaged, and Mr. Daniel incurred expenses in repairing it, amounting to the sum of $185. Mrs. Daniel suffered a number of injuries as a result of the accident, sustaining a broken left arm, immediately below the elbow, the skin and flesh were torn from both sides of her left hand, the third finger of her left hand was broken in two places, the first break being between the first and second joints of that finger, and the second break being where the bone of that finger was joined to her left hand; that the bones of the second finger of her left hand were broken in the hand; also, her neck was severely strained, and she had a number of minor bruises on her body.

For medical and hospital services, X-rays, ambulance, and other expenses for a housekeeper and nurse, an expense of $304.20 was incurred. Recovery of this amount is sought, and further damages in the sum of $10,000.

Considering now the first ground urged for a reversal, it appears that one of the counsel for plaintiffs during the impanelment of the jury, interrogated the jurors on their voir dire as follows:

"Q. I will ask the jurors if any of you own any stock in the Union Automobile Insurance Company?

"Mr. Davies: We object to that question on the ground it is irrelevant, immaterial and incompetent, and not pertaining to any issue in the case.

"The Court: I do not see that it would do any harm—no insurance company is a party to the action.

"Mr. Rich: It might be that they are financially interested in it, and if they are stockholders in the company it would certainly affect them under that subdivision of the section.

"Mr. Davies: We object to that on the grounds stated and ask that it be stricken out and the jurors instructed to disregard it.

"Mr. Rich: * * * Now, it is our claim that in the event that it could be shown that they are stockholders in the company I have mentioned, a verdict in favor of the plaintiffs would affect their interest. * * *

"Mr. Davies: We object to that, and assign it as misconduct on the part of counsel."

Following this, the court sustained the objection, and instructed counsel not to ask questions along that line. Subsequently, in connection with further reference to the insurance matter, the court instructed the jurors to pay no attention to anything that had been said by the court or counsel bearing upon this matter, and directed them to disregard the matter entirely in their considerations and deliberations in all respects, saying, "that it was not a question for honest jurors to follow."

Subsequently, Dr. Hoffman, one of defendant's witnesses, after testifying to an examination of Mrs. Daniel, made by him shortly after the accident, on cross-examination, was asked at whose request he made the examination, and said that it had been made at the request of Mr. Ralph McCormick, insurance broker in the city of Marysville, but that he did not know the name of the company at whose request it had been made. No objection was made to this line of cross-examination. Immediately following it a letter written by Dr. Hoffman reporting the result of his investigation was offered in evidence, to which offer counsel for defendant said there was no objection.

[1-3] It seems to be the settled law of this state that counsel may ask jurors such questions as may be reasonably necessary to ascertain whether they are free from bias or interest that may affect their verdict. To this end it is proper for counsel, in good faith, to ask of each juror whether he is interested as an agent or stockholder or otherwise in a specified casualty company. Or he may be asked the broad question whether he is interested in any insurance company insuring against liability for negligence. But counsel must take pains to propound such questions in such a manner as not necessarily to convey the impression that the defendant is in fact so insured. It is misconduct on the part of counsel for plaintiff in such actions so to frame his question that it goes beyond what is reasonably necessary to serve the legitimate purpose of eliciting the facts he is entitled to adduce in order to secure a jury free from bias or prejudice, if it is also apparent that the question may fairly be said to have the effect of serving the illegitimate purpose of prejudicing the jury by fixing in their minds the idea that the defendant is protected by insurance against liability for negligence. And if the amount of the verdict is large as compared with the nature of the injuries sustained, or the defendant's liability is a close question, such misconduct is prejudicial and ground for reversal. Eldridge v. Clark & Henery Construction Co., 75 Cal. App. 516, 243 P. 43; see, also, Arnold v. Cal. Portland Cement Co., 41 Cal. App. 420, 183 P. 171; Rinklin v. Acker, 125 App. Div. 244, 109 N. Y. S. 125; Grant v. National, etc., Co., 100 App. Div. 234, 91 N. Y. S. 805.

[4] From these authorities it appears that it was not error to ask the jurors if they owned stock in the indemnity insurance company named. The subsequent statements in connection with the matter occurred during the conversation between the court and the respective counsel, but, it appears that in this conversation it was definitely stated by Mr. Rich that a verdict in favor of the plaintiffs would affect the interest of the jurors, if they were stockholders in such company. Obviously, this statement of Mr. Rich constituted misconduct, and would constitute ground for reversal in the event that it is evident the verdict of the jury was influenced in any respect by such statement.

[5] The cross-examination of Dr. Hoffman was improper. In the case of Eldridge v. Clark & Henery Const. Co., supra, it is said: "As going to the question of the credibility or the weight of his testimony, it would seem that it ought to be proper for plaintiff to show by cross-examination of a physician called by defendant to testify and who does testify that he had examined plaintiff's injuries and found that they were less serious in nature and effect than as claimed by plaintiff, that such physician had been specially employed by a surety company by which defendant was indemnified against the payment of any damages awarded against him to make such examination and state the result thereof to the jury. (See sec. 1868, Code Civ. Proc.) Such, however, is not the rule in this state, so our decisions seem to hold. (McPhee v. Lavin, 183 Cal. 264, 269, 191 P. 23; Roche v. Llewellyn, 140 Cal. 563, 74 P. 147.)"

[6] As for the fourth ground for reversal urged by defendant, that it was error to permit the testimony concerning the statement by defendant at the Tudor Mercantile Store to the effect that he "was late for supper and that he wanted them to hurry," even if it were error, it was not of sufficient importance to be prejudicial, but, rather, it seems that it would be more of a question of weight than of admissibility, as such statement, if made, would have a tendency to corroborate the testimony to the effect that defendant was driving at a rapid rate of speed just prior to the accident.

[7-10] Considering now the question of the alleged negligence of the defendant and the contributory negligence of the plaintiff, we are satisfied that the finding of the jury in its verdict, to the effect that the proximate cause of the accident was the negligence of the defendant, and that the plaintiff Mrs. Daniel was not guilty of contributory negligence, is amply supported by the preponderance of the evidence. In this connection, the alleged error of the court in giving the instruction complained of, at plaintiffs' request, will be considered. The particular instruction is as follows: "I instruct you that in this state contributory negligence is a defense, the burden of proving which rests upon the defendant and it is not incumbent upon the plaintiffs to establish affirmatively that they were free from negligence."

It is claimed that this instruction was erroneous, for the reason that it did not contain the provision that "unless it be shown or can be inferred from the evidence adduced in support of the plaintiffs' case." The instruction complained of is a correct statement of the law (Howard v. Worthington, 50 Cal. App. 556, 195 P. 709; Hall v. San Francisco, 188 Cal. 641, 206 P. 459), and does no more than inform the jury as to the question of the burden of proof. If defendant desired a further instruction to be given, he should have requested it, but, obviously, no harm could have resulted from the giving of this instruction.

[11] The ground upon which contributory negligence is to be imputed is the failure of Mrs. Daniel to see the approach of defendant's automobile, even though she had not looked in the direction of its approach until a second or so before the collision, and as to this phase of the matter, the court instructed the jury, at the request of the defendant, as follows: "I hereby charge you that, if the plaintiff, Mrs. Bertha Mae Daniel, in this action, at the time of the accident upon which said action is based was approaching or entering upon an intersection of the public highway, and if at said time she failed to look or looked and failed to see whether or not it was safe for her to drive her machine upon and across such intersecting highway, and if you find that such failure on the part of the plaintiff to look or to see the condition of the intersecting highway substantially contributed to the cause of the accident, then said plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence and your verdict must be for the defendant."

Even if the jury were not instructed as is claimed by the defendant they should have been, it, nevertheless, appears that they were substantially told that if they found Mrs. Daniel guilty of contributory negligence, she could not recover, and taking all of the instructions together, the jury were fully informed as to the law necessary to guide them in reaching their verdict.

[12] We will now consider whether, in view of the size of the verdict in favor of Mrs. Daniel, the amount thereof was based upon evidence properly before the jury, or, if any verdict at all should have been rendered in favor of plaintiffs, the rendition of such verdict in any amount was based upon the improper matters concerning the question of insurance. We are satisfied that the facts of this case justify the verdict in favor of Mr. Daniel, and in some amount in favor of Mrs. Daniel, and that the improper matters concerning insurance may only be considered in connection with the amount of the jury's award to the latter. Considering the nature and extent of the injuries, the fact that the injury to her arm and hand are reasonably certain to be permanent; the suffering resulting from the accident; that she was still suffering some pain at the time of the trial; her age, she being 32 or 33 years old at that time; also, the fact that even further surgical and other operations, in all probability, will not correct the injuries to her arm and hand; and the further fact that the jury and court heard the witnesses, and particularly observed the condition of Mrs. Daniel, and the jury having rendered their verdict in the amount stated; and the court, in denying a motion for a new trial, having, in effect, approved such verdict—we are not prepared to hold that, under the evidence in the case and the plain instructions of the court, the alleged misconduct, or claimed errors referred to, resulted in prejudice to the rights of the defendant.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

PEARSON v. CRUMMER. (Civ. 5201.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2. California. March 20, 1929.

1. Appeal and error 🔑544(1)—On appeal on judgment roll only, findings of fact are not reviewable.

Findings of fact cannot be questioned on appeal founded upon the judgment roll alone.

2. Brokers 🔑60—Broker having completely performed services resulting in agreement for exchange of properties was entitled to commission, irrespective of whether exchange was consummated.

Where broker employed to negotiate exchange of property had done everything for which he was employed, and the minds of the parties had met as to all matters except one reserved for future determination, the broker's commission was earned when that matter was determined, irrespective of whether exchange was ever consummated.

3. Brokers 🔑43(3)—Statute did not deprive broker of compensation, whether services were rendered prior to signing contract or contract executed merely in confirmation of obligation (Statute of Frauds).

Broker's right to compensation for negotiating contract for exchange of property was not rendered unenforceable by Statute of Frauds (Code Civ. Proc. § 1973) on refusal of employer to consummate exchange, irrespective of whether defendant had realized fruits of plaintiff's services before signing contract of employment or had executed same as promise to pay for services already rendered and in acknowledgment and confirmation of obligation.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; G. R. Freeman, Judge.

Action by F. T. Pearson against C. C. Crummer. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Hazlett & Albee, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Walter C. Davison, of Riverside, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. The respondent instituted an action in the superior court of Riverside county for commissions alleged to have been earned by him as a realtor in obtaining for appellant an agreement in writing, between the latter and G. W. Short and Henry Pitcher, for the exchange of certain real and personal properties. A demurrer and motion to strike out portions of the complaint having been overruled, and after trial judgment being rendered in favor of the plaintiff, the defendant appealed.

The plaintiff alleged that he procured for the defendant a contract in writing, by the terms of which the defendant agreed to convey certain real property, described in the complaint, for certain real property of the value of $30,000, and the "stock of feed, grains, fuel, tires, etc., and two trucks and fixtures connected with the business," including parts of farm machinery, seeds, poultry supplies, and all personal property and stock in trade, of the value of $12,000, belonging to the defendant. The contract also provided for the delivery of "one Bethlehem truck and one stump puller to be decided upon later." The complaint further alleged that the plaintiff was employed by defendant to obtain such agreement, for which the latter agreed to pay him a commission of 2½ per centum of the value of defendant's real property, and 5 per centum of the value of the personal property as it should inventory at the time of acceptance and approval of the agreement for exchange. The plaintiff averred that the parties to the proposed exchange inspected all of the properties mentioned, and that each executed and delivered to the other said exchange contract.

It appears that the contract of employment was at first merely oral, but that, after such inspection and definite agreement, and before conveyance by either party, it was committed to writing, providing that, in the matter of commission "in the deal now pending," said commission should be paid "on or before consummation of this exchange," and that the value of the personal property should be based "on the amount on hand at the acceptance or approval of said agreement" between the vendors.

The grounds of appeal consist of contentions (1) that the description and amount of personal property proposed to be conveyed was uncertain; (2) that, since the personal property was worth more than $200, the statute of frauds required some note or memorandum in writing, signed by the party to be charged, but that the contract of employment was not signed until after execution of the exchange agreement; and (3) that the plaintiff did not allege nor prove that the exchange was consummated, and hence that no commission was earned.

[1] The findings of fact and judgment recite that the cause came on regularly for trial, and that evidence, both oral and documentary, having been introduced by the respective parties, and the cause having been argued and submitted, the court rendered its decision and judgment accordingly in favor of the plaintiff in the sum of $1,136.90, together with interest and costs. Since the appeal is founded upon the judgment roll alone, we are not called upon, nor are we empowered, to question findings of fact. It was agreed that the commission of 5 per centum be computed upon the amount of personal property "on hand at the acceptance or approval of said agreement," and that all commissions be paid "on or before consummation." The trial court found that the value of the personal property as of the time stipulated, excluding the Bethlehem truck and stump puller, was $11,000. The plaintiff also alleged, and the court found, that the parties had agreed that whether or not the truck and stump puller might be included should not affect the trade, and that the plaintiff did and performed all of the conditions of his contract, which is tantamount to a declaration that, if the deal were not consummated, it was through no fault of respondent. The court further found and adjudged that the plaintiff earned, under his contract of employment, a commission of $1,300, and that the allegations of the answer were untrue.

We must presume that the preponderance of the evidence adduced by the respective parties compelled the rendition of the findings and judgment as presented by the record before us, and that the amount and value of the personalty on the date of acceptance and approval of the principal contract was made definite and certain at the time of trial.

[2, 3] The plaintiff having done everything that he was employed to do, the commissions were earned. The minds of the parties definitely met, with the one exception last above noted, which was left for future determination. That element having been ascertained, all that remained was the actual exchange by mutual conveyances (i. e., the consummation of the exchange), over which the plaintiff had no control. The solemn covenants of the contracting parties required performance of this, the vital object of their contract, but, if by mutual consent or owing to the default of either party, the conveyances were not completed, the plaintiff was entitled to compensation, for the reason that he had earned it, and that it had previously been agreed that the commissions should be paid on or before such event. We do not deem it necessary upon the facts as presented to seriously consider the applicability of the statute of frauds (Code Civ. Proc. § 1973) in such cases, since in either view, as to whether the defendant had realized all the fruits of the plaintiff's services before signing the contract of employment, or had executed the same as a promise to pay for services already rendered and in acknowledgment and confirmation of the obligation, his failure or refusal to make the conveyances would not absolve him therefrom.

Other grounds assigned for reversal are directed at the complaint, but are of the same tenor, and raise no different issues of law.

The judgment is affirmed.

WELLNITZ v. SACRAMENTO SUBURBAN FRUIT LANDS CO. (Civ. 3610.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. March 21, 1929.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 18, 1929.

Fraud ⚷47—Allegation that property as represented was worth in excess of $2,000 amounts only to claim that it was worth such sum.

Allegation of complaint, in action for damages on account of fraudulent representations in sale of land, that property would have been worth in excess of $2,000 if it had been as represented, amounts to no more than that it would have been worth $2,000.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Malcolm C. Glenn, Judge.

On petition for rehearing. Rehearing denied.

For former opinion, see 274 P. 1016.

Butler, Van Dyke & Desmond, of Sacramento, for appellant.

Ralph H. Lewis and George E. McCutchen, both of Sacramento, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Appellant has filed a petition for a rehearing, in which counsel reargue the question of the measure of damages. They urge that "the jury may have found in favor of defendant upon the matter of whether or not there was a representation as to the market value of the land" and against it on the other alleged false representations, "first, that the value of the land was the sum of $1,000, and that its value, had the false representations been true, would have been $2,620; and so that the plaintiff's damages were the sum of $1,620, the amount which the jury actually found he had lost." If it be conceded that counsel's premises are correct, then their syllogism is faultless and their conclusion irresistible.

The only theory upon which defendant's rights could have been prejudiced by the application of the California rule as the measure of damages is that the jury may have found that the property would have been worth more than $2,000 if it had been as represented. If they found such value would have been $2,000, the amount for which the plaintiff became liable, the application of either rule would lead to the same result. If the jury found that such value would have been less than $2,000, the California rule would be more favorable to the defendant than would the Minnesota rule.

The complaint alleges "that had said real property been as represented, it would have been worth in excess of $2,000, but, by reason of the actual condition thereof, said real property was never worth in excess of $50, and plaintiff has been damaged by reason of the fraud and deceit of defendant, as aforesaid, in the sum of $1,950." Under familiar rules of pleading, the allegation that the property "would have been worth in excess of $2,000" if it had been as represented amounts to no more than that it would have been worth $2,000. The prayer is for judgment in the sum of $1,950, the difference between the alleged value of $50 and the represented value of $2,000. The appellant has not called attention to any evidence in the record, and none has been found, to the effect that the land would have been worth more than $2,000 if it had been as represented. There being nothing in the pleadings or the evidence to warrant a finding that the land would have exceeded that sum in value if the representations had been true, it is not to be presumed that the jury so found. Since the jury could not have found that such value exceeded $2,000, and that sum being the amount the plaintiff had obligated himself to pay for the land, the amount of his damages under the California rule could not have been more than under the Minnesota rule, and therefore the defendant suffered no possible prejudice from the application of the California measure of damages.

Rehearing denied.

PEOPLE v. STEVENS. (Cr. 1769.)★

Rehearing Denied April 9, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court April 25, 1929.

Indictment and information ⟹110(31)—Information charging offense of possessing still in language of statute is sufficient; "designed" (Acts 1927, p. 497).

In Acts 1927, p. 497, relating to stills, word "designed" implies intention of defendant to use prohibited articles for unlawful purpose described in statute so that information charging offense of possessing still in language of statute is sufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second and Third Series, Designed.]

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Charles L. Allison, Judge.

A. L. Stevens was convicted of possessing a still, and he appeals. Affirmed.

M. C. Spicer, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and John D. Richer, of Los Angeles, for the People.

YORK, J. The defendant was convicted of having in his possession and control one still worm, two still caps, one still condenser, and one stilling device, all of which articles are alleged to have been designed for use in the manufacture and production of intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes.

The information under which the appellant was tried and convicted is sufficient, in that it states facts sufficient to constitute a public offense under the provisions of the "Act relating to stills," found in Statutes of 1927, p. 497.

The venue was amply proved not only by the statement as to location of a certain ranch, but by reference to certain streets in Ontario, and the location of the property where the still was found with reference to its being in Cucamonga township just outside the city limits of the town of Ontario. The fact that this township and town are wholly within the county of San Bernardino is a fact of which the court can take judicial cognizance. People v. Wright, 79 Cal. App. 523, 250 P. 204.

There was sufficient evidence to support the finding of the jury that the defendant was guilty, as charged. It is not necessary, under the law, that there should be direct evidence to show any intent on the part of the appellant to use the articles in the manufacture of intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes. The charge that was submitted to the jury was that of having in his possession the property described, which articles were designed for use in the manufacture or production of intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes. There was evidence that the articles found by the officers were such articles as the defendant was charged in the information with having in his possession, and that these articles were each of them designed for use in the manufacture or production of intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes.

It is not necessary that all of the component parts of a still should be produced by the prosecution, or that proof should be introduced that the articles found in his possession were sufficient to make a complete still, from which intoxicating liquor could be produced. The section of the statute does not require any more proof than proof of the facts alleged in the information.

No objection was here made to any of the instructions given, and the one objection to the introduction of evidence is answered by the statements hereinbefore contained in this opinion.

★Rehearing denied. Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

The judgment and order denying motion for new trial are therefore affirmed.

CONREY, P. J., and HOUSER, J. We concur in the judgment. We wish to make it clear, however, that in our opinion the word "designed" as used in the statute implies an intention of the defendant to use the prohibited articles for the unlawful purpose described in the statute. This being so, the information charging the offense in the language of the statute is sufficient. We think also that there is in the record sufficient evidence to support the implied finding that the defendant did intend to use the distilling devices referred to in the information in the manufacture and production of intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. March 20, 1929.

Criminal law ⇨829(18)—Refusing instructions on reasonable doubt held not error, where they were merely refinements or elaborations of definition in instruction given (Pen. Code, § 1096, and § 1096a, as added by St. 1927, p. 1039).

Refusal of instructions on reasonable doubt held not error, where they were merely refinements or elaborations of definition and doctrine in Pen. Code, § 1096, set forth in instruction given, in compliance with section 1096a, as added by St. 1927, p. 1039.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Shelley J. Higgins, Judge.

Marsh J. Jackson was convicted of robbery, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Whelan, Whelan & Smith, of San Diego, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John D. Richer, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CRAIL, Justice pro tem. The defendant was convicted of robbery. It is contended by him that the trial court erred in admitting certain hearsay evidence, that the district attorney was guilty of misconduct, and that the trial court erred in refusing to give certain instructions relative to reasonable doubt.

We are satisfied that there was no reversible error in the admission of evidence. People v. Hale, 64 Cal. App. 523, 222 P. 148. Neither was the conduct of the district attorney such as would constitute reversible error. The court, in compliance with section 1096a, Penal Code, added by St. 1927, p. 1039, gave an instruction fully setting forth the definition and doctrine of reasonable doubt as contained in section 1096, Penal Code. The instructions asked by defendant were merely refinements or elaborations of this definition and doctrine. The refusal to give them was not prejudicial.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: HOUSER, Acting P. J.; YORK, J.

RUZANOFF et al. v. RETAILERS CREDIT ASS'N OF SACRAMENTO. (Civ. 3615.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. March 20, 1929.

Rehearing Denied April 19, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 16, 1929.

1. Replevin ⇨100(1)—Damages are recoverable for retention of personal property, whether delivery can be had or not (Code Civ. Proc. § 667).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 667, relating to judgment in action for possession of personal property, plaintiff is entitled to damages for detention of property, whether delivery thereof can be had or not.

2. Appeal and error ⇨1041(2)—Allowing amendment to prayer of complaint to recover personal property, by striking demand for recovery of property or value, did not prejudice defendant.

Allowance of amendment to prayer of complaint in action for recovery of personal property, by striking therefrom demand for recovery of property, or its value in case delivery could not be had, held not to prejudice defendant, in that amendment did not enlarge, but merely limited, the relief to which plaintiffs were entitled.

3. Replevin ⇨11(2)—Proof of demand for possession of personal property was not required, where answer denied right to possession.

Where answer in action for recovery of personal property denied plaintiffs' right to recover, and demand for possession thereof would have been useless, proof of demand under such circumstances was not required.

4. Replevin ⇨97—Findings in action to recover personal property held to support judgment for damages.

Findings in action for recovery of personal property relative to damage by the withholding of possession by defendant held sufficient to support judgment for damages.

5. Replevin ⇨82—Evidence held to establish damage in amount of $450 for withholding possession of personal property.

Evidence in action to recover possession of personal property held sufficient to show that plaintiffs were damaged in the amount of $450 by reason of defendant's continued withholding of possession of such property.

★Rehearing denied. Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

6. Replevin 🔑79—Successful party in replevin is not confined to interest as damages, if he can establish that value of use of property exceeded interest.

Though ordinarily, in replevin, loss of use and other injuries may be compensated by allowing interest on value of property, successful party nevertheless is not confined to interest as damages, if he can establish fact that value of use of property of which he was deprived exceeded interest.

7. Replevin 🔑76—Recovery may be had for usable value of property, regardless of whether other property was hired to take its place or not.

Plaintiffs in action to recover personal property and fixtures or their value were entitled to compensation for usable value of property of which they were deprived, regardless of whether they hired other property to take its place or not.

8. Replevin 🔑76—Recovery could be had for salary paid employee during week business was closed because of removal of personal property.

Plaintiffs, in action to recover personal property and fixtures or its value, were entitled to recover amount paid as salary to employee during week business was closed by reason of defendant's removal of property.

9. Replevin 🔑76—That loss of profits and of customers while business was closed because of removal of property cannot be accurately measured does not preclude compensation (Civ. Code, §§ 992, 993).

Though detriment due to loss of profits during week that business was closed by reason of removal of personal property, and fixtures, or loss of customers, constituting good will of business, in accordance with Civ. Code, §§ 992, 993, could not be measured with mathematical accuracy, such fact is not a sufficient reason for denying compensation therefor as damages in action to recover personal property and fixtures, or their value.

10. Damages 🔑103—Measure of damages for torts is ordinarily same as that for breach of contracts (Civ. Code, §§ 3300, 3333).

Measure of damages for torts, provided by Civ. Code, § 3333, is ordinarily the same as that for breach of contracts, as prescribed by section 3300.

11. Replevin 🔑72—Evidence held to show sufficient notice of right to possession of property at time of removal.

Evidence in action to recover personal property and fixtures, or their value, held to show sufficient notice to defendant of plaintiffs' right to possession of property at time of removal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; W. A. Anderson, Judge.

Action by Mary Ruzanoff and another against the Retailers Credit Association of Sacramento. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Chas. L. Gilmore, of Sacramento, for appellant.

H. Nelson French and Ralph H. Cowing, both of Sacramento, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. The plaintiffs brought this action for the recovery of personal property and fixtures, or their value, if delivery could not be had, and damages for the detention thereof. After the case was tried and submitted, the court, on motion of counsel for the plaintiffs, ordered that the prayer of the complaint be amended by striking therefrom the demand for the recovery of the property or its value in case delivery could not be had.

The court found in substance: That at the times mentioned in the complaint the plaintiffs were entitled to the possession of such property, consisting of "one ice box, one cash register, one counter, one glass case, two scales, one meat block, and one bread box"; that December 29, 1926, the defendant wrongfully took possession of the property and "refused to deliver said property to plaintiffs, and still refuses to do so; * * * that plaintiffs used said personal property and fixtures to carry on and conduct a general grocery business; that by reason of the wrongful taking of the possession of said personal property * * * and the continued withholding of the possession of the same by defendant" plaintiffs were damaged in the sum of $450. Judgment for that sum was entered in favor of the plaintiffs, and the defendant has appealed.

[1, 2] Appellant contends that "the amendment to the prayer for judgment was erroneously allowed." Section 667 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "In an action to recover the possession of personal property, judgment for the plaintiff may be for the possession or the value thereof, in case a delivery cannot be had, and damages for the detention." Under such a judgment the plaintiff is entitled to damages for the detention of the property, whether delivery thereof can be had or not. Nahhas v. Browing, 181 Cal. 55, 57, 183 P. 442 (6 A. L. R. 476); Blodgett v. Rheinschild, 56 Cal. App. 728, 739, 206 P. 674. It does not appear, therefore, that the defendant was in any manner prejudiced by the amendment, which did not enlarge, but merely limited, the relief to which the plaintiffs were entitled. From the amendment ordered by the court and the findings, it is clear that nothing was allowed for the value of the property, but that the judgment merely awards the plaintiffs damages for the wrongful detention thereof. Since judgment was not given for the value of the property, it is of no importance that the evidence fails to show such value.

[3] The answer denies the plaintiffs' right to possession of the property, and therefore a demand for the possession thereof would have been useless. Under such circumstances proof of a demand is not required. 5 Cal. Jur. 169.

[4, 5] Appellant contends that the findings do not support the judgment and that the evidence is not sufficient to show that the plaintiffs were damaged in the amount found by the court. It appears from what has been stated herein that the findings support the judgment. Plaintiffs held the property in question and the building in which such property was located under a lease for the term of one year from November 5, 1926, at a monthly rental of $40 for the first three months and $45 a month thereafter. Plaintiff John Powl testified that the gross sales of the plaintiffs' business were as follows: November, 1926, $2,500; December, $2,600; January, 1927, $1,500, and February, $1,100; that they quit business about March 12; that in taking the property from plaintiffs' possession, during the absence of the witness, the defendant removed fresh meat from the ice box, causing it to spoil, and placed other provisions and goods in places that rendered them valueless, causing a total loss of nearly $60; that the removal of the personal property and fixtures made it impossible for the plaintiffs to do any business for about a week, at the end of which time they hired other fixtures and apparatus, at a rental of $47.10 a month, to take the place of the property which the defendant had taken; that the plaintiffs had 50 or 60 daily customers during the month of December; that by reason of their business being closed for a week they lost about half of their customers and were unable thereafter to regain them; that they had in their employ one person at a salary of $100 a month; and that they continued to pay the owner of the building $40 a month until the 1st of March. It cannot be said that the foregoing evidence is insufficient to warrant the inference that the plaintiffs were damaged in the sum of $450 by the wrongful detention of the property by the defendant.

[6-10] "Ordinarily, in replevin, loss of use and other injuries resulting from the taking and withholding of personal property may be compensated by allowing the successful party to recover interest on the value of the property from the time of the taking to the date of the verdict. However, he is not confined to interest as damages, if he can establish the fact that the value of the use of the property of which he was deprived exceeded the interest." Drinkhouse v. Van Ness, 202 Cal. 359, 379, 260 P. 869, 877. This does not mean that recovery for wrongful detention is limited in all cases to such interest or usable value. In Live Stock G. P. Co. v. Union, etc., Co., 114 Cal. 447, 450, 46 P. 286, 287, it is said that the successful plaintiff in replevin is entitled to such damages as will "compensate him for all the detriment proximately caused by the wrong complained of (Civ. Code, § 3333)."

Section 3333 of the Civil Code, cited in the foregoing quotation, provides: "For the breach of an obligation not arising from contract, the measure of damages, except where otherwise expressly provided by this code, is the amount which will compensate for all the detriment proximately caused thereby, whether it could have been anticipated or not." The loss of provisions and other merchandise was directly caused by the acts of the defendant. The plaintiffs were entitled to compensation for the usable value of the property of which they were deprived, regardless of whether they hired other property to take its place or not. Meyers v. Bradford, 54 Cal. App. 157, 201 P. 471. They were entitled to recover the amount paid as salary to their employee during the week their business was closed. Lyle v. Seller, 70 Cal. App. 300, 223 P. 345.

Store fixtures are not ordinarily replaceable immediately, and the plaintiffs' loss of profits during that week was proximately caused by defendant's wrongful detention of the property in question as was, also, the loss of their customers. The loss of such customers was the loss, to that extent, of "expectation of continued public patronage," which constituted the good will of their business. Civ. Code, § 992. "The good-will of a business is property." Civ. Code, § 993. The detriment due to loss of profits, during the week mentioned, and the loss of customers cannot be measured with mathematical accuracy, but that fact is not a sufficient reason for denying compensation. Schumann v. Karrer, 184 Cal. 50, 57, 192 P. 849.

The measure of damages for torts, provided by section 3333 of the Civil Code, is ordinarily the same as that for the breach of contracts prescribed by section 3300 of the Civil Code. 8 Cal. Jur. 814; Siminoff v. Jas. H. Goodman & Co., 18 Cal. App. 5, 15, 121 P. 939. The following cases, some involving torts and other breaches of contract, are illustrative of the elements of damages to be considered: Moropoulos v. C. H. & O. B. Fuller Co., 186 Cal. 679, 200 P. 601; Schumann v. Karrer, supra; Hawthorne v. Siegel, 88 Cal. 159, 25 P. 1114, 22 Am. St. Rep. 291; Riechhold v. Sommarstrom Invest. Co., 83 Cal. App. 173, 256 P. 592; Lyle v. Seller, supra; Meyers v. Bradford, 54 Cal. App. 157, 201 P. 471.

[11] The defendant purchased the property at a sheriff's sale to satisfy a judgment in favor of the defendant herein against Joe Butco, the owner of the store building in which such property was situated. Powl testified that at the time of the sale the defendant asked him if he desired to purchase the property and that he replied: "I don't have to buy that, I got contract from Joe Butco for all fixtures here." The plaintiffs were in possession of the property at the time, and had been in possession of it for nearly two months before the sale. This evidence shows sufficient notice to defendant of the plaintiffs' right to the possession of the property.

COLEMAN v. FARWELL. (L. A. 9852.)

Supreme Court of California. March 29, 1929.

1. Appeal and error 🔑901, 1032(1)—Burden rests on complaining party not only to show error, but to show sufficient prejudice to justify reversal (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Under Const. art. 6, § 4½, prohibiting reversal for erroneous admission or rejection of evidence, unless court after examination of the entire cause is of opinion that error resulted in miscarriage of justice, burden rests upon party complaining not only to show error, but also to show that error is sufficiently prejudicial to justify reversal.

2. Appeal and error 🔑691—Error in admission or rejection of evidence cannot be declared prejudicial, when bill of exceptions does not contain all the evidence (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

In view of Const. art. 6, § 4½, prohibiting reversal unless error resulted in miscarriage of justice, errors in admission and rejection of evidence cannot be declared prejudicial, where bill of exceptions states that it does not contain all the evidence.

3. Appeal and error 🔑907(4)—It will be presumed that evidence omitted from bill of exceptions authorized findings, judgment, and decision.

Every intendment is in favor of findings, decision, and judgment, and, in support thereof, it will be presumed when bill of exceptions does not contain all the evidence that omitted evidence authorized the findings, etc., unless there is something in the record to overcome such presumption.

4. Appeal and error 🔑705—Allowance of $1,250 as attorney's fees in action on note for $5,000 cannot be held unreasonable, when record does not show extent of services.

Allowance of $1,250 as attorney's fees in action on note for $5,000, defended on ground of fraud and failure of consideration, while seemingly out of proportion to services required, cannot be held unreasonable where record does not disclose extent of services required and performed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hugh J. Crawford, Judge.

Action by R. B. Coleman against Lyman Farwell. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Winterer, Combs & Ritchie, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Odell S. McConnell and Bordwell, Mathews & Wadsworth, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHENK, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in an action on a promissory note in the principal sum of $5,000. The plaintiff was the payee and the defendant the maker. The defenses were fraud and failure of consideration. The court found in favor of the plaintiff on all issues raised by the pleadings. The record is presented in a bill of exceptions which contains the following stipulation: "It is hereby stipulated and agreed by and between the attorneys of the respective parties to the within entitled action, that the foregoing bill of exceptions contains only part of the evidence offered by both plaintiff and defendant and was prepared and served within the time allowed by law and the stipulations of the plaintiff." In settling the bill the trial judge made the following order: "The foregoing bill of exceptions contains only a part of the evidence offered by both plaintiff and defendant; there was, however, and the court so certifies, sufficient evidence to sustain the findings of the court and said bill was prepared and served and presented within the time allowed by law and the stipulations of plaintiff and defendant, and the part of the record and proceedings of the said action which is included in said bill of exceptions is true and correct and said bill of exceptions as modified by the statement in this certificate is this 24th day of March, 1927, settled and allowed."

[1-3] As grounds for reversal the defendant specifies numerous alleged erroneous rulings in the admission and rejection of evidence and error in denying his motion for a new trial. Some of the rulings, when considered in connection with the immediate context, would appear to be erroneous. It is considered unnecessary to enumerate them for the reason that error under our law is no longer deemed prejudicial. In order to justify the reversal of the judgment on the ground of erroneous admission or rejection of evidence, the reviewing court must be of the opinion, after an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice. Const. art. 6, § 4½. The burden rests upon the party complaining not only to show error but also to show that the error is sufficiently prejudicial to justify a reversal. 2 Cal. Jur. p. 1008 and cases cited. Confronted with the foregoing stipulation of counsel and the certificate of the trial judge reciting that the bill of exceptions contains only a part of the evidence offered by both the plaintiff and the defendant, and since, therefore, the record does not contain all of the evidence, we are unable to fulfill the constitutional requirement and declare that the errors complained of were prejudicial. See Foster v. Young, 172 Cal. 317, 156 P. 476. Every intendment is in favor of the findings, decision, and judgment, and in support thereof it will be presumed that the omitted evidence authorized the same unless there is something in the record to overcome the presumption. Owen v. Morton, 24 Cal. 373; 2 Cal. Jur. p. 852 et seq. For aught that appears in the record there may have been evidence of sufficient competency and weight to overcome any detriment caused by the erroneous rulings.

[4] The allowance of $1,250 as attorneys' fees is complained of as excessive. In an ordinary suit of this character and amount the allowance would seem to be out of proportion to the services required. One of the necessary elements entering into the proper allowance of attorney's fees is the service performed in the particular case. Here again the record does not disclose the extent of the service required and performed by counsel for plaintiff in this case. It is a matter of common experience that cases involving issues of fraud may require extensive preparation for trial and a protracted hearing. In the absence of a record showing what services were required by plaintiff's counsel, we cannot say that the allowance was unreasonable.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; PRESTON, J.; SEAWELL, J.; CURTIS, J.; LANGDON, J.

HARE et al. v. CRAIG. (L. A. 9344.)

Supreme Court of California. March 30, 1929.

1. Easements ⚿61(9½)—Finding that use was open, continuous, adverse, and under claim of right and with owner's acquiescence and knowledge held not to mean it was permissive.

In action to establish easement, finding that use of strip in question was open, continuous, uninterrupted, adverse, and under claim of right and with knowledge and acquiescence of defendants and their predecessors, did not mean that use was permissive or under license.

2. Easements ⚿16—Owner's use of paths or roadways cannot be adverse and give easement to subsequent purchasers of part of tract.

An owner's use of paths and roadways on his own land cannot be adverse or give right to easement of right of way in favor of subsequent purchasers of portion of tract.

3. Easements ⚿3(2)—Easement appurtenant to lots could not be acquired when there was no use in connection with such lots.

A right of way by prescription appurtenant to certain lots could not be acquired, where there was no use of the strip in question in connection with such lots.

4. Dedication ⚿20(3)—When public has traveled road without permission or objection by owner for five years, conclusive presumption of dedication arises.

When the public or such portion of the public as had occasion to use road has traveled over it for more than five years with owner's knowledge, without asking or receiving permission and without objection, conclusive presumption of dedication to public arises.

5. Easements ⚿36(3)—Evidence of use by public generally would not support finding that abutting owners acquired right of way by prescription.

In action to establish easement by prescription, evidence showing use of the strip in question by the public generally as a road for many years did not warrant finding that abutting owners gained private way appurtenant to their lands by prescriptive use.

6. Judgment ⚿249—Complaint on theory of private way appurtenant to lands would not support judgment on theory of dedication to public.

In action to establish easement by prescription, complaint, based on theory of private way appurtenant to plaintiffs' lands, would not sustain judgment on theory of dedication to public use as roadway.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

Action by E. A. Hare and others against Mary C. Craig. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Chas. D. Swanner and Roland Thompson, both of Santa Ana, for appellant.

Tipton & Cailor, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SEAWELL, J. Plaintiffs and respondents have failed to file a brief or to furnish the court with points and authorities in aid of their cause. Said plaintiffs brought the action to establish an easement by prescription to use as a right of way the whole of lots 9 and 10, block B, Baker's addition tract, town of Westminster, county of Orange, and to restrain defendant, Mary C. Craig, from obstructing or destroying said right of way. Defendant is the owner of the westerly 34 feet of the strip of land over which the right of way is claimed and of an undivided one-half interest in the remaining 16 feet of said land. Plaintiffs own land adjoining lots 9 and 10 on the west. Upon the trial it was conceded by defendant that a right of way existed over the easterly 16 feet of lots 9 and 10. The court below entered judgment for plaintiffs, decreeing the existence of a right of way over the entire strip of land, from which defendant appeals.

The complaint is in two counts, which are practically identical with the exception that in count 1 the use by which plaintiffs claim to have acquired a right of way by prescription is alleged to have commenced in 1910, and in count 2, 1877 is designated as the date of commencement. The court found, in language following the complaint almost word for word, that on or about June, 1877, the plaintiffs and their predecessors in interest commenced to occupy and use the strip of land over which the right of way is claimed for ingress and egress to their respective homes; "that said occupancy and use by the plaintiffs and their predecessors in interest was open, continuous, uninterrupted, adverse and under a claim of right and with the knowledge and acquiescence of the defendants and their predecessors in interest and estate; that the plaintiffs and their predecessors in interest and estate occupied and used said strip of land in the same manner and to the same extent that the said land had been occupied and used from the beginning (June 1877) and until on or about the 7th day of December, 1923, when the same was obstructed by defendants."

[1] Appellant here contends that the finding that the use of plaintiffs was with the "knowledge and acquiescence of defendant and her predecessors in interest and estate" is a finding that the use was permissive and not adverse. Although more appropriate language might well have been used, it is apparent from said finding, considered as a whole, that the object of this declaration was not to imply that the use was by license or permission, but, rather, that defendant and her predecessors had "acquiesced" in the sense that they had not committed acts which would interrupt the continuity of the adverse use and prevent the running of the statutory prescriptive period of limitations.

[3] In 1888 a map dividing the tract into residence lots was filed for record. At that date title to the lots over which the right of way is claimed and to the lots now owned by plaintiffs was vested in the same persons. In 1889 lot 11, to which plaintiff Marie L. Harris now claims title through mesne conveyances, was sold, and in 1892 lots 9 and 10, over which the right of way is claimed, were transferred; the ownership of lot 12 being retained. Thus, as to lot 11, 1889, rather than 1877, is the earliest date at which a prescriptive use could have been initiated by the predecessors in interest of plaintiff Marie L. Harris, and as to the southern half of lot 12, now owned by the Hares, 1892 is the earliest date. There is absolutely no showing, however, that the persons who owned the southern half of lot 12 prior to the time plaintiff E. A. Hare and his son acquired title by deed in 1910, occupied said lot 12, or made any use, adverse of otherwise, of lots 9 and 10 as a right of way. Plaintiff E. A. Hare testified that when he acquired the said property it was vacant land. This would tend to negative a use of lots 9 and 10 by the owners of the southern half of lot 12. Proof as to the use of lots 9 and 10 by the owners of lot 11 prior to the conveyance to Marie Larter Hare in 1912 is also lacking. A right of way by prescription appurtenant to said lot 11 and the southern half of lot 12 could not be established except by a use in connection with said lots.

[4] Although a continuous adverse use of a right of way for five years from the dates of acquisition of lot 11 and the southern half of lot 12 by members of the Hare family in 1912 and 1910, respectively, would be sufficient to establish a right by prescription, we are not disposed, as an appellate court, to make a finding as to the existence of a private right of way appurtenant to plaintiffs' lands, for it does not appear as a matter of law that a private right of way was thus acquired. There is evidence tending to establish a dedication to the public as a roadway, based on long user by the public of not only the easterly 16 feet of said lots but of the entire 50-foot strip, and a right in plaintiffs to use the roadway without interference as members of the public, rather than as owners of a private right of way appurtenant to land. When the public or such portion of the public as had occasion to use a road has traveled over it for a period of more than five years with full knowledge of the owner, without asking or receiving permission to do so and without objection being made by any one, a conclusive presumption of dedication to the public arises. Hartley v. Vermillion, 141 Cal. 339, 74 P. 987; Lantz v. City of Los Angeles, 185 Cal. 262, 196 P. 481; Leverone v. Weakley, 155 Cal. 395, 101 P. 304; Southern P. Co. v. City of Pomona, 144 Cal. 339, 77 P. 929; Schwerdtle v. County of Placer, 108 Cal. 589, 41 P. 448.

[5, 6] Lots 9 and 10 embrace a strip of land 50 feet in width by 314 feet in length, running through the center of block B from Almond boulevard, the main street of Westminster, on the south, to a public street on the north which is not named in the record. At the time McCoy owned the entire tract, between 1873 and 1887, there was a path on the easterly 34 feet of said lots bounded by a row of cypress trees on each side and a wagon road on each side of the trees. Witnesses for plaintiffs testified that the entire 50-foot area was used by the public generally as a road. One of said witnesses remembered the roadway from 1877, and others were familiar with it from early dates. Said witnesses had used the roadway and never knew of any permission having been obtained from the owners or of any objection having been made to its use. When plaintiff E. A. Hare purchased the south one-half of lot 12, lots 9 and 10 appeared to constitute a public street, and he built his house with the front facing said lots. During his ownership the public generally had used the lots as a roadway, he testified. O. J. Day, who conducted a grocery store facing on Almond boulevard on the lot adjoining lot 9 on the east, testified that he had lately discovered that the two lots were privately owned, but had not known this for many years.

In the face of this evidence we cannot find that plaintiffs gained a private way appurtenant to their lands by prescriptive use commencing in 1910 as to the southern one-half of lot 12, and 1912 as to lot 11. The complaint as it now stands is based on the theory of a private way appurtenant to plaintiff's lands, and would not sustain a judgment based on the theory of dedication to the public use as a roadway.

Judgment reversed.

SMELLIE et al. v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO. et al. (Sac. 4057.)★

Supreme Court of California. March 26, 1929.

Rehearing Granted April 25, 1929.

1. Automobiles 🔑224(1)—Guest in automobile must act as reasonably prudent man.

Though negligence of driver of automobile is not imputed to guest, guest must act as reasonably prudent man would act in similar circumstances.

2. Automobiles 🔑224(4)—Railroads 🔑327(12)—Guest in automobile, stating to driver, "It's all clear; let's go," held contributorily negligent as to injury received in crossing collision.

In action against railroad and driver of automobile for death of guest in car, resulting from collision at crossing, deceased, who made statement to driver after freight train had passed, "It's all clear; let's go," held contributorily negligent as matter of law.

3. Evidence 🔑591—Testimony of driver of automobile, called as adverse party in action for death at crossing, that deceased guest made statement, "It's all clear; let's go," held admissible and binding on plaintiff, where not rebutted (Code Civ. Proc. § 2055).

In action against railroad and driver of automobile for death of driver's guest at crossing, testimony of driver under examination as adverse party under Code Civ. Proc. § 2055, that guest made statement, "It's all clear; let's go," held admissible and binding on plaintiff, where not rebutted.

4. Automobiles 🔑224(5)—Guest in automobile is not relieved from contributory negligence where he encourages driver to take obviously hazardous risks.

While guest in automobile is not chargeable with contributory negligence of driver, guest is not immune where he acquiesces in or encourages and advises taking risks which are obviously hazardous to his own personal security and safety.

6. Trial 🔑139(1)—Court should direct verdict in defendant's favor, where verdict for plaintiffs would have to be set aside.

Where trial court is of opinion that verdict for plaintiffs would have to be set aside, court is under duty to direct verdict in defendant's favor.

7. Railroads 🔑344(10)—Railroad's allegation that injuries were caused solely by negligence of deceased and another was insufficient plea of contributory negligence, in action for death.

In action against driver and railroad for death of guest in automobile, allegation in railroad's answer that injuries were caused solely because of negligence of driver and deceased was insufficient plea of contributory negligence.

8. Appeal and error 🔑197(5)—Objection raised for first time on appeal, that no issue of contributory negligence was raised by pleadings, held unavailing.

Where, in action for death, evidence on issue of contributory negligence was introduced without objection that it was inadmissible under pleadings, and no such objection was raised in argument upon motions for directed verdict and nonsuits, objection raised for first time on appeal was unavailing.

Curtis, J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Madera County; S. L. Strother, Judge.

Action by Lillie D. Smellie and others against the Southern Pacific Company and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

For opinion in department, see 269 P. 657.

W. M. Conley, Philip Conley, and Matthew Conley, all of Fresno, for appellants.

L. L. Cory, of Fresno, Cooley, Crowley & Gallagher and Cooley & Gallagher, all of San Francisco, Gallaher & Jertberg, of Fresno, and H. I. Maxim, of Madera, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This case was originally decided in department. Because of the filing of persuasive petitions for hearing in bank, largely devoted to the question whether or not the disputable presumption "that a person takes ordinary care of his own concerns" (section 1963, subd. 4, Code Civ. Proc.) created a conflict on an issue of fact as between said presumption and the direct testimony given by the witness Ireland, a hearing in bank was granted. On a re-examination of the cause and a particularly careful consideration of the point just referred to, the court is of the view that the appeal was properly decided by the department. For that reason, the opinion heretofore written by Mr. Justice SEAWELL as the department opinion is adopted as the decision of the court in bank, viz.:

This appeal is taken from a judgment for defendants upon a directed verdict returned by the jury in an action brought by the widow and four minor sons of Robert S. Smellie, deceased, to recover damages for the death of said decedent, who was killed when the automobile truck in which he was riding as the guest of defendant L. Ireland, the driver and owner thereof, was struck by a train of defendant Southern Pacific Company. The court held at the conclusion of plaintiffs' case that the evidence established as a matter of law contributory negligence on the part of said decedent, and directed a verdict to be returned in favor of defendants. The correctness of this ruling is here challenged.

The accident occurred at about 5 o'clock p. m. on June 25, 1926, in the city of Madera. The truck in which decedent was riding, and which was being driven by defendant Ireland, was of the Reo manufacture, and was used by Ireland in a general trucking business conducted by him. Ireland was called by plaintiffs as their witness under the provisions of section 2055, Code of Civil Procedure. He testified that he turned off the state highway, on which he had been traveling in a northerly direction, into Ninth street. The situs of the accident seems to have been in an outlying district of the city of Madera. He proceeded easterly on Ninth street to a point between 20 and 25 feet from the westerly rail of a side track of defendant Southern Pacific Company which intersects Ninth street, and there brought his car to a stop to permit a freight train to pass. No signal of any kind was maintained at the intersection. The freight train was moving south at a speed of 5 or 6 miles an hour, and 6 or 8 cars remained to pass the intersection when Ireland brought his truck to a stop. East of the side track and parallel thereto was the main line track of the Southern Pacific Company. The distance between the center line of the side track and the center line of the main track was 13 feet. Both Ireland and decedent had resided in Madera for many years, and Ireland testified as to his familiarity with the crossing. Doubtless the decedent was also generally familiar with existing conditions. The moment the caboose, which was the rear car of the freight train, cleared the crossing, Ireland started his truck and crossed the side track, and, in an attempt to cross the main track, the autotruck was struck by the Fresno Flyer, north bound, which was traveling on the main track at a rate of speed estimated to be about 55 miles an hour. The accident happened so quickly that not more than an interval of a second intervened between the time Ireland saw the train and the time his truck was hit by it. He looked before starting, but the outgoing freight train blocked a view of the main track, and consequently his view to the south was obstructed, and he did not see the approaching passenger train. He listened, but did not hear the passenger train because of the noise made by the passing freight train. The distance which the passenger train traveled before it could be brought to a stop furnishes some evidence as to the speed at which it was moving. Upon cross-examination by counsel for the codefendant Southern Pacific Company, Ireland testified that both he and Smellie looked before Ireland started the truck, and Smellie, who was seated by his side, said, "It's all clear; let's go." The testimony of Ireland was not contradicted by that of any other witness. Respondents did not offer any evidence in their own behalf, but, upon the conclusion of plaintiffs' case, made motions for nonsuits and directed verdicts, and the court granted the motions for directed verdicts, upon which the judgment appealed from was entered.

[1, 2] We are of the view that the evidence is susceptible of no reasonable interpretation under the rule of this state, but that as a matter of law decedent was contributorily negligent in advising Ireland to go forward when he made the remark, "It's all clear; let's go;" and hence we must sustain the action of the court below in taking the case from the jury and directing a verdict for defendants. Respondents do not contend that the negligence of Ireland was imputable to decedent, his guest. Decedent, however, was himself bound to act as a reasonably prudent man would act in similar circumstances. This is not a case where the guest, reposing complete confidence in the driver, fails himself to note the situation of possible danger, nor is it a case where a guest, observing an imminent and suddenly approaching peril, remains silent in the realization that the highest degree of prudence may consist in inaction, rather than meddlesome interference. The guest, being as fully aware of the circumstances creating the peril as was the driver, assumed to advise the driver that he could proceed in safety, and thereby consented to accept the risk to be encountered. It must be held that he has brought the misfortune upon himself, and that he can recover neither from the driver nor the third party whose negligence concurred in causing the collision. Ireland and the decedent were acquaintances, and the latter had been riding with the former for several hours prior to the accident. They had discussed the hauling of some freight which the decedent had in contemplation. At the moment of the accident, they were engaged in casual conversation as they awaited the passing of the freight train. We are unable to give any other construction to the request or advisory remark made by the decedent, "It's all clear; let's go," than that, whatever risk there might be in attempting to cross the railroad tracks, decedent was willing to assume and share it with Ireland. It amounted to the assumption of responsibility for all consequences that might flow from the attempt to cross the railroad tracks. Appellants suggest that said statement made by the decedent should be limited to the crossing of the first track or switch, and not to the main track. There can be no doubt that decedent was aware of the existence of the two parallel tracks, and that said remark applied to the situation as it was presented by the physical fact. Besides, it would have been indulging in folly for decedent to have advised Ireland as to the obvious condition of the track over which the train had just passed.

[3] It is strongly insisted by appellants that the statement or remark attributed to decedent should not have been considered for any purpose. We cannot agree with this contention. Ireland was called to the stand to show the circumstances of the accident. We do not understand it to be the rule that that portion of a transaction which is favorable to a party calling a witness may be inquired into and his adversary denied the right to elicit other parts of the identical transaction which may put a different aspect upon the case. Certainly section 2055, Code of Civil Procedure, was not intended to work any such result. We think the remark formed a material part of the transaction, if it is not indeed in the nature of res gestæ. Ireland was asked by plaintiffs if decedent was not his guest, and he replied that he was. This alone entitled the defendants to bring out the fact as to whether decedent by his participation in the movement of the truck had not taken himself out of the class into which Ireland, by his conclusion, had placed him.

The effect of testimony elicited under the provisions of section 2055, Code of Civil Procedure, was clearly stated in Figari v. Olcese, 184 Cal. 775, 195 P. 425, 15 A. L. R. 192, as follows:

> "There is no merit in appellant's objection that no testimony was taken in behalf of defendants, because of the fact that the defendants were called only as plaintiff's witnesses. Section 2055, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that a party calling and examining as a witness an adverse party 'shall not be bound by his testimony' and that the testimony of such adverse witness 'may be rebutted by the party calling him.' This provision does not mean that such testimony may not be given its proper weight, but merely, as it declares, that the party calling such witness shall not be concluded from rebutting his testimony, or from impeaching the witness. Dravo v. Fabel, 132 U. S. 487, 33 L. Ed. 421, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 170, see, also, Rose's U. S. Notes. In other words, such testimony is to be treated as though given on cross-examination."

See, also, Goehring v. Rogers, 67 Cal. App. 253, 227 P. 687; Gates v. Pendleton, 71 Cal. App. 752, 236 P. 365.

No attempt was made to impeach Ireland or to rebut his testimony. But, if it be conceded that, strictly speaking, the testimony objected to should not have been considered by the court as a part of the plaintiffs' case, it was admissible as a part of the defendants' case, and its effect, irrespective of order, was fatal to plaintiffs. We are of the opinion, however, that it was properly before the court and jury for consideration.

[4] The law as declared in Smith v. Maine Central R. R. Co., 87 Me. 339, 32 A. 967, is strikingly applicable to the facts of the instant case. The rule is well settled that a guest is not responsible or chargeable with the contributory negligent acts of the driver of an automobile. This rule, however, does not offer him immunity from culpability in cases where he acquiesces in or encourages and advises the encountering of risks which are obviously hazardous to his personal security and safety, such as no reasonably prudent person should assume.

[5, 6] Appellants contend that the disputable presumption "that a person takes ordinary care of his own concerns" (section 1963, subd. 4, Code Civ. Proc.), created a conflict on an issue of fact as between said presumption and the direct testimony given by witness Ireland to the effect that the directions or advice were given to him to move the truck forward, and that said issue should have been submitted to the jury. As against positive testimony, this was but a bare presumption, not supported or fortified by any independent fact in the case. "Disputable * * * presumptions, while evidence, are evidence the weakest and least satisfactory. They are allowed to stand, not against the facts they represent, but in lieu of proof of them. The fact being proven contrary to the presumption, no conflict arises; the presumption is simply overcome and dispelled." Savings & L. Soc. v. Burnett, 106 Cal. 514, 39 P. 922. The trial court having heard the witness Ireland testify and having observed his manner was unquestionably of the opinion that, should the jury return a verdict in favor of the plaintiffs, it would be its bounden duty to set the verdict aside. This being so, under a long line of decisions of this state, the trial court was acting in the purview of its duty when it directed the jury to return a verdict in favor of the defendants. We cannot say, in the circumstances of the case, that the court's direction was not fully sustained by the case as presented.

[7, 8] Further, it is argued that the motions for directed verdicts on the ground of contributory negligence of the deceased were improperly granted because contributory negligence was not made an issue by the pleadings. It must be conceded that the allegation, that the injuries were caused solely and alone because of the negligence and want of care of the driver of the truck and the decedent was an insufficient plea of contributory negligence. Crabbe v. Mammoth Channel G. Min. Co., 168 Cal. 500, 143 P. 714; Hughes v. Warman Steel Casting Co., 174 Cal. 556, 163 P. 885; Off v. Crump, 40 Cal. App. 173, 180 P. 360. However, evidence relevant to the issue of contributory negligence was introduced without objection on the part of plaintiffs that it was inadmissible under the pleadings because contributory negligence was not properly pleaded, and upon argument of the motions for directed verdicts and nonsuits no question was raised on behalf of plaintiffs as to the defective plea of the issue, but, on the contrary, it was assumed that it was involved in the case. Where the defense of contributory negligence is considered as properly pleaded throughout the trial, an objection for the first time on appeal that no such issue was made by the pleadings will not be of any avail to the objecting party. Western States, etc., Co. v. Bayside L. Co., 182 Cal. 140, 187 P. 735; Schuh v. Herron Co., 177 Cal. 13, 169 P. 682; Coffman v. Singh, 49 Cal. App. 342, 193 P. 259. Ireland at the conclusion of the evidence was granted leave to set up the defense of contributory negligence on the part of the deceased. Defendant Southern Pacific Company attempted to plead by its answer contributory negligence on the part of both Ireland and the deceased. Its answer alleged that the accident was caused "solely and alone" by the contributory negligence of said Ireland and deceased. No objection was taken by demurrer or motion as to the insufficiency of said allegation, and no specific objection was made by plaintiff as to the admission of the evidence on the ground that contributory negligence had not been sufficiently pleaded, but it was resisted by plaintiffs on other grounds. No doubt the court would have permitted an amendment which would have cured the defective pleading had the plaintiffs made the point.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

PASADENA CITY HIGH SCHOOL DIST. OF LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al. v. UPJOHN, County Superintendent of Schools et al. (S. F. 13245.)

Supreme Court of California. March 30, 1929.

1. Statutes 🔑64(4)—Invalidity of exception in statute as to transportation of school pupils would invalidate statute (Pol. Code, § 1741, as amended by St. 1927, p. 676; Const. art. 1, § 21).

Under Pol. Code, § 1741, as amended by St. 1927, p. 676, authorizing high school districts to provide for transportation of pupils, except pupils living within limits of city, invalidity of the exception, under Const. art. 1, § 21 prohibiting grants of privileges and immunities, would destroy the whole grant of power, as there is no indication that Legislature would have enacted the section without the exception.

2. Schools and school districts 🔑159½—High school district containing two cities may provide for transportation of pupils living in city in which no high school is maintained (Pol. Code, § 1741, as amended by St. 1927, p. 676).

Under Pol. Code, § 1741, as amended by St. 1927, p. 676, authorizing high school district to provide for transportation of pupils, except pupils living within limits of city, district containing two cities, in one of which there is no high school, may provide for transportation of pupils living in the city having no high school, as well as pupils living in unincorporated territory.

3. Schools and school districts 🔑90—Statute authorizing transportation of pupils does not violate constitutional provision against gifts of public money (Const. art. 4, § 31; Pol. Code, §§ 1610, 1764b, and § 1741, as amended by St. 1927, p. 676).

Political Code § 1741, as amended by St. 1927, p. 676, authorizing high school districts to provide for transportation of pupils, is not invalid as providing for gift of public money or thing of value in violation of Const. art. 4, § 31, in view of prior provisions of Pol. Code, §§ 1610, 1741, 1764b, providing for transportation of pupils.

4. Constitutional law 🔑208(3)—Schools and school districts 🔑159½—Statute authorizing high school districts to provide for transportation of pupils, except pupils living in cities, does not provide invalid classification (Pol. Code, § 1741, as amended by St. 1927, p. 676).

Political Code, § 1741, as amended by St. 1927, p. 676, authorizing high school districts to provide for transportation of pupils, except pupils living within limits of city, does not provide unconstitutional classification, though some pupils within city may be farther from school than pupils living outside city.

In Bank.

Original application by Pasadena City High School District of Los Angeles County and another against H. S. Upjohn, as County Superintendent of Schools of the County of Los Angeles, and another. Writ granted.

Cruickshank, Brooke & Evans, of Pasadena, for petitioner the Pasadena City High School Dist.

Frank Karr, C. W. Cornell, and R. E. Wedekind, all of Los Angeles, for petitioner Pacific Electric Ry. Co.

Everett W. Mattoon, Co. Counsel, and Claude H. McFadden, Deputy Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHENK, J. The Pasadena city high school district of Los Angeles county and Pacific Electric Railway Company have joined in a petition for a writ of mandamus to compel the respondents, as superintendent of schools and auditor, respectively, of the county of Los Angeles, to approve and issue certain warrants ordered by the school board of the high school district in favor of the railway company.

The facts are undisputed. The Pasadena city high school district comprises the territory included within the cities of Pasadena and Sierra Madre and unincorporated territory between and separating said cities. The high school district maintains high schools within the city of Pasadena, including a four-year high school located on Colorado street between Hill avenue and Sierra Bonita avenue in said city. No high school is maintained within the limits of the city of Sierra Madre. The Pacific Electric Railway Company is a common carrier of passengers for hire, and operates an electric interurban street car and motor coach system, a portion of which is located within the urban and rural territory comprising the high school district. On August 15, 1927, the school board of the high school district and the railway company entered into a contract for the transportation of pupils residing in the high school district to and from the high schools maintained by the district, including the transportation of pupils residing in the city of Sierra Madre, to and from the Colorado street high school in the city of Pasadena. This contract by its terms was to continue until the end of the school year on June 30, 1928. Pursuant to said contract the high school board called upon the railway company to transport pupils who had their homes within said district, including the pupils residing in the city of Sierra Madre to and from the Colorado street high school, and the transportation was furnished accordingly. In due time the railway company presented to the high school board statements of the cost of such transportation in accordance with published tariffs on file with the railroad commission. Statements covering the cost of transportation of pupils residing within the corporate limits of the city of Sierra Madre, dated March 21, April 21, May 21, 1928, and in the amounts of $252.72, $203.58, and $177.21, respectively, were presented by the railway company to the high school board. Included also within each of said statements were many items covering the transportation of pupils residing within the unincorporated territory of the district. The board approved said statements, and issued its orders for requisitions upon the county superintendent of schools, and requisitions upon the county auditor for warrants upon the county treasurer for payment of the demands of the railway company. The superintendent and auditor refused to approve and allow said warrants in so far as they included items for the transportation of pupils residing in the city of Sierra Madre. Following this refusal, the high school board and the railway company, under date of September 7, 1928, entered into a contract for the transportation of pupils residing within the district, but outside of the limits of incorporated cities to and from said Pasadena high school. It thus appears that the high school board is holding in abeyance the exercise of the power, if it has such power, to provide further transportation for pupils residing in Sierra Madre until the determination of this matter.

The question presented by the petition is this: Has the board of education of the Pasadena city high school district the power to provide, at the expense of the district, transportation for high school pupils residing in Sierra Madre to and from said Pasadena city high school? The petitioners contend for the existence of such power because of the alleged unconstitutionality of an exception incorporated in section 1741 of the Political Code added by amendment in 1927 (Stats. 1927, p. 676). The respondents deny the existence of the power because of the presence in the statute of the exception and for other reasons.

The pertinent portion of said section 1741 as amended is as follows: "The high school board of any high school district may provide, in such manner as they deem best, for the transportation to and from the high school of such pupils thereof, except pupils living within the limits of any city, as such board find to be in need of such transportation; and the cost of such transportation shall be deemed a part of the cost of maintaining the high school and paid accordingly." Prior to the amendment in 1927 that portion of said section 1741 provided as follows: "The high school board of any county, union or joint union high school district may provide, in such manner as they deem best, for the transportation to and from the high school of such pupils thereof as such board find to be in need of such transportation; and the cost of such transportation shall be deemed a part of the cost of maintaining the high school and paid accordingly." Stats. 1915, p. 769. It will thus be seen that the amendment of 1927 enlarged the scope of the section so as to confer like power on boards of city high school districts, but at the same time, by the insertion of the proviso, "except pupils living within the limits of any city," the Legislature sought to withhold from the school board the power to provide transportation for all high school students wherever residing, and to include within the grant of power the authority to provide transportation for those pupils only who reside within unincorporated territory within the district. In this connection the petitioners allege that the nearest boundary of the city of Sierra Madre to said Pasadena city high school is approximately five miles distant therefrom; that the greater part of the city of Sierra Madre is at least six miles from said high school; and that many of the high school pupils having their homes in the unincorporated area within the district reside at points approximately the same distance from the high school as the pupils residing in the city of Sierra Madre. It is therefore argued by the petitioners that, since no high schools are maintained in the unincorporated area available to pupils residing in the city of Sierra Madre, nor in the city of Sierra Madre, the pupils in both areas are in precisely the same situation with reference to accessibility to said high school, and that the operation of the exception in its literal terms is to permit a privilege to be granted to the pupils in the unincorporated area which is not accorded to pupils similarly situated in the city of Sierra Madre, in violation of section 21 of article I of the Constitution, which provides that no citizen or class of citizens shall be granted privileges or immunities which, upon the same terms, shall not be granted to all citizens. It is accordingly argued that the entire exception is void, and should be disregarded.

[1, 2] We cannot so conclude. Assuming for the moment that the entire exception be void, its invalidity would destroy the whole grant of power, for there is no indication that the Legislature would have enacted the amended section without including the exception. See Bacon Service Corporation v. Huss, 199 Cal. 21, 248 P. 235; Mordecai v. Board of Supervisors, 183 Cal. 434, 192 P. 40. On the contrary, the character of the legislation plainly indicates that it was not the intention of the Legislature to permit free transportation to be afforded to all high school pupils regardless of the proximity of their homes to the high school if the exception should be held invalid. The obvious legislative intent was to authorize the transportation of pupils residing within the district, but residing outside of the limits of the city in which a high school is maintained and where no high school advantages are afforded such pupils in the territory of their residence. Considered literally the exception in its operation would seem to discriminate unlawfully in favor of pupils residing in the unincorporated area and against pupils similarly situated residing in the city of Sierra Madre. This discrimination would destroy the whole grant unless it may be said that the exception, when read in the light of the context and the subject-matter of the legislation, was not intended to, and does not in fact, operate as a discrimination between pupils residing outside of the city maintaining the high school. We are of the view that there is such uncertainty as to the application, meaning, and effect of the exception as to warrant us in declaring that it does not apply to pupils residing in territory outside of the city maintaining the high school, whether such territory be incorporated or unincorporated. When so construed, the conditions that must exist in order that the power to provide transportation be exercised are that the pupils receiving the same shall reside in territory within the district but without the boundaries of the city maintaining the high school, and that in such outside territory there is no high school which in the opinion of the board affords high school advantages required by the pupils for whom the transportation is furnished.

[3] The contention of the respondents, that the furnishing of transportation as authorized by the statute is a gift of public money or thing of value in contravention of section 31 of article 4 of the Constitution, cannot be maintained. The state has a vital interest in the education of its youth. It furnishes free instruction, free text-books, and supplies, and builds and maintains buildings representing large investments. It recognizes the public duty to provide adequate and accessible school facilities not only for those who reside in populous centers, but also for those who reside in sparsely settled communities. The tendency to combine and enlarge high school districts in the interest of economy and proficiency is recognized. It seems reasonable to assume that training in our schools may best be accomplished by such centralization of educational facilities, and that greater economy may result by transporting the pupils residing in sparsely settled communities to a central high school than to expend large and perhaps unwarranted sums of money in constructing numerous high schools in such outlying sections. Our laws have provided for transportation to be given to school children for many years as a maintenance cost (section 1610, Pol. Code, Stats. 1917, p. 739; section 1741, Pol. Code, Stats. 1909, p. 486; section 1764b, Pol. Code, Stats. 1921, p. 734). This has been done without question in the courts of this state on the ground that such provision is unconstitutional as a gift. In Veterans' Welfare Board v. Riley, 189 Cal. at page 161, 208 P. 679, 22 A. L. R. 1531, it was stated: "The plan of transporting school pupils to and from their homes, particularly in large union districts, is quite common in this state, and is expressly authorized by statute [citing the sections of the Political Code above noted]. * * * The validity of these sections of the code has not been questioned in the courts of this state."

[4] The respondents concede and contend that, if the section (1741, Pol. Code) does not authorize the making of a gift of public money, it is general in its application, and therefore valid in its entirety, including the exception, for the reason that by the selection of those pupils who reside in the unincorporated territory as the specially privileged ones and by the denial of like privileges to those residing in cities, proper classifications have resulted within well-recognized rules interpreting the constitutional provision. We cannot go to the full length contended for. The character of the territory as incorporated on the one hand and unincorporated on the other is one, but not the sole, determinative factor in the classification. The question of the availability of high school facilities and advantages must also be taken into consideration. When these two factors are considered, and the statute is construed as above indicated, we find two classifications of pupils resulting from the legislation, viz.: Those residing in the city of Pasadena in one class, and those residing in the unincorporated area of the district and the city of Sierra Madre in the other. The question is then presented whether such classification is valid. On this point the petitioners allege that some of the pupils residing within the limits of the city of Pasadena travel a greater distance to the Pasadena city high school than some of the pupils who reside in the unincorporated area and in the city of Sierra Madre. In answer the respondents allege that additional high schools are maintained by the district, six of which are maintained within the city of Pasadena in addition to the Pasadena city high school, and which are more conveniently accessible to the pupils living in the city of Pasadena who now attend the Pasadena city high school. It must be assumed that the Legislature took into consideration the well-known fact that high schools maintained in cities are usually more accessible to pupils residing therein than to pupils residing without said cities. Because of the frequent irregularity of city boundary lines, it may at times be demonstrable that such is not the case in particular instances. But we think the classification is entitled to be tested by the conditions which usually and ordinarily exist. On this basis there would seem to be a reasonable distinction between those who live within the city where the high school is maintained and who have access to the school without transportation and those who live in outlying and more inaccessible portions of the district and require transportation. It cannot be said that under such circumstances the Legislature may not provide for transportation to the latter and deny it to the former.

The peremptory writ should therefore issue directing the respondents to approve and issue warrants for the payment of the claims presented by the petitioners covering the cost of transporting the high school pupils who reside in the city of Sierra Madre to and from said Pasadena city high school pursuant to the contract under which said transportation was furnished.

It is so ordered.

TAKEUCHI v. SCHMUCK et ux.

(L. A. 9375.)

Supreme Court of California. April 1, 1929.

1. Aliens ⚷16—Presumption of intent to evade Alien Land Law arises where transferee is eligible to own realty, if deposit is made by ineligible alien, and balance is also payable by latter (Alien Land Law 1921, § 9(a)(c), amended by St. 1923, p. 1020, § 8).

Though transfer of realty under land contract is not actually consummated by a conveyance, a presumption of intent to evade the Alien Land Law 1921 (St. 1921, p. lxxxiii) arises under section 9(a)(c), amended by St. 1923, p. 1020, § 8, where transferee is eligible to own property if the payment of deposit on account of purchase price is made by ineligible alien and balance of said price is also to be paid by said ineligible alien.

2. Contracts ⚷141(3)—Evidence held to show vendors were parties to conspiracy to evade alien land law, and rights of parties were determinable as between persons in pari delicto (Alien Land Law 1923; Pen. Code, § 31).

In action by American citizen of Japanese parentage to recover deposit on purchase price of realty and taxes paid thereon, which purchase was never consummated, evidence held sufficient to establish that vendors were parties to conspiracy to violate Alien Land Law (St. 1923, p. 1020) by conveying to person eligible to hold legal title with knowledge that entire beneficial interest vested in alien ineligible to citizenship, and that they were therefore principals in offense denounced by such act under Pen. Code, § 31, and rights of parties to transaction were therefore to be determined as between persons in pari delicto.

3. Contracts ⚷138(1)—Courts will not aid enforcement of contracts involving performance of acts against public policy.

Courts will not compel parties to perform contracts which have for their object performance of acts against sound public policy, either by decreeing specific performance or awarding damages for breach.

4. Contracts ⚷138(3)—Purchaser participating in conspiracy to evade Alien Land Law could not maintain action to recover deposit on purchase price and taxes paid (Alien Land Law 1923).

Where parties to land contract had conspired to violate the Alien Land Law (St. 1923, p. 1020), and by so doing had rendered themselves liable to criminal prosecution, purchaser could not recover deposit on account of purchase price nor taxes paid by her, though action therefor was based on an avoidance or rescission of illegal contract.

5. Vendor and purchaser ⚷39—Contract to transfer land in violation of Alien Land Law does not contemplate lawful object (Alien Land Law 1923).

A contract having for its object the transfer of land in violation of Alien Land Law (St. 1923, p. 1020), which expressly provides that conspiracies to violate its provisions are punishable by fine and imprisonment, cannot be said to contemplate a lawful object.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William C. Doran, Judge.

Action by Haruko Takeuchi against A. F. Schmuck and wife. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. Marion Wright, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Reay, Scharf & Reay, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SEAWELL, J. Plaintiff, a native-born American citizen of Japanese parentage, brought this action to recover the sum of $500 paid by her as a deposit on account of the purchase of real property in the city of Los Angeles for residence purposes, which purchase was never consummated, and also to recover the sum of $105, alleged to have been expended by her in payment of taxes on said property for the fiscal year 1923–1924, in accordance with her agreement with the seller.

[1] The trial court denied recovery to plaintiff on the theory that plaintiff's father paid the amount of the deposit and taxes in the accomplishment of an illegal conspiracy between the father and the daughter, a minor 17 years of age, whereby legal title to the said property should be held by the daughter, but the entire beneficial interest vested in the father, an alien ineligible to citizenship, in violation of the provisions of the Alien Land Law. Stats. 1923, p. 1020; In re Akado, 188 Cal. 739, 207 P. 245. The court's finding that the father paid the deposit and taxes, and that plaintiff and her father had conspired to violate the provisions of the Alien Land Law must be upheld. Section 9a of the act provides that a prima facie presumption that a conveyance of property, colorable in form, is made with intent to prevent, evade, or avoid escheat shall arise upon proof of the taking of the property in the name of a person other than an alien ineligible to citizenship, if the consideration is paid, or agreed or understood to be paid, by an alien ineligible to citizenship, and section 9c, that the enumeration of the presumptions set forth in section 9 shall not be so construed as to preclude other presumptions or inferences that reasonably may be made as to the existence of intent to prevent, evade, or avoid escheat as provided for therein. We are of the view that, although the transfer is not actually consummated by a conveyance, a presumption of intent to evade the law arises where the transferee is eligible to own real property if the payment of the deposit on account of the purchase price is made by an ineligible alien, and the balance of said price is also to be paid by said ineligible alien. The validity of section 9, and its application in other actions than escheat proceedings brought by the state, was upheld in People v. Cockrill, 62 Cal. App. 22, 216 P. 78, affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States in 268 U. S. 258, 45 S. Ct. 490, 69 L. Ed. 944. The evidence relied upon by plaintiff as overcoming the presumption of illegality and proving that plaintiff was to be the beneficial owner of the property by virtue of a gift from her father may, in the circumstances of the situation, have been sufficient reason to arouse the suspicions of the trial judge. Such testimony, weighed down with the inherent improbabilities, could not be held to be sufficient to compel a finding of lawful intent.

[2] With the court's conclusion that neither defendant A. F. Schmuck nor defendant Theresa A. Schmuck, his wife, were parties to the said conspiracy, we cannot concur. Schmuck testified upon cross-examination that he was dealing directly with the father, and knew it was against the law for the father to buy the property; that the girl did not have the money; that he knew the title was being taken in the girl's name "to get around the law"; and that plaintiff and her father were violating the law, but he did not know it was a violation of law for him to participate in an unlawful transaction. It is difficult to credit such a profession, and he is precluded from protesting innocence by virtue of section 31, Penal Code, which provides that all persons concerned in the commission of a crime, whether they directly commit the act or aid and abet in its commission, are principals in any crime so committed. The rights of the parties must therefore be determined as between persons in pari delicto.

The terms of the contemplated purchase, as set forth in a deposit receipt, dated November 21, 1923, and executed by the defendant in favor of plaintiff, were that the purchase price should be $14,350, plaintiff to pay $500 as a deposit, the receipt of which was acknowledged, and an additional $3,500 upon the transfer of title, and to execute mortgages or deeds of trust for the balance, and pay taxes to July 1, 1924. The parties selected California Trust Company, a banking corporation, as an escrow holder, and a check for $2,395, which was drawn by plaintiff's father, as were the checks with which the $500 deposit and taxes were paid, was deposited in the escrow. When the deal did not go through, the bank returned a check payable to the joint order of plaintiff and her father for said sum of $2,395. Two small residences were located upon the property, and there was space for a third residence. Possession was never delivered to plaintiff or her father. According to plaintiff, the deal was not consummated, because as a minor she was unable to make a valid contract or execute notes and mortgages in favor of the seller. Other testimony, however, indicates that neither plaintiff nor her father, as purchasers, nor defendants, as sellers, persisted in their efforts to effect a transfer because of the unwillingness of the bank as an escrow holder and the title insurance company, which was to insure title to the property, to participate in a transaction which so strongly appeared to be tainted with illegality. Plaintiff testified that she asked for a return of the money soon after the transaction was abandoned. Defendant Schmuck denied any demand being made upon him until August, 1924, and testified that he told plaintiff at that time that he did not have the money.

[3, 4] It has long been a rule of law that courts will not compel parties to perform contracts which have for their object the performance of acts against sound public policy either by decreeing specific performance or awarding damages for breach. Pacific Wharf Co. v. Standard American Dredging Co., 184 Cal. 21, 192 P. 847; Howell v. City of Hamburg Co., 165 Cal. 172, 131 P. 130; Colby v. Title Ins. and Trust Co., 160 Cal. 632, 117 P. 913, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 813, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 515; Union Collection Co. v. Buckman, 150 Cal. 159, 88 P. 708, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 568, 119 Am. St. Rep. 164, 11 Ann. Cas. 609; Demartini v. Anderson, 127 Cal. 33, 59 P. 207; Berka v. Woodward, 125 Cal. 119, 57 P. 777, 45 L. R. A. 420, 73 Am. St. Rep. 31; Chateau v. Singla, 114 Cal. 91, 45 P. 1015, 33 L. R. A. 750, 55 Am. St. Rep. 63. This rule is not generally applied to secure justice between parties who have made an illegal contract, but from regard for a higher interest—that of the public, whose welfare demands that certain transactions be discouraged. Pacific Wharf Co. v. Standard American Dredging Co., supra; Berka v. Woodward, supra. In the instant case the action is not based upon an affirmance of the illegal contract by seeking specific performance or damages for breach, but on an avoidance or rescission thereof; the object of plaintiff being to recover a deposit made, and thus restore the status quo. Nevertheless, the parties had conspired to effect a transfer in violation of the provisions of the act, and by so doing had rendered themselves amenable to criminal prosecution. The cause of action arises from an illegal transaction. The gravity of the offense is indicated by the severity of the penalty attached, which is imprisonment in the county jail or state penitentiary not exceeding two years or a fine not exceeding $5,000, or both.

Since the first Alien Land Law was enacted in 1913 (Stats. 1913, p. 206), the law has been frequently amended by the Legislatūre and by the people through the exercise of the initiative prerogative, with the object of increasing the difficulty of evasions and promoting more stringent enforcement. To this end transactions through which attempts were made to comply with the letter of the law, while violating its spirit and purpose, have been expressly inveighed against. To permit the recovery of the deposit paid in the case herein in furtherance of an attempt to evade the law would be to remove a deterrent to wrongdoing. "The principle applicable to relief in such cases is embodied in the two maxims, 'Ex pacto illicito non oritur actio,' and 'Ex dolo malo non oritur actio,' in the application of which the court must, upon plaintiff's own statement, deny him its aid in the pursuit of that which he has lost." Schmitt v. Gibson, 12 Cal. App. 407, 107 P. 571.

[5] There is nothing inconsistent with the view herein expressed and the decision in Suwa v. Johnson, 54 Cal. App. 119, 203 P. 414. In the instant case our decision is based upon the application of well-settled principles of the law of contracts which contemplate an illegal object. In Suwa v. Johnson, supra, a lessor retook possession of property leased by him to an alien ineligible to citizenship. A judgment that plaintiff, the ineligible alien, recover possession, was affirmed by the District Court of Appeal on the ground that a consummated transfer to an ineligible alien could be attacked only by the state in escheat proceedings. We do not understand said decision, or other decisions of similar import, as declaring the legality of contracts for transfer to ineligible aliens, or stating that in no action except escheat proceedings initiated by the state may the question of alienage be raised. See Case v. Kelly, 133 U. S. 21, 10 S. Ct. 216, 33 L. Ed. 513, and Ales v. Epstein, 283 Mo. 434, 222 S. W. 1012. Certainly, a contract having for its object the transfer of land in violation of the express provisions of an act which provides that conspiracies to violate its provisions are punishable by fine and imprisonment cannot be said to contemplate a lawful object. In the view we take of the matter, the principle that only the state can attack a consummated transfer is in line with the doctrine of the law of contracts that the courts will not afford relief to parties who have participated in an illegal transaction by permitting one party to recover from the other money or property transferred in violation of law.

It is with much hesitation that we have been brought to the point of holding that the law will not interfere to unloose the grasp of defendants upon the moneys involved in this appeal. While the law will not, upon grounds of public policy, afford relief to either party to an illegal transaction such as this one is shown to be, it is, nevertheless, proper to say that in the forum of good conscience the defendants are not justified in retaining possession of the money in suit. They were conspirators in an attempt to violate the statute in the same sense as were the Japanese father and daughter with whom they dealt, and their conduct, because of their citizenship, was more culpable than was the conduct of the ineligible alien or his daughter, who was of alien blood. The law, however, in this class of cases, provides no remedy for either of the offending parties.

GOTTSTEIN v. KELLY et al. (L. A. 8727.)★

Supreme Court of California. March 30, 1929.

Rehearing Denied April 29, 1929.

1. Taxation ⚿415—Assessment, naming owner but once, not misleading as to owner of each lot assessed, complied with statute, regardless whether owner's name should have appeared opposite each lot (Pol. Code, § 3650).

Where assessment on several lots in tract of land contained name of owner but once, followed by name of tract or subdivision in which property was located, correct number of each of lots, together with valuation of each, in accordance with Pol. Code, § 3650, and no one could have been misled as to name of person purporting to be owner of each of several lots, assessment complied with statute, regardless whether name of owner of property should have been repeated on assessment book opposite each lot assessed.

2. Taxation ⚿734(2)—Error, if any, in overcharge of less than one cent in assessing land, held immaterial, in determining validity of tax deed (Pol. Code, § 3731).

Where alleged overcharge in making assessment against land, under Pol. Code, § 3731, if any, was less than one cent, defect was of no consequence, so far as validity of ensuing tax deed was concerned.

3. Taxation ⚿627—All taxes, penalties, and costs should be placed opposite each description of property separately assessed, rather than total assessment against all property (Pol. Code, § 3764, as amended by St. 1913, p. 556).

Under Pol. Code, § 3764, as amended by St. 1913, p. 556, requiring taxes, penalties, and costs to be placed opposite each name and description of delinquent property, all taxes, penalties, and costs applicable thereto should be placed opposite each description, rather than placing total amount due on several pieces of property separately assessed and described, and stating such amount in one aggregate sum.

4. Taxation ⚿734(2)—Owner held not required to compute assessment against each lot, but duty thereof was jurisdictional prerequisite to validity of tax deed.

Where lots in designated tract were separately assessed and described, owner did not have burden of ascertaining amount of assessment against each lot, but duty of stating separate amounts on separate lots was jurisdictional prerequisite to validity of tax deed dependent on assessment proceedings.

5. Taxation ⚷734(7)—Notice of sale for delinquent taxes, not referring to penalties, but to unauthorized "percentage," held defective, and tax deed conveyed no title (Pol. Code, § 3764, as amended by St. 1913, p. 556).

Notice of sale to state of delinquent property under Pol. Code, § 3764, as amended by St. 1913, p. 556, reciting taxes, "percentage," and costs after property, without referring to penalties, was defective, as containing unauthorized item of "percentage" which was not synonymous with word "penalty," and hence tax deed based on assessment proceedings conveyed no title.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Percentage.]

6. Appeal and error ⚷877(4)—Plaintiff, claiming under tax deed, possessing no legal title, could not complain of judgment on cross-complaint quieting title in defendant.

Where plaintiff, claiming title under tax deed in suit for partition, was legally possessed of no property, he could not complain of relief granted to defendant in cross-complaint to quiet title.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; C. N. Andrews, Judge.

Action by John Gottstein against T. G. Kelly and another, in which defendant E. D. Brooks, Jr., filed a cross-complaint. Judgment from cross-complainant, and plaintiff and defendant Kelly appeal. Affirmed.

For opinion of District Court of Appeal, see 269 P. 940.

Herbert C. Kelly, of San Diego, for appellants.

Rolland C. Springer, of San Diego, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. When this cause was before the District Court of Appeal, Second District, First Division, an opinion was rendered therein, written by Mr. Justice Houser, affirming a judgment decreeing as void a certain tax deed referred to therein. At about the time that this action was decided by the District Court of Appeal the case of Southern California Bond & Finance Corporation v. Mathes, 269 P. 964, was decided by the District Court of Appeal of the First District. In that action a tax deed, issued under proceedings substantially the same as those forming the basis of the tax deed herein involved, was declared valid. These two opinions were in a direct conflict with each other, and for that reason said causes were transferred to his court for hearing. After considering the two opinions and the briefs of counsel filed in the two cases, we have concluded that the opinion handed down by the District Court of Appeal in the present action contains a correct statement of the law applicable to the questions considered therein, and we adopt the same as the opinion of this court. Said opinion is as follows:

HOUSER, J. This appeal originated in a suit brought by plaintiff against defendant Kelly and one Maud K. Messer for partition of real property. After the suit was commenced, one E. D. Brooks, Jr., with full knowledge of all the facts hereinafter set forth, acquired whatever interest said Messer owned in the property involved in the action, and thereupon was substituted as a party defendant therein. Thereafter defendant Brooks answered in the action and filed his cross-complaint therein, by which he sought to quiet his title to certain of the real property described in the complaint, and which formerly had been owned by the defendant Messer. Judgment was rendered in favor of defendant Brooks, and it is from such judgment that this appeal is prosecuted.

The property involved consisted of three several lots, numbered 10, 11, and 12, in a designated tract of land. The basis of plaintiff's claim of title was a tax deed, which by the lower court was held to be invalid. Concededly the question of the invalidity of the tax deed rested upon each of several contentions set forth in the brief herein, the first of which being that the statute (section 3770, Pol. Code) authorized the inclusion in the collection of delinquent taxes of an advertising charge of fifty cents for "each lot, piece, or tract of land separately assessed, * * *" and consequently, in view of the fact that the advertising charge herein was for three separate parcels at 50 cents each, making a total charge therefor of $1.50, a tax, with its incidents, had been imposed which was unauthorized by law, with the alleged result that a sale of the property for the amount of the original tax assessment, plus penalties and the advertising costs, as charged, was illegal, and carried with it no title to the purchaser.

[1] In substance, the form of the assessment was that the name of the owner of the property appeared but once. Thereafter followed the name of the tract or subdivision in which the property was located, the correct number of each of the lots, to wit, 10, 11, and 12 (each on a separate line), together with the valuation of each of them—all of which would appear to be in accordance with the provisions of section 3650 of the Political Code relating to the requirements of an assessment. With the exception that no direct ruling is made with reference to the feature that as to each of the lots the name of the owner must be repeated on the assessment book, in each of the following authorities substantially it is held that the assessment herein was in conformity with the requirements of the statute; Wells Fargo & Co. v. Board of Equalization, 56 Cal. 194, 205; Emeric v. Alvarado, 64 Cal. 529, 605, 2 P. 418; Allen v. McKay & Co., 120 Cal. 332, 334, 52 P. 828; Hall v. Park Bank of Los Angeles, 165 Cal. 356, 358, 132 P. 452; People's Water Co. v. Boromeo, 31 Cal. App. 270, 272, 160 P. 574; Gottstein v. Holmes (Cal. App.) 264 P. 310.

An examination of the record in the case last cited discloses the fact that the form of the assessment was identical with that in the instant case, and it was there held that on the occurrence of the delinquency in the payment of the tax an advertising charge of 50 cents on each lot was "in exact conformity with the law." So far as concerns the question of the necessity for the name of the owner of the property to be repeated on the assessment book, so that it shall appear opposite each lot assessed, where, as in the assessment herein, from its form no one could have been misled as to the name of the person purporting to be the owner of each of the several lots, we think that a substantial, if not a literal, compliance with the terms of the statute was shown to exist.

The next alleged infirmity in the tax deed is that the sale was made for a greater amount of money than was legally due. By one form of computation, the sum for which the property was sold was the exact amount due thereon. By other methods of computation, dependent upon the recognition of fractions of a cent in the tax and the penalties, the difference between the amount for which the property was sold and the amount shown by such computation as actually due varied from two-tenths of a cent to as much as three cents.

[2] It is argued by respondent that, following the provisions of section 3731 of the Political Code, "fractions of a cent" must be rejected. On the other hand, appellant contends that by the plain terms of the statute the rejection of "fractions of a cent" applies to the computation of the tax only, and has no reference to computation of the penalties for delinquencies (Bell v. Fee Title Co., 69 Cal. App. 437, 231 P. 598), and that as so construed the amount for which the property was sold showed no variation from the correct computation of the amount which was legally due. On making the computation in accordance with the rule as announced in the case of Bell v. Fee Title Co., 69 Cal. App. 437, 231 P. 598, it appears that at most the overcharge, if any, was less that one cent. In such circumstances, at least by the great weight of authority, the defect was of no consequence, so far as the validity of the ensuing tax deed was concerned. Jacoby v. Wolff, 198 Cal. 667, 247 P. 195; Treadwell v. Patterson, 51 Cal. 637.

One of the reasons assigned for upholding the judgment herein is that the notice of sale to the state of the property affected by the judgment was defective. By the provisions of section 3764 of the Political Code, in force at the time the notice of sale was given (Stats. 1913, p. 556), the tax collector was required to "publish the delinquent list, which must contain the names of the persons and a description of the property delinquent, and the amount of taxes, penalties, and costs due, opposite each name and description. * * *" In this action, respondent's contention is that, while the notice contained a description of each of the lots 10, 11, and 12 of the described tract, the "taxes, penalties, and costs due" did not appear opposite each description as prescribed by the statute; that while the language of the statute calls for "taxes, penalties, and costs" applicable to each lot, the notice deviated therefrom, first, in that it recited the "taxes, percentage, and costs"; and, secondly, that, instead of the property, "taxes, penalties, and costs" being set "opposite" and made applicable to each lot as required by the statute, they were lumped together into one gross sum for all the lots.

At the time the notice of sale herein was published a further requirement of section 3764 of the Political Code, then in force, was that the delinquent list should contain the "taxes due on personal property, the delinquent state poll, road, and hospital tax, the taxes due each school, road, or other lesser taxation district, added to the taxes on real estate. * * * " It appears that, as affecting the property here involved, a tax of 71 cents on the $100 of valuation was levied for the school district. With reference to the meaning of the phrase appearing in the statute, "added to the taxes on real estate," it was held in California Loan, etc., Co. v. Weis, 118 Cal. 489, 496, 50 P. 697, 700, that "the word 'added,' as here used, does not contemplate a mathematical computation. It is employed in the sense of subjoined or appended. * * *"

In the case of Cordano v. Kelsey, 28 Cal. App. 9, 19, 151 P. 391, 396, among other things, it is held that, in a notice of sale for delinquent taxes, it is necessary that the amount of penalties and costs be separately stated, and that (citing Campbell v. Canty, 12 Cal. App. Dec. 373,[1] and quoting sections 205-207 of Black on Tax Titles), "the giving of notice in the manner and form prescribed by the statute is an essential jurisdictional fact"; also, that "not only is the giving of notice of the sale essential, but it must be such notice as the statute prescribes."

[3-5] Assuming the correctness of the conclusion hereinbefore stated to the effect that each lot was separately described and assessed, and reasoning from the rule announced in the case of California Loan, etc., Co. v. Weis, 118 Cal. 489, 496, 50 P. 697, as well as from the case of Cordano v. Kelsey, 28 Cal. App. 9, 19, 151 P. 391, 398, it becomes apparent that the construction which should be placed on the statutory requirement that the amount of "taxes, penalties, and costs due" should be placed "opposite each name and description," is that opposite each description all "taxes, penalties, and costs" applicable thereto should be placed, rather than that where, as in the instant case, there are several pieces of property separately assessed and described, the total amount due thereon on account of the several charges of "taxes, penalties, and costs" should be added together and stated in one aggregate amount. But, as in substance is said in the case of Cordano v. Kelsey, 28 Cal. App. 9, 19, 151 P. 391, 398, while it is true that in the form the notice was given it was possible for the owner of the three lots in question to have ascertained or computed the amount of each of the several items affecting any one lot, the law did not place that burden upon him, but rather enjoined that duty upon others as a jurisdictional prerequisite to the validity of a tax deed dependent upon precedent proceedings.

However, the last preceding statement, as affecting the facts in the instant case, requires notation of the additional fact, that while the notice as published contained the statement that unless the delinquent taxes for the year ending June 30, 1917, with all penalties and costs due thereon, were paid on or before a specified date the assessed property would be sold to the state, so far as the property herein involved was concerned, and which by the terms of the notice was not to be sold to the state, but "to the highest bidder for cash," the notice contained no reference to "penalties," but instead thereof the column heading in the delinquent list contained the unauthorized item of "percentage."

As thus phrased or framed, the owner had no notice that any penalties were included in the sum total fixed as affecting all the lots combined. Nor did he occupy a positive situation in either his assumed or his actual knowledge of what was meant by "percentage." Obviously, such an expression might cover any number of different charges at an arbitrary rate or valuation, whether authorized by statute or not, and therefore the owner would be unable to do more than conjecture either as to what item or what amount was included in the "percentage," or what part or portion of the total charge was included therein. In the case of Bussenius v. Warden, 71 Cal. App. 717, 722, 236 P. 371, it was held that the requirement of section 3764 of the Political Code, as amended in 1913 (Stats. 1913, p. 556), that the delinquent list to be published by the tax collector must contain the names of the persons and a description of the property delinquent, and "the amount of taxes, penalties, and costs due," is not complied with where the tax list sets forth the amount due as taxes and costs, but fails to set forth the amount due for penalties; and that a subsequent tax deed predicated upon such defective notice is void. To the same effect is Snodgrass v. Bell (Cal. App.) 261 P. 497. The word "penalty" is not synonymous with the word "percentage," from which it would follow that, if the principle announced in the last two cited cases is correct, the notice of sale was insufficient, with the ultimate result that the deed upon which appellant relies was of no validity, and conveyed no title to him.

[6] Since plaintiff was legally possessed of no title to the property in question, he is in no position to complain of the relief which was granted to defendant in quieting his title thereto. In the case of Canty v. Staley (Cal. Sup.) 123 P. 252, 255, may be found the statement that:

> "Parties who purchase property at tax sales acquire the title to the property, if all the proceedings for the levy of the taxes and the sale are regular and in strict conformity to law; but, if not so, they acquire no rights to the property which either a court of law or equity can enforce" (citing authorities).

It becomes unnecessary to devote attention to other suggestions interposed by respondent as reasons for the affirmance of the judgment.

SHIELDS v. FEE TITLE CO. et al.
(S. F. 12813.)

Supreme Court of California. April 6, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ⚿907(3)—Supreme Court must accept trial court's findings as true and sustained by evidence, in absence of bill of exceptions or typewritten transcript.

In absence of bill of exceptions or typewritten transcript of proceedings at trial, Supreme Court must accept trial court's findings as absolutely true, and presume that evidence necessary to sustain them was presented to such court.

2. Appeal and error ⚿183—Defendant voluntarily appearing and submitting claim to court's jurisdiction cannot question on appeal court's right to proceed under statute to quiet title (McEnerney Act).

Defendant voluntarily appearing and submitting itself and its claim to the court's jurisdiction precluded itself from raising any question on appeal as to court's right to proceed under McEnerney Act (St. 1906, Ex. Sess., p. 78) to quiet plaintiff's title to realty.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; George H. Buck, Judge.

Action by Mary Hull Shields against the Fee Title Company and all persons claiming any interest in or lien on described realty. Judgment for plaintiff, and named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Chas. S. Conner, of Los Angeles, for appellant Fee Title Company.

Jerome A. Duffy, of San Francisco (George B. Harris, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

WASTE, C. J. The plaintiff brought this action under the provisions of the McEnerney Act (Stats. 1906 [Ex. Sess.], p. 78) to quiet her title to five separate and distinct parcels of unimproved real property, situate in San Mateo county, and particularly described in the complaint. The defendant, the Fee Title Company, answered, and directly placed in issue plaintiff's title to all or any part of the property, and prayed for affirmative relief. Judgment was entered for the plaintiff, and the Fee Title Company appeals on the judgment roll alone.

[1] No separate findings, as such, were made, but the judgment and decree is a combination of both findings and judgment, one of its recitals being, "The court having heard the evidence and taken proof of all the facts alleged in the complaint and affidavit filed therewith." As there is neither a bill of exceptions nor typewritten transcript of the proceedings had and taken at the trial, and it appearing that evidence was taken by the court, we must, upon this appeal, accept the findings as absolutely true and presume that the evidence necessary to sustain them was presented to the court below. Dalton v. Gore (Cal. App.) 263 P. 844; Caruthers v. Hensley, 90 Cal. 559, 27 P. 411. The findings indicate that all the requirements of the McEnerney Act were fully complied with, and it further appears that some eleven exhibits, including notice of pendency of action, were introduced and considered by the court.

[2] The appellant appears to question the right of the trial court to proceed under the McEnerney Act. It suffices to say that, by voluntarily appearing and submitting itself and its claim to the jurisdiction of the court, the defendant has precluded itself from raising any question on that point. Faxon v. All Persons, 166 Cal. 707, 712, 137 P. 919, L. R. A. 1916B, 1209.

SPRINGMAN v. SPRINGMAN. (Civ. 6719.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. March 26, 1929.

1. Trial 🔑62(2)—Evidence offered in rebuttal, which did not tend to rebut evidentiary facts brought out by defendant in divorce action held properly excluded.

In divorce action, evidence offered in rebuttal that husband had locked dwelling house and refused to allow wife to enter, which tended to corroborate wife's testimony in her case in chief but did not tend to rebut any evidentiary facts brought out by husband, his testimony consisting of denials of wife's statements, held properly excluded.

2. Divorce 🔑108—Evidence that husband locked house against wife held inadmissible to show cruelty, where no such defense to husband's cross-complaint for divorce was pleaded.

In action by wife for separate maintenance in which husband filed cross-complaint for divorce, evidence that husband had locked dwelling house and refused to allow wife to enter held not admissible by way of recrimination to show cruelty or other marital misconduct on part of husband, where no such defense to cross-complaint was pleaded.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William C. Doran, Judge.

Action for separate maintenance by Augusta Springman against Frederick Springman, in which defendant filed cross-complaint for divorce. From a judgment granting defendant a divorce, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Davis & Thorne, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Walter T. Casey and Thomas P. Hanlon, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. An action for separate maintenance was brought by the plaintiff against her husband, the defendant, upon three counts, namely, failure to provide, habitual intemperance, and extreme cruelty. The defendant denied these allegations, and, by a cross-complaint, sought a divorce from the plaintiff upon the grounds of extreme cruelty and willful desertion, both of which charges the plaintiff denied in her answer thereto, but no facts in recrimination were pleaded.

At the trial the defendant dismissed his charges of cruelty and no evidence in their support was offered. The court found against the plaintiff, and granted the defendant a divorce upon the ground that his wife had willfully deserted him.

[1, 2] The plaintiff appealed from the judgment, and contends that the trial court erred by refusing to admit certain testimony offered by her in rebuttal.

The plaintiff, in support of her case, testified that the defendant on several occasions locked the door of their dwelling and refused to permit her to enter. This was denied by the defendant. Each party testified that a separation took place on November 20, 1924, on which date the plaintiff left the dwelling house of the spouses during the absence of the defendant. It was sought to be shown by the excluded testimony that some months before the separation the defendant had locked the dwelling house and refused to allow the plaintiff to enter. An objection that such testimony was not proper evidence in rebuttal was sustained. While the evidence tended to corroborate the testimony of the plaintiff in her case in chief, and if then offered would have been admissible, it did not tend to rebut any evidentiary facts brought out by the defendant, his testimony consisting of denials of his wife's statements; nor was it admissible by way of recrimination to show cruelty or other marital misconduct on the part of the defendant, no such defense to the cross-complaint having been pleaded. Avery v. Avery, 148 Cal. 239, 82 P. 967; Klemmer v. Klemmer, 42 Cal. App. 618, 187 P. 85.

There was no error in the ruling of the court, and this being the only ground urged for a reversal, the judgment is affirmed.

LOS ANGELES COUNTY v. MAGA et al. (two cases). (Civ. 6701, 6702.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. March 20, 1929.

1. Bail ⚷75—Technically, accused liberated on bail is considered as delivered into custody of sureties, who are liable for his appearance, unless excused by act of God, obligee, or law.

While giving of bail generally restores accused to his freedom, technically he is considered as having been delivered into custody of his sureties, who are liable for his appearance, in accordance with terms of their undertaking, unless performance of condition thereof is rendered impossible or excused by an act of God, obligee, or the law.

2. Bail ⚷79(1)—Accused's arrest in deportation proceedings did not exonerate bail, where they were free on bail when cases were called.

That accused were arrested in federal deportation proceedings, begun while criminal actions were pending, did not exonerate sureties on their bail bonds, where they were at liberty on bail, given in such proceedings, when their cases were called in state court.

3. Bail ⚷79(1)—That accused voluntarily fled jurisdiction after issuance of deportation warrants did not exonerate bail.

That accused, at liberty on bail, voluntarily fled the jurisdiction, following issuance of deportation warrants, did not exonerate their sureties.

4. Bail ⚷79(1)—Sureties on bail bonds of accused, fleeing from jurisdiction after issuance of deportation warrants, held not exonerated on ground that they would have been deported.

Sureties on bail bonds of accused, voluntarily fleeing jurisdiction after issuance of deportation warrants, held not exonerated on ground that accused would have been deported in any event, object of requiring bail not being to compensate government, but to compel accused's presence in court so that justice may be administered, while conclusion, that issuance of such warrants would have interfered with sureties' right or power to surrender principals, had they remained within jurisdiction, would be mere conjecture.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Guerin, Judge.

Actions by the County of Los Angeles against Domenica Maga and others. Judgments for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded, with direction.

Everett W. Mattoon, County Counsel, and S. V. O. Prichard, Deputy County Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Walter C. Fisher, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The above actions are between the same parties, involve the same questions, and it was accordingly stipulated that the appeals be presented on the same record.

The following appears from the agreed statements of facts filed in the two cases: On February 4, 1924, there was filed in the justices' court of Los Angeles township in Los Angeles county a criminal action against Mary Bartodatto, wherein she was charged with the crime of pandering. She was arrested, and her bail fixed in the sum of $2,000, following which the defendants executed a bail bond in that amount, which was filed on February 5, 1924. Her preliminary hearing was regularly set for May 27, 1924, at which time the case was called, and she failed to appear, whereupon the bond was declared forfeited.

While the criminal action was pending, a civil proceeding in the federal court for her deportation was begun, the charge being that she had entered the United States in violation of the immigration law. She was arrested by officers of the immigration service, and, upon giving a separate bond to the immigration service, was released from custody. She was, in fact, a deportable alien, and, prior to the forfeiture of the bond first mentioned, a warrant for her deportation to Italy was issued. After the issuance of the warrant, but without having again been taken into custody, she departed from the state before the forfeiture of the bond involved in the present action, and now resides in Italy.

On February 4, 1924, a charge of bribery was filed in the same justices' court against Dominico Bartodatto. He was arrested and released upon giving bail in the sum of $2,000, this undertaking being also executed by the defendants. After a preliminary hearing he was held to answer, following which there was filed in the superior court of Los Angeles county an informantion charging him with the above crime. Thereafter his case was regularly called for trial, but he failed to appear, and on May 26, 1924, the latter bond was also declared forfeited. As was the case with Mary Bartodatto he was a deportable alien, and was charged by the immigration service with a violation of the immigration law. A bond was given in that proceeding, and he was released from custody. A deportation warrant was subsequently issued, but, being apprised of the fact and without again being taken into custody by the federal authorities, he also returned to Italy before the forfeiture of the bond in the criminal proceeding, and is now in that country.

It was stipulated in each case that the accused left the jurisdiction without the consent, connivance, or knowledge of any of the defendants.

Actions were brought upon the forfeited bonds, based upon the foregoing facts, and judgment for each case was entered for the defendants. Motions for new trials were denied, and the plaintiff appealed, its contention being that the judgments are contrary to the law and the evidence.

[1] While the giving of bail as a general rule restores the accused to his freedom, technically he is considered as having been delivered into the custody of his sureties, who are liable for his appearance in accordance with the terms of their undertaking (Taylor v. Taintor, 16 Wall. (83 U. S.) 366, 21 L. Ed. 287; Hammons v. State, 59 Ala. 164, 31 Am. Rep. 13; State v. Sandy, 138 Iowa, 580, 116 N. W. 599; Worthen v. Prescott, 60 Vt. 68, 11 A. 690; State v. Schenck, 138 N. C. 560, 49 S. E. 917, 3 Ann. Cas. 928); but performance by them of the condition of the undertaking may be rendered impossible or excused by an act of God or of the obligee or of the law. In such cases the sureties are exonerated. Taylor v. Taintor, supra; 6 Cor. Jur., Bail, p. 1025, § 279, and cases cited. In the cases at bar, however, no such facts appear as the accused voluntarily left the jurisdiction. Had this course not been taken, their sureties, so far as shown, would not have been prevented from surrendering them.

[2, 3] That the accused had been arrested in other proceedings did not exonerate their sureties, it appearing that they were at liberty on bail when their cases were called in the state court (West v. Colquitt, 71 Ga. 559, 51 Am. Rep. 277; People v. Robb, 98 Mich. 397, 57 N. W. 257); nor did the fact that they had fled the jurisdiction following the issuance of the deportation warrant have that effect. In State v. McAllister, 54 N. H. 156, the accused, who had been admitted to bail upon a criminal charge in the state court, was convicted of a federal offense. While awaiting the execution of sentence he escaped and was at large when his bond in the state court was declared forfeited. The court in holding that the sureties were not exonerated, said: "They were not prevented from surrendering him by the act of God, by any act of the government of the United States or of the state of New Hampshire, or any sentence of the law—his voluntary absence under the circumstances afforded no justification or excuse for his sureties' failure to produce him." And such is the general rule as declared in the following cases: Bishop v. State, 16 Ohio St. 419; Campbell v. Board, 103 Kan. 329, 175 P. 155, 3 A. L. R. 178; McDonald v. Commonwealth, 213 Ky. 570, 281 S. W. 538, 45 A. L. R. 1034, and note; State v. Crosby, 114 Ala. 11, 22 So. 110; Wheeler v. State, 38 Tex. 173; Dunlap v. State, 66 Ark. 105, 49 S. W. 349.

[4] The contention that the accused would have been deported in any event, and that such action pursuant to federal statute would have exonerated the sureties, is beside the question, as the object of requiring bail is not pecuniary compensation to the government, but to compel the presence of the accused in court to the end that justice may be administered. 6 Cor. Jur., Bail, § 7, pp. 893, 894. Moreover, no act of the federal authorities interfered with the right or power of the sureties to surrender their principals, and to say that such would have been the result of the issuance of the deportation warrant, had the accused remained within the jurisdiction, would be a mere conjecture.

The record discloses no facts which support the conclusions of the trial court. The judgments are therefore reversed; the causes are remanded; and the trial court is directed to enter judgment in each case in accordance with the prayer of the complaint.

GEIBEL v. BURR CREAMERY CORPORATION. (Civ. 5094.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. March 27, 1929.

Attorney and client ⚿166(1)—Evidence held to support verdict for defendant sued by attorney for corporation with which defendant had contract.

Where creamery company had contract with bottle exchange company engaged in collecting and returning empty bottles and cans to milk distributing companies, under which it was bottle exchange company's duty to obtain return of cans held by third persons, evidence in its attorney's action against creamery for services in action to recover the cans held to support verdict for the creamery company.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by Martin E. Geibel against the Burr Creamery Corporation. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Martin E. Geibel, of Los Angeles, in pro. per., for appellant.

Farrand & Slosson, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. The appellant, an attorney and counselor at law, instituted this action for a balance alleged to be due him as attorney's fees upon an open book account. Respondent admitted having paid the sum of $100, but denied further liability. Pursuant to trial before the court without a jury, it was found and adjudged that the defendant did not become indebted to the plaintiff in any sum for legal services, or for moneys paid out, on a book account, or otherwise, in connection with the litigation alleged, or in any other cause or proceeding. The plaintiff appealed, contending that the judgment and findings were contrary to, and not supported by, the evidence.

It appears that, for some time prior to the commencement of the proceedings out of which this controversy arose, a firm or combination known as the Los Angeles Creamery Company, for whom appellant was the attorney, had been engaged in collecting and returning to the various milk distributing companies in Los Angeles empty bottles, crates, and cans bearing the marks or brands of the respective owners. During such service, and about two months previous to the relations between the parties to this appeal, in which the alleged services were rendered, an agreement in writing, dated May 1, 1920, was signed by the Los Angeles Creamery Company, a corporation, designated as "Exchange Agent," and nearly a score of individuals and corporations dealing in milk and other dairy products, therein designated as "Owners," among which latter were the Burr Creamery Company, respondent above named. By the terms of said agreement the parties recited that, whereas the distributors had found it necessary to operate a bottle exchange in order to avoid retaining containers of others than the true owners, the first party agreed to perform such service, and the distributors agreed to pay the exchange agent therefor, at certain stipulated rates, upon receipt of its bills which should be rendered each month. It is undisputed that investigations, co-operation with the district attorney's office, procuring of search warrants, and other outside work of the so-called bottle exchange in recovering property of the various dealers, were in charge of two men named Weaver and Volen. On or about July 1, 1920, respondent corporation, through its manager, E. Burr, complained to Volen that about 75 of its milk cans were in possession of Albert Deike and Gertrude Deike, doing business under the name and style of Rosemead Dairy. Volen attempted to recover the cans by means of a search warrant, and, failing in this, consulted Weaver, who directed Volen to take the matter up with appellant herein, as attorney for the exchange agent, as he had done upon a previous occasion, in 1916. Volen testified that he visited the offices of appellant, which were conducted under the firm name of Lloyd, Cheney & Geibel, stating that he had been sent by Weaver, and requesting that civil proceedings be instituted for the recovery of about 75 milk cans belonging to the Burr Creamery Corporation; that he had previously consulted with E. Burr, and that the latter had informed the witness that "it was up to the bottle exchange to get the cans"; and to "go ahead with it; I have nothing to do with that. I am paying the Los Angeles Bottle Exchange for service." It further appears that, at Volen's request, Burr called at appellant's office. Burr testified that he went to appellant's office at the latter's request; that "Mr. Volen told me that it would be necessary to file a civil suit for the cans; and I told him distinctly it was up to the bottle exchange to get our cans the same as other creameries." This witness was asked the following questions, to which he replied: "Q. Mr. Burr, * * * did you make any statement to Mr. Geibel that you wished to employ him exclusively? A. I certainly did not. Q. Was there anything said about his being employed at all one way or the other? A. Never." Appellant thereafter prepared and filed a suit in replevin, undertakings were furnished, and the sheriff promptly obtained 70 milk cans from the defendants in that proceeding, which was thereupon dismissed. Appellant kept an itemized account of charges for consultations, preparation, and filing of pleadings, and for expenses incidental to various steps taken in the suit, including its dismissal, aggregating $460; $108.40 was credited as having been received on account, and the instant suit against the Burr Creamery Corporation was instituted for the balance, upon an alleged "book account," though appellant concedes that he received but $100 from respondent, $30.75 of which was expended. Appellant contends that the $100 was advanced as a retainer, whereas the respondent insists that it was merely an advance for costs and expenses, although the witness Burr was not permitted to testify further than that the check was drawn at Volen's suggestion, and that he had no conversation with the plaintiff regarding compensation or court expenses.

The appellant strenuously urges throughout a somewhat extensive argument and analysis of the pleadings and testimony that he was employed by the Burr Company to represent it, and he quotes from much of his own testimony in conflict with that of witnesses called on behalf of the respondent. No attempt is made, however, to dispose of the fact that he was attorney for the exchange agency, whose duty it was for an agreed compensation to perform such services without further expense to the contracting creamery companies. It is further obvious that neither Volen nor Weaver, who acted as intermediaries between appellant and Burr, was in the employ of the latter, nor had authority to bind him in the employment of counsel. They were performing services for the Los Angeles Creamery Company, and suggested that Burr see its attorney, appellant herein. Beyond that, the evidence nowhere tends to connect the respondent corporation in any contractual relationship with appellant. The witness T. H. Brice, manager of the Milk Producers' Association, expressly stated under oath: "Mr. Burr called me and asked me to come and go up with him to see the Bottle Exchange attorney. * * * I asked him why we didn't get our own attorney, and he stated that this didn't cost us anything; it was bottle exchange work." Burr testified that appellant had at no time mentioned a retainer or the payment of expenses.

As we have observed, there is considerable conflicting evidence upon the details of the whole transaction. There is in the main, however, no room for dispute of the fact that respondent contracted in writing with appellant's client, for a consideration, to collect and return its missing receptacles. This being true, it was but natural and logical that representatives of the exchange agent should upon occasion therefor refer to the latter's counsel members of the association or compact for whose benefit they were employed. There is apparently no evidence tending to reveal the conditions of appellant's employment by the exchange, nor the terms upon which respondent might eventually adjust with it such advances as appear to have been made for expenses, but with these we are not here concerned. That the judgment is sufficiently supported by the evidence to require an affirmance, we think is patent.

Other questions as to whether or not appellant properly sued upon a book account, or individually instead of in his firm's name, do not, in view of the conclusion reached, require discussion.

The judgment is affirmed.

TYLER et al. v. CITY COUNCIL OF HUNTINGTON PARK et al. (Civ. 6326.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. March 22, 1929.

Certiorari ⚷70(1)—Order sustaining demurrer to petition for writ of review is not appealable (Code Civ. Proc. § 963).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 963, order sustaining demurrer to petition for writ of review was not appealable, especially where it was followed by an order of dismissal which would remain in force, notwithstanding disposition of appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter S. Gates, Judge.

Proceeding for writ of review by Glen Tyler and another against the City Council of Huntington Park and others. From an order sustaining demurrer to the petition, petitioners appeal. Appeal dismissed.

S. A. Shoop and H. W. Hess, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Carson B. Hubbard, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

STEPHENS, Justice pro tem. Appellants petitioned the superior court for a writ of review as to certain actions of the city council of the city of Huntington Park. A demurrer to the petition was interposed, and the court sustained it without leave to amend. Defendants also filed a motion to dismiss the proceeding, and the court granted the motion and ordered the cause dismissed. This attempted appeal is from the ruling of the court on the demurrer alone, and it must be dismissed, as an order on demurrer is not appealable. Section 963, Code Civ. Proc. Even if this were not true, nothing could be gained by our consideration of the appeal, for the order of dismissal would remain in full force and effect.

The appeal is dismissed.

ATKINSON v. BOYNTON. (Civ. 6588.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. March 26, 1929.

1. Trusts ⟹88—In suit to establish trust in note and deed of trust taken by client, facts could be shown by parol, notwithstanding statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 1973).

Where, in closing exchange of land negotiated by broker, defendant advanced $17,000 to other party, and took deed of trust on land exchanged for $45,000, of which $2,000 represented commissions due from him to the broker and $3,000 commissions due from the other party to the broker, broker suing to establish trust in the note and mortgage could show such facts by parol, notwithstanding Code Civ. Proc. § 1973, requiring agreement employing broker to be evidenced by writing.

2. Trusts ⟹87—When broker was permitted to show by parol that part of consideration for note and deed of trust was commissions, defendant was entitled to show his version of transaction (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1850, 1854, 1860).

In broker's action to establish trust in note and deed of trust taken by his employer in exchange of land, where broker was permitted to show that amount of the mortgage included commissions due him from parties to contract, defendant should have been permitted, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1850, 1854, 1860, to introduce evidence that it was part of broker's duty to negotiate a loan, and that, when he was compelled to take deed of trust, broker was paid $1,000, and it was agreed that, unless he negotiated sale of the note and mortgage, he was to have no further interest.

3. Trusts ⟹371(8)—In suit to establish trust in note and deed of trust taken by client, agreement that plaintiff's interest was to cease, unless he obtained purchaser, was provable without being specially pleaded.

In broker's action to establish trust in note and deed of trust taken by his client on exchange of lands, defense that broker was paid $1,000, and was to have no further interest if he failed to negotiate sale of the note and deed of trust, could be proved without being specially pleaded.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; F. B. Brown, Judge.

Action by W. L. Atkinson, doing business under the fictitious firm name and style of W. L. Atkinson & Co., against F. H. Boynton. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Bohnett, Hill & Campbell, of San Jose, for appellant.

J. M. Atkinson, of San Jose, for respondent.

BURROUGHS, Justice pro tem. This is an action by W. L. Atkinson, doing business under the fictitious name and style of W. L. Atkinson & Co., as plaintiff, against F. H. Boynton, as defendant, to have a trust declared in favor of the plaintiff in a certain promissory note and deed of trust, to the extent of $5,000; said note and deed of trust standing in the name of said defendant.

In so far as it is material on this appeal, the complaint alleges that on or about the 12th day of January, 1925, D. H. and Rebecca I. Arakelian made, executed, and delivered to the defendant an interest-bearing promissory note in the sum of $45,000, and, as security for the payment thereof, executed a deed of trust in favor of the defendant covering certain lands situated in the county of Santa Clara. It is further alleged that $40,000 of the consideration for said note was furnished by the defendant, and the remaining $5,000 by the plaintiff; that, ever since the execution of said note and deed of trust, the defendant has held, and still holds, the same in trust for the plaintiff to the extent of $5,000, with the accrued interest upon said last-named amount, but that the defendant refuses to acknowledge plaintiff's interest therein, and claims to be the sole owner and holder of said note and deed of trust and of all sums of money due or to become due thereon. By a supplemental complaint it is alleged that, since the commencement of this action, the promissory note has been paid in full, and $5,000 and interest on said sum has been deposited in escrow to satisfy any judgment rendered in this action.

The answer of the defendant denies that plaintiff has any interest in said note or deed of trust or the money due thereon, denies that defendant holds the same in trust for plaintiff, and admits that he claims to be the sole owner thereof and entitled to all sums of money represented thereby.

The court rendered judgment for the plaintiff and the defendant appeals.

[1] During the progress of the trial of the action, the plaintiff offered, and, over the objection of the defendant, the court admitted, parol evidence that the plaintiff acted as a real estate broker in negotiating an exchange of lands between the defendant and the Arakelians; that in the transaction the defendant took the note above referred to and the deed of trust on the land the defendant was transferring to the Arakelians to secure the payment of said note; that plaintiff's commission in the transaction amounted to the sum of $3,000 from each one of the parties; that to finance the deal it was necessary that the Arakelians raise the sum of $45,000. As they were unable to do so. and to carry the exchange through, the defendant assumed a mortgage of $25,000 on the property which he was obtaining from the Arakelians, and further advanced them the sum of $17,000; that of the latter amount $2,000 were commissions due from the defendant to the plaintiff, and the balance of $3,000 was the commission due from the Arakelians to the plaintiff. The defendant paid plaintiff the balance of $1,000 due as commissions in cash.

Appellant claims that the court committed prejudicial error in allowing the plaintiff to introduce oral evidence of his commission on the exchange agreement. He cites in support thereof section 1973 of the Code of Civil Procedure to the effect that an agreement authorizing or employing an agent or broker to purchase or sell real estate for compensation or commission is invalid, unless the same, or some note or memorandum thereof, be in writing, and subscribed by the party to be charged, or by his agent, and that evidence thereof cannot be received without the writing or secondary evidence of its contents. There can be no question that, if this action was for the recovery of a commission due the plaintiff for the sale of real estate, the objection would be sound. McGeary v. Satchwell, 129 Cal. 389, 62 P. 58. But this is not such an action. It is one to have the defendant declared a trustee of an interest alleged to be owned in a certain promissory note and trust deed standing in the name of the defendant. While it is true that the consideration for plaintiff's alleged interest in said note was a broker's commission on a sale of real estate, the contract of sale having been fully executed and the broker's commissions merged in the note which is the subject of this action, it was unnecessary to produce a written contract under subdivision 6 of section 1973 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In 12 Cal. Jur. 926, it is said: "A fully executed parol contract cannot be affected by the statute of frauds and cannot be assailed by either party or by third persons, on the ground that it is not in writing. * * *" The same principle is enunciated in Scott v. Glenn, 87 Cal. 221, 25 P. 405. In the instant case, $3,000 of the $5,000 interest in the promissory note were commissions owed by the Arakelians to the plaintiff, and, having been included in the note, it was a completed transaction. The remaining $2,000 were commissions owed by the defendant to plaintiff, and, having been advanced by defendant to the Arakelians to enable them to close the deal, and being included in the promissory note, also constituted an executed parol contract. The point urged is without merit.

[2] The next point urged for a reversal of the judgment is that the court erred in excluding certain evidence offered by the defendant. We are of the opinion that the point is well taken and the ruling of the court constituted prejudicial error. The plaintiff, in support of his case, offered parol evidence that the consideration for the note was $40,000 furnished by the defendant and $5,000 furnished by plaintiff. That the latter sum was made up of his commissions earned on the exchange of lands by defendant and Arakelian. As against this line of testimony, defendant endeavored to introduce evidence that, as a part of the duties of plaintiff in the exchange, the latter was to obtain a loan of $45,000 to finance the deal. Failing to obtain said loan, plaintiff and defendant made a new contract, by the terms of which defendant furnished the sum of $42,000 and paid the plaintiff the sum of $1,000 for his services as a broker under the exchange agreement. The note and deed of trust under said new contract was taken for the sum of $45,000, and plaintiff was to have one year from the date thereof in which to sell said note and deed of trust, and, if he failed to sell within said time, his interest in the note and mortgage ceased, but, if he succeeded in making said sale, then the defendant was to receive the sum of $40,000 thereof and the plaintiff the balance. Defendant also offered to prove that the plaintiff had failed to sell within the time limited. We are of the opinion that, the court having permitted the plaintiff to introduce evidence of his version of the agreement, defendant was entitled to rebut such evidence by a countershowing. We think that sections 1850, 1854, and 1860 of the Code of Civil Procedure warrant this conclusion.

[3] It is claimed by respondent that the foregoing is new matter, and, to be available to the defendant, should have been specially pleaded, but we think this claim is answered by the case of Mott v. Minor, 11 Cal. App. 774, 106 P. 244, where it is held that under a specific denial the defendant could prove that a cause of action never did exist in favor of the plaintiff.

It is further claimed that the judgment is not sustained by the findings. As the judgment must be set aside, it is unnecessary to pass upon this question.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

2. Carriers ⚷321(21)—Instruction on res ipsa loquitur held not erroneous in passenger's action against motorbus operators, though defendants' witnesses testified as to circumstances of accident.

In action by passenger against operators of motorbus for injuries sustained in collision with automobile, instruction on res ipsa loquitur held not erroneous by reason of fact that defendants' witnesses gave evidence tending to prove how the accident occurred, where plaintiffs pleaded negligence in general terms.

3. Trial ⚷296(11) — Instruction permitting jury's consideration of injured plaintiff's condition in life held not prejudicial error as permitting consideration of pecuniary condition, in view of court's admonition relative to argument.

Instruction relating to damages, in action for injuries, that jury should take into consideration plaintiff's condition in life, held not to constitute prejudicial error as permitting consideration of plaintiff's financial ability, in view of court's subsequent admonition to jury to disregard any argument of attorneys in regard to wealth of parties.

4. Trial ⚷296(3)—Instruction permitting recovery against one defendant if his negligence was the proximate cause held not erroneous, in view of other instructions.

In action against several defendants for injuries, instruction to jury that, if they found negligence of one of defendants alone proximately caused injuries, and plaintiffs were free from contributory negligence, verdict must be against that defendant, held not erroneous as direction that such defendant was negligent, in view of other instructions.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; George H. Buck, Judge.

Action by Hans Roher against Leonard & Holt and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeals. Affirmed.

Ross & Ross, of Redwood City, and Redman & Alexander, of San Francisco, for appellant Leonard & Holt.

Cooley, Crowley & Gallagher, of San Francisco, for appellant Rossotto.

J. Horton Beeman, of San Francisco, and Franklin Swart, of Redwood City, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, J. Anna Roher was injured while a passenger riding in a bus operated by the defendants Leonard & Holt when their bus collided with an automobile operated by the defendant Clorinda Rossotto. She filed a complaint charging negligence in general terms against both defendants. The defendants appeared and answered, and a trial was had before the trial court sitting with a jury. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiffs, and from the judgment entered thereon the defendants have appealed, and have filed separate sets of briefs.

Appeal of Leonard & Holt.

[1] The defendants Leonard & Holt requested the trial court to give an instruction regarding the maximum of speed which under the law was permissible at the intersection of Brewster avenue and Myrtle street in Redwood City, San Mateo county, at the time of the accident. The trial court refused that instruction, but did give an instruction quoting the introductory part and subdivision (a) of section 113 of the Motor Vehicle Act (1 Deering's Gen. Laws, 1851, 1886). These defendants complain of the ruling as being error. However, we see no error in the ruling. In the preceding instruction the trial court had instructed the jury that a common carrier is bound to exercise the highest degree of care in transporting its passengers. An instruction regarding minimum speed might have been pertinent, but an instruction regarding maximum speed would have had no effect excepting to confuse the jurors.

[2] The trial court also gave an instruction regarding the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur. It is not claimed that the instruction was improperly worded. However, these defendants claim that, under the facts, no instruction on that subject should have been given, because in the instant case these defendants called some witnesses to the stand and introduced some evidence proving, or tending to prove, how the accident occurred. As stated above, the plaintiffs pleaded their case by pleading negligence in general terms. The defendants cite and rely on Marovich v. Central California T. Co., 191 Cal. 295, 216 P. 595. That authority is not in point. That case was directed to a pleading in which the plaintiff set forth specific acts of negligence.

Appeal of Clorinda Rossotto.

[3] In instructing the jury on the subject of damages, the trial court gave an instruction as follows: "If your verdict is for the plaintiffs, then in assessing the damages to Anna Roher, if any, you should take into consideration her age and condition in life; the character of the injuries sustained by her, if any; the nature, extent and severity of the injuries sustained by her, if any; and if you find that she did sustain an injury, whether the same was temporary, or if permanent in its character. And in estimating the amount of such damages you may consider the pain suffered, if any; extent, degree and character of suffering, if any; and its duration and severity; also pain, if any, which you believe from the evidence plaintiff, Anna Roher, is reasonably certain to suffer in the future; and from all of these elements you will resolve what sum will fairly compensate her for the injuries and loss, if any, sustained by her, not, however, in excess of the amount prayed for in the complaint." This appellant contends that the portion italicized was in effect to direct the jury to take into consideration "the pecuniary condition of the plaintiffs." The instruction is not clear, and should not have been given. Conceding that the instruction would have been error if it had been so worded, a sufficient answer is that the instruction is not necessarily susceptible of the meaning which the appellant would impress upon it. The instruction was not so worded. In construing the part objected to with the rest of the instructions given by the court, and reading all of the instructions together, the attack may not be sustained. If the instruction had been expressly worded, as this defendant contends for, then it will be conceded that it would have been erroneous. Story v. Green, 164 Cal. 768, 772, 130 P. 870, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 961; Shea v. P. & B. v. R. Co., 44 Cal. 414, 429. Malone v. Hawley, 46 Cal. 409, does not set forth in hæc verba the instruction which was under consideration, nor the other instructions which were given. For that reason it is not conclusive in this case. The financial ability of the plaintiffs in this case had not come before the court in any respect whatsoever except as we will note. Mr. Swart, one of the attorneys, while arguing in behalf of the plaintiffs, adverted in some respect to the subject. Thereupon the following proceedings were had: "Mr. Alexander: I assign the remark of Mr. Swart as misconduct, the fact that the plaintiffs were poor. I assign it as misconduct and ask that the jury be discharged at this time. The Court: That question is not before the jury and should not have been mentioned in any way and I will just say to the jury that they will not take into consideration anything the attorneys may say in regard to the wealth of any parties connected with this case. Mr. Swart: I am sorry to have made that statement." Bearing in mind that all instructions are to be read together, and reading the instruction objected to and the firm admonition of the court which we have just quoted, we are bound to assume that the jury understood the trial court fully and that the jury understood that it was not to take into consideration the financial condition of the plaintiffs when the jury was making up its verdict.

[4] While reading numerous instructions to the jury, the trial court, among other things, read an instruction as follows: "If you find from the evidence that it was the negligence of the defendant Clorinda Rossotto alone which proximately caused or contributed to the injuries to Mrs. Roher, and that plaintiffs themselves were free from negligence which proximately caused or contributed to said accident, your verdict must be in favor of plaintiffs and against defendant Clorinda Rossotto." This defendant claims the instruction was to the effect that Mrs. Rossotto was negligent. Turning to the other instructions given by the court, it is very clear that the trial court did not in any respect whatsoever instruct on any question of fact in the case; on the other hand, that it made itself very clear that the function of determining facts rested with the jury, and in particular the function of determining whether the defendants were, or either of them was, guilty of negligence; and, if so, which one.

We find no error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

Action by John E. Willis against Ida Perinoni and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

G. P. Hall, of Petaluma (J. Hall Lewis, of Petaluma, of counsel), for appellants.

★Rehearing denied. Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

BURROUGHS, Justice pro tem. In this action plaintiff sued the defendants for the sum of $5,000 actual damages alleged to be due him for personal injuries inflicted by said defendants, and also for the sum of $5,000 exemplary damages. The cause was tried by a jury and a verdict returned in favor of the plaintiff and against both defendants for the sum of $5,000. Defendants have appealed from the judgment entered on said verdict.

In support of his cause of action it is alleged in the amended complaint that on or about the 21st day of May, 1926, in the city of Petaluma, county of Sonoma, the defendants wantonly, maliciously, grossly, outrageously, and violently assaulted the plaintiff, in that the defendant Ida Perinoni did then and there hold the plaintiff while the defendant Romildo Perinoni did then and there, while said Ida Perinoni held the plaintiff, strike him on the head with an iron bar, causing plaintiff's skull to be fractured and inflicted upon him permanent injuries. The defendants deny the allegations of the complaint and by way of a further defense allege that defendant Ida Perinoni was on the day of the alleged assault the owner of a piece of real property in the city of Petaluma, and that the plaintiff forcibly entered upon said real property against her will and without her consent, and that she thereupon ordered him to leave said premises, which he refused to do, and that he thereupon attacked her, and assaulted her, and struck her with a hammer. That the said defendant Romildo Perinoni witnessed said assault, and both the defendants, believing that the life of defendant Ida Perinoni was in danger, and in order to prevent further assault by the plaintiff, forcibly ejected plaintiff from the premises, using only sufficient force necessary for that purpose. In support of the appeal appellants contend that the verdict and judgment against the defendant Ida Perinoni is against law; that the judgment, in so far as it affects the defendant Romildo Perinoni, is excessive. In support of these claims it is contended: First, that there was an entire absence of malice shown by either defendant against the plaintiff; second, that the defendants were resisting a trespasser on the premises of the defendant Ida Perinoni at the time of the alleged assault and used only necessary and sufficient force to eject him therefrom; third, that with respect to the defendant Ida Perinoni there was no evidence of aiding and abetting the assault or a conspiracy between the defendants that the defendant Romildo Perinoni should commit the alleged assault upon plaintiff.

[1, 2] After an examination of the entire record, we are satisfied that the verdict of the jury rested upon a conflict in the evidence, and therefore under well-settled principles of law this court may not disturb the verdict. There is substantial and satisfactory evidence of the following facts: The defendants are brother and sister. The latter was the owner of a house and lot in the city of Petaluma. A man named Baker was the owner of an adjoining lot. On May 21, 1926, said Baker was, through a contractor, erecting a building on his said lot; said building to be used in connection with an automobile shop. The building was located from 6½ to 8 inches back from the property line between the lots of said Baker and said defendant Ida Perinoni. The plaintiff was a carpenter working on said building. He commenced work thereon early in the afternoon of said day. While working on the building the defendant Ida Perinoni called to him in a loud tone of voice, from the window of her own home, to keep off of her property, repeating this admonition a number of times and finally calling to him that she had warned him the last time. Within a few moments she left her house and went over to the place where the plaintiff was leaning over and nailing some sheeting on the side of the building. She caught him by the back of his clothing and began to shake and pull him to her property. While she was thus shaking the plaintiff and ordering him off her property, her codefendant, Romildo Perinoni, ran toward them and struck the plaintiff over the head several times with an iron bar. A man named Dillingham, who was a witness to the attack, undertook to prevent the defendant Romildo Perinoni from further striking the plaintiff. He ran between Romildo and the plaintiff and got hold of Romildo's upraised arm, whereupon Romildo tried to hit Dillingham with the iron bar. Thereupon the defendant Ida got hold of Dillingham and started to scratch his eyes. There was also evidence of witnesses that Ida Perinoni held the plaintiff while her brother struck him. There was also direct evidence that the plaintiff was not on her land at the time of the attack, nor had he been on there at any previous time. It further appears from the evidence of a witness named Hosty, who a short time prior to the commencement of the erection of the building was preparing the lot for the building, that he was told by the defendant Ida Perinoni: "You are not going to put up any building up here." Her codefendant told the same witness he would have to be pretty damn careful and keep off his property. There was also evidence to the effect that Ida Perinoni had applied to the city council to try to stop the erection of said building. Further, that the defendant Ida had served a notice on Baker to keep off her property, and during the day of the assault she was constantly warning the workmen to keep off of her lot. The evidence also discloses that the plaintiff received a fractured skull from the assault, that his eyesight had been affected, and that at the date of the trial he was undergoing massage treatment for numbness in his limbs, and also that his efficiency as a first-class carpenter had been impaired. It is true that a large part of this evidence was contradicted by the defendants and they also testified that the plaintiff struck the defendant Ida Perinoni with a hammer, but this was denied by the plaintiff and several disinterested witnesses. We are of the opinion that under the foregoing evidence the jury were justified in the implied finding that both defendants were actuated by malice and that the defendant Ida Perinoni actually aided and abetted her brother in the assault and that they were not acting in defense of property.

[3] It is next pointed out by appellants that the amount of damages awarded was excessive, but we are of the opinion that the amount of damages awarded was peculiarly within the province of the jury and should not be disturbed by this court. Redfield v. Oakland Consolidated Street R. Co., 110 Cal. 277, 42 P. 822, 1063; Lee v. S. P. R. Co., 101 Cal. 118, 35 P. 572; Boyce v. California Stage Co., 25 Cal. 474.

BERKELEY CHIROPRACTIC COLLEGE et al. v. COMPTON et al. (Civ. 6646.)

1. Physicians and surgeons 🔑5(2)—Board of chiropractic examiners, empowered to examine applicants to practice chiropractic, and requiring certain qualifications, held unauthorized to examine college as to reputability (St. 1923, p. xx, § 5).

Under St. 1923, p. xx, authorizing creation of chiropractic board of examiners, and giving it power to examine applicants, to issue and revoke licenses to do things necessary to exercise of powers and duties, and by section 5 providing qualifications of applicant, board was not required, and was not given implied privilege or duty, to examine college as to its reputability; burden of proving eligibility to take examinations being upon applicant himself.

2. Constitutional law 🔑70(1)—Court cannot read into statute what was not clearly intent thereof.

It is not the province of the court to read into St. 1923, p. xx, authorizing creation of a chiropractic board of examiners, and defining their powers and duties, what was not clearly the intent thereof.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by Berkeley Chiropractic College and another against James Compton and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Frank V. Kington, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Sawyer & Sawyer and F. W. Sawyer, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

BURROUGHS, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from an order of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, granting an injunction in favor of the plaintiff the Berkeley Chiropractic College, and against the defendants as the acting state board of chiropractic examiners. The appellants contend that the state board of chiropractic examiners, under and by virtue of a statute of this state creating the board and declaring its powers and duties, has a right of its own motion to conduct an investigation into the qualifications and status of a chiropractic school or college holding itself out to be one organized for the purpose of qualifying applicants for chiropractic licensure; also to summon witnesses, demand the production of records, examine into the qualifications of teachers of said institution, and to pass upon the reputability of such school or college. The injunction granted by the court reads as follows:

"The plaintiffs in the above entitled action having commenced said action by filing their verified complaint against the above named defendants as the State Board of Chiropractic Examiners of the State of California praying for an injunction against said defendants as said Board to refrain from certain acts set forth in said complaint, and hereinafter more particularly mentioned, and this court having issued its order to show cause directed to said defendants directing them to appear and show cause why injunction should not issue as prayed; and said defendants having appeared and filed their demurrer to said complaint, and it appearing to this court as a matter of law that said defendants have no right, authority or jurisdiction as said Board to do and perform said acts.

"It is therefore ordered, adjudged and decreed that you the said above named defendants James Compton, W. W. Tait, H. D. McFarland, W. N. Clayton and J. K. Gilkerson as said State Board of Chiropractic Examiners of the State of California, do absolutely desist and refrain and you are hereby permanently enjoined and prohibited from conducting any investigation of the plaintiff Berkeley Chiropractic College, a corporation, and/or the qualifications and status thereof as a chiropractic college; and/or to issue citations, subpœnas or other processes, and/or to examine witnesses and take testimony or other evidence in the matter of such investigation of said plaintiff Berkeley Chiropractic College."

The act regulating the practice of chiropractic in this state is found in the Statutes of 1923, page lxxxix, authorizing the creation of a chiropractic board of examiners, and defining their powers and duties. It contains, among other provisions, the following:

"The board shall have power: * * *

"(c) To examine applicants and to issue and revoke licenses to practice chiropractic, as herein provided.

"(d) To summon witnesses and to take testimony as to matters pertaining to its duties; and each member shall have power to administer oaths and take affidavits.

"(e) To do any and all things necessary or incidental to the exercise of the powers and duties herein granted or imposed."

The act further provides: "Sec. 5. * * * Each applicant shall be a graduate of an incorporated chiropractic school or college which teaches a course of not less than two thousand four hundred hours, extended over a period of three school terms of at least six months each, and must give satisfactory proof of having attended not less than ninety per cent. of said two thousand four hundred hours, and shall present to the board at the time of making such application, a diploma from a high school, or proof, satisfactory to the board, of education equivalent in training power to a high school course."

Appellants contend that under the foregoing provisions the power of the board to examine into the qualification of colleges, though not expressly given, is implied, and in support of its contention appellant cites the general rule of implied powers from Throop on Public Officers, § 342, as follows: "That in addition to the powers expressly given by statute to an officer or a board of officers he or it has, by implication, such additional powers, as are necessary for the due and efficient exercise of the powers expressly granted, or as may be fairly implied from the statute granting the express powers."

[1, 2] The implied power in the case at bar is clearly "to do any and all things necessary or incidental to the exercise of the powers and duties herein granted or imposed." The powers and duties granted or imposed by this statute are: To examine applicants as to their character and qualification, and to issue and revoke licenses. The statute neither states nor implies that the board shall pass upon the reputability of a college, nor does it say a college in good standing, but, on the contrary, the language of the statute is: "Each applicant shall be a graduate of an incorporated chiropractic school or college," and, further, in the requirements for eligibility of an applicant to take the examinations, the statute says he "must give satisfactory proof of having attended, * * *" and, further, "and shall present a high school diploma or other proof of equivalent education." We are of the opinion that the intendment of section 5 is that the applicant must give to the board satisfactory proof of his eligibility to take the examinations. The statute has gone further and required of the board that the examinations shall cover certain subjects, and a certain average shall be attained before the certificate may be granted. The burden of proving his eligibility to take the examinations is put upon the applicant himself, and the act contains no provision requiring or implying a privilege or duty on the part of the board of chiropractic examiners to examine a college as to its reputability. The case of Ex parte Whitley, 144 Cal. 167, 77 P 879, 1 Ann. Cas. 13, cited by appellant, involved the power of the board of dental examiners. The power claimed in that instance is clearly implied in the act creating a board of dental examiners, to be found in the Statutes of 1915, p. 698. It is therein provided that an applicant for a license to practice dentistry shall furnish "satisfactory evidence of having graduated from a reputable dental college, which must have been approved by the board of dental examiners of California." Section 6. If the school must be reputable and must have been approved by the board, the board must have examined into the qualifications and status of the college and either approved or disapproved the college from which the applicant has graduated. Other jurisdictions have by statute given to the board of examiners the express or clearly implied power to examine and pass upon the reputability of medical or dental schools. In the case of the People ex rel. v. Dental Examiner, 110 Ill. 181, the court, at page 183, cites the Illinois statute as follows: "Unless such person shall have received a diploma from the faculty of some reputable dental college duly authorized by the laws of this State. * * *" And, further: "But said board shall, at all times, issue a license to any regular graduate of any reputable dental college, without examination, upon the payment by such graduate," etc.; and further in the opinion of the court it is held that the word "reputable" is in addition to the other requirements in regard to the college, and "whether a college be reputable or not is not a legal question but one of fact * * * the reputability of the college lies with the board of examiners." In Iowa Medical College Ass'n v. Schrader, 87 Iowa, 661, 55 N. W. 24, 20 L. R. A. 355, it is clearly held that the law required the board of examiners to decide the standing of the college. The statute is cited as follows: "If the diploma is found genuine, and is issued by a medical school legally organized and in good standing, of which the state board of examiners shall determine." The court held that the action of the board of examiners in passing upon the standing of the college was within its jurisdiction and legal. The powers here claimed by appellant have been granted by this and other states in similar statutes. Had it been intended that this board of examiners should exercise such control over chiropractic colleges, the act could have been so framed. It is not the province of the court to read into the statute what was not clearly the intent thereof. The act itself provides for the examination of the applicant by the board.

We are of the opinion that the judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J., STURTEVANT, J.

Findings of trial court on issue made upon evidence is conclusive on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Guerin, Judge.

Action by E. B. Fish against Jesse A. Rasor and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Samuel D. Weil and Don R. Lehman, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

W. C. Shelton, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

YORK, J. This is a suit brought on a promissory note, on which payment on account of interest had been made. The answer of the defendants denies nonpayment, and sets up an affirmative defense by alleging certain agreements made as to the drilling of a well, claiming damages for failure of the well to produce the amount of water alleged to have been warranted.

The court, in its findings on evidence introduced, finds against the contention of the defendants that such a warranty was made. The appellants urge "that it is inherently improbable that the casing could have been properly perforated under the flow conditions as they existed before reperforation," but the finding is not of an impossible fact, and the evidence is sufficient to support the finding made.

[1] One contention of the defendants is that the court erred in excluding evidence of defendants' damage by reason of lack of water from the well. If the trial court was right in its findings, and if we are right in the conclusion we have heretofore reached, all of this evidence which was ruled out is now immaterial.

[2] As to the last contention of the appellants, that they were entitled to a set-off of $300 for pulling and reinstalling the pump, the findings of the trial court on this issue made upon evidence is against this contention, which therefore cannot be heard here.

The main arguments of the appellants appear to be in regard to matters relating to the flow of water underground, and the contention of the appellants that the plaintiff warranted that the well upon the land of the defendants would produce a certain amount of water. This was denied by the plaintiff, and the trial court found in accordance with the testimony of the plaintiff.

We do not believe that any of the contentions of the appellants are well founded, and judgment is therefore affirmed.

Rehearing Denied April 18, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 20, 1929.

1. Injunction 🔑157—Order restraining interference with possession of premises until title was finally determined in pending actions held not uncertain as to acts restrained or duration.

Order restraining petitioner from interfering, hindering, or molesting another in peaceable and quiet possession of premises until title and right of possession thereto should be finally determined in four pending actions, held not void for uncertainty either as to time of its duration or as to act from doing of which petitioner was restrained.

2. Injunction 🔑157—Order restraining interference with possession of premises until title was finally determined in pending actions held not void as enjoining exercise of legal right (Code Civ. Proc. § 526, subds. 1, 6).

Order restraining petitioner from interfering, hindering, or molesting another in peaceable and quiet possession of premises, until title and right of possession thereto should be finally determined in four pending actions, held not void for attempting to enjoin exercise of legal right, it being presumed that one of controlling reasons was to prevent multiplicity of proceedings under Code Civ. Proc. § 526, subds. 1, 6.

3. Injunction 🔑157—Restraining order held not void for not disclosing that bond was required or reason for issuance.

Order restraining petitioner from interfering, hindering, or molesting another in peaceable and quiet possession of premises, until title and right of possession thereto should be finally determined in four pending actions, held not void on ground that order does not disclose on face that bond was required or reason for its own issuance.

4. Injunction 🔑157—Order restraining interference with possession of premises until title was finally determined in pending actions held not void as self-contradictory.

Order restraining petitioner from interfering, hindering, or molesting another in peaceable and quiet possession of premises until title and right of possession thereto should be finally determined in four pending actions held not void as being self-contradictory.

5. Injunction 🔑230(2)—Affidavit in contempt proceeding for violating restraining order held not insufficient for failure to show order was in effect when acts were committed.

Affidavit in contempt proceeding setting forth issuance of order restraining interference with possession of property and service on defendant on or about September 7, and that defendant, for purpose of setting at naught such restraining order and destroying quiet enjoyment of premises, procured others to file actions against corporation in possession, held not insufficient to confer jurisdiction on ground that it did not disclose that restraining order was in force on September 14, when acts complained of were committed.

6. Injunction 🔑230(2)—Affidavit in contempt proceeding for violating restraining order held not insufficient for failure to disclose act complained of was act restrained.

Affidavit in contempt proceeding, setting forth issuance of order restraining interference with possession of property and service on defendant on or about September 7, and that defendant, for purpose of setting at naught such restraining order and destroying quiet enjoyment of premises, procured others to file actions against corporation in possession, held not insufficient for failure to disclose that act complained of was act restrained.

7. Injunction 🔑230(2)—Affidavit in contempt proceeding for violating restraining order held not insufficient for not averring knowledge of restraining order.

Affidavit in contempt proceeding, setting forth issuance of order restraining interference with possession of property and service on defendant on or about September 7, and that defendant, for purpose of setting at naught such restraining order and destroying quiet enjoyment of premises, procured others to file actions against corporation in possession, held not insufficient for failure to aver defendant's knowledge of existence of restraining order.

8. Contempt 🔑54(4)—Affidavit for constructive contempt must show on face facts constituting contempt.

In proceeding to punish for constructive contempt, affidavit must show on its face facts which constitute contempt.

9. Contempt 🔑60(1)—No presumptions are indulged respecting jurisdiction of court, in absence of essential averment in contempt proceeding.

In proceeding to punish for constructive contempt, no presumptions are to be indulged with respect to jurisdiction of court, in absence of essential averment.

10. Injunction 🔑230(2)—Affidavit in contempt proceeding for violating restraining order held not insufficient for not showing giving of undertaking prior to issuance of original restraining order.

Affidavit in contempt proceeding for violating restraining order held not insufficient for failure to set up giving of undertaking prior to issuance of original restraining order, since order presupposes giving of bond, and, if none was given, it was incumbent on defendant to show such fact as excuse for nonobservance.

Application for certiorari by Benjamin Gardner to review an order of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Ruben S. Schmidt, Judge, adjudging petitioner guilty of contempt. Order affirmed.

Heyfron, Davis & Heyfron, of Hollywood, and Max Lewis, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

William P. Redmond, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

THOMPSON, J. The petitioner here was found guilty of contempt by the respondent court, and sentenced to five days' imprisonment in the county jail. He seeks by the writ of review to have the judgment annulled on the ground that the court had no jurisdiction to pronounce it. In support of this contention, he advances two arguments. He says, first, that the original restraining order which the respondent is claimed to have violated is void on its face, and, second, that the affidavit upon which an order was made for the petitioner to show cause why he should not be punished was insufficient to confer jurisdiction on the court.

It appears from the record that, prior to September 7, 1928, four actions were pending in the respondent court, all of them in some way relating to the title or right of possession to certain real property in the possession of Beth David Nusach Sephard, a religious corporation, from about January 11, 1926, to about August 21, 1928; that on the latter day, well knowing that a writ of assistance had previously issued to the plaintiff in the action entitled Morrow & Baer v. Gardner, one Annie Weinberg, by and through her agent B. Gardner, secured a writ of assistance to issue out of the respondent court to place Annie Weinberg in possession; that on September 7, 1928, after hearing for that purpose, the respondent court made its order setting aside the writ of assistance issued to Annie Weinberg, and restraining Annie Weinberg, B. Gardner (the petitioner here), and E. T. McGann from applying for or obtaining an order in an effort to obtain possession of the real property involved until the title and right of possession thereto should be finally determined in the four actions then pending, to wit: W. E. Morrow et al. v. W. N. Stamps et al., Anshei Sfard Congregation v. Beth David, Halstead Lumber Company v. W. E. Morrow, and B. Gardner v. W. E. Morrow, and restraining them from "interfering, hindering or molesting the Beth David Nusach Sephard, a corporation," in the peaceable and quiet possession of the premises. It is for a violation of this order that the petitioner was found guilty of contempt.

[1-4] We can therefore revert to petitioner's first argument that the restraining order is void on its face. It needs barely more than a statement of the various contentions in this particular to show that some of them at least are untenable. It is said the order is void on its face for the following reasons: (a) It is uncertain as to the time of its duration; (b) it is uncertain as to the act from the doing of which petitioner was restrained; (c) it attempts to enjoin the exercise of a legal right; (d) it does not show on its face that a bond was required to be given by those at whose instance it was issued; (e) it is self-contradictory because it attempts to enjoin petitioner from applying for an order until an order is made; and (f) it does not disclose on its face the necessity for its own issuance.

With respect to the argument that the order is uncertain in the particulars mentioned, we must confess our inability to agree with petitioner. The order runs until title and right of possession is determined in the actions pending, this being equivalent to an ordinary order "until the further order of the court," and it restrains those named from interfering with the peaceable possession of the property, and from instituting any further or other proceedings which shall have as their object the disturbance of possession.

Next, we cannot agree with petitioner's assumption that the exercise of a legal right may never be restrained. In subdivision 6 of section 526 of the Code of Civil Procedure it is provided that an injunction may be granted "where the restraint is necessary to prevent a multiplicity of proceedings," and it is said in the first subdivision of the same section under the heading: "An injunction can not be granted: 1. To stay a judicial proceeding pending at the commencement of the action in which the injunction is demanded, unless such restraint is necessary to prevent a multiplicity of such proceedings." Aside from the fact that all the reasons for the order are not necessarily to be incorporated in it, it does appear here from the face of the order that four actions were then pending, and it also appears from the record that two additional actions, affecting the title or right of possession to the property in question in the other four, were caused to be filed subsequently. It cannot be denied, therefore, that we must indulge the presumption that one of the controlling reasons for the issuance of the order was to prevent a multiplicity of proceedings. That the order does not disclose on its face that a bond was required, or the reason for its own issuance, may be dismissed with the answer that we know of no law or rule of procedure requiring the order to so show. If either of these defects actually existed, petitioner had his remedy, but he cannot urge that the order shows its own invalidity by its failure to disclose these essentials. Nor can we sustain his contention that the order is void because it is self-contradictory. It is plainly apparent that the court intended to enjoin the petitioner and the others from cluttering the courts with further proceedings —not actions, but mere attempts to secure possession pendente lite—until their claim of title and of right to possession should be determined in the actions then pending. It was not intended nor said that they should be precluded from asserting their rights therein.

[5-7] We now turn to petitioner's contention that the affidavit was insufficient to confer jurisdiction on the respondent court to sentence him for contempt. In effect, petitioner's argument in this regard is: First, that the affidavit does not disclose that the restraining order issued September 7, 1928, was in full force and effect on September 14, 1928, when the acts complained of were committed; second, that the affidavit does not disclose that the act complained of was the act restrained; third, that it does not aver knowledge by petitioner of the existence of the restraining order; and, fourth, that it does not set up the giving of an undertaking prior to the issuance of the original restraining order. The affidavit sets forth the issuance of the order and its effect as we have heretofore outlined it and its service on petitioner on or about September 7. It then avers that petitioner, with "absolute intent and purpose and in contempt and contrary to the sanctity of the decrees and restraining order of the Court and in violation of the Court's Order," did institute and procure certain persons to file actions against the Beth David Nusach Sephard, a corporation, and caused writs of attachment to be issued and the synagogue located on the property to be padlocked, for the purpose of setting "at naught the purpose of said restraining order and to destroy the peaceful and quiet enjoyment of said premises by the Beth David Nusach Sephard, a corporation, and with intent to interfere, molest and destroy the peaceful and quiet religious worship of the members of said Beth David Nusach Sephard. * * *" It also says that, as a direct result of the attachments, the religious corporation was interfered with in the celebration and observance of the high holidays known as "Roshashonah," occurring September 14, 1928, and "Yom Kippur," on September 24, 1928. It is unnecessary to comment at any great length upon the first three reasons assigned by petitioner for the insufficiency of the affidavit. The order, it says, was issued September 7, and one week later, for the sole purpose of setting it at naught, the petitioner committed the act which it is alleged was for the purpose and did actually interfere with the peaceable possession of Beth David Nusach Sephard. The act could not have been done for the purpose of setting at naught the order, unless it was a subsisting order. In considering whether the act complained of was restrained, it must be borne in mind that complaint is not made of the filing of the actions and the issuance and service of the writs of attachment, which it is claimed would not have been filed except for the actions and persuasion of the petitioner, but the act which is made the basis of the judgment is the stirring up of the litigation and the securing of the complaints to be filed by the petitioner with the purpose, object, and effect of interfering with the observance of religious holidays. Also it must be noted that, during the temporary possession of the premises under a writ of assistance which it is said petitioner knew was procured to be wrongfully issued on account of the previous issuance of the same writ in favor of the Beth David Nusach Sephard Corporation, in an action in which the petitioner was a defendant, the petitioner caused certain people to perform labor upon and furnish materials to the premises in question. After he was dispossessed the second time, he persuaded these same people to file the attachment actions. This was but an indirect way of asserting title to the premises, for the reason that the validity of the attachments depended upon the title of the petitioner, the defendant in the actions which he procured to be filed. In other words, we may say of the actions that they were in the nature of being fictitious actions secured to be filed for the purpose of violating the second portion of the order, i. e., interfering with the peaceable possession of the Beth David Nusach Sephard, a corporation. So far as knowledge by petitioner of the order is concerned, it is averred in the original affidavit that it was served upon him on September 7. It is true that subsequently, and in response to a reply affidavit of the petitioner, a supplemental affidavit was filed in which the force of this statement is considerably weakened by the confession of affiant that the statement that the order was served upon petitioner "apparently may or may not be true." The supplemental affidavit does aver in detail, however, that the petitioner had knowledge of the order at the time it was made and at all times since, and the court found in accordance with this averment. It cannot, therefore, be successfully argued either that the original affidavit was insufficient to support the order to show cause or that the subsequent showing was insufficient to authorize the court to sentence the petitioner.

[8-10] The last point made by petitioner is that the affidavit does not disclose whether a bond was given prior to the issuance of the restraining order. There can be no doubt upon the proposition of law advanced by counsel that in a proceeding to punish for a constructive contempt the affidavit must show on its face the facts which constitute the contempt, and that no presumptions are to be indulged with respect to the jurisdiction of the court in the absence of an essential averment. This is quite different, however, from saying that all of the steps leading up to the order which it is claimed has been violated must be set forth. It would undoubtedly be presumed in an attack upon the restraining order, in the absence of a showing to the contrary, that the judge had required the requisite bond prior to the issuance of the order. How, then, can it be said that in this proceeding a like indulgence should not be granted? The order presupposes the giving of a bond, and, if none in fact was given, it was incumbent on this petitioner to show that fact, as an excuse for his nonobservance.

98 Cal. App. 97

In re CASASSA'S ESTATE. (Civ. 6645.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. April 2, 1929.

1. Wills 🔑82—Will, leaving all property to children, though in unequal portions, held not "unnatural will."

Will under which testatrix transferred all property to her children held not "unnatural will," though contestant was given $2,000, another son $5,000, another $1,000, and the remainder given one-fourth to each of four remaining children, so that some received $7,500.

2. Wills 🔑326—In ruling on nonsuit, power to weigh evidence does not obtain as on submission of cause.

In ruling on nonsuit in will contest, court will bear in mind contention that power to weigh evidence does not obtain as it does on submission of cause.

3. Wills 🔑52(1)—Testatrix is presumed to be of sound mind.

In action for revocation of probate of will, testatrix is presumed to be of sound mind.

4. Wills 🔑423—Order admitting will to probate is presumed to correctly determine and set forth rights of parties.

In action for revocation of probate of will, order admitting will to probate, though not conclusive, is presumed to correctly determine and set forth rights of parties.

5. Wills 🔑324(2)—In action for revocation of probate, nonsuit held proper under evidence on issue whether testatrix was of unsound mind.

In action for revocation of probate of will, nonsuit held proper as to contention that testatrix was of unsound mind under evidence that she was weak, drowsy, uncommunicative, eccentric, and miserly, and spoke in broken sentences, was absent-minded and of short memory before and after time of making will.

6. Wills 🔑165(1)—Declaration by decedent held incompetent against testatrix's children to prove they had exercised undue influence.

In action by son of testatrix for revocation of will opposed by brothers and sisters, declaration by decedent held not competent evidence as against defendants to prove they had exercised undue influence.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Franklin A. Griffin, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Anna Casassa, deceased. Action for revocation of probate of will by Frank A. Casassa, contestant, opposed by Armand Casassa and others, proponents. From judgment of nonsuit, contestant appeals. Affirmed.

Walter A. Dold, of San Francisco (Pembroke Gochnauer, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison, of San Francisco, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, J. Anna Casassa died testate at San Francisco on the 14th day of December, 1925. Her will was admitted to probate, and later one of her sons, Frank A., filed a petition asking that the probate be revoked. He named his brothers Armand and Louis and his sister Louise as defendants, and they appeared and filed answers. A trial was had in the lower court before the court sitting with a jury. After the contestant had put in his case, the proponents made a motion for a nonsuit. The motion was granted, and the contestant has appealed.

[1] As something is said in the briefs concerning unnatural wills, it should be noted at this time that the decedent by her will transferred all her property to her children. The contestant was given $2,000, another son was given $5,000, still another son was given $1,000, and the remaining portion was divided into four parts, one-fourth given to each of the four remaining children. Not a dollar was given to any person, natural or artificial, outside of the members of the family. The contestant concedes that the brother who received only $1,000 had been generously remembered in the will of the father, who died only two years before. The son who received $5,000 makes no complaint. The case stands thus: A son who received $2,000, whereas other brothers and sisters each received $7.500, presents the claim of "an unnatural will." We think the expression has no application to the facts. To say that a testator may not give to one legatee selected from a certain class more than he gives to another legatee selected from the same class is, in legal effect, to say that a testator has no right to make a will. Estate of Shay, 196 Cal. 355, 237 P. 1079.

The plaintiff pleaded his case in five separate counts: (1) Nonexecution of the will; (2) decedent was of unsound mind; (3) the will was the product of undue influence; (4) and (5) in framing her will the decedent was acting under artifices of fraud practiced upon her. The first count was dismissed by the plaintiff. As to the fourth and fifth counts, there was not a particle of evidence introduced. It remains for us to consider the ruling as applicable to the second and third counts.

[2-5] We take up first the count alleging that the decedent was, at the time she made her will, of unsound mind. In doing so we will bear in mind at all times the contention which the plaintiff makes most vigorously; namely, that in ruling on a nonsuit the power to weigh evidence does not obtain as it does on a submission of the cause. Moreover, we will confine our consideration to the evidence printed in the appellant's brief, as we are entitled to assume that he has made the statement as favorable to himself as the record will permit. The plaintiff called a large number of witnesses, fourteen or more. With one single exception, all of these witnesses were descendants of the decedent. By the witnesses so called the plaintiff introduced evidence that the decedent made her will a short time before her death, and that both before the date the will was made and continuously thereafter until the death of the decedent she was weak, drowsy, uncommunicative, eccentric, miserly, spoke in broken sentences, called perfectly good phosphates "poison stickers," and that at times she was absent-minded and of short memory. On one or more of these elements the plaintiff introduced the evidence of two or more witnesses. The foregoing statement includes all of the evidence introduced by the plaintiff on her second cause of action. The amount and the nature of the proof which the plaintiff was called upon to introduce was quoted with approval in Estate of Dole, 147 Cal. 188, 192, 81 P. 534, 536, as follows: "The soundness of mind required for making a will has relation to the act of the testator in making final disposition of his property as he desires. Although feeble in health, suffering under disease, aged and infirm, the testator, if of sound mind with reference to the disposition of his property, may make a will. If he is able to understand and carry in mind the nature and situation of his property and his relations to his relatives and those around him, with clear remembrance as to those in whom, and those things in which, he has been mostly interested, capable of understanding the act he is doing, and the relation in which he stands to the objects of his bounty, free from any delusion, the effect of disease, which might lead him to dispose of his property otherwise than he would if he knew and understood what he was doing, he has the capacity to make a will." See, also, Estate of Smith, 200 Cal. 152, 158, 252 P. 325. If, in the instant case, the trial court had refused to grant the motion for a nonsuit, and had submitted the case to the jury, and the jury had brought in a verdict for the plaintiff, it is patent that the verdict must necessarily have been set aside because the evidence was insufficient. One of the leading cases governing the power to grant or refuse a nonsuit is Downing v. Murray, 113 Cal. 455, 45 P. 869. Speaking on that subject, at page 463 (45 P. 872), the court said: "With respect to this matter it is sufficient to say that, with a jury present, the judge should grant a nonsuit where a verdict in favor of plaintiff should be set aside for want of evidence to support it, and, in the absence of a jury, where the evidence is insufficient to support a judgment for plaintiff. The judge of the court below is presumed to have acted on this principle, and to have concluded that the evidence was thus insufficient, and there is no reason for holding that he abused his discretion in coming to that conclusion." Mrs. Casassa was presumed to be of sound mind. When her will was admitted to probate, the order admitting it, although not conclusive, was nevertheless presumed to correctly determine and set forth the rights of the parties. The plaintiff undertook to introduce evidence to break down the foregoing presumptions and to show that the decedent at the time she made her will was of unsound mind. He wholly failed to do so.

Turning to the third cause of action, undue influence, the plaintiff introduced a declaration made by the defendant Louise Baer, and a declaration made by the defendant Armand Casassa. Those declarations, standing alone, as they did, did not make a prima facie showing against either one of the defendants. Estate of Rickey, 64 Cal. App. 733, 222 P. 628.

[6] Still addressing ourselves to the count on undue influence, the plaintiff introduced a declaration made by the decedent. While that declaration was properly introduced when the four counts were on trial, it was not competent evidence against the defendants to prove they had exercised undue influence. Estate of Calkins, 112 Cal. 296, 301, 44 P. 577.

We find no error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

98 Cal. App. 33

SAN FRANCISCO REALTY CO. v. LINNARD. (Civ. 6587.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. March 29, 1929.

1. Insurance ⟹102, 106—Sole agency for placing hotel insurance held revocable by surrendering hotel lease, but with liability for damages for violation of any legal right.

Where defendant lessee of hotel entered into contract with plaintiff insurance agent whereby, in consideration of plaintiff's promise to write specified insurance on terms favorable to defendant, latter appointed plaintiff as his exclusive agent for placing for five years all insurance to be carried by defendant in connection with his hotel, held that, since plaintiff had no interest in subject-matter of contract, the insurance to be procured, plaintiff's power under contract was not coupled with an interest, and defendant had power to terminate agency at any time, but a revocation within the five-year period by surrender of lease rendered defendant liable for damages for violation of any legal right of plaintiff, since provision for continuance of contract for five years was supported by consideration of favorable rates.

2. Insurance ⟹106—Exclusive agency for placing insurance in connection with occupation and maintenance of hotel negatived implied agreement to continue connection with hotel; "carry."

Written contract whereby, in consideration for plaintiff's written promise to write specified insurance on terms favorable to defendant, latter appointed plaintiff his exclusive agent or broker for placing all insurance then carried or thereafter to be carried by him in connection with the ownership, occupation, and maintenance of certain hotel for term of five years, held to negative any implication of any agreement by defendant that he would continue connection with hotel; word "carry" as applied to insurance meaning "possess" or "hold."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Carry.]

3. Insurance ⟹188(2)—Court need not determine question of insurance cancellation not raised by pleadings or evidence.

In action to recover insurance premiums and damages for breach of contract making plaintiff defendant's exclusive agent for placing insurance on certain hotel property, in which action there was no issue raised by pleadings or evidence as to any cancellation of insurance after defendant conveyed hotel to another, trial court was not required to pass on what defendant's rights might have been if he had canceled policies.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by the San Francisco Realty Company against D. M. Linnard. From the judgment, both parties appeal. Affirmed.

James F. Peck and Robert L. McWilliams, both of San Francisco, for plaintiff.

Harold M. Sawyer, Alfred T. Cluff and William P. O'Brien, all of San Francisco, for defendant.

GRAY, Justice pro tem. D. M. Linnard (hereinafter referred to as the defendant), while he was lessee of the Fairmont Hotel, and San Francisco Realty Company, a corporation (hereinafter referred to as the plaintiff), entered into a written contract wherein and whereby, in consideration of plaintiff's promise to write specified insurance on terms admittedly favorable to defendant, the latter appointed the former, and the former accepted such appointment, as "his sole and exclusive agent or broker for the placing of all insurance now carried or to be hereafter carried by him in connection with the ownership, occupation and maintenance of the Fairmont Hotel," for the term of five years and upon express terms fixing the amount of the premiums to be charged for such insurance. Approximately seven months after the execution of this agreement, the owner of the hotel conveyed the hotel to the defendant, who forthwith conveyed it to the Fairmont Hotel Company, a corporation, which in turn conveyed the legal title to a trustee under a deed of trust securing a bond issue. At the same time the defendant surrendered his lease. After the execution of the agreement, but prior to the above transfers of title to the hotel, defendant ordered certain insurance on the hotel which plaintiff procured, its commissions thereon amounting to $398.20. After the said transfers of title, defendant advised plaintiff that he no longer had an insurable interest in the hotel, and thereafter no insurance was ordered or carried by him upon the hotel. In this action plaintiff seeks to recover (1) said sum of $398.20 and (2) damages for defendant's failure to place insurance on the hotel during the balance of the term of five years. Judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $398.20. Each party appealed, the plaintiff claiming that it was also entitled to the second item of damages, and defendant claiming that plaintiff was not entitled to the first item. While, by stipulation, the appeals were consolidated, each will be considered separately in inverse order, as the legal propositions involved are distinct, although based upon the same contract.

In discussing the effect, upon a contract of agency for the distribution of a newspaper over a designated route, of the sale of such newspaper, the Supreme Court, in Boehm v. Spreckels, 183 Cal. 239, 248, 191 P. 5, 9, enunciated the following rules here applicable:

"The Civil Code provides that an agency is terminated by: '(1) the expiration of its term; (2) the extinction of its subject; (3) the death of the agent; (4) his renunciation of the agency; or, (5) the incapacity of the agent to act as such.' (Sec. 2355.) Also, that when not coupled with an interest in the subject of the agency, it is terminated by: '(1) its revocation by the principal; (2) his death; or, (3) his incapacity to contract.'

"It is also an established rule that a sale of the subject of the agency made in good faith by the principal operates as a termination of the agency and is equivalent to a revocation thereof. (1 Mechem on Agency, sec. 698.) Everyone is presumed to know the law, and it must therefore be presumed that the parties to the agreement contracted with knowledge of the possibility of a termination of the agency by either of the causes above specified.

"We know of no rule of law which allows the agent to recover damages from the principal on account of a termination of an agency for an indefinite period for any of the causes above mentioned, except where the agency was procured for a valuable consideration passing from the agent to the principal and the revocation is prior to the expiration of a reasonable time after its creation. In Frink v. Roe, 70 Cal. 309, 11 P. 820, it is said that an agency created for a valuable consideration is irrevocable, but, as this is directly contrary to the Civil Code, and as the expression was clearly obiter, the case cannot be considered as authority. There is a distinction between the power to revoke and the right to revoke an agency.

"Except where the agent's power is coupled with an interest, the power to revoke always exists, but the right to revoke without liability for damages depends upon circumstances. (1 Mechem on Agency (2 Ed.) § 568.) If the right does not exist, the principal will be liable for damages upon a revocation."

Again, in Roth v. Moeller, 185 Cal. 415, 418, 197 P. 62, 63, the same rules were thus expressed: "Save in the case of an agency coupled with an interest, a principal has the power to revoke an agent's authority at any time before the agent has completed performance. (Civ. Code, sec. 2356; Flanagan v. Brown, 70 Cal. 254, 11 P. 706; Parke v. Frank, 75 Cal. 364, 17 P. 427; Blumenthal v. Goodall, 89 Cal. 251, 26 P. 906; 1 Cal. Jur., p. 705.) A principal may, however, curtail his right of revocation by contracting not to revoke the authority for a definite time. If the principal does so contract, he still retains the power to terminate the agency and the termination cannot be prevented by the agent, but a revocation of authority within the designated period renders the principal liable for damages for the violation of a legal right of the agent, just as in the case of any other breach of contract. (Parke v. Frank, supra; Blumenthal v. Goodall, supra; Ropes v. John Rosenfeld's Sons, 145 Cal. 671, 79 P. 354; Sill v. Ceschi, 167 Cal. 698, 140 P. 949; Boehm v. Spreckels, 183 Cal. 239, 191 P. 5.)"

[1] Since plaintiff had no interest in the subject-matter of the contract, i. e., the insurance to be procured, its power under the contract was not coupled with an interest. Todd v. Superior Court, 181 Cal. 406, 184 P. 684, 7 A. L. R. 938; McColgan v. Bank of California (Cal. Sup.) 274 P. 342; MacAdam Co. v. Bryant (Cal. App.) 260 P. 298. But, as the contract provided for its continuance for a definite term of five years, and was supported by a consideration in the favorable rates upon the specified insurance, defendant, while he had the power to revoke the contract of agency by his surrender of his lease, had curtailed his right of revocation, and is liable for damages for the violation of any legal right of the plaintiff.

It next becomes necessary to determine what plaintiff's rights and defendant's obligations were under the contract so as to ascertain whether defendant's revocation violated any rights and obligations. In determining the effect of a sale of a lumber business upon a contract, based upon a valuable consideration, to employ a truck "for lumber hauling for a period of one year—as our business warrants," the court in Langenberg v. Guy, 77 Cal. App. 664, 667, 247 P. 621, 622, used the following language here pertinent: "There is no basis for a contention that appellant has violated any express term of his contract. In no part of the instrument signed by him does he expressly covenant not to sell his business. Therefore, whether he could rightfully sell it during the year without breaching his contract with respondent depends entirely upon whether the contract imports an implied obligation on appellant's part not to sell the business prior to the year's expiration. That, in the last analysis, is the ultimate question presented for solution. If the contract does import such an implied undertaking on appellant's part, then upon selling the business before the end of the year he would become liable as for a breach of his agreement. For of course it must be conceded that where a party to a contract of employment obligates himself by either an express or an implied agreement not to disable himself from continuing the employment for a stipulated time, he will make himself liable in damages for breach of contract if, by a sale of his business before the expiration of the stipulated period, he voluntarily puts it out of his power to continue the employment to the end of its term in the manner agreed to by him. (White v. Lumiere North American Co., 79 Vt. 206, 64 A. 1121, and notes to that case in 6 L. R. A. [N. S.], p. 807 et seq.) It may also be conceded that, in the absence of some provision in a contract of employment which tends to negative the implication that the employment will continue uninterruptedly during a specified term, one who has bound himself to employ another during a definite time for a compensation, the amount whereof can be earned and determined only by an actual performance of the services over the whole of the stipulated period, will render himself liable for damages for breach of contract if he makes a disposition of his affairs which renders it impossible for him to receive the services in the manner contemplated by the contract. (Note to Turner v. Sawdon & Co., 2 B. R. C. 774.) In every such case the question in the last analysis is simply this: Do the terms of the contract—and, if the contract is ambiguous, do the circumstances under which it was made—necessitate the implication that the employer has undertaken not to dispose of his business during a fixed period of time?"

[2] Since there is no express agreement that defendant would not surrender the lease, such agreement, if any, must be implied. The court found the surrender of the lease and the transfers of title were in the ordinary course of business, and without any intent to avoid liability, under the contract. Furthermore, there is no ambiguity in the contract, apparent or claimed by either party. Our determination of the question here involved must be wholly decided by an interpretation of the terms of the contract. The only portion of the contract here material is the italicized quotation therefrom set forth in the first paragraph of this opinion. The word "carry" as applied to insurance means "possess" or "hold." Dimick v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 69 N. J. Law, 384, 55 A. 291, 62 L. R. A. 774. The phrase "by him" (the defendant) following the phrase "to be carried" grants to defendant an option as to whether insurance was or was not to be carried or held or possessed. The next phrase "in connection with the ownership, occupation and maintenance of the Fairmont Hotel" is a further limitation on the insurance to be carried by confining it as to both purpose and time. It furthermore, by such limitation, shows that the parties intended that insurance was only to be placed while defendant was connected with the ownership, occupation, and maintenance of the hotel, and that the parties contemplated a possible change in defendant's relation with the hotel which might terminate his desire for insurance. This phrase neg-atives any implication of any agreement by defendant that he would continue such connection. Defendant did not bind himself to order any particular amount of insurance, nor did he agree that the amount thereof should be fixed by the requirements of the hotel or the business conducted there, but expressly agreed that the amount thereof should be fixed by amount he was to hold or possess in connection with the ownership, occupation, and maintenance of the hotel. The defendant was the sole judge of the amount of insurance to be carried, and might, if he so desired, carry none. Therefore plaintiff was no worse off, as to the amount of insurance to be placed, after the surrender of the lease than it was before. Of course, if the contract provided that the amount was to be determined by the requirements of the hotel, as plaintiff argues, the obligation that defendant would not surrender his lease might well be implied (for discussion of broker's rights under such requirement contracts see cases listed in I. Tanenbaum Son & Co. v. Rothenberg, 201 App. Div. 272, 194 N. Y. S. 315, 319). Parenthetically, we might add that most of the cases cited in the briefs of the respective parties are discussed in Langenberg v. Guy, supra. We are satisfied, therefore, that the trial judge correctly determined that defendant's surrender of the lease did not violate any right of the plaintiff under the contract.

[3] Passing now to a consideration of defendant's appeal from that portion of the judgment which awards plaintiff the sum of $398.20, we find ourselves confronted solely with a question of fact. Briefly, the complaint alleges that defendant ordered insurance in the specified amount; that plaintiff procured such insurance; that its commission on the premiums amounted to $398.20, and that defendant failed to pay such premiums. The answer merely denies that he ordered it on his own behalf, but admits he did so on behalf of Fairmont Hotel Company and the former owner, and further denies the amount of commission. The court found that defendant refused to pay the premiums. Defendant, in his briefs, claims that he canceled the insurance and that he ordered the insurance for a shorter period than that specified in policies delivered. His answer did not raise any question of cancellation, and admitted the ordering of the insurance for the period as claimed by plaintiff. The only testimony upon the subject—that given by the vice president of plaintiff—amply supports the findings. A letter of defendant admitted in evidence does deny ordering the insurance in the form procured, but this, at best, merely raised a conflict upon which the findings are decisive. The letter does not warrant any construction that it canceled the policies. Therefore, since there was no issue or evidence as to any cancellation, the trial court was not required to pass upon what defendant's rights might have been if he had canceled the policies.

The judgment is affirmed.

FIRST FEDERAL TRUST CO. v. STOCKFLETH et al. (Civ. 6572.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. March 28, 1929.

Rehearing Denied April 26, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 27, 1929.

1. Evidence ⚷413—Recital in contract that title to land sold was merchantable could not be contradicted by parol after performance (Code Civ. Proc. § 1962).

Under contract for sale of seven parcels of land, containing no express or implied agreement that vendor owned any interest sold, purchaser, after delivery of six deeds and performance of most of contract, could not contradict by parol truth of recital that title to certain parcels was merchantable, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1962, since contradiction would necessarily change contract in essential matters and permit court to make contract for parties different than voluntarily entered into.

2. Evidence ⚷419(13)—Recital in contract for sale of realty that title was merchantable held not recital of consideration, and evidence to show defective title was properly excluded (Code Civ. Proc. § 1962).

Under contract for sale of vendor's interest in realty, containing no express or implied agreement that vendor owned such interest, recital that part of land conveyed was merchantable was not recital of consideration for contract under Code Civ. Proc. § 1962, making truth of facts recited in written instrument conclusive between parties or successors except as to recital in consideration; and hence evidence to show title was defective at date of contract was properly excluded in action to determine title to realty.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Walter Perry Johnson, Judge.

Action in interpleader by the First Federal Trust Company against Mary E. Brickett, formerly Mary E. Coggins, and another, in which defendant named filed a cross-complaint, and in which George A. Stockfleth, as special administrator of the estate of Mary E. Brickett, deceased, was substituted in her place and stead. Judgment for defendant Stockfleth, and defendant Fruit Growers' Supply Company appeal. Affirmed.

Hearing denied by Supreme Court; CURTIS and PRESTON, JJ., voting for a hearing.

Dozier, Kimball & Dozier and Dozier & Kimball, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Sullivan & Sullivan and Theo. J. Roche, of San Francisco, for respondent.

★Rehearing denied. Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

GRAY, Justice pro tem. On November 10, 1909, respondent Mary E. Brickett and the assignors of appellant Fruit Growers' Supply Company entered into a written contract of sale by respondent and purchase by appellant of the dower right and an undivided eight-thirtieths interest in lands located in Jackson county, Or., and an undivided nine-thirtieths interest in lands located in Siskiyou county, California, of which right and interest the preamble recites the respondent was the owner, upon the following terms and conditions here material. The first term stated, in general language, that the title to the property in part was merchantable and in part unmerchantable, and then stated specifically that parcels "A," "D," and "E" were lands "to which merchantable title is held," and that parcels "B," "C," "F," and "G" are lands "to which the title is not yet merchantable." The third term provides the method of fixing the total price, credits thereupon a prior payment, requires payment of part on or before December 1, 1904, and part within 90 days thereafter and the balance in eight equal installments, with interest beginning on December 9, 1910. Under the fourth term respondent is required to place in escrow seven grant bargain and sale deeds, each conveying therein described portions of said lands. The sixth term authorizes the buyers, after payment of a portion of the total price and an advance payment per acre, to cut, log and manufacture the timber on parcels "A," "D," and "E." By the seventh term the buyers, upon payment of the part of total price applicable thereto, were entitled to each of said deeds in numerical order, and, by the eighth term, were obligated to pay all taxes upon said parcels for the fiscal year 1908–1909 and subsequent thereto. The tenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth terms, respectively, authorized the respondent, upon buyers' default, to terminate the contract and resume possession of the lands. The seventeenth term, after reciting that the title of parcels "B," "C," "F," and "G" has not been perfected and that it cannot be ascertained when same will be perfected, provides for payment therefor when title is perfected, and the subsequent terms provide a method for transfer of title after perfection along the same lines above stated as to other three parcels.

Plaintiff, First Federal Trust Company, as escrow holder, at proper time and for the sum of $13,608.41 tendered to appellant the last of the seven deeds, covering parcel "E" described in part in the contract as follows: "Lands purchased from Oregon and California Railroad Company title to which is merchantable." (Italics ours.) Appellant offered to pay, upon delivery of said deed, the balance remaining of said sum of $13,608.41, after deducting therefrom the sum of $6,376.11 with interest, alleged to have been expended by it in curing defects in respondent's title. The respondent, claiming a default, demanded the return of the deed by the escrow holder. Thereupon the latter commenced this action in interpleader to determine who was entitled to the deed, and, pending such determination, deposited it in court. The respondent filed a cross-complaint seeking to recover either the deed or the sum of $13,608.41 with interest, and appellant, in its answer to this cross-complaint, sought delivery of deed upon payment of the balance offered to the escrow holder. Upon the trial, upon the issues framed by such cross-complaint and answer, respondent and appellant stipulated that any judgment entered should be for such sum as the court should determine was due under the contract and should further provide for delivery of deed to respondent if such sum were not paid within 90 days after such judgment became final. At the close of respondent's case, appellant offered to prove that respondent's title was defective at date of contract and that it had necessarily and properly expended $6,376.11 in curing such defects. Respondent objected to this offer upon the ground that the recitals of the contract that the title was merchantable were conclusive. The court sustained the objection and thereupon rendered judgment in favor of the respondent in accordance with her prayer and the stipulation, from which judgment appellant appeals. After appeal and pending its determination, Mary E. Brickett died, and by appropriate proceedings George A. Stockfleth, as the special administrator of the estate of Mary E. Brickett, formerly Mary E. Coggins, was substituted in her place and stead. For clarity, in this opinion, the deceased is referred to as the respondent.

This appeal raises the single question of the correctness of the court's ruling in sustaining respondent's objection to appellant's offer of proof. Section 1962 of the Code of Civil Procedure, so far as here pertinent, reads as follows: "The following presumptions and no others, are deemed conclusive: * * * 2. The truth of the facts recited, from the recital in a written instrument between the parties thereto, or their successors in interest by a subsequent title; but this rule does not apply to the recital of a consideration." Do the recitals in the contract, that the title to the lands in parcel "E" is merchantable, conclude appellant as to the truth of that fact so as to deny it the right to show that such title was defective? If so, the court's ruling was correct and this judgment must be affirmed.

A good test, here applicable, is found in the language of McCrea v. Purmort, 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 465, 30 Am. Dec. 103, quoted in Rhine v. Ellen, 36 Cal. 362, at page 371, reading as follows:

"Another principle, and one more universal than the former in its application is, that wherever a right is vested or created, or extinguished, by contract or otherwise, and writing is employed for that purpose, parol testimony is inadmissible to alter or contradict the legal and common sense construction of the instrument; but that any writing which, neither by contract, the operation of law nor otherwise, vests or passes or extinguishes any right, but is only used as evidence of a fact and not as evidence of a contract or right, may be susceptible of explanation by extrinsic circumstances or facts. Thus a will, a deed, or a covenant in writing, so far as they transfer or are intended to be the evidences of rights, cannot be contradicted or opposed in their legal construction by facts, aliunde. But receipts and other writings which only acknowledge the existence of a simple fact, such as the payment of money for example, may be susceptible of explanation, and liable to contradiction by witnesses.

"A party is estopped by his deed. He is not to be permitted to contradict it; so far as the deed is intended to pass a right or to be the exclusive evidence of a contract, it concludes the parties to it. But the principle goes no further. A deed is not conclusive evidence of everything which it may contain. For instance, it is not the only evidence of the date of its execution, nor is its omission of a consideration conclusive evidence that none passed; nor is its acknowledgment of a particular consideration an objection to other proof of other and consistent considerations. And by analogy, the acknowledgment in a deed that the consideration had been received, is not conclusive of the fact. This is but a fact. And testing it by the reason of the rule which we have laid down, it may be explained or contradicted. It does not necessarily and undeniably prove the fact. It creates no right; it extinguishes none. A release cannot be contradicted or explained by parol, because it extinguishes a pre-existing right; but no receipt can have the effect of destroying, per se, any subsisting right—it is only evidence of a fact. The payment of the money discharges or extinguishes the debt; a receipt for the payment does not pay the debt, it is only evidence that it has been paid. Not so of a written release; it is not only evidence of the extinguishment, but it is the extinguisher itself." 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 473, 474.

In Ingersoll v. Truebody, 40 Cal. 603, 610, the court used the following pertinent language: "Whilst the grantee in a deed will not be permitted by parol to contradict, vary or enlarge the operative words of a conveyance so as to defeat, change or modify the estate granted, he may, nevertheless, disprove collateral facts recited in the instrument, which are not essential to validity as a conveyance of the estate granted." This court stated the principle here involved in Gas Appliance Sales Co. v. W. B. Bastian Manufacturing Co. (Cal. App.) 262 P. 452, as follows: "The conclusive presumption of the truth of facts recited in a written instrument, between the parties thereto, as declared by the provisions of section 1962, subd. 2, of the Code of Civil Procedure, has reference only to the essential facts therein contained, which are necessary to determine the obligations or liabilities of the contracting parties. Osborne v. Endicott, 6 Cal. 149, 65 Am. Dec. 498; Ingersoll v. Truebody, 40 Cal. 603, 610; Moffatt v. Bulson, 96 Cal. 106, 110, 30 P. 1022, 31 Am. St. Rep. 192; Rhine v. Ellen, 36 Cal. 362, 370. * * *" For varying illustrations of the application of the code section reference may be had to Pierce v. Whiting, 63 Cal. 538; Simson v. Eckstein, 22 Cal. 581; Judson v. Malloy, 40 Cal. 299; Frink v. Roe, 70 Cal. 296, 11 P. 820; Moore v. Gould, 151 Cal. 723, 91 P. 616; Knoch v. Haizlip, 163 Cal. 146, 124 P. 998; National Hardware Co. v. Sherwood, 165 Cal. 1, 130 P. 881; Borland v. Borland, 56 Cal. App. 638, 642, 206 P. 478; Hamilton v. Consolidated Water Co., 56 Cal. App. 7, 204 P. 416.

[1] An examination of the terms of the contract clearly shows that respondent was selling and the appellant was buying the former's interest in the property as described without any express or implied agreement that she owned any such interest. California Land Security Co. v. Ritchie, 40 Cal. App. 246, 180 P. 625. The very definite recitals in the contract that the title to certain of the lands, including parcel "E," were merchantable provided the basis chosen by the parties themselves upon which each was willing to deal with the other and upon which the respective parties reciprocally assumed and granted respective rights and obligations. To permit appellant, at this late date, after the six other deeds had been delivered and most of the contract had been performed, to contradict by parol the truth of those recitals would allow it to substitute a new basis for the contract, upon which respondent in the first instance might not have been willing to negotiate. The contradiction by parol of the truth of those recitals would necessarily change the contract in essential matters, would contradict or vary the rights created by the contract, would enlarge the estate which respondent undertook to convey and would, in short, permit the court to make a contract for the parties different from the one they voluntarily made for themselves. Furthermore, such evidence could have no other effect than to force the court to ignore, as surplusage, the solemn language of the parties and to substitute therefor a covenant implied by law, only in the absence of an express agreement, that is, that the title be free of defects.

[2] Appellant seeks to escape this conclusion by an argument that the recital as to title is one of consideration inasmuch as a good title was the consideration moving from respondent to appellant. The cases cited are not applicable under the facts. The rule which will determine whether or not the evidence is admissible on this theory is well stated in Harding v. Robinson, 175 Cal. 534, 543, 166 P. 808, 811, as follows:

"Where the statement in a written instrument as to the consideration is more than a mere statement of fact or acknowledgment of payment of a money consideration, and is of a contractual nature, as where the consideration consists of a specific and direct promise by one of the parties to do certain things, this part of the contract can no more be changed or modified by parol or extrinsic evidence than any other part, for the party has the right to make the consideration of his agreement of the essence of the contract, and when this is done the provision as to the consideration for the contract must stand upon the same plane as the other provisions of the contract with reference to conclusiveness and immunity from attack by parol or extrinsic evidence." 17 Cyc. 661; see, also, Feeney v. Howard, 79 Cal. 525, 21 P. 984, 4 L. R. A. 826, 12 Am. St. Rep. 162; Winchester v. Winchester, 175 Cal. 391, 165 P. 965; Murr v. Cohn (Cal. App.) 262 P. 768; Blackledge v. McIntosh (Cal. App.) 259 P. 770.

Being satisfied as to the correctness of the court's ruling excluding the offered testimony, the judgment is affirmed.

CLARK v. UNITED FRUIT DISTRIBUTING CO. et al. (Civ. 6589.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. March 26, 1929.

1. Sales ⚷379—Evidence held to show that contract between fruit grower and fruit distributing company was one of buy and sell as alleged.

In action for damages for breach of contract, evidence held to show that contract between fruit grower and fruit distributing company, whereby latter was to pay $30 per ton for grapes and deposit $6 per ton in escrow as guaranty to take total cars covered by contract, was a buy and sell contract as alleged in complaint, and not a consignment contract, so that there was no variance.

2. Sales ⚷153—Buyer notifying seller it would not accept further shipments excused seller from offering grapes (Civ. Code, § 1440).

Where buyer gave notice to seller that it would not accept any further shipment of grapes under contract, and seller was prepared to deliver grapes in accordance with terms and conditions of contract, it was unnecessary that seller actually offer to deliver grapes under Civ. Code, § 1440.

3. Trial ⚷343—Jury's verdict for seller carried with it implied finding that shortage in cars was not sufficient to warrant buyer in declaring sales contract was ended.

Jury's verdict for seller carried with it an implied finding that shortage of cars was not sufficient to warrant buyer in declaring that contract for purchase of grapes was ended.

4. Sales ⚷166(1)—Under contract calling for grade No. 1 grapes, buyer was not bound to accept those not up to standard required, but was compelled to accept those that did measure up.

Under contract calling for purchase of United States grade No. 1 grapes, buyer was not bound to accept grapes which were not up to standard required, but was compelled to accept those that measured up to contract.

5. Sales ⚷181(12)—Evidence justified jury's finding that grapes buyer refused to accept were grade called for.

In action for breach of contract to purchase grapes, evidence held to warrant jury's finding that undelivered grapes which buyer refused to accept were United States grade No. 1 which contract called for.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; C. E. Beaumont, Judge.

Action for breach of contract by Susie Clark against the United Fruit Distributing Company and another. From a judgment for plaintiff against defendant named, said defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Robt. H. Schwab, of Sacramento, for appellant.

Everts, Ewing, Wild & Everts and A. W. Carlson, all of Fresno, for respondent.

BURROUGHS, Justice pro tem. This is an action for damages. The cause was tried with a jury and a verdict rendered in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant United Fruit Distributing Company for the sum of $2,500. From the judgment entered thereon, said defendant appeals.

Appellant urges several points upon this appeal. The first of these is that there is a material variance between the allegations of the amended complaint and the proof. There are nine separate causes of action set forth in the amended complaint. The first six causes of action are based upon similar contracts which differ only in the names and the amounts involved. The last three concern the defendant Reedley National Bank, which was an escrow holder of certain moneys deposited with it in accordance with the terms of the contracts referred to in the first six counts of the amended complaint.

At the trial the money held by the Reedley National Bank was by stipulation of the parties deposited in court, and no judgment was entered concerning said bank. As heretofore stated, the six causes of action being the same except as to the names and amounts, a decision of the question involved by reference to the first count only will be decisive of all six.

It is alleged in the first count of the amended complaint: "That on or about the 19th day of September, at Reedley, California, plaintiff and the defendant, United Fruit Distributing Company, entered into an agreement in writing wherein and whereby plaintiff agreed to sell to the said defendant, and the defendant, United Fruit Distributing Company, agreed to buy certain Muscat U. S. Grade #1 grapes; that under the terms of said written agreement said defendant agreed to pay, upon delivery, this plaintiff for said grapes at the rate of Thirty Dollars ($30.00) per ton, and thereafter and under the terms of said contract plaintiff delivered to said defendant at Reedley, California, 141496 pounds of Muscat grapes, U. S. grade #1, and defendant paid said plaintiff for said grapes the sum of Twenty-one Hundred Thirteen and 43/100 Dollars ($2113.43) and no more; that said plaintiff was at all times during said grape shipping season of 1925 ready, able and willing to deliver to said defendant 108504 pounds of Muscat grapes, U. S. Grade #1, in fulfillment of the terms for the balance of said grapes to be delivered under said contract, and said plaintiff duly tendered said grapes to said defendant at its packing plant at Reedley, California, pursuant to the terms of said written contract; that the said defendant then refused to accept and ever since has refused to accept said grapes so tendered as hereinbefore set out and refused to pay for said grapes so tendered pursuant to its agreement, or otherwise, to the damage of plaintiff in the sum of Sixteen Hundred Twenty-seven and 56/100 Dollars ($1627.56)."

In support of this allegation of the complaint, the plaintiff offered, and the court received, in evidence over the objection of the defendant, the following contract:

"Original #30 No. 230

"Consigned Contract.

"Reedley, Calif., Sept. 19, 1925.

"For and in consideration of the covenants and agreements set forth and also in consideration of one dollar ($1.00) receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, Susie Clark, hereafter called the Grower, hereby places in the hands of the United Fruit Distributing Company, of Sacramento, Calif., to market for grower's account on the following terms and conditions her crop of shipping Muscats U. S. Grade #1 grown or to be grown, during the season of 1925, on the property known as Clark Place in Fresno County, California, about ½ miles S. of Reedley, estimated as follows: 10 carloads (125 tons more or less) Price $30.00 per ton ¾ car per day shipment beginning Oct. 5 all of which the grower claims to be his absolute property free from any encumbrances.

"All fruit delivered under this contract to be of good merchantable quality suitable for eastern shipment subject to State Inspection. Said fruit to be picked and delivered at Growers expense, to United Fruit Dist. Co., packing house, or place of loading at Reedley, or in case of car shortage, strikes or any causes over which United Fruit Distributing Company have no control the grower shall deliver the fruit at the next available loading point where cars may be placed for loading.

"The United Fruit Distributing Co., shall have a lien upon all said fruit for any moneys that may be advanced by it. This contract shall not be revokable during its term and shall not expire until all moneys advanced by the Company have been fully satisfied, but shall continue from year to year on above crop until fully paid.

"The United Fruit Distributing Co., reserves the right to terminate this contract and be relieved from all liability in case of car shortage, strikes, epidemics, scarcity of labor, war affecting transportation, and other causes affecting the transportation and marketing of fruit.

"The United Fruit Distributing Co., reserves the right to restrict the grower's deliveries of fruit under this contract, this to be governed as nearly as possible by the number of cars available for loading by the United Fruit Distributing Co.

"U. F. D. Co. to deposit $6.00 per ton in escrow in Reedley Natl. Bank as guarantee to take total cars covered by this contract U. S. Grade #1

"Susie Clark, Grower.
"United Fruit Distributing Co.,
per T. C. Brazill
"Copy Ck 3017 deposit $750.00"

[1] It is claimed by the appellant that this allegation of the complaint is purely an allegation of a buy and sell contract, while the contract received in evidence is one of consignment only, and therefore constitutes material variance between the allegations and the proof. There can be no question that the complaint is predicated upon a buy and sell contract. It also appears from the contract itself that it is denominated "Consigned Contract." It also appears therein that the grower placed her crop of grapes in the hands of the defendant United Fruit Distributing Company "to market for grower's account." Standing alone and unaided by other portions of the contract, there can be no doubt that it would be a contract of consignment, but it further appears in said contract that the quantity of grapes which it was estimated would be produced on the ranch of the grower was 10 carloads or 125 tons of grapes more or less. That the price to be paid was $30 per ton. It further appears in the contract that the United Fruit Distributing Company was "to deposit $6.00 per ton in escrow in Reedley National Bank as a guarantee to take total cars covered by this contract U. S. Grade #1." It would thus appear from the evidence just quoted that the defendant was to pay the plaintiff a flat price of $30 per ton for 125 tons, and that, as a guaranty that they would take the same they made the deposit of $6 per ton in the Reedley National Bank. We are of the opinion that this is sufficient to establish the contract as one of buy and sell, but, if the contract were held to be uncertain upon this point, the evidence introduced was sufficient to justify the court in holding that it was in fact a buy and sell contract. The evidence submitted to the court relating to the circumstances surrounding the execution of the contract was, as is usually the case, conflicting. The testimony of the plaintiff and her assignors was to the effect that, when the contract was first presented to them for signature, it was without doubt a consignment contract, but that they refused to sign the same, and stated they would not sell their crop except for cash; that thereupon certain portions of the contract were stricken out and the changes made, by which the defendant was to pay $30 per ton at the time of delivery for the entire crop of approximately 125 tons and the guaranty deposited with the Reedley National Bank to fulfill the terms of the contract. There is evidence on behalf of the defendants in rebuttal of this testimony, but the court in the first instance, and the jury in the last instance, adopted the testimony offered by the plaintiff that it was in fact a buy and sell contract. It has been held that one of the best methods of interpretation of a doubtful contract is the construction placed upon it by the parties themselves. In the practical construction of the contract before the court it appears without conflict that, when the shipments of grapes were made, the defendant, without waiting to receive any word whatever from those to whom the shipments were made, immediately paid cash to the plaintiff at the rate of $30 per ton. While defendant offered evidence to explain away this interpretation of the contract, it was for the court to determine which party was right. We are therefore of the opinion that upon its face the contract is one of buy and sell, but, if this conclusion is open to question, then the evidence offered to explain its effect also establishes that it was a buy and sell contract. The point is not well taken.

The appellant further claims that the implied finding of the jury, that under the terms of the written contract defendant agreed to pay upon delivery $30 a ton for the grapes, is not sustained by the evidence. However, we believe that this contention has already been answered by what has been heretofore said under the first claim of error.

[2] The next contention made by appellant is that there is no evidence to sustain the allegation of the amended complaint that "said plaintiff duly tendered said grapes to said defendant at its packing plant at Reedley, California, pursuant to the terms of said contract." It is undisputed that the defendant gave notice to the plaintiff that it would not accept any further shipment of grapes under the contract. It further appears from the evidence that the plaintiff was prepared to deliver grapes in accordance with the terms and conditions of the contract, and therefore it is immaterial whether or not she actually offered to deliver the grapes in accordance with the terms of the contract. Section 1440 of the Civil Code provides: "If a party to an obligation gives notice to another, before the latter is in default, that he will not perform the same upon his part, and does not retract such notice before the time at which performance upon his part is due, such other party is entitled to enforce the obligation without previously performing or offering to perform any conditions upon his part in favor of the former party." To the same effect are Lemle v. Barry, 181 Cal. 1, 183 P. 150; Hoover v. Wolfe, 167 Cal. 337, 139 P. 794; Gray v. Dougherty, 25 Cal. 266. Plaintiff was therefore excused from making an actual tender of the grapes.

[3] The fourth point of alleged error is based upon the claim that the defendant terminated the contract because of a shortage in cars. That there was a car shortage appears from the evidence, but, whether it was sufficient to justify the defendant in terminating the contract was one of the disputed facts in the case, and the verdict of the jury carried with it an implied finding that the shortage was not sufficient to warrant the defendant in declaring that the contract was ended.

[4, 5] The last point urged is to the effect that the evidence is overwhelming that the undelivered grapes were not U. S. grade No. 1. The evidence shows without conflict that after the termination of the contract the defendant accepted from the plaintiff, but under a different arrangement, U. S. grade No. 1 grapes. True, some of the grapes delivered were not up to the standard required by the contract, but such grapes the defendant was not bound to accept, while it was compelled to accept those that measured up to the contract. Therefore, defendant's claim is not substantiated by the evidence, and the jury were acting within their province when they determined this question adversely to the defendant.

No reason has been shown why the judgment should be disturbed, and, therefore, it is affirmed.

LA SHELLS v. HENCH et al. (Civ. 3627.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. March 27, 1929.

1. Appeal and error 🔑1010(1)—Appellate court must accept as correct trial court's finding supported by evidence.

Where record showed sufficient testimony to support trial court's finding, appellate court must accept finding as correct.

2. Schools and school districts 🔑133—Board's failure to classify teacher as permanent teacher did not prevent operation of law in making classification (Pol. Code, § 1609).

Failure of board of trustees to classify teacher as permanent teacher, under Pol. Code, § 1609, did not prevent operation of law in making such classification, and, where teacher was entitled to such classification, she must be considered as so classified, even though board failed to act.

3. Schools and school districts 🔑135(3)—That teacher and trustees entered into contracts after time when law had classified teacher as permanent teacher did not prevent operation of Teachers' Permanent Tenure Law (Pol. Code, § 1609).

That teacher and board of trustees entered into contracts after time when law had classified petitioner as permanent teacher could not be held to prevent operation of provisions of Teachers' Permanent Tenure Law (Pol. Code, § 1609), since action on part of board of trustees in making contracts was beyond their power.

4. Appeal and error 🔑951—Mandamus 🔑143(2)—Question of laches in mandamus proceedings is addressed to chancellor's sound discretion, and his decision will not be disturbed, absent abuse thereof.

Question of laches in mandamus proceedings is addressed to sound discretion of chancellor, and his decision will not be disturbed unless it is so clearly wrong as to amount to an abuse of discretion.

5. Equity 🔑72(1)—"Laches" is not mere delay, but there must be changed conditions resulting in injury to adverse party.

"Laches" is not mere delay, but there must have been some changed conditions from which injury would result to adverse party, or from which injury necessarily must be presumed.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Laches.]

6. Mandamus 🔑143(2)—Delay of nine months held not laches barring relief to teacher seeking writ directing restoration to position as teacher, where board had employed another teacher before dismissing petitioner.

Mere delay of about nine months held not to constitute laches barring teacher from relief by mandamus to compel board of trustees to restore her to position as teacher, where board had employed another teacher before notifying petitioner that her services had been dispensed with, so that delay did not result in injury to board.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; C. W. Miller, Judge.

Action by Lillian La Shells against George M. Hench and others, as trustees of Tracy School District, for a writ of mandate to compel restoration of plaintiff to her position as teacher in the public schools. From a judgment for petitioner, respondents appeal. Affirmed.

Thos. H. Louttit, M. P. Shaughnessy, and Warren H. Atherton, all of Stockton, for appellants.

George Wadsworth, of Tracy, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. This cause is before us upon appeal from a judgment and decree granting the plaintiff a writ of mandate directing that the petitioner and respondent be restored to her position and admitted to the position formerly occupied by her as a teacher in the public schools in and for the Tracy school district, and that warrants be issued to her in payment of her salary as such teacher for the months of July, 1927, to February, 1928, inclusive.

The record shows that the petitioner had been employed as a primary teacher in the kindergarten department of the public school of Tracy district, in the county of San Joaquin, for the years 1922, 1923, 1924, 1925, 1926, up to and including the end of the school year in June, 1927. The employment of the petitioner as such teacher appears to have been made under contracts purporting to employ the petitioner for one year only. The last contract entered into between the petitioner and the respondents bears date of June 4, 1926, and purports to be a contract whereby the respondents employ the petitioner as a teacher in the public school of Tracy district for the period of one year, for the stipulated salary of $1,620, payable in twelve monthly installments. The time for opening of the school under this contract was set for August 30, 1926. The record shows that the petitioner fulfilled her part of the contract just referred to, and acted as a teacher in the public school of Tracy district, and taught therein until the close of the school year in June, 1927. The record further shows that some time prior to April 23, 1926, the petitioner had had some conversation with the members of the board of trustees of Tracy school district to the effect that she would not desire to teach in the Tracy school after the close of the school year for 1926; that after having had this conversation with the board of trustees of said school district the petitioner appears to have reconsidered such intention or desire, and addressed the following letter to the board of trustees, under date of April 23, 1926, to wit:

"Board of Trustees, Tracy, Calif. Dear Sirs: This is to explain my statement of last year in regard to remaining in the Tracy faculty as kindergarten teacher. When I made the statement that I would not care to remain the following year my husband was to be employed by my brothers in San Jose. At that time it was too late to apply for a position in San Jose. Naturally it was my desire to be where my husband was this next year.

"Within the last month my brothers have sold their stores and my husband has again returned to Tracy. I am very anxious to secure my life diploma which I am entitled to at the end of this coming school year.

"Hoping this will meet with your approval and I will continue to work for the best interest of pupil and school.

"Sincerely, Lillian La Shells."

In pursuance of this letter the petitioner was, by resolution of the board re-elected a teacher in said school district for the school year of 1926-1927, and a contract entered into covering said period. At about the same time the board directed its secretary to write a letter to the petitioner relative to her employment, which letter is in the words and figures following, to wit:

"Office of Tracy School District Board Trustee's

"Tracy, Calif., June 1st, 1926.

"Mrs. Lillian La Shells, Kindergarten Teacher, Central Building, Tracy, Calif.—Dear Madam: With further reference to your employment as kindergarten teacher for the coming year.

"The Board members gave consideration to your statements in your letter to the board in May and expressed themselves as glad to sign your contract for one more year. It was our understanding that at the end of one more year you would then have served the required length of time to secure for you the life certificate and that you are comfortably and well provided for, the board members direct this communication be addressed to you stating that with the close of the term ending in June, 1927, the kindergarten teacher's position at the Central Building will become vacant and this will give one year in which to obtain other employment if desired.

"The Board members are very appreciative of your past efforts and hope you will be equally successful for the coming term.

"Yours respectfully,

"Thos. O. Young, Clerk Board."

The contract of employment between the petitioner and respondents in the years 1926-1927 was finally signed and executed on or about June 20, 1926, after the respondent had received the above letter. Nothing further was said relative to the term of employment of the petitioner until on or about June, 1927, when the petitioner delivered to the board certain books relative to her school work, and after delivering the same to the board, stated to the board that she was not resigning her position and did not intend to. Thereafter, and on or about June 9, 1927, the following letter, over the signature of one of the members of the board, was forwarded to the petitioner, to wit:

"(Letterhead Tracy Grammar School.)

"L. E. Richards, Superintendent

"Tracy, California, June 9th, 1927.

"Mrs. Lillian La Shells, Tracy, California. Dear Madam: This is to advise you that your employment as a teacher in the Tracy School District terminated with the end of the 1926-27 school year, pursuant to your contract entered into on June, 1926, and, also, in accordance with the understanding between yourself and the Board of Trustees of the Tracy School District, at the time said contract was signed. Your contract is at an end and the Board has decided not to enter into a contract with you for the 1927-28 school year. Your services are therefore dispensed with at the close of the present school year, to wit, 1926-27 school year.

"This notice is given pursuant to the order and resolution of the Board of Trustees of the Tracy School District, passed at a regular meeting of said Board, held on the 3rd day of June, 1927. Very truly yours, T. O. Young, Trustees of the Tracy School District, County of San Joaquin."

[1] The record shows that some time during the month of May, 1927, preceding a statement made by the petitioner to the appellants that she did not intend to resign and had not intended to resign her position as a teacher in the Tracy school, and also preceding the letter notifying the petitioner that her services had been dispensed with, the respondents as a board of trustees of the Tracy school district had already employed another teacher to act in the place and stead of the petitioner herein. Thereafter, and on or about July 7, 1927, the petitioner, at a semipublic meeting held by the board of trustees of said district, for what purpose the record does not disclose—but it does appear that there were some 200 persons present—the petitioner informed the respondents of her desire to continue in her former position as a teacher in the Tracy school. The record would indicate that the conversation was had with the president of the board of trustees in the presence of the other members. At this time the president of the board advised the petitioner, and also an attorney who was present, apparently representing her, that the board had already employed another teacher to act in the place and stead of the petitioner. The testimony as to this transaction is conflicting, but as the court has found as we have herein stated, and as the record shows sufficient testimony to support the finding of the court, it must be accepted as correct, even though the court might very well have found that the petitioner was only inquiring as to why she had not been rehired. The record further shows that on or about the 15th of August, 1927, the petitioner went to Berkeley, and from Berkeley to Oakland, and remained there, and did nothing further in relation to seeking her former position as a teacher in the Tracy school until on or about the 23d day of February, 1928, at which time she had a conversation with some members of the board in which she demanded salary warrants for the months of the school year that had already expired, and, also, according to her testimony, demanded reinstatement. Thereafter, and on the 2d day of March, 1928, a formal demand was served upon the board for salary warrants and for reinstatement. Upon the refusal of the board, this action was begun on the 26th day of March, 1928. The court found that at all times from the beginning of the school year of 1927, to and including the date of the beginning of this action, the petitioner was ready and willing to resume her position as a teacher in said school, and had made the oral demands herein referred to, and also the formal written demand of March 2, 1928. It does not appear, however, that the petitioner presented herself in person at the opening of the school year, which occurred during the last week of August, 1927, or that she ever presented herself in person at the school building where she had taught, or sought in any manner to resume her former position as a teacher, other than through the demands to which we have referred. The complaint in the action sets forth all the requirements showing the employment of the petitioner as a teacher in the public school of the Tracy school district, her legal qualifications; the compensation which had formerly been paid her; the fact that there were at least 23 teachers employed in said Tracy school district, under a principal devoting at least two hours per day to supervision of the schools under his control.

It is sufficient to say that the allegations of the petition are ample to bring the petitioner within the provisions of the Teachers' Permanent Tenure Law, as set forth in section 1609 of the Political Code. The answer of the respondents, admitting the allegations of the plaintiff as to employment, save and except as to the school year for 1927-1928, sets up as a defense that the petitioner had resigned as such teacher, had taken her permanent residence elsewhere, and then alleges, as a further and separate defense, as follows: "That the plaintiff has been guilty of laches and unreasonable delay, and her right of action, if any she has herein, is barred by laches, and she is now estopped from seeking relief because demand or request for the same has not been promptly made, and for the further reason that petitioner has not made any offer to perform her alleged contract prior to the 23d day of February, 1928, and for the further reason that the petitioner has made no offer to protect respondents herein from the necessity, if necessity there be, of paying two persons for the same services." This allegation does not show that the respondents relied upon any of the acts of the petitioner, or that any acts of the petitioner have led to the injury of the respondents or to the injury of the school district of which the respondents are the trustees. Nor is there any allegation in the answer, nor is there anything appearing in the record, to show that the respondents would not have acted in the manner in which they acted had it not been for the acts of the petitioner. In other words, there is no showing that the respondents have been misled, to their injury, or the injury of the district, by reason of any failure of the petitioner to bring her action more promptly. The record shows, as we have herein stated, that the respondents, as trustees of the Tracy school district, had already employed a teacher to act in the place and stead of the petitioner, prior to writing and forwarding to the petitioner of the letter dated June 9, 1927, informing the petitioner that her services had been dispensed with.

[2] The record also shows that from the beginning of the employment of the petitioner as a teacher in the public school of the Tracy school district, the respondents have consistently acted as though the Teachers' Permanent Tenure Law, as set forth in section 1609 of the Political Code, were not in existence. Every year from 1922 to 1927, the contracts of employment indicate that the board of trustees claimed the right and purported to exercise the right of employing teachers for one year at a time, and that at the expiration of the year, the term of employment would cease. So far as the record shows, the board of trustees made no classification of teachers who had successfully taught for two years in the Tracy school, and who possessed otherwise the legal qualification to be classified as permanent teachers. This lack of the board to act, however, does not prevent the operation of the law in making such classification, and as the petitioner, under the law, was entitled to such classification, she must be so considered as classified, even though the board of trustees has failed to act, and at all times proceeded to enter into contracts purporting to limit the term of employment from year to year. To hold otherwise would be to decide that the provisions of the Teachers' Tenure Act may be evaded by the expedient of using contracts reading for a yearly employment, and thus giving the board of trustees the authority to dispense with the services of a teacher, even though section 1609 of the Political Code prohibits dismissal of a teacher, other than for cause, and requires that notice shall be given to the teacher, and a hearing had.

In Grigsby v. King, 202 Cal. 299, 260 P.

789, where a teacher had been employed for at least two years, under yearly contracts, the court said: "It was stipulated that there were written contracts for the first and second years' service, and that the third year's service was rendered pursuant to re-election by the board, at the end of the second year. The law requires nothing more. The showing of two years' successful work brings plaintiff within the statute, and it was the duty of the board at that time to classify her as a permanent teacher, and any other action on its part was beyond its power and of no avail."

[3] Under this interpretation and application of the Teachers' Tenure Act the petitioner became, under the law, a permanent teacher at least two years prior to the time when the appellants sought to dispense with her services without proceeding according to the requirements of section 1609 of the Political Code. The mere entering into contracts after the time when the law had classified the petitioner as a permanent teacher cannot be held to prevent the operation of the provisions of the section, as such action, on the part of the board of trustees, was beyond their power.

The trial court found that the petitioner had not abandoned or resigned her position as a teacher in the Tracy schools, and that her right of action was not barred by laches or unreasonable length of time, and that no element of estoppel prevented her recovery. We do not need to discuss the question of estoppel because there is no showing whatever in the record that the appellants would have acted differently had any action of the petitioner been different. The entire record establishes clearly that the appellants acted upon the theory that they had a right, by reason of the yearly contracts, to employ and discharge teachers, irrespective of the Permanent Tenure Law; and to some extent the record shows that the petitioner was not aware of her rights under the provisions of section 1609 of the Political Code.

The appellants rely chiefly upon the alleged laches of the petitioner in beginning this action, and a number of cases are cited to sustain their contention. The principal case relied upon is that of Donovan v. Board of Police Commissioners, 32 Cal. App. 392, 163 P. 69. In this case it appears that a police officer had been dismissed by the board of police commissioners of the city of San Francisco, and sought by way of certiorari to have the order dismissing him annulled. Among other things, in disposing of the case, the court said: "A petition for a writ of certiorari, being addressed to the sound discretion of the court, is very similar to an application for an injunction, and laches, which is the neglect or omission to assert a right, may be asserted as a defense to the petition." It further appears in that case that the petitioner had waited over 14 months before beginning his action, and that a number of changes had taken place during the interval. The court further defined "laches" to be "such neglect or omission to assert a right as, taken in conjunction with lapse of time more or less great, and other circumstances causing prejudice to the" opposite party, "operates as a bar in * * * equity." And, further: "In the absence of a showing sufficient to excuse this delay it certainly constituted laches. While it is true * * * that mere lapse of time short of that prescribed by a statute of limitations in any given similar case will not in itself suffice to constitute laches so as to bar a remedy, nevertheless, if in addition it appears from all the circumstances of the case that prejudice must or, from the very nature of the case, may be reasonably expected to result, the remedy will be denied." A number of New York cases are cited as well as several California cases, where the principle of laches has been applied and relief denied on that account.

In the case of Harby v. Board of Education, 2 Cal. App. 418, 83 P. 1081, the facts show that more than 3½ years had expired before the action was prosecuted, and the court held that the petitioner had been guilty of laches, and relief was denied.

In the case of Curtin v. Board of Police Commissioners, 74 Cal. App. 77, 239 P. 355, the facts show that nearly 3½ years had expired, and that in the meantime the persons who had filed charges against petitioner had died. The trial court held the petitioner's application barred by laches, and this judgment was affirmed.

The New York cases cited in the California cases to which we have referred are Supreme Court cases and reported in the New York Supplement. We do not need to refer to the cases specifically, because all of them are based upon section 2125 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which limits applications for writs of certiorari to four months. The case of People v. Collis, 6 App. Div. 467, 39 N. Y. S. 698, being one of the first cases upon the subject, the section of the Code of Civil Procedure limiting the right to institute certiorari proceedings to four months is referred to, and the same statute of limitations is applied to mandamus proceedings. This principle has been applied in all of the subsequent New York cases, the court holding that while there is no statute of limitations provided in mandamus proceedings, yet by the same reasoning the statute of limitations barring certiorari proceedings at the expiration of four months is applicable to mandamus proceedings. We have no such statute in this state, and, therefore, the New York cases applying the rule of laches in mandamus proceedings based upon a statute of limitations dealing with certiorari proceedings cannot be considered as authority in this state, further than that the general principle of laches applies to mandamus proceedings, even though the statute of limitations of actions has not run.

[4-6] In this state, as set forth in 10 Cal. Juris, 526, "there is no artificial or hard-and-fast rule either as to the lapse of time or the circumstances which will justify the application of the doctrine of laches. The question must be determined by a consideration of all the facts and circumstances of the particular case. Laches is a question of fact on the evidence, and each case becomes largely a law unto itself. In other words, the matter is one which reposes in the sound discretion of the chancellor. Lapse of time is an important element in determining laches. But it is so only as it may show an abandonment or waiver of rights, or an acquiescence in the situation created by the defendant's fault, or as it has resulted in prejudice or a presumption of prejudice to the defendant or others. Laches in legal significance is not mere delay, but delay that works a disadvantage to another, mere delay alone being unimportant. The reasoning upon which the rule of laches is based is not alone a lapse of time during which the neglect to enforce a right has existed, but the changes of conditions which have intervened. It may be added, though, that a great lapse of time, especially if the claimant has knowledge of the existence of his right, is often held sufficient to create the presumption or implication of another fact of an equitable nature, and thus to justify a decision against the claimant." The rule relating to laches in mandamus proceedings is set forth in 16 Cal. Juris. 773, practically as just herein stated. In 21 Corp. Juris. 217, the rule which we are considering, and its application, are thus stated: "There is no absolute rule as to what constitutes laches or staleness of demand, and no one decision constitutes a precedent, in the strict sense, for another. Each case is to be determined according to its own peculiar circumstances. In other words, the question of laches is addressed to the sound discretion of the chancellor, and his decision will not be disturbed unless it is so clearly wrong as to amount to an abuse of discretion. In determining whether there has been laches, there are various things to be considered, notably, the duration of the delay in asserting the claim, and the sufficiency of the excuse offered in extenuation of the delay, whether plaintiff acquiesced in the assertion or operation of the corresponding adverse claim, the character of the evidence by which plaintiff's right is sought to be established, whether during the delay the evidence of the matters in dispute has been lost or become obscured, or the conditions have so changed as to render the enforcement of the right inequitable," etc.

Under these rules, unless we can say there has been an abuse of discretion vested in the trial court, the judgment must be affirmed. It is not sufficient to say that if the trial court had sustained the plea of laches we would be under the necessity of affirming such decision. Whether there has been an abuse of discretion must be determined from the circumstances surrounding the instant case, and not by reference to any of the cases cited, for the reason that each case practically stands alone. As stated, mere lapse of time is not sufficient. There must have been some changed conditions from which injury would result to the defendants or from which injury necessarily must be presumed. These elements are wanting in the case at bar. The appellants, as the trustees of Tracy school district, in the month of May, 1927, employed another person to teach in the place and stead of the petitioner, before writing and sending to the petitioner the letter dated June 9, 1927, notifying the petitioner that her services had been dispensed with. In other words, the board of trustees had taken the act voluntarily, which might be urged as the prejudice suffered by them, before notifying the petitioner of her discharge. Had the employment of another teacher taken place after the dismissal of the petitioner and during the period of time that lapsed before she made demand for her position on July 7, 1927, or before she made her formal demand in writing under date of March 2, 1928, then and in that case it would present a matter of defense for the trial court to consider, but when it appears by the record that no act injurious to the defendants resulted from anything done or performed, or from the failure of the petitioner to make immediate demand or institute suit before beginning this action, we cannot very well see how this court can hold that a mere delay of about nine months constituted such laches as imposed upon the trial court the necessity of denying relief to the petitioner upon such grounds, or imposes upon us the necessity of holding that the trial court abused its discretion in not denying relief to the petitioner upon the ground of laches.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. March 25, 1929.

1. Bankruptcy ⚷9(2)—Trustee in bankruptcy held entitled to recover preferential payment made by bankrupt, by virtue of bankruptcy act, suspending conflicting state statutes (Bankr. Act, §§ 60a, 60b, 70e; 11 USCA §§ 96(a), (b), 110; Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8; Civ. Code, §§ 3432, 3451).

Trustee in bankruptcy held entitled to recover money paid by bankrupt to defendant within four months before filing of petition, in satisfaction of antecedent debt, by virtue of Bankruptcy Act, §§ 60a, 60b (11 USCA § 96 (a), (b), permitting trustee to sue for recovery of preference and section 70(e) (11 USCA § 110(e) notwithstanding Civ. Code, §§ 3432, 3451, providing that debtor, though insolvent, may pay one creditor in preference to another, since state laws, to the extent that they conflict with laws of Congress on subject of bankruptcy, are suspended under Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8, and recovery is allowed under federal act.

2. Bankruptcy ⚷9(2)—Resort may not be had to state law to limit or defeat trustee's recovery of preferences by bankrupt (Bankr. Act, §§ 60a, 60b; 11 USCA § 96(a), (b); Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8).

Resort may be had to state law to reach property of bankrupt other than that mentioned in Bankruptcy Act, § 60a (11 USCA § 96(a), relative to preferences, but state act may not be resorted to to limit or defeat recovery under that section and section 60b, since, in case of conflict relative to bankruptcy proceedings, acts of Congress control under Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; L. W. Fulkerth, Judge.

Action by H. L. Appling, as trustee of the estate of Frank Brueckner, bankrupt, against Mrs. August Brueckner, also known as Wilhelmina Brueckner, to recover money paid within four months of bankruptcy. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. B. Jennings, of Modesto, for appellant.
F. W. Reeder, of Oakdale, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. This action was brought by the plaintiff, as trustee of the estate of Frank Brueckner, a bankrupt, to recover money paid by the bankrupt to the defendant, within four months before the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, in satisfaction of an antecedent debt. Judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendant has appealed on the judgment roll alone.

[1, 2] The only question raised by the appeal, although stated in various forms by appellant, is whether the case is governed by the provisions of sections 60a and 60b of the National Bankruptcy Act (11 USCA § 96(a), (b) or sections 3432 and 3451 of the Civil Code of this state. The court found that the payment referred to was made October 15, 1927, in satisfaction of a debt incurred in 1919, and that the petition in bankruptcy was filed November 2, 1927. The other facts found by the court show that the payment constitutes a preference under the provisions of section 60a of the Bankruptcy Act. Section 60b authorizes the trustee in bankruptcy to sue for the recovery of such a payment. Sections 3432 and 3451 provide, in substance, that a debtor, although insolvent, may pay one creditor in preference to another. That these sections of the Civil Code are in conflict with sections 60a and 60b of the Bankruptcy Act does not admit of doubt.

"The Federal Constitution, article 1, § 8, gives Congress the power to establish uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcy throughout the United States. In view of this grant of authority to the Congress it has been settled from an early date that state laws to the extent that they conflict with the laws of Congress, enacted under its constitutional authority, on the subject of bankruptcies are suspended. * * * The Bankruptcy Acts of Congress may recognize the laws of the state in certain particulars, although such recognition may lead to different results in different states. * * * Section 70e of the Bankruptcy Act [11 USCA § 110(e)] provides: 'The trustee may avoid any transfer by the bankrupt of his property which any creditor of such bankrupt might have avoided. * * *' This section as construed by this court gives the trustee in bankruptcy a right of action to recover property transferred in violation of state law. * * * Under this subdivision if a creditor could have avoided a transfer under a state law, a trustee may do the same." Stellwagen v. Clum, 245 U. S. 605, 38 S. Ct. 215, 62 L. Ed. 507. Appellant cites the Stellwagen Case in support of the contention that the state law governs in the instant case, but the language quoted shows that it is an authority to the contrary. Resort may be had to the state law to reach property of the bankrupt other than that mentioned in section 60a of the Bankrupt Act, but not to limit or defeat a recovery under the provisions of that section. Retsloff v. Smith, 79 Cal. App. 443, 249 P. 886; and Oliver v. Staples & Pfeiffer, 67 Cal. App. 570, 227 P. 927, are cases arising under sections 60a and 60b of the Bankruptcy Act. Ury v. Van Every, 181 Cal. 604, 188 P. 985; Guernsey v. Douglas, 171 Cal. 329, 153 P. 227, and Brandenburger v. Chipman (Cal. App.) 262 P. 463, are cases involving other sections of the act, which "recognize the laws of the state in certain particulars." No case cited by appellant lends any support to the contention that the state law prevails over the Bankruptcy Act in case of a conflict between them. Of course, in actions which have no relation to any proceeding in bankruptcy, the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act have no application. Some of the cases cited by appellant are of that kind.

98 Cal. App. 75

MORTON v. ALBERS BROS. MILLING CO.
(Civ. 3726.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California, April 2, 1929.

1. Corporations 🔑428(1)—Corporation is bound by notice to agent executing purchase contract that commodity is ready for delivery.

Where agent is authorized by corporation to execute contract for purchase of personal property, corporation is bound by notice to buying agent that commodity is ready for actual delivery, and may not deny tender of delivery of property at places indicated in contract executed by agent.

2. Sales 🔑153—Seller's offer to deliver, accompanied by ability to do so, held equivalent to actual delivery, where acceptance was refused.

Where seller was ready, able, and willing to deliver maize as required by contract and tendered delivery, but acceptance of offer of delivery was refused and maize rejected, offer to deliver should be deemed equivalent to actual delivery as regards recovery of damages from buyer for breach of contract.

3. Sales 🔑181(11)—Evidence held to support finding that seller had maize ready for delivery, but that part thereof was rejected.

In action by seller for damages for breach of contract to purchase maize, findings of trial court that plaintiff had maize ready for delivery, but that defendant refused to accept or pay for part of amount covered by contract, held sustained by evidence.

4. Appeal and error 🔑1170(5)—Variance between seller's complaint alleging delivery and evidence showing mere offer to deliver, which was rejected, held harmless (Code Civ. Proc. § 469).

Where complaint in seller's action for breach of contract alleged delivery of maize to defendant and defendant's refusal to accept or pay for part of maize, and evidence, though not showing actual delivery, established offer to deliver maize and refusal to accept offer as to such part, variance between the pleadings and evidence was immaterial and did not mislead and did not therefore warrant reversal under Code Civ. Proc. § 469.

5. Customs and usages 🔑15(2)—Where contract called for "good No. 1 marketable Milo maize," without further description, evidence as to customary methods of determining quality and character of maize sold as so determined held admissible.

In action by seller for damages for breach of contract to purchase "good No. 1 marketable Milo maize," evidence as to customary methods of determining quality of Milo maize and testimony of expert that when examined and measured by customary methods corn sold measured up to standard prescribed by contract, held admissible, where expression used was not defined in contract, contract being interpreted according to law and usage of place of performance, under Civ. Code, § 1646.

6. Appeal and error 🔑1011(1)—Whether maize sold was "marketable Milo maize" held question of fact, on which trial court's finding under conflicting evidence was conclusive.

In seller's action for breach of contract for sale of maize, question whether maize sold was "good No. 1 marketable Milo maize," as required by contract, held question of fact for trial court's determination, and finding of trial court sitting without jury that maize offered by plaintiff was up to required standard was conclusive where evidence on that issue was conflicting.

7. Appeal and error 🔑1050(1)—Admission of testimony apparently referring to corn which witness had not examined held not prejudicial error, in view of context and witness' explanations.

Admission of testimony of witness, apparently directed to corn which he had not examined, held not prejudicial error in action for breach of contract for sale of maize, where it appeared from context and witness' explanations that testimony was meant to refer to different corn.

8. Principal and agent 🔑120(1)—Testimony as to authority of agent beyond power to buy grain held inadmissible in action for breach of contract to buy maize.

Testimony of witness as to whether defendant's agent had any other or further authority than to buy grain held inadmissible in action for breach of contract to buy maize.

9. Sales 🔑384(7)—Where seller after buyer's rejection resold maize within reasonable time, obtaining best market value from date of rejection, allowance to seller of difference between contract and resale price held proper (Civ. Code, § 3311, subd. 1).

Where seller of maize, on buyer's rejection of part of amount sold and refusal to pay, resold the maize within a reasonable time and obtained best market value established in county between time of rejection and date of resale, court properly allowed seller to recover difference between contract price and resale price, under Civ. Code, § 3311, subd. 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Action by W. Morton against the Albers Bros. Milling Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Hickcox & Trude, of El Centro, for appellant.

C. L. Brown, of El Centro, for respondent.

McDANIEL, Justice pro tem. This appeal is from a judgment by the court sitting without a jury in favor of plaintiff and against defendant for the sum of $2,898. The complaint alleges that on September 16, 1920, at Brawley, Cal., the defendant corporation purchased from plaintiff 250 tons of Milo maize at an agreed price of $50 per ton; that plaintiff delivered all of said maize in accordance with the contract, and that defendant received and paid for 112 tons thereof, but after receiving the same refused to pay for and turned back to the plaintiff against his will and consent 138 tons thereof, and that defendant has not paid for the said 138 tons; that at the time of delivery, when defendant refused to pay for the maize rejected, the current market price thereof at Brawley was $29 per ton; that by reason of defendant's failure to take and pay for said Milo maize the plaintiff was damaged in the sum of $2,898, no part of which has been paid.

The answer admits the purchase as stated in the complaint, and sets out a true copy of the written contract, due execution of which is admitted. A portion only of said contract need be herein set out, as follows, to wit: "W. Morton has this day sold, and the Albers Bros. Milling Co., a corporation, of El Centro, California, has this day bought, 250 tons of good No. 1 marketable Milo now being grown or located Mead and Arnold Ranches to be sacked in Standard, new jute bags at the purchase price of $50.00 per ton, said Milo to be delivered F. O. B. cars Main line points by Dec. 1st, and seller further agrees to keep said Milo insured to the time of its delivery, in said Albers Bros. Milling Co.'s favor to an amount equal to that paid on same by said Albers Bros. Milling Co."

This contract was signed Albers Bros. Milling Company, by B. F. McCormick. After the evidence was taken and the cause submitted the court made its findings of fact, some of which substantially are as follows: That defendant is a corporation duly organized under the laws of this state. That on September 16, 1920, at Brawley, Cal., the defendant purchased from plaintiff the maize above mentioned at the stated price of $50 per ton as shown by the contract set out in the answer. Findings III and IV are as follows:

"That plaintiff had ready for delivery to defendant all of said 250 tons of Milo maize at the place and in the condition and of the grade required by said contract, and within the time therein mentioned, and all in accordance with said contract, and offered to deliver all of said Milo maize to the said defendant at the price and in the condition and of the grade required by said contract and within the time therein mentioned, and all in accordance with said contract, but that said defendant refused to accept any of the said Milo maize, or to pay for any thereof, except 112 tons thereof, which 112 tons defendant accepted and paid for according to said contract. That upon defendant refusing to accept or pay for the remainder of said Milo maize, to wit, 138 tons, the plaintiff sold the same, to wit, 138 tons, of said Milo maize, at Brawley, Cal., for the sum of $29.00 per ton, and which said sum per ton was the current market price and value thereof.

"That by reason of the failure and refusal of the defendant to take and pay for the said Milo maize in accordance with said contract, the plaintiff has been damaged in the sum of $2,898.00, no part of which has been paid."

As a conclusion of law the court finds plaintiff entitled to receive from defendant the said sum of $2,898, for which sum it duly made and entered its judgment.

On January 3, 1927, a motion for a new trial was made on the following grounds: (1) Insufficiency of the evidence to justify the judgment; (2) that the judgment is against law; (3) error in law occurring at the trial and excepted to by defendants, and on the minutes of the court.

After argument this motion was denied on January 7, 1927. Appellant makes the following specifications of error:

"(1) There is a material prejudicial variance between the allegations of the complaint, the findings of fact, and the evidence.

"(2) The court erred in allowing certain evidence to be introduced over the objection of the defendant.

"(3) The findings of fact are not supported by the evidence.

"(4) The amount of damages fixed by the court (conceding for the sake of argument that plaintiff was damaged) was wrong."

[1] In support of his specification 1 as to prejudicial variance appellant cites Bryan v. Tormey, 84 Cal. 126, 130, 24 P. 319; Chetwood v. California National Bank, 113 Cal. 424, 45 P. 704. We concede the soundness of the legal propositions in those cases, but see no similarity or parallel in the facts therein with the facts found in the case here. The complaint herein alleges delivery of all Milo maize to defendant, the acceptance and payment for 112 tons thereof, the return of 138 tons and the refusal to pay for said 138 tons. Appellant argues there is no evidence it ever received any more than it paid for; and no evidence all the Milo maize purchased was ever tendered. We believe appellant to be wrong in the latter statement. The testimony of witness McCormick, the purchasing and contracting agent for defendant, and of Morton, the plaintiff, demonstrates that all the maize was at the proper places for delivery in November, several days prior to December 1, 1920. McCormick was the authorized buying agent for defendant. This is shown by the contract itself, which contract unquestionably was accepted and acted upon by defendant. An agent authorized by a corporation to execute a contract of purchase of personal property, and when necessary actually to buy, cannot well deny that it would be bound by due notice to such buying agent that the commodity was ready for actual delivery, nor to deny a tender of delivery of such personal property at the places indicated in the contract executed for it by its agent. Morton's testimony shows he in fact had the maize ready for delivery, and not only told McCormick, but also informed Mr. Prenot, assistant manager of the Los Angeles branch of defendant corporation, and Mr. Cuthbertson, the Imperial Valley manager for defendant during the year 1920, that the maize was ready to deliver in November, 1920. Morton stated:

"A. (In reply to question of his attorney): I told Mr. Prenot and Mr. Cuthbertson both that I had this 250 tons of corn. I had even more corn than that. I told them I had that corn ready to deliver to them.

"Q. When they were there testing it in the latter part of November, did any of them ask you then if you had the corn ready to deliver?

"Mr. Hickcox: Same objection.

"The Court: Overruled.

"A. Yes, sir. I don't know whether they asked me or not, more than it was discussed that I had the corn. I don't know whether they asked me or whether I told them, but they knew I had the corn. There is no argument about that.

"Q. Was this corn in the Calipatria warehouse, I will ask you whether that was good, number 1, marketable Milo on December 1st?

"Mr. Hickcox: Objected to as no sufficient foundation is laid for this witness to testify as to the quality of the corn, or grade of it.

"The Court: Overruled.

"A. It was."

[2-4] Notwithstanding denials in the answer to the averments in the complaint as to actual delivery, paragraph VII of the answer avers an affirmative defense:

"That thereafter the said plaintiff delivered to defendant 112 tons under the terms of said contract, which said defendant accepted as No. 1 Milo maize and paid the contract price therefor; that the remainder of the said Milo maize tendered to defendant for delivery did not grade, and was not good No. 1 marketable Milo maize, and therefore the same was not accepted by defendant, but was rejected."

The foregoing excerpt from the answer clearly indicates it to be an admitted fact that plaintiff tendered all the maize purchased by defendant, namely 250 tons, and that tender was rejected as to 138 tons solely because defendant then and there claimed that the maize "was not good No. 1 marketable maize." It seems reasonable also to hold that when, as shown by the evidence, plaintiff was ready, able, and willing to deliver the maize as required by the contract, actually tendered and offered delivery thereof, that acceptance of the offer was refused and the maize rejected, such offer should be deemed equivalent to actual delivery. The finding criticized, therefore, was supported by the evidence, was sufficient in material respects, and the variance, if any, from the allegations of the complaint as to actual delivery, was nonprejudicial. Defendant was not misled nor prejudiced in any manner nor in any degree. Respondent in this connection cites Cousin v. Mason, 78 Cal. App. 111, 248 P. 299, and cases therein collated on the point that as no objection at the time of the trial was interposed on the ground of variance nor motion made for nonsuit on that ground, the objection of variance is deemed waived and cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. See, also, Antonelle v. Kennedy, etc., Lumber Co., 140 Cal. 309, wherein at page 320, 73 P. 966, 970, the court says: "Under the Code no variance is to be deemed material, 'unless it has actually misled the adverse party to his prejudice in maintaining his action or defense upon the merits,'" citing Code of Civil Procedure, § 469. We find no merit in the claim of variance. The findings squarely follow the evidence and answer on the matter of offer of delivery, rejection and refusal of payment.

[5, 6] In the second specification appellant complains of the overruling of his objection on the question propounded to Morton as follows:

"Q. As to this corn under this contract which you had on hand on December 1, 1920, for the defendant, from your experience in raising and handling and selling corn, as you have detailed, what would you say as to whether this corn was at that time, to wit, December 1, 1920, good, number one marketable milo? A. It was good, marketable, number one marketable Milo maize."

This witness, as shown by his previous examination on the stand, was fully qualified as one experienced in growing and marketing this commodity for a number of years and his knowledge of the grain to testify as to the quality. Inspection of the contract shows it was made in Imperial county, delivery was to be made there, and in all ways the contract was to be performed there. The expression in the contract, "good number one marketable Milo maize," is not defined in the contract, and under section 1646 of the Civil Code "a contract is to be interpreted according to the law and usage of the place where it is to be performed; or, if it does not indicate a place of performance, according to the law and usage of the place where it is made." Whether the rejected maize was good number one maize or not presented a simple question of fact. The testimony adduced on the part of plaintiff by several witnesses shows that when examined and measured by the customary methods practiced by buyers and sellers who dealt in such commodity in Imperial valley the quality was that constituting good No. 1 marketable Milo maize. The testimony adduced on the same subject by the defendant tended to establish that when subjected to a certain moisture test the product was not equal to the standard of No. 1 maize according to that established as a government standard, which is also that of the Los Angeles Grain Exchange. Secondary evidence as to this last-mentioned standard was admitted on the part of the defendant at the trial. By the method of interpretation supplied and directed in the Civil Code and followed in Brett v. Vanomar Producers, 45 Cal. App. 286, 187 P. 758, which we believe to be decisive of the question under consideration, we find no error in the learned trial court's ruling admitting testimony as to the customary methods of determining the quality of Milo maize. The contract itself is not so plain and unambiguous as to speak for itself unaided by extrinsic evidence. It therefore was permissible in this action to permit testimony as to the nature and details of ascertaining the quality by proof of the customs prevailing in the community to enable the court to interpret the contract in the sense in which the parties themselves understood it at the time of its execution. The evidence upon the simple issue as to whether or not the maize offered by plaintiff was up to the standard required was determined by the trial court upon conflicting evidence. That finding under elementary and well-established rules cannot be disturbed on appeal.

[7, 8] Complaint is also made of the court's ruling in permitting McCormick, described as a discharged employee of the defendant, to answer certain questions asked by respondent as to the grade of the Calipatria and Rockwood corn, designating Milo maize as corn. At first glance it appears as if the witness had been permitted to say the Calipatria corn was No. 1 over objection, when it is shown by the witness' testimony he had never examined the Calipatria lot of maize. There is no merit in this objection, although technically correct, because it appears fully from the context and the witness' frequent explanation that he had never examined the Calipatria corn and meant to testify only as to the Rockwood corn, and the court could not have misunderstood the witness in this respect or been misled by his testimony. Appellant also claims error when the court sustained the objection asked of the witness Prenot as follows:

"By Mr. Hickcox: (Q.) Did Mr. McCormick have any other or further authority than to buy grain for the Albers Bros. Milling Co.?

"Mr. Brown: Objected to as incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial and no proper foundation has been laid. It is calling for the conclusion of the witness, and there is no issue raised on that point.

"The Court: Objection sustained to the question asked."

The ruling was obviously correct. Other rulings objected to have been sufficiently covered and need not be further noticed.

The third specification of error, that the findings of fact are not supported by the evidence, cannot be sustained. Under the complaint and answer there was in reality but one essential issue, namely, whether the corn delivered at the required places in Imperial Valley offered to defendant and rejected by it was or was not No. 1 marketable maize. As heretofore indicated, that question was determined by the trial court on conflicting testimony against the contention of the appellant.

[9] As to the fourth specification of error relating to the measure of damages, it will be sufficient to state we think the evidence clearly establishes that Morton upon the rejection of the maize and the refusal to pay therefor within a reasonable time resold the property and obtained the best market value established in Imperial county on December 1, 1920, and at all times thereafter up to and including the date of resale, namely, $29 a ton. There is some conflicting evidence on this point, but the court's finding of fact cannot be disturbed. We believe the proper measure of damages was applied. Section 3311, subd. 1, Civ. Code.

On the former trial of this case a verdict was brought in for the plaintiff for the amount prayed for in the complaint and the judgment on the verdict by the trial court was reversed and the case was sent back to the superior court for a new trial. See Morton v. Albers Bros. Milling Co., 66 Cal. App. 391, 226 P. 809. The theory upon which the case was formerly tried was different from that established in the trial from which this appeal was taken. The judgment in each case, one following the verdict of the jury and the other following trial by the court without a jury, was the same, and we are satisfied, both under the law and the evidence, the plaintiff established a meritorious cause of action.

The judgment is affirmed.

MERCHANTS' NAT. BANK OF LOS ANGELES v. CLARK-PARKER CO.
(Civ. 6449.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. March 25, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ⚷103—Order striking counterclaim and order denying motion for leave to file amended answer and counterclaim held not appealable.

Order striking out counterclaim to action on note and order denying motion by defendant for leave to file an amended answer and counterclaim held not appealable.

2. Appeal and error ⚷79(1)—In action involving only two parties, there is no final judgment as regards appeal until all matters in litigation are determined.

Where there are but two parties to action, there is no final judgment as regards appeal until all matters in litigation are determined.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Clair S. Tappaan, Judge.

Action by the Merchants' National Bank of Los Angeles, a corporation, against the Clark-Parker Company, a fictitious firm composed of John Doe and another, in which defendant S. N. Clark filed a counterclaim. From an order striking out the counterclaim and denying a motion for leave to file an amended answer and counterclaim, defendant S. N. Clark appeals. On motion to dismiss the appeal. Motion granted.

William C. Ring, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Rohe & Freston, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J. Plaintiff filed an action in the court below on a promissory note to which the defendant S. N. Clark responded by an answer and counterclaim. The only denial in the answer is that any part of the sum demanded by the complaint is due, owing, or unpaid. On October 15, 1928, the court made an order striking out the counterclaim, and on December 10, 1928, made an order denying a motion made by the defendant S. N. Clark, for leave to file an amended answer and counterclaim. The appeal is attempted to be taken from these two orders, the one striking the counterclaim and the other refusing to permit an amended counterclaim to be filed. The respondent has made a motion to dismiss on the ground that the notice of appeal, in so far as it relates to the first order, was filed too late, it having been filed on December 27, 1928, or on the seventy-second day after the order was made, and on the further ground that the orders are not appealable.

[1, 2] We shall determine the latter contention first, for the reason that, if the orders are not appealable, the former assertion is unimportant. The appellant argues that the orders are in effect a final determination of the cause, and he relies very largely upon the case of Howe v. Key System Transit Co., 198 Cal. 525, 246 P. 39. That case presented an entirely different situation from the one which confronts us. There complaints were filed for personal injuries against two railway systems, and about 40 fictitious defendants alleged to have been in the employ of one of the defendant corporations. Four of these defendants filed cross-complaints against the other railway company, alleging negligence on the part of that defendant. The cross-complaints were, on motion, stricken from the files, and appeals were taken by the cross-complainants. The court upheld the appeal because in that case the orders were in effect a final disposition of the cause as between each cross-complainant and the cross-defendant. The former adjudications are reviewed, and it is made manifest therein from the discussion that the reason we have stated was the controlling feature, but that where, as here, there are but two parties to the action, there is no final judgment until all the matters in litigation are determined. The instant case is no different from the one which would have been presented if a general demurrer to the counterclaim had been sustained without leave to amend. Surely it could not be seriously argued that the assumed order would have been appealable. We see nothing to take this case out of the general rule.

Motion granted.

WAKEMAN v. GREEN. (Civ. 5987.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. April 1, 1929.

1. Attorney and client ⚷166(5)—Burden of introducing proof of payment for attorney's services was on defendant who pleaded payment.

In action for balance due for attorney's services, where defendant pleaded payment, the burden of introducing proof on that subject rested on him.

2. Pleading ⚷250—Allowing amendment of complaint by increasing amount claimed for legal services did not allow addition of new cause of action.

In action for balance due for legal services, in which one count sought agreed value, and another count reasonable value of services, allowing amendment of complaint by increasing amount claimed was not erroneous as allowing addition of new cause of action.

3. Appeal and error 🔑1041(2)—Allowing amendment of complaint, by increasing amount claimed, was harmless, when amount recovered was less than amount originally claimed.

In action for balance due for legal services, order allowing amendment of complaint by increasing amount claimed to be due was harmless, where judgment recovered was for less than amount claimed in original complaint.

4. Pleading 🔑201—Language finding fault with each count is of no force or effect in demurrer to whole complaint.

In demurrer to entire complaint, language finding fault with each count had no force or effect.

5. Pleading 🔑433(7)—Complaint alleging sum was due and owing, but not alleging it was unpaid, held not insufficient after verdict and judgment, where answer alleged nothing was due.

In action for balance for legal services, complaint alleging that amount sued for was due and owing, but not alleging that it was unpaid, was not open to attack after verdict and judgment, where answer alleged affirmatively that no sum was due, owing, or unpaid.

6. Appeal and error 🔑673(2)—Record not showing when action was commenced does not show it was barred by limitation (Code Civ. Proc. § 339).

Where record on appeal, in action for balance due for legal services, does not disclose when action was commenced, it does not show that cause of action was barred by Code Civ. Proc. § 339.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by Della Louise Wakeman, executrix of Ernest H. Wakeman, deceased, against M. Green. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Robert L. Levy, of San Francisco, for appellant.

James M. Thomas, of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff is the widow of Ernest H. Wakeman. He was an attorney at law, and as such conducted certain litigation for the defendant. After the death of her husband, the plaintiff, as executrix of his will, made a demand for the balance owing to her husband for services rendered, and upon the defendant's refusal to pay she commenced this action. Her complaint was framed in two counts—one asking for the agreed value of the services and the other count asking for the reasonable value of the services. The defendant appeared and filed a demurrer. The demurrer was overruled, and the defendant answered. A trial was had before the trial court sitting without a jury. The trial court made findings in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendant has appealed under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The defendant claims that the evidence is insufficient to justify the finding of the court that the deceased rendered the services alleged in the complaint and that such services were of the reasonable value of $2,000. The evidence was all one way on the subject of the rendition of services, and there was an abundance of evidence supporting the finding as to the value of those services.

[1] In his answer the defendant alleged that he had paid for the services rendered during the lifetime of Ernest H. Wakeman. The trial court found that that allegation was not true. At this time the defendant claims that the evidence is insufficient to support the latter finding. The contention is without merit. The burden of introducing the proof on that subject rested with the defendant. Melone v. Ruffino, 129 Cal. 514, 519, 62 P. 93, 79 Am. St. Rep. 127. The defendant was fully heard on the subject, and the strongest evidence he produced was to the effect that he had paid about $566 on a claim which amounted to nearly $3,000. The judgment was for only $2,000, and it is perfectly clear that the court did not err in making the finding.

[2, 3] The day before the trial the trial court allowed the plaintiff to amend her complaint by changing the amount of her claim from $2,500 to $7,500. The defendant attacks the order. He claims that it had the effect of allowing the plaintiff to add a new and distinct cause of action. We think it did not do so. It but changed the earmarks of the existing cause of action. Furthermore, the order was harmless. In her original pleading the plaintiff claimed $2,500. By the judgment she recovered $2,000—a sum less than that claimed in her original pleading.

[4, 5] After the plaintiff filed her amended complaint the defendant interposed a demurrer. By its terms it was not addressed to either count contained in the amended complaint, but was addressed to the entire complaint. By its language it finds fault with each count. Excepting in a demurrer to one certain count, such language has no force or effect. In his brief he does not present any argument showing wherein the complaint as an entirety is defective. Assuming solely for the purpose of this decision that the demurrer was properly drawn, the ruling disposing of the demurrer was not error. The point which the defendant seeks to present is this. The plaintiff's complaint contained the allegation that the money was "due and owing." She did not allege that it was "unpaid." After the demurrer was overruled the defendant answered, and in his answer he did not deny the allegation as made, but alleged affirmatively that "there is no sum whatsoever now due or owing or unpaid by the said defendant." Whatever there may be in the defendant's point, after judgment or verdict, the point is without merit. 20 Cal. Jur. 950.

[6] In the demurrer it is asserted that the plaintiff's cause of action is barred by section 339, Code of Civil Procedure. The fact does not appear on the face of the record. In the amended complaint it is stated that the decedent rendered the services for which the plaintiff asked compensation within two years prior to June 12, 1924. However, the record does not disclose when the action was commenced. That fact is not to be found in the clerk's transcript nor in the reporter's transcript.

Finally it is claimed that the judgment is excessive. An examination of the evidence discloses that the judgment could have been for a larger sum and still within the estimates made by the witnesses who were called and examined as to the reasonable value of the services rendered.

We find no error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

PEARCE v. ELBE. (Civ. 6652.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. April 2, 1929.

Rehearing Denied May 2, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 29, 1929.

1. Automobiles 🔑246(58)—Refusal of instruction on last clear chance, in action to recover for injuries in automobile collision, held not erroneous under evidence.

In action for damages for personal injuries received in collision between defendant's automobile and one in which plaintiff was riding, refusal of instruction on doctrine of last clear chance held not erroneous under evidence.

2. Negligence 🔑141(9)—Instruction on last clear chance, failing to include element of negligence in failing to avoid accident, held properly refused.

Requested instruction, on doctrine of last clear chance, failing to include elements as to power of preventing accident having ceased and defendant being thereafter guilty of negligence in failing to avoid it, held properly refused.

3. Trial 🔑105(1)—Refusal of instruction that defendant, by failure to deny, had admitted fact contrary to testimony admitted without objection, held not erroneous.

In action for damages for injuries in automobile collision, refusal of instruction that defendant had admitted, by failure to deny, that he had driven or was about to drive automobile across intersection, held not erroneous, in that it would have had effect of eliminating all testimony to effect that collision occurred some distance from intersection, which testimony was received without objection and without intimation that any such admission would be claimed.

4. Automobiles 🔑246(57)—Instruction requiring verdict for defendant in case jury could not determine proximate cause of automobile collision held not erroneous under evidence.

In action for damages for injuries received in automobile collision, instruction, requiring verdict for defendant in case jury could not determine proximate cause of accident, held not erroneous, in view of evidence eliminating doctrine of last clear chance.

5. Automobiles 🔑246(57)—Instruction on unavoidable accident held not erroneous under pleadings, in action for damages for injuries received in automobile collision.

Where complaint in action for damages for injuries received in automobile collision pleaded negligence in general terms and answer denied it in general terms, instruction on unavoidable accident at request of defendant was not erroneous, since general denial of general allegation of negligence permitted defendant to rely on such defense.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; P. F. Gosbey, Judge.

Action by Margaret I. Pearce against Albert Elbe. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Daniel A. Ryan, of San Francisco (George F. Snyder, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

J. Hampton Hoge, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KOFORD, P. J. Plaintiff sued for damages for personal injuries received in a collision between an automobile driven by the defendant and one driven by her husband in which she was riding. Trial was by jury and the verdict was for defendant. Plaintiff appeals and assigns as error the giving and refusing to give certain instructions to the jury.

The details of how the collision occurred were differently described by different witnesses. Some placed it at the intersection of Old Homestead road and the State Highway and others placed it 30 or 40 feet north of that point. The chief point relied upon by appellant is the refusal of the court to give any instruction upon the doctrine of last clear chance. To show how this doctrine can be invoked by her, appellant relies upon the version of the accident as narrated by defendant's witnesses rather than upon the version narrated by her own witnesses. It is as follows: Defendant came into the highway from Old Homestead road, he turned to his right at the intersection, and traveled along the highway on his right-hand side of said highway at a moderate rate of speed until he was struck by plaintiff's machine. Plaintiff's automobile was traveling upon the highway approaching the defendant and approaching the intersection of Old Homestead road at a fast rate of speed. Her husband undertook to overtake and pass a vehicle upon its left-hand side, and this brought him upon the left-hand side of the highway. He applied, released, and again applied his brakes, his car marked a 90-foot trail of rubber on the pavement while it proceeded in a skidding manner towards the point where it collided with defendant's automobile, knocking it over against a stump, then it proceeded 30 or 40 feet further, and lay down on its left side in the highway where Old Homestead road crosses it.

It is claimed that defendant should have moved over further to his right, and thus have allowed plaintiff's automobile to pass without colliding with defendant.

Defendant on cross-examination testified at one place as follows:

"So then, when Mr. Pearce came over on the left-hand side out of the line of travel, you were 110 feet away from him? Yes.

"Why didn't you turn into the dirt? I never expected him to come over as far as I was.

"You assumed he would pull over that way? Not altogether, but to some extent, I hoped he would go back in line.

"And you never pulled off the road at all? I did.

"But you were partly off at the time, you were half off of it, weren't you? When he struck me, yes.

"Why didn't you pull over altogether and go into the dirt? I felt I had a perfect right to my side of the highway and I was off just as far as I could go."

In another place defendant testified as follows:

"Why didn't you pull out of his way and get into the dirt? I did, I did all that I had a chance to do.

"You said you assumed you had a right on the highway and that is one of the reasons you stayed there? I said I had a right on the highway, yes.

"And that was one of the reasons why you stayed there instead of pulling out? I started to pull out.

"But you said a moment ago that you remained on the highway there because that was your right, and you were on your right side and you had a right there. I don't believe I made that statement.

"Do you withdraw that statement, if you made it? If I made it, I do."

Surveyor Ford testified from measurements on the highway map that there was 35 feet from the center of the pavement to the stump beside the road. Appellant deduces from this testimony that defendant had plenty of space to his right in which to turn out and away from plaintiff's automobile, but the same witness testified that there was not 35 feet of traveled roadway between these two points even though there was that much space between them.

The evidence shows that plaintiff's automobile skidded sideways into defendant's automobile and, although it shows that defendant saw plaintiff's automobile start to come into the left-hand side of the highway while over 100 feet distant, there is no evidence pointed out to show that defendant either realized or should have realized from what he saw that plaintiff was in a position of danger from which she could not extricate herself, and none is pointed out to show that defendant had sufficient time after this in which to avoid the collision by the exercise of ordinary care.

[1, 2] We conclude, therefore, that the evidence was not of such a character as to make it error for the court to reject requested instructions upon the doctrine of last clear chance. In addition to this is the fact that the only two instructions requested by appellant upon the subject are defective in themselves for failure to include important elements of the doctrine. Requested instruction B did not state that plaintiff's husband must have ceased to have any power of preventing the accident nor that defendant must have thereafter been guilty of negligence in failing to avoid it. Requested instruction C has all the defects pointed out in Townsend v. Butterfield, 168 Cal. 564, 143 P. 760, and in addition it reads "notwithstanding the negligence of the other," instead of "notwithstanding the previous negligence of the other"—an important omission considering that without this omission the phrase was held in the case last cited to exclude the case of the concurring negligence of both parties. That a similar instruction despite its several omissions was held not to be reversible error in the case last cited in view of the testimony and other instructions given in that case does not mean that it is reversible error to refuse to give the same imperfect instruction in this case. As stated by the court in that case, the instruction has many imperfections of brevity.

[3] The court did not err in refusing instruction D requested by plaintiff. It stated that the defendant had admitted, by failure to deny, in his answer, that he had driven or was about to drive his automobile across said State Highway along Old Homestead road. It is true that the answer does not deny the allegation, but the two pleadings are not such that an admission was made as to where or how the collision occurred and evidence was received throughout the trial without objection as though the question of where the collision took place was open to proof. The requested instruction would have been manifestly unfair, as it would have had the effect of eliminating all the testimony to the effect that the collision occurred 30 or 40 feet from the intersection of the two roads, which testimony was received without objection and without intimation that any such admission would be claimed after the evidence was closed.

[4] Appellant criticizes instruction XX given by the court. It told the jury in substance that, "if you cannot determine what was the proximate cause of the accident your verdict must be for the defendant." It is said that the proximate cause of the accident might be either defendant's negligence without the assistance of plaintiff's contributory negligence or it might be the defendant's failure to avail himself of the last clear chance; that if the jury felt that it was surely one of these two causes without being able to determine which one of the two was the proximate cause, it could still find for the plaintiff. If we are right in our decision that last clear chance was not in the case under the evidence, this instruction is not open to the criticism directed against it by appellant.

[5] It was not error for the court to instruct on unavoidable accident at the request of the defendant. Metcalfe v. Pac. Electric Ry. Co., 63 Cal. App. 331, 218 P. 486, is not authority for appellant's contention that unavoidable accident must be specially pleaded by defendant. The appellant was plaintiff in that case. He was claiming error in the refusal of the court to give his requested instruction, and to meet respondent's reply, he had to contend that the point was material in the case by reason of either the evidence or special pleading. The court holds that it was neither in the evidence nor specially pleaded and so the instruction could properly be refused. That is to say, so long as defendant did not claim that defense, plaintiff was not entitled to have the jury instructed upon it. This is not a holding that this defense must be specially pleaded to be available to the defendant. Because it was not error to refuse it in that case at the request of the plaintiff does not mean that it was error to give it in this case at request of defendant. Here negligence is pleaded in general terms in the complaint. The answer denies it in general terms. The general denial of the general allegation of negligence permits the defendant to rely upon the defense of unavoidable accident. Lehnerts v. Otis Elevator Co. (Mo. Sup.) 256 S. W. 819, 822; 45 C. J. 1141, note 52. The instruction was given by request of defendant, and we cannot see how it could be harmful to the plaintiff, who in any event had the burden of proving that the collision was occasioned solely by the negligence of the plaintiff, which, of course, would exclude unavoidable accident.

JACKSON et ux. v. GORHAM. (Civ. 3509.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 4, 1929.

1. Deeds 🔑17(2)—Inadequacy of consideration is not of itself sufficient ground for setting aside deed.

Mere inadequacy of consideration is never of itself sufficient ground for setting aside deed, and amount of consideration, in absence of any imputation of fraud, is immaterial to question.

2. Deeds 🔑211(3, 4)—Evidence held not to show fraud or undue influence asserted by grantees.

In action to quiet title in which defendant filed cross-complaint to set aside conveyance to plaintiffs, evidence held not to show any fraud or undue influence asserted by plaintiffs over grantors, so as to warrant consideration of question of inadequacy of consideration.

3. Fraud 🔑6—There must be more than mere confidence in another's integrity to sustain presumption of constructive fraud.

There must be something further than mere confidence in another's honesty and integrity to sustain presumption of constructive fraud.

4. Deeds 🔑211(1)—Record held to show that grantors had independent advice before making conveyance.

In action to quiet title in which defendant filed cross-complaint to set aside conveyance to plaintiffs on grounds of fraud, undue influence, and grantor's incompetency, record held to show that grantors had independent advice before making such conveyance.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; H. C. Lucas, Judge.

Action to quiet title by G. N. Jackson and wife against Bird W. Gorham. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Benjamin W. Shipman and Henry O. Wackerbarth, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Eugene Tincher, of Long Beach, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. Plaintiffs had judgment in an action to quiet title, from which judgment the defendant appeals. The action was instituted by the plaintiffs to quiet their title to lot 26, in block 53, of the city of Long Beach, as that lot is described in a map recorded in Book 19, at page 91 et seq., miscellaneous records of the county of Los Angeles. The facts, as gleaned from the record, are as follows:

Upon the premises described there is situate one single house and one double house. For a long time prior to any of the transactions referred to herein, J. W. Harris and Mary Harris, his wife, occupied the single house; that for about two years prior to December, 1921, the plaintiffs had occupied one section of the double house as tenants of J. W. Harris and his wife; that during the month of December, 1921, J. W. Harris and Mary Harris executed and delivered to G. N. Jackson and Della Jackson a deed of conveyance transferring all of said property to the plaintiffs in this action; that at the time of the delivery of said conveyance, the plaintiffs in this action executed and delivered to J. W. Harris and Mary Harris an instrument conveying to said J. W. Harris and Mary Harris a life estate in the premises referred to, and also a mortgage thereon in the sum of $3,000, payable ten years after date without interest; thereafter, and on or about the 16th day of January, 1922, an agreement was entered into between the plaintiffs in this action and the said J. W. Harris and Mary Harris, whereby the section of the double house theretofore occupied by the plaintiffs was leased by the said J. W. Harris and Mary Harris to the plaintiffs in this action, for and during the term of the lives of the said J. W. Harris and Mary Harris, and for the life of the survivor of them, the lessees yielding and paying to the said J. W. Harris and Mary Harris, or to the survivor of them, the sum of $15 per month as rental for said premises, and also agreeing to care for and attend to said J. W. Harris and Mary Harris, and the survivor of them, during the remainder of their lives, and the life of the survivor, for which services compensation was also to be paid. At the time of the execution of this agreement, and of the instruments herein referred to, the said J. W. Harris and Mary Harris were of the age of 80 years, or thereabouts. It appears from the record that the plaintiffs did look after and care for the said Harrises until the month of February, 1923, when both J. W. Harris and Mary Harris died.

The defendant is an adopted son of Mary Harris, deceased, and if the conveyance of the property referred to, made by the said J. W. Harris and Mary Harris, his wife, to the plaintiffs in this action, were set aside, would succeed to the whole of said property. In addition to his answer to the plaintiff's complaint, the defendant filed a cross-complaint in which he sought to have the conveyance first referred to herein set aside on the grounds of fraud and incompetency of the said J. W. Harris and Mary Harris, his wife, and also on the further ground that the conveyance made to the plaintiffs was the result of undue influence. The court found the facts contrary to the allegations of the defendant's cross-complaint. The findings are too long to be set out herein, but in substance they are to the effect that while the Harrises were advanced in years, they were not mentally incompetent; that they were not acting under any undue influence of any person whomsoever; that the transactions referred to herein were brought about by their own free will and upon their own inauguration. The court also found that the allegations in the cross-complaint that the deed referred to was made without consideration, was not true. Finding No. 8 of the trial court is in these words and figures: "That the said J. W. Harris and Mary Harris, and each of them, were at all times prior to December 3rd, 1921, and were on the 3rd day of December, 1921, and were subsequent thereto, to the date of their respective deaths, at all times of sound mind and memory capable of transacting any and all business matters pertaining to their estate and affairs and that at no time were they acting under undue influence, duress, fraud or menace from any person, or persons whatsoever."

Upon this appeal the appellant confines himself to the presentation of the following points as grounds for reversal: First, "Inadequacy of consideration, and, second, the relations between the parties being of trust and confidence, respondents were charged with the duty, in the lower court, of proving (a) that the transaction was a fair transaction; (b) that the Harrises received independent advice."

[1-3] As to the consideration, the appellant argues that the records show the property to be of the value of a trifle more than $7,000. Respondents make no contention whatever as to the value of the property, but content themselves with citations from the testimony and the findings of the court to the effect that the Harrises had independent advice; that the proposition was one of their own originating; that there were no confidential relations, as those words are used in law, existing between the Harrises and the plaintiffs in this action. The question of inadequacy of consideration really appears to be foreclosed in this action for, as stated in 9 California Jurisprudence, 140: "Mere inadequacy of consideration is never of itself sufficient ground for setting aside a deed, and the amount of consideration, in the absence of any imputation of fraud, is immaterial to the question"—citing a number of authorities. If there were any imputation of fraud or any testimony whatsoever showing undue influence, or any testimony whatsoever from which the inference of undue influence might be drawn, then the question of inadequacy of consideration might be considered. It stands alone, however, in this case. Our attention has not been called to a word in the testimony indicating that any undue influence, or any influence whatsoever, was exercised by the plaintiffs over the Harrises to induce them to propose and bring about consummation of the execution of the instruments to which we have referred. The record does show that the plaintiffs had lived upon the premises referred to as tenants of the Harrises for about two years prior to December, 1921; that during said time the plaintiffs had been very kind and attentive to the Harrises; had looked after their personal wants; but there is no testimony in the record that the plaintiffs in this action had anything to do with the business affairs of the Harrises or ever transacted any business for them whatsoever, or gave any advice in relation thereto. It follows as a necessary conclusion that there is nothing upon which to base constructive fraud, by reason of the relationship in this case. Friendly relations or even intimacy of relationship presents an entirely different question from what is understood as a confidential relation in law. One may have confidence in another's integrity and honesty of purpose, and likewise believe that he will live up to any of his contracts, without having any confidential relations with such person that would void any agreements or transactions entered into between them, on the theory of constructive fraud or undue influence. We think the record shows that the Harrises did have confidence in the honesty and integrity of the Jacksons, and believed that the Jacksons would comply with any agreements into which they entered; but there is absolutely no testimony showing anything further, or that there were any confidential business relationships, or relationships existing between the Jacksons and the Harrises which would constitute a basis for a charge of constructive fraud. There must be something further than mere confidence in another's honesty and integrity to sustain the presumption of constructive fraud. In re Estate of Lavinburg, 161 Cal. 536, 119 P. 915; In re Estate of Higgins, 156 Cal. 259, 104 P. 8. As to what does constitute such relationship is well illustrated in the case of Cox v. Schnerr, 172 Cal. 371, 156 P. 509, where the person charged with fraud had been the confidential business agent, and for a long time transacted business for the one upon whom undue influence was alleged to have been exercised. What constitutes confidential relationship in law is also well illustrated in the case of Piercy v. Piercy, 18 Cal. App. 756, 124 P. 561, where a son had lived in the same house with his mother, managed her property as her agent, and also held a general power of attorney.

[4] While the appellant raises the question, the record shows that the Harrises had independent advice. While the respondents in this case are now represented by the same attorney who acted for the Harrises, the fact is uncontradicted that he had never so acted until after the decease of both of the Harrises. The attorney who attended to the transactions to which we have referred was the attorney for the Harrises only, and had been their attorney for some time prior to the execution of the instruments to which we have referred. The record likewise shows that the Harrises were not very much interested in the amount of money which the Jacksons would pay either to them or to their estate; they were more intent on having some one near by who would look after them during their advancing years. The record further shows that whatever of the estate there was belonging to the Harrises, outside of the sum of $500 bequeathed to a niece, was all given to the church to which the Harrises belonged.

Outside of the points which we have discussed, it is conceded by the appellant that the findings of the court are sustained by the evidence, or at least that they are supported by conflicting evidence which prevents their being attacked upon appeal. While the transactions disclosed by the record in this case are somewhat unusual, we find nothing which would justify our holding that the findings of the trial court are unsupported.

The judgment of the court must therefore be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

In the matter of the estate of N. Belle Griggs, deceased. Petition by Robert Herdman against Louis P. Boardman, administrator with the will annexed. From an order directing partial distribution, the administrator appeals. Affirmed.

Philip C. Boardman, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Walter J. Hartzell, of Redlands, for respondent.

HOUSER, J. This appeal is from an order of partial distribution of an estate and a judgment therein made by the superior court by which the sum of $4,775 was ordered distributed and paid to one Robert Herdman, a legatee in the will of N. Belle Griggs, deceased.

So far as is here material, the will which furnished the authority for the order and the judgment in question provided that the trustee therein named distribute "to Anna Herdman, the income from Five Thousand Dollars ($5,000.00) to be paid to her semiannually during the term of her natural life and upon her death to pay said principal sum of Five Thousand Dollars ($5,000.00) to her son, Robert Herdman."

It appears that Anna Herdman predeceased the testatrix herein.

The basic contention of appellant is that the legacy to Anna Herdman lapsed with her death, and, consequently, that the trial court erred in its order and judgment. Certain authorities, including Estate of Goodfellow, 166 Cal. 411, 137 P. 12, are cited by appellant in support of his position. Without here setting forth the facts upon which either of such authorities is based, it may suffice to state that none of them presents a situation paralleling either the facts or the law applicable to the question here involved. On the other hand, both statutory and judicial authority support the conclusion reached by the trial court. Sections 1344, 741, 742, Civ. Code; Estate of Gregory, 12 Cal. App. 309, 107 P. 566. District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 5, 1929.

1. Appeal and error 🔑1011(1)—Findings on conflicting evidence held conclusive.

In action to quiet title, determination by trial court on conflicting evidence was conclusive, where it did not appear as matter of law that evidence was insufficient to support findings.

not merely its materiality, is newly discovered, that it is not cumulative merely, that it will render different result probable on retrial, that party seeking relief could not with reasonable diligence have discovered and produced it at trial, and that such facts be shown by best evidence of which case admits.

6. New trial ⚿102(8)—Party not seeking continuance on discovering existence or materiality of evidence until during trial cannot have new trial on ground evidence is newly discovered.

Where party fails to move for continuance to enable him to obtain evidence which is not in his possession, existence or materiality of which he first discovers during progress of trial, he is not entitled to new trial on ground evidence was newly discovered.

7. Appeal and error ⚿977(5)—Order refusing new trial will not be disturbed, in absence of plain abuse of discretion.

Unless appellate court can plainly see that discretion has been abused in denying new trial for newly discovered evidence and that showing was of such character as to make it manifest that different result would be reached in view of such evidence, order refusing new trial will not be disturbed.

8. New trial ⚿99—Refusal of new trial for newly discovered evidence held not abuse of discretion.

In action to quiet title, refusal of new trial for newly discovered evidence held not abuse of discretion, where affidavits showed evidence was cumulative, and there was no showing that appellants could not with reasonable diligence have produced evidence at trial, nor any suggestion as to how matter set forth could produce different result.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edward T. Bishop, Judge.

Action to quiet title by the Bradbury Estate Company against Joseph H. Carroll and others. From a judgment for plaintiff and orders denying motion for new trial and motion to correct judgment, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

William A. Spill, of Pasadena, for appellants.

Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher and H. F. Prince, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LANDIS, Justice pro tem. In form, this is an action to quiet title.

Plaintiff alleged ownership to two parcels of land, parcel 1 consisting of 93.84 acres and parcel 2 consisting of 69.57 acres, both being portions of the Rancho Azusa de Duarte in Los Angeles county, Cal., and, following the usual allegations that defendants assert an interest adverse to plaintiff and that such claim is without right, plaintiff further alleges that while it was the absolute owner and entitled to possession, defendants Carroll, without right, title, or license from plaintiff, entered into possession, fenced and wrongfully withheld a portion of said land to the damage of plaintiff in the sum of $1,000.

By way of answer defendants Carroll deny plaintiff's ownership and claim an interest in the entire property described in plaintiff's complaint and deny all other material allegations of the complaint.

At the trial it developed, was conceded by the parties, and the case was tried upon the theory, that the sole question or issue in the case was the determination of the location on the ground of part of the Rancho Azusa de Duarte eastern boundary line in order to determine whether the land occupied by defendants was within or outside of the boundaries of the 69.58-acre parcel of said rancho. Judgment went for plaintiff.

The court found that plaintiff was the owner and entitled to the possession of the premises described in the complaint, and that answering defendants had no estate or interest therein; that plaintiff is entitled to a writ of restitution removing defendants from and restoring to plaintiff the possession thereof and awarding to plaintiff damages in the sum of 6 cents; and the findings and judgment recited by metes and bounds a description of the parcel entered into possession of and fenced by defendants by referring to the fence inclosing the same sufficient to permit of its being found and located on the ground.

Thereafter, upon motion made by plaintiff, nunc pro tunc order was made by the court correcting the description of the land as shown in the findings and judgment, and a motion for a new trial was made and received the effect of a denial by not having been determined by the court within the time allowed by law.

Defendants appeal, and in support thereof urge the following three contentions: (1) The trial court was without power to make the order correcting the judgment. (2) The findings of the court were against the weight of the evidence. (3) The court should have granted a new trial because of accident, surprise, or newly discovered evidence.

Although denied under their answer, during the trial appellants did not dispute or question respondent's claim of title to the property described in the complaint.

The claim and contention of appellants is that the land possessed, fenced, and claimed by appellants is located outside of the boundaries of the land described in the complaint; and it is the contention of both the parties that the determination of the question of whether the land fenced and claimed by defendants is within or without the boundaries of the land described in the complaint necessitates the establishment on the ground of the easterly boundary line of the Rancho Azusa de Duarte. Appellants do not claim under any record title, but seek to prevail under the rule that if plaintiff prevails it must prevail by the strength of its own title.

The parcel of land claimed by appellants consists of 6.01 acres, and is described in the corrected findings and judgment as follows:

"Lot designated as 69.57 acres, Section 28, Township 1 North, Range 10 West, S. B. B. & M., of the Rancho Azusa de Duarte, in the County of Los Angeles, State of California, as per map recorded in Book 6, Page 80 et seq., Miscellaneous Records of said County, the westerly line of defendants' fence being approximately 4.46 chains west of the easterly line of said Rancho as shown in said map; said portion consisting of the easterly 6.01 acres of said Lot designated as 69.57 acres, particularly described as follows:

"Beginning at a point in the easterly line of Rancho 0.57 chains South of the northerly line of said lot designated as 69.57 acres, Section 28 and 4.46 East of the westerly line of defendants' fence, thence along fence North 89° 09′ West 4.46 chains; thence along fence South 7° 07′ West 14.05 chains; thence along fence South 82° 34′ East 1.71 chains; thence along fence North 47° 46′ East 4.34 chains to a point on easterly line of said Rancho; thence northerly along the easterly line of said Rancho 11.25 chains to the point of beginning, as shown in Plaintiff's Exhibit 4."

Three surveys are referred to in the testimony: The Hancock survey, upon which the United States government patent to Andres de Duarte was based, was made in 1858. In 1875, Norway made a survey of lands lying to the east of the rancho and coming in from the east ran as far as station 7, but did not make any further attempt to survey the Rancho Azusa de Duarte, and in 1872, Lecouvreur, county surveyor of Los Angeles county, retraced the boundaries of the rancho and subdivided it, establishing what is known as the Lecouvreur lines, his survey being the basis of the County Map Book 6, miscellaneous records of Los Angeles county, p. 82, and the main issue in the case is the location of the easterly boundary of the Rancho Azusa de Duarte either as originally located by Hancock or as subsequently relocated by Lecouvreur.

The two principal witnesses testifying were Mr. L. Friel, a surveyor called by the respondent, and a Mr. J. E. Roberts, called by appellants, both of whom had recently undertaken to relocate the lines and fix and establish on the ground the line in question.

The line adopted by the court as the easterly line of the rancho is designated on a map prepared by Mr. Friel, as line E-F. Mr. Friel testified that this line is a relocation on the ground of the Lecouvreur line, and it was admitted by defendants' witness, Mr. Roberts, that if the Lecouvreur line was a correct relocation of the original boundaries of the rancho, the parcel in question, that is, the 6.01 acres claimed by defendants, is within the boundaries of the plaintiff's land.

It was stipulated that the map prepared by Friel (Plaintiff's Exhibit 7) is a correct retracing of the map shown in Book 6 of Maps, p. 82; and the line adopted by the trial court is shown on the map to be situate between the stations 8 and 9. Friel testified that in undertaking to retrace the Hancock line he began at station 1 (designated on his map as station A) of the Rancho Azusa de Duarte according to the Hancock field notes and ran courses and distances according to such field notes from said station 1 to station 9; station 1 is the common boundary of the Rancho Azusa de Duarte and of the Rancho Santa Anita, and is marked by an old fence; from station 1 he ran courses and distances as called for in the field notes to station 4; from station 4 he ran the called for courses and distances, south 79 degrees 30 minutes east, 119 chains to the point B, station 5, and found the courses and distances to be south 79 degrees 35 minutes east, 119.76 chains; at point B he found a 4 by 4 post and a 2-inch iron pipe. He did not find anything at stations 2, 3, and 4, which would indicate the original posts set by Hancock. From station 5 he ran the courses and distances as called for, north 75 degrees east, 11 chains to station 6, indicated on his map as point C; he found nothing at this point in the way of a monument. He then ran the courses and distances called for, north 68 degrees 30 minutes east, 45 chains, arriving at point D, or station 7, finding the correct course and distance, however, to be north 68 degrees 13 minutes east, 45.46 chains; at this point, station 7, he found an old sycamore tree marked with "B.T." as a witness tree (the Hancock field notes referred to a sycamore tree at this point). From station 7 he ran north 57 degrees 56 minutes east, 46.60 chains, to station 8, where he found a 2-inch iron pipe. Starting again at station 7 he ran to a 4-inch by 4-inch post in a mound of rocks at the southwest corner of lot 1 of section 21, marked 0 on the map and the post being marked S 2 1 L 1 on the north side, S 2 8 L 1 on the south side, and 2 on the west side. He then ran east 35.90 chains and set a point indicated on the map by letter Q; he then ran from point 0 to the southwest corner of lot 1 indicated on his map by letter P, where he found a 2-inch iron pipe set in concrete; thence westerly on a line with the southerly line of lots 2 and 3 to the west and also along the south line of lot 1, 32.90 chains, arriving at point R; thence north 39 degrees 00 minutes east, 1.52 chains, to point indicated F, and thence from F to E, through Q. Friel also testified that he found a granite rock 28 by 29 inches, near station 7, marked S 8 and 29 inches out of the ground.

The dimensions given by Friel in connection with running his lines correspond with the official map dimensions. Hancock's notes call for a blaze on a sycamore tree, and Friel testified that he found a sycamore stump and that its relation to the granite rock agrees with the call in the patent for course and distance.

Respondent contends that the stone found near point 7 was erroneously marked 8 instead of 7, and that appears to be a consistent contention.

Accepting the testimony of Friel as true and considering it in connection with the maps, plats, and field notes offered by respondent and properly admitted in evidence, clearly the showing made by respondent supports the findings of the court, and we adopt the conclusion stated to the trial court by counsel for appellants upon submitting a formal motion for nonsuit, to wit: "I think the plaintiff has certainly made out a prima facie case; no doubt about that."

[1] With respect to the showing made by appellants, it will serve no useful purpose to here recite in full the testimony of Roberts, the surveyor called by appellants and who testified that he surveyed the property in question, for the reason that the conclusion most favorable to appellants that can be reached from a consideration of his testimony and in fact from the entire showing made by appellants, is that it substantially conflicts with the showing made by respondent and brings the case squarely within the rule that findings made upon conflicting evidence are conclusive here, and that an appellate court must view all inferences which the trial court might reasonably have drawn as evidence tending to support a finding assailed. Ryder v. Bamberger, 172 Cal. 791, 158 P. 753; Hallidie v. First Federal Trust Co., 177 Cal. 600, 602, 171 P. 431; Hauger Motors Co. v. Reidy (Cal. App.) 262 P. 46; Southern California, etc., Co. v. Amalgamated, etc., Workers, 186 Cal. 604, 200 P. 1. The determination of the evidence by the trial court is conclusive on appeal unless it shall appear, as matter of law, that it is insufficient to support the findings. In re Herman, 183 Cal. 153, 162, 191 P. 934.

Appellants do not contend that as a matter of law we must from the record before us find that the findings are not supported by the evidence. Their contention is, using their own words, "that the findings are against the weight of the evidence"—in effect urging the contention that the trial court should have accepted their version and evidence rather than that of respondent. The appellate court will not attempt to weigh the evidence with a view either to justifying or discrediting the findings of the trial court. Greer v. Los Angeles Athletic Club, 84 Cal. App. 272, 258 P. 155. The evidence, although conflicting, supports the findings of the court and cannot therefore be disturbed, and a review of the rulings of the court on objections by defendants discloses no prejudicial error.

[2, 3] With respect to appellants' contention concerning the trial court's power to make the order correcting the judgment, it appears that the effect of the order was a substitution in the specific description of the property occupied by defendants of the words "Lot designated as 69.57 acres" for and instead of the words "Lot one." The law appears to be well settled that the trial court has inherent power to correct a clerical error in the findings or judgment entered by it in a case, not only within the six months' period mentioned in section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but also thereafter. The theory upon which such rule has been established is that the court has power to make the findings and judgment entered by it conform to the true judgment rendered in the case. In other words, the court may correct a clerical error in order to make the record speak the truth and show what was in fact determined by the court. Anderson v. Parker, 6 Cal. 197, 202; Bemmerly v. Woodward, 124 Cal. 568, 57 P. 561; Chicago Clock Co. v. Tobin, 123 Cal. 377, 55 P. 1007; Fay v. Stubenrauch, 141 Cal. 573, 75 P. 174; Erickson v. Stockton, etc., R. Co., 148 Cal. 206, 82 P. 961; City and County of San Francisco v. Brown, 153 Cal. 644, 96 P. 281.

In the present case the complaint correctly described the property; in the findings of fact and conclusions of law the court finds that plaintiff is the owner of the property referred to in the complaint, and in paragraph 3 finds that defendants have entered into possession of and fenced * * * property therein described, which clearly was intended to refer to a portion of the property mentioned in the complaint and in the earlier paragraph of the findings. The error is due solely to the insertion of the words "Lot one" before the section 28. In the portion of the property described by metes and bounds reference is made to the easterly line of the Rancho Azusa de Duarte, and to the fenced-in portion of the property occupied by defendants.

In the judgment it appears that the portion of the property sought to be described as occupied by defendants (in which the erroneous reference to "Lot one" appears) was a portion of the property described in earlier portions of the judgment. After correctly reciting in the judgment that plaintiff is the owner of the property described in the complaint, it specifically provided: "That plaintiff have possession of all of said land, including" the 6.01-acre parcel which is then specifically set out. The language in this portion of the judgment definitely shows upon its face that the words "Lot one" are an inadvertence, that the property occupied by defendants was a portion of section 28 and is within the property correctly described in the earlier portion of the judgment.

The order correcting the records was made upon motion by respondent supported by affidavit, and upon notice to counsel for appellants. The original judgment was entered September 28, 1926, and the motion was served and filed December 3, 1926. The correction of the error makes the record speak the truth and show what was in fact determined by the court and the order of the court was a proper one.

Appellants also urge and contend that their motion for a new trial should have been granted, and rely upon the grounds of: (1) Accident or surprise which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against; (2) newly discovered evidence; (3) insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision and the judgment; (4) that the decision or judgment is against law; (5) errors in law occurring at the trial.

The motion was supported by the record, files, papers, register of actions, reporter's transcript of the trial, and upon affidavits.

[4] The point most seriously urged by appellants is that the introduction in evidence of the maps prepared by Mr. Friel and the Lecouvreur map created a situation of accident or surprise such as to warrant the granting of a new trial. The affidavit of Henry F. Prince, counsel for respondent, filed in opposition to the motion, shows that defendants' counsel and surveyor were familiar with the maps and surveys which were introduced in evidence. No effort was made by appellants to secure a continuance and the rule is well established that a motion for a new trial on the ground of accident or surprise is properly denied where a continuance is not asked. Denvir v. Judson Freight Forwarding Co. (Cal. App.) 260 P. 846; Snodgrass v. Snodgrass, 81 Cal. App. 360, 253 P. 755; Doyle v. Sturla, 38 Cal. 456; Heath v. Scott, 65 Cal. 548, 4 P. 557; Bailey v. Richardson, 66 Cal. 416, 5 P. 910; Schellhous v. Ball, 29 Cal. 608; Turner v. Morrison, 11 Cal. 21; Delmas v. Martin, 39 Cal. 555; Ferrer v. Home Mutual Insurance Co., 47 Cal. 416.

[5-8] With respect to the claim of newly discovered evidence, the rule is stated in 20 California Jurisprudence, 77, as follows: "To entitle a party to a new trial on this ground it must appear: (1) That the evidence, and not merely its materiality, is newly discovered; (2) that the evidence is not cumulative merely; (3) that the evidence is such as to render a different result probable on a retrial; (4) that the party seeking relief could not with reasonable diligence have discovered and produced the evidence at the trial; (5) that these facts be shown by the best evidence of which the case admits."

The matters set forth in affidavits filed in support of the motion do not relate to evidence which was newly discovered, except such as is cumulative. The existence of the sycamore tree referred to in the affidavits was not disputed at the trial; the existence of the fence referred to in the affidavit of J. H. Carroll had been known to appellants for several years, as appears from the affidavit itself. There is no showing that appellants could not with reasonable diligence have produced the evidence at the trial, and in fact four of the affiants were witnesses and testified at the trial, and no continuance was sought for the purpose of obtaining such evidence.

Where a party fails to move for a continuance to enable him to obtain evidence which is not in his possession, the existence or materiality of which he first discovers during the progress of the trial, he is not entitled to a new trial on the ground that the evidence is newly discovered. Klockenbaum v. Pierson, 22 Cal. 160. Further, a new trial will not be granted where it does not appear from the affidavits that a different result would probably be reached upon a retrial.

Appellants have not suggested how the matters set forth in the affidavits could have produced a different result at the trial, and we are not able to say that they would render or produce a different result probable upon a retrial.

It is the established rule in this state that a new trial should be granted on the ground of newly discovered evidence only where the newly discovered evidence is such as to render a different result probable, and it has been said that the question as to the effect upon the case of newly discovered evidence is from its nature peculiarly one that is addressed to the discretion of the trial court. People v. Oxnam, 170 Cal. 211, 215, 149 P. 165; Fresno Estate Co. v. Fiske, 172 Cal. 583, 601, 157 P. 1127; Rauer's Law, etc., Co. v. Bradbury, 3 Cal. App. 256, 261, 84 P. 1007.

Unless the appellate court can plainly see that this discretion has been abused, that the showing made was of such a character as to make it manifest that it would or should result differently on a new trial in view of the newly discovered evidence, the order of the trial court refusing a new trial will not be disturbed. People v. Sing Yow, 145 Cal. 1, 78 P. 235. It is quite obvious that we are not warranted in disturbing the order of the court denying appellant's motion for a new trial.

The appeal is from the judgment, the order denying the motion for a new trial, and from the order correcting the judgment.

We find no cause for setting aside or disturbing the decision of the court below.

The judgment and the orders appealed from are affirmed.

BRICKER v. BANKS, City Clerk, et al.
(Civ. 3789.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 2, 1929.

1. Municipal corporations 🔑159(5)—Petition for recall should state in not over 200 words reasons for demand under charter (Stockton City Charter, art. 28, §§ 2, 5).

Under the Stockton City Charter, art. 28, §§ 2, 5 (St. 1923, p. 1394), providing that petition for recall of officers must contain statement of reasons for the demand, and that published call for election shall contain, in not more than 200 words, reasons for demanding recall, petition should state reasons for recall in not more than 200 words, since it does not appear upon what officer duty of selecting those 200 words falls.

2. Municipal corporations 🔑159(1)—Officer, in determining sufficiency of recall petition, is not required to disregard directory provision of charter requiring reasons for demanding recall in not over 200 words (Stockton City Charter, art. 28, §§ 2, 5).

Though a recall election for city officers in pursuance of a recall petition, stating reasons for recall in somewhat more than 200 words, would not be held invalid on mere ground that published call for election used too many words in stating reasons under Stockton City Charter, art. 28, §§ 2 and 5 (St. 1923, p. 1394), yet in the initial stages of proceeding for recall, in determining sufficiency of petition therefor, law does not enjoin on any officer, as a duty resulting from his office, the disregard of even a directory statute.

3. Municipal corporations 🔑159(1)—Statute relating to recall elections of city officers held to contemplate that each recall petition shall relate to but one officer (Stockton City Charter, art. 28).

Stockton City Charter, art. 28 (St. 1923, p. 1394), relating to recall of city officers, by using the singular number throughout, and providing that recall election may be initiated by a petition signed by qualified electors, equal in number to 20 per cent. of all votes cast at last preceding general municipal election, contemplates that each recall petition shall relate to only a single officer.

4. Municipal corporations 🔑79—Recall of officers in city having special charter providing for recall is not controlled by general laws inconsistent with charter (St. Ex. Sess. 1911, p. 128; Pol. Code, § 4021a).

The recall of officers in a city having a special charter, which provides for such a recall, is a municipal affair, and is not controlled by general laws, such as St. Ex. Sess. 1911, p. 128, or Pol. Code, § 4021a, inconsistent with charter provisions in relation thereto.

Application for writ of mandate by L. H. Bricker against A. L. Banks, as City Clerk of the City of Stockton, and others, to compel certification and filing of recall petitions and the calling of a special election to vote thereon. Application denied.

Stahlman & Bennett, of Stockton, for petitioner.

J. LeRoy Johnson, of Stockton, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. This is an original application for a writ of mandate to compel the city clerk of Stockton to certify and file two petitions, one for the recall of a city councilman and the other for the recall of four other city councilmen, and to compel the city council to call a special election to determine whether the councilmen named in the petitions shall be recalled. The city clerk refused to certify and file either petition, on the ground that in each of them the statement of the reasons for demanding the recall contained more than 200 words, and one of them on the further ground that it demanded the recall of four city councilmen.

[1, 2] The charter of the city of Stockton provides for the recall of elective officers thereof. Article 28, § 2, relating to recall of officers provides: "The petition must contain a statement of the reasons for the demand." Stats. 1923, p. 1394. Section 5 of the same article provides: "In the published call for the election there shall be printed in not more than two hundred words the reasons for demanding the recall of the officer as set forth in the recall petition." Each petition involved herein contains nearly 300 words in the statement of the reasons for the recall. It is apparent therefore that the reasons for demanding the recall, "as set forth in the recall petition," cannot "be printed in not more than two hundred words." If 200 words are to be selected from the statement contained in the petition, it does not appear upon what officer the duty of selecting those words falls. A writ of mandate issues "to compel the performance of an act which the law specially enjoins, as a duty resulting from an office, trust, or station." Code Civ. Proc. § 1085. The principle of law involved is analogous to that in Bennett v. Drullard, 27 Cal. App. 180, 184, 149 P. 368, where it was held that there was no duty specially enjoined upon the city council and city clerk, respondents therein, to segregate the invalid from the valid propositions contained in the initiative petition there under consideration and submit the valid parts to the voters. Counsel for the petitioner herein contends that the provision of the charter limiting to 200 words the reasons for demanding the recall of an officer is directory only. It may be conceded that a recall election held in pursuance of a petition stating the reasons for the recall in somewhat more than 200 words would not be held invalid on the mere ground that the published call for the election used too many words in stating such reasons, but in the initial stages of a proceeding for the recall of an officer, in determining the sufficiency of a petition therefor, the law certainly does not enjoin upon any officer, as a duty resulting from his office, the disregard of even a directory statute.

[3] Article 28 of the Stockton Charter, relating to the recall of officers, uses the singular number throughout. It provides that a recall election may be initiated by "a petition signed by qualified electors, equal in number to twenty per centum of the entire votes cast at the last preceding general municipal election." This provision contemplates, of course, that the petition shall represent a fair expression of the will of such electors. When a petition for the recall of several officers is presented to an elector for his signature, if he is of the opinion that some, but not all, of such officers ought to be recalled, he is afforded no means of expressing his will. He must either sign the petition demanding the recall of all, some of whom he believes are faithful, or refuse to sign it, although he may know that one or more of such officers are corrupt. It ought not to be held that the law puts a voter to such a choice in the absence of an express provision to that effect. In the language of Chief Justice Angellotti in Wilson v. Blake, 169 Cal. 449, 454, 147 P. 129, 131 (Ann. Cas. 1916D, 205) "the provisions of the charter specially applicable to the matter of recall, clearly show, in my opinion, that the recall proceeding contemplated is necessarily one against a single officer." In the discussion of a similiar petition in State ex rel. Brown v. Howell, 134 Tenn. 93, 183 S. W. 517, L. R. A. 1916D, 1097, it is said: "The impropriety and injustice of proceeding against a number of persons in one petition are manifest. It is subject to objection on the ground that a voter, when presented with the petition, must judge as to the question of whether he shall ask for a removal of a number of men or else submit to the retention in office of all. He is not given the clear-cut right to pass on each individual and exercise his own individual judgment as to that particular person. The fact that the petition stated the same cause of removal against all does not cure it of this objection. The voter ought to have the right to judge singly against each officer if he so desired. The legislature evidently so intended. The same right to exercise independent judgment on each separate official must exist in the initiatory step of removal, as effectively as that the voter may so exercise at the ballot box his right and duty to elect a new official or recall an old one. As well might it be said that the voter shall be compelled to vote for a number of men jointly and be denied the right to vote as to each one singly, as to say he may not judge of the propriety of holding in office each individual official who had been previously elected. The initial step in the removal is quite as important as the final vote in the recall. The official also should have the right to be judged alone by his fellow citizens as to his own merits or demerits. That the law-making body so intended in providing the recall we have no doubt. To construe it otherwise would be to attribute to the legislature the enactment of an unwise and intolerable law."

In McCush v. Pratt, 113 Wash. 7, 192 P. 964, it is said: "From the standpoint of the citizen, there is a good reason why separate petitions should be filed against each officer who is sought to be recalled. If the officers are covered jointly in a petition, the voter, when it is presented to him, must either sign to recall all or none. He may desire a recall of one and feel that it is his duty to so sign. He may believe that the charges against the other or others are not well founded and that the petition for their recall should not be signed. In order to exercise his judgment in one respect he must go counter to his conviction in another. * * * There is also a reason, so far as the officer sought to be recalled is concerned, why the petition should be separate and not joint. The official should have the right to be judged by his fellow citizens as to his own merits or demerits. He should not be recalled because of the shortcoming of some other officer."

[4] An act to provide for the recall of elective officers of incorporated cities and towns (Stats. 1911, Extra Sess., p. 128) provides: "One petition is sufficient to propose the removal and election of one or more elective officials." Section 2 of the act, however, provides: "This act is not intended to apply to those cities having a freeholders' charter, adopted under the provisions of section 8 of article XI of the constitution, and having in such charter provision for the recall of elective officials by the electors." The city of Stockton has such a charter with such a provision for the recall of officers. Section 4021a of the Political Code contains the same language as that quoted from the statute of 1911. That section is limited, however, to the recall of officers "of any county or of any township or supervisor district thereof." The recall of officers in a city having a special charter which provides for such a recall is a municipal affair and is not controlled by general laws inconsistent with the charter provisions in relation thereto. Schaefer v. Herman, 172 Cal. 338, 155 P. 1084. Of course, the question of recalling several officers may be submitted at the same election, where separate petitions are presented. In such an election the electors are not denied the right to vote for the recall of some of such officers and the retention in office of others.

There is some discussion in the briefs respecting the form of the ballot in a recall election under the charter. That question, however, is not properly before the court for decision and any discussion thereof or expression of opinion in relation thereto would serve no useful purpose.

The alternative writ of mandate issued herein is discharged, and the petition for a peremptory writ is denied.

PEOPLE v. ANDERSON. (Cr. 1753.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. March 29, 1929.

1. Criminal law 🔑814(3)—Instruction that defendant could not be convicted for grand theft of hay, unless value was shown to exceed $200, held properly refused, in absence of evidence of lesser value.

In prosecution for grand theft of hay, instruction that, unless by evidence jury was convinced beyond reasonable doubt that value of hay exceeded $200, even though all remaining elements of crime were established, defendant was entitled to an acquittal on charge of grand theft, and could be convicted of no greater offense than petty theft, held properly refused, where no evidence was introduced by either party which tended to prove that hay was worth less than $200.

2. Criminal law 🔑829(1)—Refusing instructions substantially covered by those given held not error.

In prosecution for grand theft, refusal of instructions as requested by defendant held not error, where they were substantially covered by instructions given to jury at request of prosecution.

3. Criminal law 🔑1169(2)—In grand theft prosecution, admitting in evidence bills of lading to establish shipment of hay stolen held not prejudicial, where material facts in bills were established by other competent evidence.

In prosecution for grand theft of hay, admission in evidence of bills of lading to establish shipment of hay held not prejudicial error, where it appeared by transcript of proceedings had on trial that at time bills were offered in evidence district attorney stipulated that specification of weights, or where weights came from, or various other things on bills of lading, are not matters of evidence, but that bills were introduced merely for purpose of showing bills of lading of cars as shipped by defendant, and where material facts contained in bills were established by other competent evidence.

4. Criminal law 🔑1001—Defendant cannot complain because court pronounced judgment after defendant's application for probation and then stayed execution pending hearing on application (Pen. Code, § 1203).

In prosecution for grand theft, where defendant's motion for new trial was denied and defendant made application for probation immediately thereafter, after which court pronounced judgment and at same time for purpose of hearing further evidence on application for probation stayed execution, defendant held in no position to complain, since trial court was vested with authority to pronounce judgment and stay execution pending investigation, under Pen. Code, § 1203.

5. Criminal law 🔑982—That application for probation was denied defendant affords no ground for reversal of conviction of grand theft.

In prosecution for grand theft, mere fact that in discretion of trial court leave to file an application for probation was denied defendant, convicted thereof, affords no ground for reversal of judgment.

6. Larceny 🔑65—Conviction for grand theft of hay held not error, where evidence was ample to show its market value exceeded $200 (Pen. Code, § 487).

Where evidence in prosecution for grand theft of hay was ample to show that its market value exceeded sum of $200, as provided by Pen. Code, § 487, conviction of defendant for grand theft should stand.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; A. C. Finney, Judge.

John M. Anderson was convicted of grand theft, and he appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 272 P. 755.

Ault & MacKinnon, of Calexico, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Frank Richards, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Elmer W. Heald, Dist. Atty., and Edward B. Patterson, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of El Centro, for the People.

HOUSER, J. Defendant appeals from a judgment of conviction of the crime of grand theft and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

Briefly, the facts relating to the transaction upon which the prosecution of defendant was predicated were that defendant falsely represented to a foreman of the owner of certain hay that defendant was acting as a purchasing agent for "F. F. Fuller & Co." and thereby induced the owner of the hay to deliver its possession unto defendant, and thereupon, acting for himself, defendant sold the hay to a third person and refused to pay the original owner therefor.

[1, 2] Appellant's first specification of error relates to the refusal of the trial court to give to the jury certain instructions requested by defendant, among which was one to the effect that, unless by the evidence the jury was convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that the market value of the hay in question exceeded the sum of $200, even though all the remaining elements of the crime were established, defendant was entitled to an acquittal on the charge of grand theft, and could be convicted of no greater offense than that of petty theft. In that connection, it satisfactorily appears that the only evidence in the case relating to the value of the hay showed that it was reasonably worth at least the sum of $250. Since no evidence was introduced by either party which tended to prove that the hay was worth less than $200, the proposed instruction had no application to the facts, and hence was properly refused. The point is illustrated in the case of People v. Comyns, 114 Cal. 107, 110, 45 P. 1034, 1035, where the court said: "* * * If, for example, but a single article had been stolen, a diamond, and the only evidence in the case was that the diamond greatly exceeded in value the sum of fifty dollars [as then provided by statute], some force would appear in the argument that the defendant, if the jury believed he stole that article, was guilty of the crime of grand larceny, and some reason would appear in justification of the court's refusal under such circumstances to submit to their consideration the lesser offense. * * *" Although not in identical terms in principle the other instructions which were requested by defendant and refused by the court were substantially covered by instructions given to the jury at the request of the prosecution. It follows that in that regard appellant has no cause for complaint.

[3] Appellant predicates prejudicial error in that, over the objection of defendant, the trial court admitted in evidence the bills of lading by which shipment of the hay was sought to be established. By the transcript of the proceedings had on the trial of the action it appears that at the time the bills of lading were offered in evidence the district attorney in charge of the prosecution stipulated that "the specification of the weights, or where the weights came from, or various other things on the bills of lading, are not matters of evidence, it is merely introduced for the purpose of showing the bills of lading of the cars as shipped to San Diego." Moreover, all of the material facts contained in the bills of lading were established by other competent evidence. It is therefore clear that no prejudicial error was committed by the trial court in receiving the bills of lading in evidence.

[4, 5] Appellant presents the further specification of error, "that the court erred in passing sentence on defendant on October 13, 1928, and in staying execution of sentence pending hearing on probation."

The facts in connection with the point urged by appellant are that on October 13, 1928, defendant made a motion for a new trial, which motion was denied. Immediately thereafter, and before judgment was pronounced, defendant made application for probation. The trial court then pronounced judgment and at the same time, for the purpose of hearing further evidence on the application for probation, stayed execution of the judgment until October 19, 1928. It is contended by appellant that the effect of the action by the trial court was either that defendant was thereby admitted to probation, or that he was denied the right to apply for probation. But even assuming the correctness of either of such conclusions, it is not inevitable that the judgment should be reversed or a new trial ordered. It would seem too clear for argument that following the conviction of defendant the trial court was vested with authority to pronounce judgment, and, if at the same time the trial court should see fit to stay the execution of the sentence for a few days pending an investigation with reference to the advisability of admitting defendant to probation by way of suspending "the execution of the sentence" (section 1203, Pen. Code), defendant is in no position to complain. The mere fact (assuming such to be the case) that in the discretion of the trial court leave to file an application for probation was denied defendant affords no ground for a reversal of the judgment. 8 Cal. Jur. 454.

[6] Reverting to the matter of the market value of the hay in question, appellant insists that it was not proved that it exceeded the sum of $200, and hence, under the terms of the statute (section 487, Pen. Code), that the conviction of defendant of the crime of grand theft should not be permitted to stand. However, an examination of the record herein satisfactorily shows that the evidence was ample to sustain the verdict in that regard.

Finally, appellant contends that the evidence fails to establish that the fraud committed by the defendant caused the owner of the hay to part with his property and that no actual fraud was committed. It would serve no useful purpose to herein set forth the evidence introduced on the trial of the action by which the owner of the hay was induced to deliver it into the possession of defendant and by reason of which act the owner of the hay was defrauded of its value. Suffice it to say that on consideration of the evidence this court is convinced that it sufficiently meets all legal requirements included within the specifications to which reference has been had.

The judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

WARD v. McKINSEY. (Civ. 6699.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 3, 1929.

1. Appeal and error 🔑920(3)—It must be presumed there was legal reason for dissolving temporary restraining order, in absence of contrary showing in record (Code Civ. Proc. § 953a)

It must be presumed on appeal that there was legal reason for dissolving temporary restraining order, in absence of anything to contrary in record, appeal being taken on judgment roll without bill of exceptions or transcript provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 953a, other than clerk's transcript of papers constituting judgment roll, since every presumption not inconsistent with record must be indulged in favor of judgment.

2. Appeal and error 🔑900—Rule of presumption favoring judgment supplies what is necessary to correctness, but nothing indicative of error.

Rule of presumption in favor of judgment on appeal supplies what is necessary to validity and correctness of action of trial court, but supplies nothing indicative of error.

3. Injunction 🔑164—Court granting preliminary injunction ex parte to continue until further order may dissolve it of its own motion, if satisfied order was improvidently made.

Court which has granted preliminary injunction ex parte, which by its own terms is to continue until further order of court, may dissolve or modify it of its own motion whenever it becomes satisfied that order was improvidently or erroneously made.

4. Appeal and error 🔑616(2)—Affidavit by plaintiff's attorney, if not authenticated, cannot be considered by reviewing court.

On appeal, affidavit made by attorney of record for plaintiff cannot be considered, where it was not authenticated in manner required by law.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hartley Shaw, Judge.

Suit by L. A. Ward against Ed. McKinsey. From an order dissolving a temporary restraining order, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

A. G. Reily, of Los Angeles, for appellant.
Nathan M. Dicker and Abe Richman, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LANDIS, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal by plaintiff from an order of the superior court dissolving a temporary restraining order.

Briefly stated, it is averred in the amended complaint "that defendant, Ed. McKinsey, as plaintiff in an action No. 104448 in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, was given judgment against plaintiff herein and one H. E. Putnam for the sum of $645.34 on December 1, 1922;" that "said H. E. Putnam as plaintiff in another action in said court, action No. 103337, was given judgment against said Ed. McKinsey for the sum of $1,200 on March 15, 1923; that it was agreed between all the parties to said actions that no execution was ever to be issued against either of the defendants in action No. 104448; and that the judgment in action No. 104448 would be offset by the judgment rendered in action No. 103337; that on October 1, 1925, said H. E. Putnam, for a valuable consideration, sold and transferred all his interest in said judgment in action No. 104448 to plaintiff who is now the owner thereof; that in violation of said agreement, said Ed. McKinsey caused an execution to be issued and levied upon certain real property belonging to plaintiff and after due proceeding had, the Sheriff of said Los Angeles County sold said property to said Ed. McKinsey and issued his certificate of sale thereof to said Ed. McKinsey and unless restrained by order of Court said Ed. McKinsey will sell said Certificate of Sale to an innocent purchaser or said Sheriff will after one year has elapsed execute a deed to said Ed. McKinsey; that said Ed. McKinsey is insolvent and if he is allowed to sell said Certificate of Sale, plaintiff will suffer irreparable loss and injury and that plaintiff has no other adequate remedy at law;" and prays for an order restraining defendant from taking any further proceedings in said action No. 104448 and from selling or in any way disposing of said certificate of sale, for an order requiring defendant to show cause why said restraining order should not continue during the pendency of this action, and for an order making such injunction perpetual, and that the said sheriff be restrained from issuing a deed on account of said sale, and that the cloud placed upon the property on account of said sale be removed.

The amended complaint was filed January 28, 1927, and on the same date an order to show cause and restraining order was made by the trial court and filed February 4, 1927. Said order directed both the said Ed. McKinsey and said sheriff to show cause on February 7, 1927, why an injunction should not be granted restraining them from the threatened acts complained of; further ordered that they be restrained in the meantime and forbidden to commit or permit to be committed any of said acts until the further order of the court; and further ordered that this order shall be effective upon plaintiff executing a good and sufficient bond in the sum of $1,000.

The next step in the proceeding is the making of the following order by the court, to wit:

"Good cause appearing therefor, it is hereby ordered that the temporary restraining order be and is hereby dissolved. Dated this 17th day of February, 1927.

"Hartley Shaw, Judge."

It is from this order that the appeal is prosecuted.

The contention of respondent as urged in his brief is that there is only one question of law involved in this appeal: That in handing down his decision the judge of the superior court found that the appellant had no judgment as alleged in his complaint and therefore was not entitled to offset one judgment against the other, which is substantially what he was attempting to do, and that the trial court's ruling on this one question decided all points raised by appellant's application for an injunction.

[1-4] The appeal was taken on the judgment roll without a bill of exceptions or the transcript, provided by section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure, other than the clerk's transcript of the papers constituting the judgment roll.

The record does not show what proceedings were had or that no evidence was adduced before the court at the time the order was made and entered. So far as disclosed by the record before us, the court may have made the order after and upon having become satisfied that the preliminary restraining order granted ex parte, which by its terms is to continue until the further order of the court was improvidently or erroneously made (Wolf v. Board of Supervisors of Santa Clara County, 150 Cal. 285, 89 P. 85); may have, as contended by respondent, become satisfied that plaintiff did not in fact have a judgment as claimed by respondent, or may have based its act upon one or more of the many other available grounds unnecessary to here enumerate. In any event, whatever may have been the true facts, they do not appear from the record, and are not before us.

The rule is well established that every intendment and presumption not contradicted by or inconsistent with the record on appeal must be indulged in favor of the judgment (Kovacevich v. Fischer Motor Body Co. [Cal. App.] 271 P. 351; Throop v. Weaver, 180 Cal. 335, 181 P. 55), and, notwithstanding that no reason appears for the entry of the order dissolving the temporary restraining order, it must be presumed that there was a legal one in the absence of anything to the contrary (Woods v. Diepenbrock, 141 Cal. 55, 74 P. 546).

The rule of presumption supplies what is necessary to the validity and the correctness of the action of the trial court, but supplies nothing indicative of error. Myers v. Canepa, 37 Cal. App. 556, 562, 174 P. 903, 906.

It seems, on principle and authority, that the court which has granted a preliminary injunction ex parte, which by its terms is to continue until further order of the court, may dissolve or modify it of its own motion wherever it becomes satisfied that the order was improvidently or erroneously made. Wolf v. Board of Supervisors of Santa Clara County, supra.

Lastly, with respect to the mention made in the briefs on file, of an affidavit made by A. G. Reily, attorney of record for plaintiff, suffice it to say that its use and consideration by us could not have changed the result of our conclusions reached herein, and in any event, it not having been authenticated in the manner required by law, we cannot consider it. Columbia Crude Oil Co. v. Deyo, 25 Cal. App. 268, 143 P. 243.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CASHIN, J.

KELLY et al. v. McDONALD et al.

(Civ. 3711.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 4, 1929.

1. Damages 🔑150—Complaint held not to raise issue of liquidated damages, where there was no allegation that it was impracticable or difficult to fix actual damages, or that any damages resulted (Civ. Code, §§ 1670, 1671).

Complaint in action for termination of lease and for liquidated damages for failure of defendants to commence sinking of oil well within time, which merely recited nonperformance of lease and that no part of liquidated damages had been paid, and prayed for judgment for sum of liquidated damages, held insufficient to raise issue of liquidated damages, under Civ. Code, §§ 1670, 1671, because of failure to allege that it was impracticable or difficult to fix actual damages, and for failure to state that any damages whatever resulted from breach of lease.

2. Damages 🔑150—Prayer for judgment in specified sum does not amount to allegation that damages were suffered, and mere use of term "liquidated damages" does not characterize detriment as such.

Prayer for judgment in specified sum is not equivalent to an allegation that damages were suffered as regards plaintiff's recovery of liquidated damages, and use of term "liquidated damages" does not necessarily characterize detriment as such.

3. Appeal and error 🔑832(17)—Plaintiffs could not complain on appeal that trial court failed to find that no damages resulted, where complaint failed to allege damges or facts entitling plaintiffs to liquidated damages (Civ. Code, §§ 1670, 1671).

Where there was no allegation in complaint as to damages and no recitation of facts entitling plaintiffs to liquidated damages under Civ. Code, §§ 1670, 1671, plaintiffs could not complain on appeal that court had failed to specifically find that no damages resulted from breach of lease for which suit was brought.

4. Appeal and error 🔑907(3)—Every presumption is in favor of judgment, where record is not presented on appeal.

Where record is not before reviewing court, every presumption is in favor of judgment.

5. Damages 🔑79(5)—Parties may agree for liquidated damages on failure to drill oil wells within prescribed time (Civ. Code, § 1671).

Failure to drill oil wells within prescribed time is proper subject authorizing agreement for payment of liquidated damages under Civ. Code, § 1671.

6. Damages 🔑157(3)—Liquidated damages may be recovered only upon pleading and proof of impracticability or difficulty of ascertaining actual damages (Civ. Code, §§ 1670, 1671).

Liquidated damages may be recovered under Civ. Code, §§ 1670, 1671, only upon pleading and proof that it would be impracticable or extremely difficult to estimate actual damages.

7. Damages 🔑163(3)—Amount of actual damages need not generally be shown to permit recovery of "liquidated damages," if some damage resulted.

Upon proof of breach of contract which specifies amount of liquidated damages, amount of actual damages need not generally be shown, provided some damage resulted; "liquidated damages" being amount of compensation to be paid in event of breach of contract, which is fixed and certain by agreement, and which may not ordinarily be modified or altered, when damages actually result from nonperformance of contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Liquidated Damages.]

8. Damages 🔑163(3)—Presumption that liquidated "damages" represents amount which will compensate for breach of contract may be rebutted by proof that no detriment resulted (Civ. Code, §§ 1670, 1671).

Presumption under Civ. Code, §§ 1670, 1671, that amount of liquidated damages agreed on is the figure which will adequately compensate for breach of contract may be rebutted by proof on defendant's part that no detriment whatever resulted from breach, term "damages" contemplating injury sustained or detriment resulting from breach of contract or nonperformance of duty.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Damage; Damages.]

9. Appeal and error 🔑907(3)—Reviewing court assumes that plaintiffs suffered no damages, where trial court refused judgment for liquidated damages and evidence was not presented on appeal (Civ. Code §§ 1670, 1671).

Where evidence in action for termination of lease and liquidated damages for failure of defendants to commence sinking of oil well within specified time was not before reviewing court, and trial court specifically found that plaintiffs were not entitled to judgment for any sum as liquidated damages, reviewing court must assume, under Civ. Code, §§ 1670, 1671, that record adequately showed plaintiffs were not injured and suffered no damage on account of the breach of the lease.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; Frank Lamberson, Judge.

Action by John J. Kelly and another against J. A. McDonald, individually and as trustee, and another. From the judgment, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

J. A. Chase, of Visalia, for appellants.

H. B. McClure, of Visalia, for respondents.

THOMPSON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiffs, terminating a lease of real property, but refusing to allow liquidated damages for failure on the part of the defendants to commence the sinking of an oil well within a specified time. The appeal is from the judgment roll alone. The evidence is not before this court.

May 24, 1926, the plaintiffs leased to the defendants 320 acres of land for the purpose of sinking oil wells thereon. The lease contained a provision to the effect that if the lessees failed to "begin actual operations toward the drilling of a well on or before the expiration of June 30, 1926, * * * he agrees to pay lessors as liquidated damages the sum of $1,000." The court found that the lessees failed to commence the drilling of the oil wells within the prescribed time, or at all; that they were, therefore, guilty of a breach of the agreement, and thereupon terminated the lease, but further found as a conclusion of law that the lessors were not entitled to any sum whatever as liquidated damages.

[1, 2] The pleadings fail to raise the issue of liquidated damages. It is true that the lease containing the provision respecting liquidated damages was made a part of the complaint as an exhibit thereto. There was, however, no allegation that it was "impracticable or extremely difficult to fix the actual damages," nor was there a statement that any damages whatever resulted from the breach of the lease. The complaint merely recites the nonperformance of the lease, and that no part of the liquidated damages had been paid. The prayer merely demands judgment "for the sum of $1,000 and interest * * * from June 30, 1926." A prayer for judgment in a specified sum is not equivalent to an allegation that damages were suffered. Bradbury v. Higginson, 162 Cal. 602, 610, 123 P. 797. The mere use of the term "liquidated damages" does not necessarily characterize the detriment as such. Indeed, the pleadings in the present case indicate that the appellants considered the stipulated amount as a penalty rather than liquidated damages, for they seem to have assumed the amount would automatically become due as a necessary presumption that damages would inevitably follow a breach of the contract. Manifestly, this is not true. Damages may or may not result from the breach of a contract. Hence the wisdom of the rule which requires the pleader to allege not only that he has been damaged, but also facts from which it may be ascertained that the claim presents a proper case for stipulated damages. It has therefore been held that a claim for stipulated damages must be accompanied by appropriate allegations showing that it is impracticable or extremely difficult under the circumstances to estimate actual damages. 8 Cal. Jur. 891, § 128; Dyer Bros., etc., v. Central Iron Works, 182 Cal. 588, 593, 189 P. 445.

[3, 4] Since the pleadings in the present case lack an allegation of damages and omit a recitation of facts entitling the appellants to liquidated damages, they may not complain because the court has failed to specifically find that no damages resulted from the breach of lease. These omissions in the pleadings may have been cured by the respective litigants having tried the case upon the theory that liquidated damages was a proper issue. However, since the record is not before this court, and every presumption is in favor of the judgment, we must assume just the contrary.

[5] It is established as the law of California that the failure to drill oil wells within a prescribed time is a proper subject authorizing an agreement for the payment of liquidated damages. Section 1671, Civ. Code; Escondido Oil & Dev. Co. v. Glaser, 144 Cal. 494, 77 P. 1040; Allen v. Narver, 178 Cal. 202, 172 P. 980; McComber v. Kellerman, 162 Cal. 749, 124 P. 431; Starr v. Lee (Cal. App.) 263 P. 376. There is no question in the present case that the parties intended to and did contract for the payment of $1,000 as liquidated damages for failure on the part of respondents to commence drilling the wells before June 30, 1926. The court has specifically so found, and also that the respondents defaulted in the performance of the covenant.

[6-8] The provisions of a contract attempting to specify in advance the amount of damages to be paid in the event of a breach thereof are void (section 1670, Civ. Code), except that when the circumstances which exist at the time of the execution of the contract make it impracticable or extremely difficult to estimate actual damages, the parties may agree to an amount which will be presumed to represent the damages sustained on account of a breach of the contract (section 1671, Civ. Code).

The decisions of California are in accord with the great weight of authority which holds that liquidated damages may be recovered only upon pleading and proof of facts which bring the contract within the provisions of the exception to the general rule as announced in section 1671 of the Civil Code. 8 Cal. Jur. 891, § 128; Hanlon Drydock Co. v. McNear, 70 Cal. App. 204, 215, 232 P. 1002; McInerney v. Mack, 34 Cal. App. 153, 156, 166 P. 867; Thomas v. Anthony, 30 Cal. App. 217, 220, 157 P. 823; Sunmaid Raisin Growers v. Mosesian (Cal. App.) 265 P. 828; Dyer Bros. G. W. Iron Works v. Central Iron Works, 182 Cal. 588, 593, 189 P. 445. The difficulty of ascertaining actual damages, so as to maintain a suit for breach of contract under the provisions of the exception to the general rule as it is expressed in section 1671, supra, is not presumed, but must be established by proof. Green v. Frahm, 176 Cal. 259, 262, 168 P. 114; Long Beach Dist. v. Dodge, 135 Cal. 401, 404, 67 P. 499. Upon proof of the breach of a contract which specifies an amount of liquidated damages, the general rule is that the amount of actual damages need not be shown. 17 C. J. 965, § 264. The term "liquidated damages" is used to indicate an amount of compensation to be paid in the event of a breach of contract, the sum of which is fixed and certain by agreement, and which may not ordinarily be modified or altered when damages actually result from nonperformance of the contract. United States v. U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. (C. C.) 151 F. 534, 536. While the term "liquidated damages" does imply that the parties have ascertained and agreed upon a sum which they assume will adequately compensate for a breach of the contract, this does not necessarily mean that the amount specified must be paid whether damages result from the breach or not. The very term of "damages" contemplates an injury sustained or detriment resulting from the breach of a contract or the nonperformance of a duty. As the court says in Starr v. Lee, supra: "We find authorities holding that recovery cannot be had when the evidence shows that no damage at all resulted from the breach." The exception to the general rule to the effect that the predetermined amount of damages for the breach of an obligation is void, as that exception is expressed in section 1671 of the Civil Code, does not purport to declare that an amount of liquidated damages agreed upon shall be conclusively presumed to be the exact figure which will adequately compensate for the breach of contract. This section merely asserts that it is "presumed to be the amount of damage sustained." This presumption may be rebutted by proof that no detriment whatever resulted from the breach. After the contract providing for stipulated damages, together with the breach thereof, has been established, the burden shifts to the defendant to show, if it be true, that no damage resulted.

[9] In the present case, since the evidence is not before this court and the trial court specifically found that "Plaintiffs are not entitled to judgment in the sum of $1,000 or any other sum as provided in said lease, as liquidated damages," this court must assume that the record adequately shows that the appellants were not injured and that they suffered no damage on account of the breach of lease.

The judgment is, therefore, affirmed.

ZURICH GENERAL ACCIDENT & LIABILITY INS. CO., Limited, v. STADELMAN et al. (Civ. 6620.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. March 23, 1929.

Rehearing Denied April 22, 1929. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court May 21, 1929.

1. Insurance 🔑435—Workman's compensation policy held not to cover a son of the employer.

Where workman's compensation policy provided that it should not apply to members of employer's family, except those named in declarations, with disclosures of amounts of wages, etc., a son of the employer was not covered by the terms of the policy.

2. Statutes 🔑184—Regard is to be had to general tenor and scope of legislative scheme in construing statute.

In construing a statute, regard is to be had not so much to exact phraseology as to general tenor and scope of the entire legislative scheme embodied in the act.

3. Insurance 🔑435—When workmen's compensation policy excluding members of employer's family did not comply with statute as to limitations of liability, the limitation was invalid (Workmen's Compensation Act, § 31(a).

In view of Workmen's Compensation Act, § 1 (St. 1917, p. 832), as to purpose of the statute, and section 6 (St. 1917, p. 834, as amended by St. 1919, p. 912, § 2), § 8, subd. a (St. 1917, p. 835), § 29, subd. a (St. 1917, p. 857, amended by St. 1919, p. 921, § 9, and St. 1925, p. 494), § 29, subd. c (as added by St. 1925, p. 495), and section 30, subds. b–d (St. 1917, pp. 858, 859), as to liability for injuries and insurance of such liability, section 31, subd. a (St. 1917, p. 860), requiring limitation of compensation payable by policy to be printed in boldface type and words "limited compensation policy" to be printed in such type at top of the policy, applied to policy excluding injuries to members of employer's family, and, when policy did not comply with such section, such limitation was invalid.

4. Insurance 🔑372—Provisions of statute cannot be waived by parties (Workmen's Compensation Act; Civ. Code, § 1667).

Provisions of Workmen's Compensation Act as to insurance contracts cannot be waived in whole or in part, directly or indirectly, by the parties concerned, in view of Civ. Code, § 1667.

5. Statutes 🔑219—Departmental construction has weight, but court must consider whether statute is ambiguous, length of time construction continued, and whether it was uniform.

If statute is ambiguous, contemporaneous construction by department having duty of administering it has weight, but court should consider length of time the departmental construction continued, whether usage was uniform, and whether statute was ambiguous.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Pete Stadelman, claimant, for compensation for injuries, opposed by Peter C. Stadelman, employer, and the Zurich General Accident & Liability Insurance Company, Limited, insurer. From an order of the Industrial Accident Commission, awarding compensation, the insurer brings certiorari. Affirmed.

Daniel W. Burbank, C. F. Laumeister, and Orrick, Palmer & Dahlquist, all of San Francisco, amici curiæ.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, J. This is a proceeding under title 1, part 3, Code of Civil Procedure. The case presents two questions regarding the construction of an insurance policy.

Peter C. Stadelman was the owner of a dairy farm located near Tulare in this state. At times there were working for him several laborers, including, among others, some of his sons, one of whom was Pete V. Stadelman. The latter was an adult of the age of 28 years. While so working for his father, Pete V. Stadelman was in an accident which resulted in some serious injuries to his right hand by reason of his hand being drawn into an ensilage cutter which he was operating. He applied for compensation. At the time of the injury the petitioner was the insurance carrier of Peter C. Stadelman. The respondents made an award against the carrier, and in this application the carrier insists that the award was beyond the jurisdiction of the respondents, because, as it claims, under the terms of the policy, it did not cover any of the members of the family of the employer. The respondents make two major replies. They contend that when properly construed the policy did cover the son. They also contend that, if by the terms of the policy the carrier attempted to exclude from its provisions the members of the employer's family, then and in that event the attempt was futile, because the carrier did not comply with the statute, subdivision a of section 31 of the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 860); that is, it did not indorse on the policy "limited compensation policy."

[1] In the body of the policy proper nothing is said whether members of the family of the insured are covered or not covered. A part of one of the riders is as follows: "(d) It is agreed upon the delivery and acceptance of this Policy, that if this Employer is an individual and has a family (meaning husband, wife, son, daughter, brother, sister or parent residing within this Employer's household), this Policy shall not apply to any member or members of such family except those named in the Declarations with disclosures of the annual amounts of wages, salaries, emoluments, or profits of each, but not less than $2,700.00 for each. The amounts so stated shall be considered the remuneration of such members of the family subject to audit as respects any increase thereof as in the Policy provided. The proper premium rate for the hazard to which such member of the family is exposed shall apply to this remuneration." It is clear the policy attempted to exclude the son.

It is next asserted by the respondents that the attempt was invalid. Skuey v. Bjerkan, 173 Minn. 354, 217 N. W. 358; Northwestern Casualty & Surety Co. v. Doud (Wis.) 221 N. W. 766; Buckhorn Coal & Lumber Co. v. Georgia Casualty Co., 222 Ky. 683, 2 S. W.(2d) 383; Aioss v. Sardo, 223 App. Div. 201, 227 N. Y. S. 708. Those cases were decided on statutes different in material respects, and are not controlling, but they are, nevertheless, helpful in certain respects. In this state there have been decisions construing covenants similar to the one in the policy which is before us, but in every instance the language of the policy was not challenged as being invalid. Pacific Coast C. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Com., 176 Cal. 24, 26, 27, 167 P. 539; Worswick Co. v. Industrial Acc. Com., 181 Cal. 550, 185 P. 953; Western Indemnity Co. v. Industrial Acc. Com., 43 Cal. App. 487, 185 P. 306; State Comp. Ins. Fund v. Industrial Acc. Com., 70 Cal. App. 650, 234 P. 116. The policy recited, among other things: "It is agreed that all of the provisions of each Workmen's Compensation Law covered hereby shall be and remain a part of this contract as fully and completely as if written herein, so far as they apply to compensation or other benefits for any personal injury or death covered by this policy, while this policy shall remain in force." By one of the riders, chapter 176 (Stats. of 1913, p. 279), chapter 607 (Stats. of 1915, p. 1079), chapter 586 (Stats. of 1917, p. 831), chapter 471 (Stats. of 1919, p. 910), with one exception not involved here, are all adopted.

Before we proceed further we call particular attention to the general nature of the instrument that is before us. In the first place it is an indemnity contract in which, in advance, the indemnity is not fixed and cannot be fixed; the employees are not named and generally cannot be named; the operations of the employer at the date the contract was executed can be and sometimes are named, but are subject to change, and if changed, the contract remains in force and the premium is altered to fit the change; no "compensation payable" is fixed or can be fixed until the happening of the event and then, and in that event, the factor "compensation payable" is measured and estimated by the rules enumerated in the statute; and no premium is fixed, or can be finally fixed, until the end of the term and after it has been ascertained what operations have in fact been performed and what employees have, in fact, been employed in performing them and the total wages paid to all. In the meantime, each of these factors is necessarily open, necessarily undetermined, and therefore not limited.

[2, 3] In construing a statute regard is to be had not so much to the exact phraseology in which the intent of the Legislature has been expressed, as to the general tenor and scope of the entire legislative scheme embodied in the act. Palache v. Pacific Ins. Co., 42 Cal. 418, 430; People ex rel. Attorney General v. Eichelroth, 78 Cal. 141, 143, 20 P. 364 (2 L. R. A. 770); Abbey v. Board of Directors, 58 Cal. App. 757, 762, 209 P. 709; Endlich's Interpretation of Statutes, § 76. The purpose in enacting the Workmen's Compensation Act is stated: "This act and each and every part thereof is * * * intended to make effective and apply to a complete system of workmen's compensation the provisions of section seventeen and one-half of article twenty and section twenty-one of article twenty of the constitution of the State of California. A complete system of workmen's compensation includes adequate provision for * * * any and all employees * * * to the extent of relieving from the consequences of any injury incurred by employees in the course of their employment, irrespective of the fault of any party; * * * full provision for adequate insurance coverage against the liability to pay or furnish compensation, full provision for regulating such insurance coverage in all its aspects * * * full provision for otherwise securing the payment of compensation, * * * all of which matters contained in this section are expressly declared to be the social public policy of this state, binding upon all departments of the state government." Section 1 (St. 1917, p. 832). That purpose, in brief, was, among other things, to impose a liability upon the employer for injuries sustained by his employees in the course of their employment, irrespective of the fault of any party, and to strengthen that liability by provisions for adequate insurance coverage against liability to pay such awards. Having ascertained the intent and purpose of the Legislature, the court will have regard to the carrying of that purpose into effect and will not be hampered by the particular phraseology used. "The language will be so interpreted, if possible, as to aid the design and intent of the legislature, and to effectuate the evident objects and purposes of the law." 23 Cal. Jur. 139. These rules are peculiarly applicable to the question before us by reason of a mandate contained in the statute which we are called upon to interpret. Section 69, subd. a, thereof (St. 1917, p. 877) provides: "Whenever this act, or any part or section thereof, is interpreted by a court, it shall be liberally construed by such court with the purpose of extending the benefits of the act for the protection of persons injured in the course of their employment."

The son, working for his father under a written contract of employment, was an employee under the terms of the Workmen's Compensation Act. Section 8, subd. a (St. 1917, p. 835). (That section, and all other sections hereinafter used, unless otherwise stated, will be understood as referring to the Workmen's Compensation Act.) The father, as employer, was liable to his son, as such employee, for injuries sustained in the course of his employment. Section 6 (St. 1917, p. 834, as amended by St. 1919, p. 912, § 2). But he was entitled to protect himself by insurance: "Every employer * * * shall secure the payment of compensation: * * * 1. By insuring and keeping insured against liability to pay compensation in one or more insurance carriers duly authorized to write compensation insurance in this state." Section 29, subd. a (St. 1917, p. 857, as amended by St. 1919, p. 921, § 9, and St. 1925, p. 494). The father was under the imperative duty to take out insurance on all employees, including his son, and if he failed to do so he committed a misdemeanor. Section 29, subd. c (as added by St. 1925, p. 495). Into each policy, it is provided (section 30, subd. c [St. 1917, p. 859]), there must be written: "Every contract * * * must contain a clause to the effect that the insurance carrier shall be directly and primarily liable to the employee * * * to pay the compensation, if any, for which the employer is liable; * * * and that the insurance carrier shall in all things be bound by and subject to the orders, findings, decisions or awards rendered against the employer under the provisions of this act." The employer, having insured himself under the act, the employee had the right to make his claim directly and solely against the carrier by filing a separate application, against the carrier, which may, in whole or in part, have insured against liability for such compensation. Section 30, subd. b (St. 1917, p. 858). When that policy was written it was "conclusively presumed to contain all the provisions required by this act." Section 30, subd. d (St. 1917, p. 859). In 1917 the Legislature added section 31, subd. a (St. 1917, p. 860): "If any insurance policy shall be issued covering liability for compensation, which policy shall contain any limitation as to the compensation payable, such limitation shall be printed in the body of such policy in bold-face type and in addition thereto the words 'limited compensation policy' shall be printed on the top of the policy in bold-face type not less than eighteen point in size. Failure to observe the foregoing requirement shall render such policy unlimited." Here there was no such indorsement.

Section 31, subd. a, supra, was not addressed to the factor of dollars and cents to be paid to an injured employee. This is so, because that subject was already covered by the provisions of the statute (section 9 [St. 1917, p. 836]) and the covenants in the policy adopting the provisions of the statute. It was not addressed to any other one of the several factors above named for the reasons hereinabove shown. However, by fundamental rules of statutory construction, some force and effect must be given to the provisions of every part of a statute, and, if possible, to every word contained therein. The excerpts quoted above show that the Legislature contemplated that the employer might have at one and the same time two or more policies written by two or more different carriers. That contingency may possibly arise with reference to an employer having several places of business and perhaps as many different occupations. When an employer obtains a contract of insurance such as we are considering, it is obvious that, if there is nothing in the contract to the contrary, the insurance runs in favor of every employee. That being the fact, it is patent that no employer would at one and the same time buy two contracts, one of which would duplicate the other. It follows that the only possible application of the provisions of section 31, subd. a, supra, is this: When, and only when, a policy purports to cover only a part of the employees whether they are limited by number, by occupation, by location, by kinship, or otherwise, then and in that event the policy is a limited policy within the meaning of that term as expressed in section 31a, supra.

The employee is not to be punished. The lawmaking power has taken from him all of his common-law rights and all of his previous statutory rights, and has given him new rights. He does not, and cannot, have a hand in writing the insurance. He is entitled to rest secure that the Legislature has protected him, and that those on whom the duty rests have so acted as to protect him and protect themselves; in other words, that the employer has taken out insurance and that the insurance company has collected or will collect the full amount of its premiums. Before the enactment of these statutes the injured employee could sue for any sum designated in his complaint. Now he can apply for the statutory allowance which is secured by insurance. Without any act on his part the Legislature has taken from the employee all of his rights, and has substituted a new one. Under all proper rules we are bound to assume that the new one is, and was intended to be, full and complete in every respect. It may be conceded that an employer may insure under one policy those employees who are of his kith and kin, and under another policy those who are not of his kith and kin. But he is bound to insure all or he commits a misdemeanor. By the same token a carrier can write such a policy as the insured may request; but, if it is limited in any respect, as hereinabove indicated, then, and in that event, it must be written as section 31a commands; and, if the carrier does not do so, the purported limitation is ineffective. This is no imposition on the carrier. It has full protection. It is in the business of collecting premiums. It collects an initial premium which is tentatively correct; but, under the terms of its policy, the premium is subject to correction when the final account is settled and the carrier can fully protect itself.

[4] We have shown above that by the express provisions of the statute the employer's insurance contracts cover, and must cover, each and all of his employees. That statute provides for, and commands the making of, certain contracts, and prohibits the making of certain other contracts. The provisions of such a statute cannot be waived, in whole or in part, directly or indirectly, by the parties concerned. Civ. Code, § 1667; 6 Cal. Jur. 101–106. If the employer could make a contract whereby he expressly excepted from the risk one employee, he could likewise except all of them. If he did so, then he would have no insurance. But that contingency is not only prohibited, it is penalized. Section 29, subd. c. Again, if the statute is so construed that, as to one employee, the employer has not and need not have insurance, then the right given to such employee by the Constitution and the statute is materially diminished, if not altogether taken away.

[5] The petitioner relies on the principle of departmental construction, and cites a ruling, made by the respondents on October 17, 1923, which it is contended was against the position now taken by respondents. The award in the instant case was made June 18, 1928. Neither before nor after October 17, 1923, was any other ruling made by the respondents on the subject. That was the only ruling. The time elapsing between that ruling and the ruling in the instant case was less than five years. If a statute is ambiguous, the contemporaneous construction by the department whose duty it is to administer the statute has weight. In applying that rule, the court should consider (1) the length of time the departmental construction has continued (Riley v. Thompson, 193 Cal. 773, 778, 227 P. 772; 23 Cal. Jur. 776; State ex rel. Fishback v. Globe Casket & Undertaking Co., 82 Wash. 124, 143 P. 878, L. R. A. 1915B, 976, 980); (2) whether the usage has been uniform (O'Donnell v. Glenn, 9 Mont. 452, 467, 23 P. 1018 (8 L. R. A. 629); and (3) whether the statute is ambiguous (Fairbank v. U. S., 181 U. S. 283, 311, 21 S. Ct. 648 [45 L. Ed. 862]). Under the facts we think the principle is not helpful in this case.

Finally, it is said the construction claimed by respondents will require the rewriting of 150,000 policies. That result does not follow; but, on the other hand, the policy charges between employers and carriers will be increased or decreased as the facts may appear from the examinations made by the examiners of the carriers as provided in the policies.

The award is affirmed.

Rehearing Denied April 22, 1929. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court May 21, 1929.

1. Insurance ⟹437—Workmen's compensation policy held at most ambiguous and to be construed as covering persons illegally employed; "employee" (Workmen's Compensation Act, § 8).

In view of Workmen's Compensation Act, § 8 (St. 1917, p. 835), defining "employee" as including persons lawfully or unlawfully employed, policy purporting to cover only employees legally employed, but in another paragraph, and in a rider making the compensation law part thereof, was at most ambiguous and to be construed against insurer as covering those illegally employed.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Employé.]

2. Insurance ⟹437—Limitation of workman's compensation policy to employees legally employed was futile when statute as to limited policies was not complied with (Workmen's Compensation Act, § 31(a).

Limitation of liability under workmen's compensation policy to those legally employed was futile, where policy did not comply with Workmen's Compensation Act, § 31, subd. a (St. 1917, p. 860), as to form of policy containing any limitation as to compensation payable.

liam Mazzina, his guardian ad litem, for compensation for injuries, opposed by Alfred Michelotti, employer, and the Maryland Casualty Company, insurer. From an order of the Industrial Accident Commission, awarding compensation, the insurer brings certiorari. Affirmed.

R. P. Wisecarver and W. G. McKeen, both of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Daniel W. Burbank and C. F. Laumeister, both of San Francisco, amici curiæ.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, J. This is a proceeding under title 1, part 3, Code of Civil Procedure. The case presents two questions regarding the construction of an insurance policy.

[1] Tony Mazzina, a lad 12 years of age, was employed by Alfred Michelotti in his butcher shop at Los Banos. While so engaged Tony suffered an injury which was the subject-matter of the award complained of. At the time the injury occurred Tony was illegally employed, and the work to which he was assigned was illegal. At the time the injury was incurred the petitioner was the insurance carrier of Tony's employer. On an application made to it in due time the Industrial Accident Commission made an award in favor of the employee, and the petitioner has applied for a writ of review for the purpose of having it declared that under the terms of its policy no liability attached to the petitioner. In this behalf it calls attention to paragraph VII of the policy, which, among other things, provides: "This policy shall cover such injuries, including death resulting therefrom, sustained by any employee or employees legally employed by this employer * * *." The respondents make two major replies. They contend that, if by the word "legally" the carrier attempted to limit its liability, the attempt was futile, because the carrier did not comply with the provisions of subdivision a of section 31 of the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 860). The second reply is that, taking up the policy by its four corners, it appears that the carrier did not attempt to limit its liability, but by the terms of its policy became liable for injuries to employees whether legally or illegally employed. That by the terms of the policy the carrier became responsible for injuries to employees legally employed is conceded by both parties, as, indeed, it must be by virtue of the language hereinabove quoted from paragraph VII of the policy. It remains to be ascertained whether the carrier, by the terms of its policy, assumed any liability for injuries to employees "unlawfully" employed.

The policy was executed on the 4th day of March, 1927. The first paragraph, among other things, provides: "* * * It is agreed that all of the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Law cited and described in endorsements attached to this policy shall be and remain a part of this contract as fully and completely as though written herein, so far as they apply to compensation while this policy shall remain in force * * *." The policy is partly printed and partly in typewriting. Attached to it are two riders. The first is dated March 4th, but no year. The second is dated March 4, 1927, and is attached by metallic fasteners on top of the first rider. The first paragraph of the second rider is as follows: "It is hereby understood and agreed that the California Workmen's Compensation Law, and all additions thereto and amendments thereof, is a workmen's compensation law within the meaning of insurance clause one of the policy to which this endorsement is attached." Section 8 of the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 835) provides: "Sec. 8 (a) The term 'employee' as used in sections six to thirty-one, inclusive, of this act shall be construed to mean: Every person in the service of an employer * * * whether lawfully or unlawfully employed. * * *" Conceding solely for the purpose of this case that there is any conflict between paragraph VII, which is limited to employees legally employed, and paragraph I of the rider, together with that part of section 8 of the statute read in connection with paragraph I of the second rider, then and in that event it is the settled law of this state that the provisions of paragraph VII must give way in favor of the provisions of the rider. Royal Ins. Co. v. Caledonian Ins. Co., 182 Cal. 220, 223, 187 P. 748. It follows that under terms of the policy Tony Mazzina was covered. The utmost that can be claimed is that the policy, together with its riders and the statutes incorporated by reference, is slightly ambiguous as to liability for injuries sustained by one illegally employed. However, the ambiguity, if any, will be resolved in favor of the insured and against the carrier. 14 Cal. Jur. p. 445. We think it is quite clear that the respondents did not exceed their jurisdiction in construing the policy as covering those illegally employed.

[2] The terms of the policy are such that it has not been necessary for us to take up the first contention made by the respondents. If it were necessary to discuss the contention, we should hold, for the reason stated in Zurich General Accident & Liability Insurance Co., Ltd., v. Stadelman et al. (Cal. App. No. 6620) 276 P. 407, this day filed, that the contention is well founded.

The award is affirmed.

Proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act by William Jones, claimant, for compensation for injuries, opposed by the American Mercury Corporation, employer, and the Ocean Accident & Guarantee Corporation, Limited, insurer. From an order of the Industrial Accident Commission awarding compensation, the insurer brings certiorari. Affirmed.

R. P. Wisecarver and Redman & Alexander, all of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Daniel W. Burbank, O. F. Laumeister, and Orrick, Palmer & Dahlquist, all of San Francisco, amici curiæ.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, J. This is a proceeding under title 1, part 3, Code of Civil Procedure. The case presents two questions regarding the construction of an insurance policy. The American Mercury Corporation is a corporation engaged in operating mines. Prior to October, 1927, it had a contract on a mining property located in Kern county. By the terms of that contract it was to install certain machinery and thereafter operate the mine. It is clear that the machinery had not been installed and that the mine had not been operated, but some surface work was done. In the month of October, William Jones, with some others, was engaged in removing the surface covering so as to expose the vein. At other times the employees were engaged in making alterations and repairs to some roads appertaining to the mine. While so engaged William Jones was in an accident and suffered a broken leg. On that date the petitioner was the insurance carrier of American Mercury Corporation. On an application made to it, in due time the Industrial Accident Commission made an award in favor of William Jones, and the petitioner has applied for a writ of review for the purpose of having it declared that under the terms of its policy no liability attached to the petitioner. Before proceeding further it should be stated that American Mercury Corporation was also operating the Oceanic mine three miles from Cambria, San Luis Obispo county, Cal. The petitioner calls to our attention certain passages contained in the policy, and thereupon it contends that it insured the employees of American Mercury Corporation who might be in its service at Oceanic mine in San Luis Obispo county, but did not insure employees working for that corporation in any other county. The respondents make two major replies. They contend that, if the policy attempted, by any provision therein contained, to limit the liability of the carrier to employees serving the employer at Oceanic mine, then and in that event the limitation was ineffective, because the carrier did not comply with the provisions of subdivision (a) of section 31 of the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 860). The second reply is that, taking up the policy by its four corners, it appears that the carrier did not attempt to limit its liability, but by the terms of its policy the carrier became liable for injuries to employees working at Oceanic mine, and also to those working at the mine in Kern county. We will discuss the second contention first.

[1] The policy consists of one sheet which when folded makes four pages of the size of foolscap. To the policy there are attached six separate riders. The first two pages purport to be the covenants and conditions on the part of the carrier. The third page purports to be the covenants on the part of the insured. The covenants of the carrier include, among other things, the following (all italics below are ours):

"1. (a) To pay promptly to any person entitled thereto, under the Workmen's Compensation Law and in the manner therein provided the entire amount of any sum due. * * *

"(d) The obligations of paragraph 1 (a) foregoing are hereby declared to be the direct obligations and promises of the company to any injured employee covered hereby. * * *

"1. (b) To indemnify this employer against loss by reason of the liability imposed upon him by law for damages on account of such injuries to such of said employees as are legally employed wherever such injuries may be sustained within the territorial limits of the United States of America or the Dominion of Canada. * * *

"5. This agreement shall apply to such injuries sustained by any person or persons employed by this employer and entire remuneration shall be included in the total actual remuneration for which provision is hereinafter made, upon which remuneration the premium for this policy is to be computed and adjusted. * * *

"6. This agreement shall apply to such injuries so sustained by reason of the business operations described in said declarations which, for the purpose of this insurance, shall include all operations necessary, incident or appurtenant thereto, or connected therewith, whether such operations are conducted at the work places defined and described in said declarations or elsewhere in connection with, or in relation to, such work places.

"7. This agreement shall apply only to such injuries sustained by reason of accidents occurring during the policy period limited and defined as such in Item 2 of said declarations.

"This agreement is subject to the following conditions:

"A. The premium is based upon the entire remuneration earned, during the policy period, by all employees of this employer engaged in the business operations described in said declarations. * * * If any operations as above defined are undertaken by this employer but are not described or rated in said declarations, this employer agrees to pay the premium thereon at the time of the final adjustment of the premium in accordance with condition (C) hereof at the rates and in compliance with the rules of the manual of rates in use by the company upon the date of issue of this policy.

"C. The company shall be permitted at all reasonable times during the policy period, to inspect the plants, works, machinery and appliances covered by this policy, and to examine this employer's books at any time during the policy period, and any extension thereof, and within one year after its final expiration, so far as they relate to the remuneration earned by any employees of this employer while this policy was in force."

The rider, "Monthly Premium Adjustment Endorsement" provides: "It is hereby understood and agreed that on or before the 10th day of each calendar month, * * * the assured shall state to the company in writing the amount of remuneration earned by employees during the preceding calendar month, or such part thereof as is within the policy period and pay to the company the entire premium earned upon such remuneration at the rate or rates named in the policy.

"Declarations

"Item 1. Name of this employer American Mercury Corporation Post Office Address Crocker Building, San Francisco, California.

"Item 2. The period during which the policy shall remain in force, unless cancelled as in the policy provided, shall be from October 26, 1927, at 4 p. m. to October 25, 1928, at 12:01 a. m., standard time as to each of said dates at the place where any operation covered hereby is conducted, as respects that operation, or at the place where any injury covered hereby is sustained as respects that injury.

"Item 3. Location of * * * work places of this employer * * * Oceanic Mine, three miles from Cambria, San Luis Obispo, California. All business operations including the operative management and superintendence thereof, conducted at or from the locations and premises defined above as declared in each instance by a disclosure of estimated remuneration of employees under such of the following divisions as are undertaken by this employer are divided into

"(1) All industrial operations upon the premises.

"(2) All office forces.

"(3) Operations not on the premises."

(1) Here follows specific enumeration under general heads of Mining, Smelting, Road Construction, and Commissary Work, with the rate set opposite each item.

(2) Clerical office employees (no statement regarding place of service).

(3) (a) Outside salesmen, collectors, and messengers wherever engaged.

(b) Drivers and driver's helpers wherever engaged, chauffeurs and chauffeur's helpers wherever engaged.

"Item 4. * * * The company shall be permitted to examine the books of this employer at any time during the policy period and any extension thereof and within one year after its final termination so far as they relate to the remuneration earned by any employee of this employer while the policy was in force.

"Item 5. This employer is conducting no other business operations at this or any other location not herein disclosed—except as herein stated: There may be but not covered hereunder."

That the liability of the company is limited to accidents happening within one year from 4 p. m., October 26, 1927, to 12:01 a. m., October 26, 1928, is tersely and clearly stated in two short paragraphs.

That every single employee on the pay rolls of the employer must be reported and a premium on his wages must be paid to the carrier is equally clear.

That industrial operations other than those mentioned in the policy may be conducted at Cambria, whether extra hazardous or otherwise, is expressly authorized by the policy, and the only condition is that premiums on the additional pay roll must be paid.

That injuries suffered at Cambria are not the sole injuries falling within the terms of the policy cannot be gainsaid. The clerical force was at least in part employed at San Francisco and in part at Los Angeles—nevertheless the clerical force is expressly covered. Item 3, subd. 2. Traveling employees wherever engaged are expressly covered by the policy. Item 3, subd. 3. It is not claimed that there is any language contained in the policy which expressly provides that an employee working in Kern county is not included in the terms of the policy. The sole contention in this behalf is the language contained in item 5: "This employer is conducting no other business operations at this or any other location not herein disclosed—except as herein stated: 'There may be, but not covered hereunder' ". The latter part of that statement is typewritten. It is patently the language of the carrier and not the language of the insured. Whatever may be its meaning, it is not of such force as to warrant us in saying that the policy did not cover the claim of William Jones.

[2] The terms of the policy are such that it has not been necessary for us to take up the first contention made by the respondents. If it were necessary to discuss the contention, we should hold, for the reasons stated in Zurich General Accident & Liability Insurance Co., Ltd., v. Stadelman et al., No. 6620 (Cal. App.) 276 P. 407, this day filed, that the contention is well founded.

The award is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; J. C. Needham, Judge.

Action by D. D. Matteson and others against Alex. D. McCarty and others. From an adverse judgment, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Joseph C. Meyerstein, of San Francisco, and Brown & Chamberlain, of Modesto, for appellants.

A. J. Carlson, of Modesto, for respondents.

MONCUR, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment declaring that respondents are the owners and entitled to the possession of certain real property described in the complaint herein. There is no substantial controversy as to the facts.

The action was commenced on the 3d day of June, 1926. It appears that on and prior to the 20th day of July, 1917, Lewis W. Mustoe and Polly J. Mustoe were the owners of certain described real property in the county of Stanislaus, state of California, bounded and particularly described as follows, to wit:

"Beginning at a point bearing north 11.94 chains from the northeast corner of section six (6) in township four (4) south, range eleven (11) east Mount Diablo base and meridian; running thence west 20.00 chains to the north and south quarter quarter line, thence south 20.00 chains; thence east 1.36 chains, thence south 36.84 chains to the northerly bank of the Tuolumne River; thence following the northerly bank of the Tuolumne River up stream north 82-¼° east 0.60 chains; north 67° east 7.57 chains; north 56-¾° east 13.26 chains to section line between sections 5 and six; thence north on section line 46.40 chains to the point of beginning, containing ninety-nine and 90/100 (99.90/100) acres. * * *"

On said day said Lewis W. Mustoe and Polly J. Mustoe executed a conveyance to Charles Lampley, appellants' predecessor in interest, describing the lands hereinbefore specifically described, excepting particularly as follows:

"* * * Thence south 31.91 chains to a point on the U. S. meander line; thence north 69 degrees 30 minutes east along said U. S. meander line a distance of 19.903 chains to the U. S. meander corner on the section line between sections 5 and 6, township 4 south, * * * and containing 92.99 acres of land all north of the U. S. meander line."

This conveyance was recorded July 23, 1917, in the office of the recorder of Stanislaus county. On July 25, 1917, said Lewis W. Mustoe and Polly J. Mustoe executed a conveyance to G. E. Brinkerhoff, respondents' predecessor in interest; the description therein material to this decision, being as follows:

"Commencing at the United States meander corner on the section line between sections 5 and 6 in township 4 south range 11 east, said meander corner being 33.00 chains south of the northeast corner of said section 6; thence south 69° 30′ west along the U. S. meander line a distance of 19.903 chains to the west boundary of the land now or formerly owned by Lewis W. Mustoe; thence south a distance of 4.93 chains; thence north 82¼° east 0.60 chains; thence north 67° 00′ east 7.57 chains; thence north 56-¾° east 13.26 chains to a point on the section line between said sections 5 and 6; thence north 1.46 chains to the United States meander corner, or the point of beginning, containing 7.067 acres of land all south of the United States meander line."

This conveyance was recorded on the 27th day of July, 1917, in said recorder's office. As shown by the evidence, the following is the course and distance of the United States meander line running through sections 5 and 6 of said township:

"On the north side beginning at meander post on north boundary of township on right bank; thence downstream in section 5, south 37½° west, 16.50 chains; south 51¼° west, 17.00 chains; south 41° west, 12.20 chains. In section 6, south 69½° west, 33.60 chains; south 86½° west, 19.00 chains; north 79-¾° west, 32.00 chains."

A recent survey of the lands in controversy shows that the portion south of the United States meander line consists of 7.078 acres and the portion north of said meander line contains 92.984 acres. The property consisting of about 7.65 acres lying between the Tuolumne river and the United States meander line is the parcel the Mustoes attempted to convey to Brinkerhoff, and which plaintiffs through mesne conveyances now claim.

Defendant Alex. D. McCarty acquired the land in controversy February 23, 1922, and has been in possession of the land to the bank of the Tuolumne river since that time.

It is the contention of the appellants that the description "to and along the U. S. meander line," contained in the deed from the Mustoes to Lampley, conveyed to Lampley and his successors in interest (appellants) all the land above and below the said meander line and to the Tuolumne river, and in support of this contention urge that a "meander line" represents "the border line of [a] stream, and shows, to a demonstration, that the water course" which it meanders, "and not the meander line, as actually run on the land, is the boundary." St. Paul & Pac. R. Co. v. Schurmeier, 7 Wall. 272, 19 L. Ed. 74; Hardin v. Jordan, 140 U. S. 384, 11 S. Ct. 808, 838, 35 L. Ed. 428; Curtis v. Upton, 175 Cal. 322, 165 P. 935; Foss v. Johnstone, 158 Cal. 119, 110 P. 294; Hendricks v. Feather River Canal, 138 Cal. 423, 71 P. 496; Kirby v. Potter, 138 Cal. 686, 72 P. 338.

In the case of St. Paul & Pac. R. Co. v. Schurmeier, supra, it is said: "Meander lines are run in surveying fractional portions of the public lands bordering upon navigable rivers, not as boundaries of the tract, but for the purpose of defining the sinuosities of the banks of the stream, and as the means of ascertaining the quantity of the land in the fraction subject to sale, and which is to be paid for by the purchaser."

It is further claimed by appellants that, the land acquired by Lampley having a natural boundary on the south, to wit, the Tuolumne river, the natural boundary is all controlling, and the other descriptions of courses, and distances and acreage must yield to the natural boundary. Hostetter v. Los Angeles Terminal R. Co., 108 Cal. 42, 41 P. 330; Franklin v. Dorland, 28 Cal. 175, 87 Am. Dec. 111; De Arguello v. Greer, 26 Cal. 615; Hunt v. Barker, 27 Cal. App. 776, 151 P. 165.

However, it is not always true that the meander line does not furnish a description as to the true boundary intended. "In the surveys of the public lands of the United States, the meander lines are generally considered as following the windings of streams; but the question whether they do so or not is a question of fact to be determined by evidence aliunde." Bissell v. Fletcher, 19 Neb. 725, 28 N. W. 303.

Observing particularly in this case the apparent intention contained in the description of the lands as it had been conveyed to the Mustoes, which particular description reads, "thence south 36.84 chains to the northerly bank of the Tuolumne River," with the description in the deed from the Mustoes to Lampley, wherein the call reads as follows: "Thence south 31.91 chains to a point on the U. S. meander line; thence north 69 degrees 30 minutes east along said U. S. meander line a distance of 19.903 chains to the U. S. meander corner," etc., and the further description, "containing 92.99 acres of land all north of the U. S. meander line"—it must be apparent that there was a definite intention in making this change not to convey the portion of the land south of the meander line, and between said meander line and the Tuolumne river. In this connection it seems clear that the grantor, in so designating the questioned boundary and in changing the acreage from substantially 99 acres to 92 acres, manifested a definite intention to use the meander line as the boundary for the tract conveyed.

In the case of Hostetter v. L. A. T. R. Co., 108 Cal. 38, 42, 41 P. 330, 331, it is said: "While a statement in a deed or upon a map as to the acreage of a certain tract of land is not at all conclusive or controlling as to the quantum of land in the tract; and while, as a matter of description, it must go down when coming in conflict with metes, bounds, and monuments, yet cases are presented where a statement of acreage renders most valuable aid in fixing boundary lines. If the description of tracts of land by monuments, distances, or otherwise is vague and indefinite by reason of conflicting lines, or by the omission of a line, or from any other cause, then a statement of the acreage sheds valuable light upon the issue, and often serves as the acting, moving cause for the conclusion reached. Such was the result in Hicks v. Coleman, 25 Cal. 142, 85 Am. Dec. 103; and in Hall v. Shotwell, 66 Cal. 381 [5 P. 683], it is said: 'Now, it is well settled, where there is not a sufficient certainty and demonstration of the land granted expressed in the other terms of its description, the number of acres is an essential part of the description.' "

We hold that under the conveyance of July 20, 1917, by Lewis W. Mustoe and Polly J. Mustoe to Charles Lampley and the mesne conveyances whereby title was vested in the appellants, the tract of land south of the said meander line was not intended to be and was not conveyed, and that by the conveyance by the Mustoes to Brinkerhoff and the subsequent conveyances, plaintiffs herein were vested with title to the said 7-acre tract.

We are satisfied that the judgment is correct, and it is therefore affirmed.

(Civ. 6330.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. April 2, 1929.

As Modified on Rehearing May 18, 1929. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court July 15, 1929.

1. Appeal and error 🔑110—Order denying motion for new trial in civil proceedings is not appealable.

No appeal can be taken from order denying motion for new trial in civil proceedings.

2. Mandamus 🔑141—Mandamus may issue from any court, except justice's or police court, to compel performance by tribunal, corporation, board, or person of official act.

Writ of mandamus may be issued by any court, except justice's or police court, to inferior tribunal, corporation, board, or person to compel performance of act which is specially enjoined by law as an official duty.

3. Mandamus 🔑141—Superior Court held to have jurisdiction of proceeding against city board of trustees for mandamus to require them to call special election on petition for consolidation with another city (St. 1913, p. 577, § 2).

Superior Court held to have jurisdiction of proceeding against board of trustees of city to require board to call special election under Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 5166 (St. 1913, p. 577) § 2, where petition was presented by qualified electors of city for consolidation thereof with larger municipality.

4. Municipal corporations 🔑33(3)—Persons registering on day of signing petition for consolidation of municipalities, but several hours after signing, held disqualified. "Registered, qualified electors" (St. 1913, p. 577, § 2; Pol. Code, § 1083a as amended in 1915).

Persons who had not registered at time of signing petition for consolidation of city with another larger city under Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 5166 (St. 1913, p. 577) § 2, were not "registered, qualified electors" at time of affixing their signatures under Pol. Code, § 1083a, as amended in 1915, though such persons registered on the same day several hours after signing the petition.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Third Series, Registered Qualified Elector.]

5. Mandamus 🔑168(3)—Evidence that petitioners at time of signing petition for consolidation of municipalities were not registered held admissible, though registry disclosed that registration occurred on same day as signing (St. 1913, p. 577, § 2; Pol. Code, § 1083a as amended in 1915).

Evidence that persons signing petition for consolidation of municipalities under Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 5166 (St. 1913, p. 577) § 2, were not in fact registered at the time, as required by Pol. Code, § 1083a as amended in 1915, but registered several hours later in same day, held admissible, though registry disclosed that date of signing and registration was the same, inasmuch as clerk and registrar are ministerial officers who are not empowered to receive or to weigh evidence.

Thompson, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Stanley Murray, Judge.

Proceeding by Henry L. Fresholtz and others for writ of mandamus to be directed to the Board of Trustees of the City of Culver City and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, and an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Appeal from order denying new trial dismissed, judgment reversed and cause remanded with directions.

John J. Dillon, of Culver City, and M. Tellefson, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

L. V. Meloy, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CRAIG, J. On May 14, 1928, a petition was filed with the clerk of the board of trustees of the city of Culver City, appellants herein, asking that said city be consolidated with the city of Los Angeles. No election was called; certain of the petitioners, respondents above named, filed a complaint in the superior court of Los Angeles county, praying a writ of mandamus "compelling the [trustees] to cause notices to be given of such election by publication of a notice thereof in a newspaper of general circulation, in accordance with subdivision 2 of said Municipal Annexation Act of 1913, and its amendments thereto, or to show cause why they should not do so." Appellants answered, alleging as reasons for their inaction that the petition did not contain sufficient names of qualified electors to constitute a good and sufficient petition to require the calling of an election. As affirmative defenses, it was further alleged that certain of the signatures were obtained by fraud, and that the petition did not contain a sufficient number of names to warrant the calling of an election if the alleged illegal signatures be eliminated.

The trial court found from evidence adduced upon the trial that on said date there were 2,175 qualified electors in the city of Culver City, and that the petition had been signed by 566 qualified electors. As to the special defenses, it found that the petition was valid, and that the allegations of each of said special defenses were untrue. Conclusions of law and judgment were accordingly rendered in favor of the respondents, and directing that the trustees call a special election and submit to the electors the question as to whether or not Culver City should be consolidated with the city of Los Angeles. A motion for new trial was presented, which was denied and the respondents below appeal from the judgment and from the ruling upon such motion.

[1] There is no appeal from an order denying a motion for new trial in civil proceedings, and the defendants' appeal therefrom is dismissed.

[2, 3] It is contended by appellants that the decision of a board of trustees declaring a petition for consolidation to be insufficient is final and conclusive, and that the superior court was without jurisdiction to entertain the proceeding. In support of this theory, the statutes authorizing such proceedings are compared with those regulating recall elections, wherein it is provided that the petition therefor shall be filed with the county clerk. Act No. 5166 of Deering's Gen. Laws 1923 (Stats. 1913, p. 577), § 2, providing for the consolidation of municipalities, requires that: "Whenever a petition, signed by not less than one-fourth in number of the qualified electors of any municipal corporation, as shown by the registration of electors of the county in which such municipal corporation is situated, is filed with the legislative body thereof, asking that such municipal corporation and any other municipal corporation contiguous thereto, designated in such petition, and having a greater population, be consolidated, such legislative body must, without delay, call a special election and submit to the electors of such municipal corporation the question whether such municipal corporations shall be consolidated."

It is therefore apparent at a glance that these statutes are not similar in the respects contended for by appellants, since the provisions last quoted vest with the board of trustees a power and duty, and as to the latter they are mandatory, even though it be conceded that the functions of the board are quasi judicial. The writ of mandamus "may be issued by any court, except a justice's or police court, to any inferior tribunal, corporation, board, or person, to compel the performance of an act which the law specially enjoins, as a duty resulting from an office, trust, or station." Hence, it follows that, the board having failed and refused, apparently without a canvass to hold an election as required by the statute, the superior court in the exercise of its mandatory powers had jurisdiction to entertain a petition for the relief prayed.

[4] We think, however, that the court erred in its rulings excluding certain offered evidence tending to disqualify a sufficient number of signers to render the petition insufficient. The county registrar of voters, as a witness in court, canvassed the names upon the petition by comparison with the great register, and testified that more than one-fourth, to wit, 566 of the registered qualified electors of said city had affixed their signatures thereto. Counsel for appellants thereupon attempted to show, by calling 40 of the petitioners as witnesses, that, while in all other respects they were qualified electors, they were not in fact registered at the time of signing the petition, having registered several hours after becoming signers, but on the same day. Objections to such evidence were sustained.

Section 1083a of the Political Code, as amended in 1915, provides as follows: "Whenever, by the constitution or laws of this state, any initiative, referendum, recall or nominating petition or paper, or any petition or paper, is required to be signed by qualified electors, only an elector who is a registered qualified elector at the time he signs such petition or paper shall be entitled to sign * * * any such petition or paper on or after the first day of January of an even-numbered year unless he shall, on or since said first day of January, have made an affidavit of registration as required by law."

Clearly, the petition here involved is within the purview of this section. It is equally apparent that, if certain persons had not registered when they signed the petition, they were not "registered qualified electors at the time" they so affix their signatures. The expression "at the time" means coincidentally, or immediately before. Seattle Lumber Co. v. Richardson & Elmer Co., 66 Wash. 671, 120 P. 517; Barnes v. Provoost, 4 Johns. [N. Y.] 61, 4 Am. Dec. 249; Brown v. Wilkinson, 15 Mees & W. 391; Gourley v. Countryman, 18 Okl. 220, 90 P. 427; Lake Shore & M. Ry. Co. v. Ouska, 151 Ill. 232, 37 N. E. 897.

[5] But it is contended that, since it is conceded that in each case an inspection of the register disclosed that on the date of the signing the signer was registered, no evidence extraneous of the register is admissible to show the order in which the signing and registering occurred. The respondents herein rely upon Beecham v. Burns, 34 Cal. App. 754, 168 P. 1058, and Minges v. Board of Trustees etc., 27 Cal. App. 15, 148 P. 816. The former relates to a recall election, and merely holds that the clerk must confine his canvass to the great register, and may not receive extraneous evidence as to the qualifications of signing electors. The clerk and the registrar are ministerial officers. They are not empowered to receive or to weigh evidence. Their sole duty and authority, in proper cases, are to inspect the official record and to report its condition and what it discloses to other officers. Decisions limiting the scope of the inquiry conducted by the clerk or the registrar to the register, and forbidding them or the city trustees to receive extraneous evidence, furnish no precedent or authority for us to hold that the superior court may not in an appropriate judicial proceeding receive evidence tending to show the falsity of the register and fraud in its entries. In Sidler v. City Council of Bakersfield, 43 Cal. App. 352, 185 P. 194, and Watts v. Superior Court, 36 Cal. App. 692, 173 P. 183, it was said that, although the clerk's certificate is final as to matters comprehended within the proper scope of his examination, the forgery of signatures and unauthorized additions thereto are not matters which could become apparent to the clerk in the course of his examination of the register, and would not be included in the matters passed upon by him in determining the sufficiency of the petition. Again, it is held in Koehler v. Board of Trustees etc., 83 Cal. App. 648, 257 P. 187, that the forgery of names to a petition, and additions made to signatures which might not be evidenced by comparison with the records of registration, are not matters as to which the clerk's certificate is final. Similarly, the registrar's inspection of the register would not disclose that a signer of the petition was not registered when he signed, provided he registered on the same date that he signed, although subsequently thereto. The determination of such fact, if it be one, would not be within the scope of duty of the clerk or registrar, and so the certificate of either officer would not be conclusive as to that matter.

We have discussed the subject from the standpoint of the admissibility of the evidence offered, and have concluded that objections based upon that theory should have been overruled. Nor do we think it is the intent of the Legislature, as evidenced by the code provisions bearing upon the question, to make valid the signature of an elector to an annexation petition, if that elector had not registered when he signed. The language of section 1083a of the Political Code above quoted would seem clear and conclusive on that point. Section 2 of Act 5166 makes it incumbent upon the legislative body to act upon a petition bearing not less than one-fourth of the qualified electors "as shown by the registration of electors of the county," yet in the light of the provisions of section 1083a of the Political Code it cannot be thought that it was the legislative intent that such a showing on the register should compel the legislative body to put in action the machinery for an election to bring about a consolidation, even though the registration might be forged, or added to, or placed upon the petition subsequently to the signing of the petition for consolidation. Any of these irregularities and illegalities would amount to a fraud, for they would cause the register to make a false showing.

It appears that one-fourth of the qualified electors of the municipality on May 14, 1928, was about 543. If it were true that 40 of the 566 signatures were illegally affixed to the petition because the petitioners were not registered and had no right to sign it, it would result that but 526 legal signatures, or 17 less than the requisite number, would remain. We think the offered evidence was competent and material, and that it was error to exclude it.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded to the superior court, and it is directed to receive such evidence as may be offered to show as to each signer the relative time of his signing the petition and registering wherever it appears that the signing and registering occurred on the same day; and it is ordered that if, upon the taking of the testimony as above indicated, it shall be found that there were 543 or more qualified electors who, according to the views herein expressed, were legal signers of the petition when they so signed, the superior court shall direct the trustees of the city of Culver City to call the special election as prayed in the petition. However, if it shall appear that there were not as many as 543 qualified electors who were, at the time they signed, legal signers to said petition, said superior court shall deny the petition for the writ of mandate as prayed. The trial court is directed to take evidence on this issue only, and otherwise it is ordered that the findings of fact and conclusions of law remain undisturbed and in full force and effect.

I concur: WORKS, P. J.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J. (dissenting). I cannot bring myself to the interpretation of section 1083a of the Political Code announced in the prevailing opinion. We should approach the problem with the thought in mind that a liberal construction is to be given to the enactments in order to allow a free expression of the will of the electors. Magoon v. Heath, 79 Cal. App. 632, 250 P. 583. Section 2 of the act, providing for the consolidation of municipal corporations (Stats. 1913, p. 577), provides that whenever a petition signed by not less than one-fourth of the qualified electors of the municipal corporation "as shown by the registration of electors of the county," etc. (Italics ours.) It is patent that the records of registration constitute the only source from which to determine the total number of qualified electors in the municipality. Why then, if they are determinative of the dividend, should not the information therein contained also establish the divisor, assuming that the desired quotient is not less than four? Or, to phrase it differently, if the registration records give us the total number of qualified electors, why should they not also give us the number of signers who are registered? That this is the construction which should be given to the portion of section 1083a of the Political Code quoted in the majority opinion, is indicated by the concluding sentence of that section: "Wherever, by the Constitution or laws of this state, the county clerk or registrar of voters is required to determine from the records of registration what number of qualified electors have signed such petition or paper, he shall determine that fact with respect to the purported signature of any person from the affidavit of registration, and records relating thereto, current and in effect at the date of such signing of such petition or paper." (Italics ours.) In my opinion section 2 of the act providing for the consolidation of municipal corporations and section 1083a of the Political Code should be read together, and as so construed the latter section would mean that only an elector who is a registered qualified elector at the time he signs such petition, "as shown by the registration of electors of the county," shall be entitled to sign the same. Suppose a deputy registrar of voters were accompanying the circulator of the petition and the citizen desired to register and to sign the paper, certainly it would not be in keeping with a liberal construction of the law to say that his signature should not be counted if he inadvertently attached his name first to the petition, followed by the affidavit of registration.

In re DAVID et al.

McDOWELL v. DAVID et al.

(Civ. 6693.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 1, 1929.

1. Newspapers 🔑1(5)—Superior court's finding on sufficient evidence that publication is newspaper of general circulation is conclusive (Pol. Code, § 4460).

Superior court's determination from evidence that publication is newspaper of general circulation within Pol. Code, § 4460, is conclusive on appeal, unless evidence is insufficient, as matter of law, to support finding.

2. Newspapers 🔑1(5)—Admission of issues after commencement of proceeding to establish publication as newspaper of general circulation held not reversible error, in view of prior issues properly admitted (Pol. Code, § 4460 et seq.).

Admission of evidence of issues of paper subsequent to commencement of proceeding under Pol. Code, § 4460 et seq., to have it established as newspaper of general circulation, held not reversible error; such evidence being merely cumulative of what was shown by prior issues properly received in evidence.

3. Newspapers 🔑1(3)—News in paper devoted to particular class must be such that general reading public might well look to it therefor to entitle it to establishment as newspaper of general circulation (Pol. Code, § 4460 et seq.).

News published in paper, devoted more or less to particular class, profession, trade, or calling, must be such that general reading public might well look to it for news of passing events, to entitle it to establishment as newspaper of general circulation, under Pol. Code, § 4460 et seq., purpose of which was to require publication of legal notices in newspaper which would reach general reading public.

4. Process 🔑103—Notice by publication must be reasonably likely to bring pendency and purpose of proceeding to attention of those interested.

Notice by publication is valid, where necessary, but must be such as would be reasonably likely to bring fact of pendency and purpose of proceeding to attention of those interested.

5. Newspapers 🔑1(3)—Newspaper publishing only local items of particular interest to building industries held not "newspaper of general circulation" (Pol. Code, § 4460).

Newspaper publishing no telegraphic, social, or political news, but only local news items of particular interest to building and construction industries, and reporting only such disasters as destruction of buildings, bridges, etc., held not a newspaper of general circulation, but one devoted to interests, entertainment, and instruction of particular class, within Pol. Code, § 4460.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. T. Price, Judge.

Application by C. M. David and others, a copartnership doing business under the firm name of "Journal of Commerce," to have such Journal established as a newspaper of general circulation, contested by A. McDowell. Judgment for applicants, and contestant appeals. Reversed.

Hill, Morgan & Bledsoe and Kenneth K. Wright, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Rohe & Freston and Harold P. Curtis, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

LANDIS, Justice pro tem. This is an application under section 4460 et seq. of the Political Code to have the standing of the "Journal of Commerce" as a newspaper of general circulation, as that term is defined in section 4460, ascertained and established.

The material allegations of the petition are as follows:

"That the applicants, namely, C. M. David, O. J. David, and M. F. Brown, at all the times herein mentioned have been and now are a copartnership doing business under the fictitious name of Journal of Commerce, and have complied with all the requirements of sections 2466 and 2468 of the Civil Code. That applicant is the publisher of the newspaper known as Journal of Commerce, and said newspaper is a newspaper of general circulation, printed and published at regular intervals, to wit, daily except Sunday, in the city and county of Los Angeles, California, for the dissemination of local news and intelligence of a general character and has a bona fide subscription list of paying subscribers; that said newspaper has been established, printed and published as a daily newspaper, except Sunday, at regular intervals in said city, county and state for a period of more than one year last past, to wit, from on or about December 11, 1925, to the date hereof."

Thereafter and prior to the time fixed for the hearing, the contestant, A. McDowell, a citizen, resident, and taxpayer of the city of Los Angeles, filed a contest to said petition, alleging "that said newspaper was not published for the dissemination of local news or intelligence of a general character, but, on the contrary, said newspaper was devoted to the interest and published for the entertainment and instruction of a particular class, profession, trade, or calling or for a number of such classes, professions, trades or callings, to wit, to the interest and for the entertainment and instruction of persons engaged in or connected with the construction and building industry of Southern California, and that such was the avowed purpose of such newspaper and of the publishers thereof, and the contestant further alleges that the newspaper did not disseminate local news or intelligence of a general character." The court thereafter heard the matter and made its findings in favor of the applicants.

The sole question presented and urged on this appeal is whether or not the evidence was sufficient to support the findings of the court that the newspaper in question was published for the dissemination of local news and intelligence of a general character, and that such newspaper was not devoted to the interest and published for the entertainment and instruction of a particular class, profession, trade, or calling, or for a number of such classes, professions, trades or callings, and that said newspaper was not published for the avowed purpose of entertaining and instructing persons engaged in or connected with the building industries of Southern California, within the meaning of section 4460 of the Political Code.

[1] The superior court having determined from the evidence that the publication is a newspaper of general circulation as that term is defined in section 4460, such determination of the evidence is conclusive on appeal unless it shall appear, as a matter of law, that it is insufficient to support the finding.

In the instant proceeding the evidence adduced on the part of the applicant at the hearing, as shown by the bill of exceptions, consisted of the testimony of C. M. David, a member of the applicant copartnership, and E. J. Davis, circulation manager for applicant, and introduction in evidence of several issues of the paper in question.

[2] Appellant urges as error the fact that, under objections made by contestant, in addition to two issues of the paper that were dated prior to the date of the commencement of this proceeding, four issues dated subsequent to such date were admitted in evidence. Assuming, without holding, that they were not admissible, for the reason that such evidence was cumulative of what was shown by the issues that concededly were properly received in evidence, no substantial injury resulted therefrom.

An examination of the copies of the paper in evidence shows that the publication is made up principally of stereotyped matters under the headings of "subbids wanted," "subcontracts let," "today's bid calls," "commercial news flashes," "Los Angeles Permits," "bond bids," "bond elections," "bids wanted in Southwest," "credit information," "mechanics liens," "notices of completion," "attachments," "notices of actions," "building contracts," "release of attachments," a number of advertisments almost all of which relate to building and construction industries, and a number of items claimed to be news items, but almost all of which involve or are in some manner connected with the building and construction industries and which appear to be of particular interest to persons connected with such industries. The following headlines of the so-called news items indicate the contents and character and are a fair sample of such items, to wit: "Approve Plans for Subdivision"; "Water System Contract Let"; "Quantities for Don Pedro Dam"; "Residence Plans are Completed"; "Lacy Avenue Bids Received"; "Morrow Water Contract Let"; "Draws Chinese Church Plans"; "Water Board Receives Bids"; "Glass Company to Build Plant"; and "Garden Court Lease is Taken." In addition thereto, we find the following items: "Markets at a Glance," showing stock market conditions, quotations of Liberty bond values, and rates of bank notes.

C. M. David testified "that when they reported disasters they were generally of the type which might interest the construction industry, such as the destruction of buildings and bridges; that they had not carried any report of political matters; that their subscribers were interested in building construction news, and that all matters which would have anything to do with building industries would be of interest to their subscribers; that their subscribers would be interested in weather particulars, credit information where bids are to be awarded, where bond issues have been voted for public improvements, financial news, bond issues, new business concerns, moves and fire reports; that all of the editorials which were published were connected with business matters, and none had anything to do with social conditions or political situations, and in the majority of cases the editorials related to building construction industries, and that they carried no report of social news."

Respondent appears to rely on In re Green, 21 Cal. App. 138, 131 P. 91; but a comparison of these two publications shows a marked difference in purpose and contents. The paper under consideration in that case, in addition to certain stereotyped matter, contains news accounts of courts and other official proceedings, including the activity of the California members of congress, review of court decisions, general advertisements, personal notices, and many items of local current events of a diversified character.

In the case of In re Herman, 183 Cal. 153, 191 P. 934, it was found by the court that the Daily Bulletin was a newspaper of the following description: A few telegraphic items were contained therein, although these telegraphic items had been copied from other newspapers; the current "news" was court calendars, without any description of court proceedings, list of suits filed, marriage licenses and building permits issued, matters of stereotyped nature, tables of temperature and rainfall, altitudes at various points in that section of the state; the names and locations of churches, hospitals, asylums, orphan homes, and clubs; the names and addresses of clergymen, location of fire alarm boxes, directories of public offices and officials and such like matters. In holding that the newspaper involved in that case was not a paper of general circulation, the court said: "It is clear to us that the purpose of this paper was not 'the dissemination of local or telegraphic news and intelligence of a general character,' and that the contents did not come within this description."

[3] While the rule has been laid down to the effect that, even though a newspaper is devoted more or less to a particular class, profession, trade, or calling, it will not be deprived of its character as a newspaper of general circulation if, in fact, the newspaper does publish intelligence of passing events and news items of interest to the general public, together with news of interest to such particular class of persons. In re Green, 21 Cal. App. 138, 131 P. 91; In re Labor Journal, 190 Cal. 500, 213 P. 498. But the news published in such newspaper must be of such a character that the general reading public might well look to such paper to learn the news of passing events, and should not be of such a character that the general public would not be at all interested in it. Hanscomb v. Meyer, 60 Neb. 72, 82 N. W. 114, 48 L. R. A. 411, 83 Am. St. Rep. 509; Crowell v. Parker, 22 R. I. 51, 46 A. 35, 84 Am. St. Rep. 815.

The undoubted purpose of the statutory requirement was to require the publication of legal notices to be published in newspapers which would reach the general reading public, and which would consequently give notice to the public generally and not notice merely to a particular class of the public. In re Herman, 183 Cal. 153, 191 P. 934.

[4] It should be borne in mind that notice by publication is at best a poor substitute for actual or personal notice, and while undoubtedly valid in cases where necessary, still, where it is permissible at all, it must be such as would be reasonably likely to bring the fact of the pendency and the purpose of the proceeding to the attention of those interested. Title, etc., Restoration Co. v. Kerrigan, 150 Cal. 289, 88 P. 356, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 682, 119 Am. St. Rep. 199, 11 Ann. Cas. 465.

[5] In this case no telegraphic news is published; the local news items hereinbefore mentioned are limited to such items as are of particular interest to the building and construction industries. Applicant admits that the only disasters reported consist of the destruction of buildings, bridges, railroads, and the like, and that they are reported so as to get knowledge to the construction industry of the needs of the industry. No social or political news is reported, and there is no account of local events, casualties, hotel arrivals or departures, personal items and the like, such as might be expected would be found in a newspaper undertaking to publish intelligence of passing events and news items of interest to the general public.

We are constrained to agree with appellant that the paper in this case is one that falls within the rule laid down in the case of In re Herman, supra. Clearly the publication involved in this case is not a newspaper of general circulation but is a newspaper devoted to the interests and published for the entertainment and instruction of a particular class, as those terms are defined in section 4460 of the Political Code. It follows that it must be held that the finding is not supported by the evidence.

Judgment reversed.

JOHN BREUNER CO. v. ALLRED.★

(Civ. 6503.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. April 2, 1929.

Rehearing Denied May 2, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 29, 1929.

1. Principal and agent ⇨137(1), 173(3)—Evidence that defendant's agent made contract on defendant's behalf, and of defendant's conduct amounting to ratification or estoppel, supported judgment for plaintiff, in action for goods sold and delivered.

In action for goods sold and delivered, evidence showing that defendant's agent agreed on defendant's behalf to pay for goods, and that defendant's conduct amounted to ratification or estoppel, held sufficient to support judgment for plaintiff.

2. Principal and agent ⇨194(2, 3)—In action for goods sold, instructions on ratification and ostensible agency held not erroneous under evidence showing defendant's agent contracted on defendant's behalf.

In action for goods sold and delivered, instructions as to ratification and ostensible agency held not error under evidence showing defendant's agent contracted on defendant's behalf, since it was not necessary that evidence actually demonstrate defendant had full knowledge; it being sufficient that there was substantial evidence from which jury could infer that such full knowledge existed.

3. Principal and agent ⇨194(2)—In action for goods sold, instructions on ostensible agency held not erroneous under evidence.

In action for goods sold and delivered, court did not err in instructing on ostensible agency from lack of care under evidence showing defendant, in presence of plaintiff's agent, commended his agent for making contract.

4. Principal and agent ⇨194(3)—In action for goods sold, instruction concerning ratification by implication held supported by evidence.

In action for goods sold and delivered, instruction concerning ratification by implication held supported by evidence showing defendant commended agent who made contract, in presence of plaintiff's agent.

5. Trial ⇨260(1)—Requested instruction covered by other instructions held properly refused.

In action for goods sold and delivered, instruction requested by defendant held properly refused, where substance of law contained in it was given in other instructions.

6. Trial ⇨253(7)—In action for goods sold, defendant's requested instruction directing verdict held erroneous for omitting to state what jury should do if plaintiff had made absolute sale to defendant.

In action for goods sold and delivered, instruction requested by defendant directing verdict for defendant held properly refused, being faulty and confusing for omitting to state what jury should do if they found plaintiff had made absolute sale of goods to defendant as part of their arrangement.

7. Trial ⇨267(1)—Striking parts of instruction assuming facts and telling jury to consider proven fact immaterial held not error.

Before giving requested instruction, court did not err in striking parts which assumed facts and told jury to consider, as immaterial on main issue, fact which was part of evidence, where given part of instruction was complete on subject.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Franklin A. Griffin, Judge.

Action by the John Breuner Company against Clifford S. Allred. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

I. M. Peckham, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Ernest L. Brune, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KOFORD, P. J. Plaintiff obtained judgment upon a jury's verdict for $811.75 for draperies and floor covering furnished and installed in a model home. It was one of a number of new homes which defendant had built upon land owned by himself for the purpose of sale. The points raised by defendant as appellant here are: First, the sufficiency of the evidence to show that C. W. Pearce, who made the agreement of purchase of the goods, was the agent of defendant either by authorization or by ratification; and, second, claimed errors in giving instructions said not to have support in the evidence and in refusing requested instructions which also involves only a consideration of the evidence. The sufficiency in law of none of the instructions is argued. At the end of plaintiff's case in chief defendant's motion for a nonsuit and a motion to strike out the evidence were denied. The defendant thereupon proceeded with his evidence, and now contends that the adverse judgment appealed from is not supported by the evidence.

[1] There is sufficient substantial evidence to support the judgment. Disregarding denials and contradictory evidence offered in behalf of the defendant, there was evidence to support the following narrative: Pearce was a real estate salesman or broker. He had and occupied a desk in the office of appellant. That office contained a number of desks for appellant's salesmen, one for his sales manager, Sibbald, and another for his bookkeeper. Pearce approached Hauer, an outside salesman of the respondent, stating that appellant wanted the respondent to lend the necessary furniture to furnish the model home. After several meetings between these two men, at the model home, at appellant's office and at respondent's store, the agreement was made between them to lend the furniture and sell to appellant the draperies and floor coverings. Later Pearce and appellant's sales manager Sibbald called at respondent's store and talked with said Hauer and John Breuner, Jr., who consented to give a certain amount of advertisement to the model home. Sibbald and Pearce asked Breuner how much the draperies and floor coverings were to cost, and he replied that it would be cost plus 15 per cent. because of the advertising in it, and that, because he could not use them after being cut for the home, he expected them to buy them. Later Pearce, in the presence of Hauer, met appellant. He told him about the advertising, that the draperies would cost about $650; and that carpet and linoleum would be extra. Appellant replied, "That is fine, go ahead," and further told Pearce to keep on the job, as he did not want to spend all that money for nothing. This was before the installation of the goods. Appellant ordered his painter to decorate the house in harmony with the colors planned by respondent's salesman. After the model home was completely finished and furnished, the hostess placed in charge was instructed to quote one sale price of $13,500 for the house, lot, draperies, carpet, and linoleum, and not to quote any price for the home without the said furnishings nor for the furnishings without the home. Appellant himself personally instructed a salesman of respondent to quote the above price, stating that that included the drapes and floor covering. There was testimony that the price of the house before it was furnished was $12,500, but none is pointed out regarding what was to be done with the balance of the extra $1,000 after paying the $811.75 for the costs of the drapes and floor covering. On the last day of the period for which respondent had agreed to lend the furniture, a purchaser for the home was secured, but only for the home, and not for the drapes and floor coverings, price $12,500. When appellant was personally presented with a bill for the goods, he stated that he did not intend to pay the bill, because the said respondent had not lived up to its promises to give certain newespaper advertisement, and so he would not live up to his promise. He did not at that time deny having bought the goods nor state that he was not liable therefor. At the trial appellant as a witness admitted having authorized Pearce to have respondent install furniture and furnishings in the house, but denied knowing that it would cost him anything.

We have stated enough of the evidence to show that the verdict is supported by substantial evidence tending to prove that appellant's authorized agent or agents agreed on his behalf to pay for the goods, and that appellant's authorization could also be inferred from conduct amounting to ratification of estoppel or from his conduct in holding Pearce or Sibbald out as an ostensible agent.

The motion for nonsuit and to strike the evidence were therefore properly denied. The appellants claim that the jury must have disregarded certain sound instructions given on the law of agency in order to arrive at their verdict is also the same point stated in a different manner. 24 Cal. Jur. 796, and cases cited.

[2] From what we have said about the nature and sufficiency of the evidence, it follows that it was not error for the court to instruct upon ratification or to modify defendant's requested instruction upon authorization of an agent by his principal by interpolating phrases about ratification and ostensible agency. It was not necessary that the evidence actually demonstrate that appellant had full knowledge before instructions on ratification could be given; it was sufficient that there was substantial evidence from which the jury could infer that such full knowledge actually existed.

[3, 4] It is claimed that the court erred in instructing on ostensible agency from lack of care, because it is said the evidence showed a want of ordinary care on the part of respondent, and did not show the want of it on the part of defendant. The contrary of both assertions is supported by the evidence, notably the conversation in which appellant commended Pearce, and told him to keep on the job, after being informed of the purchase and cost of the drapes and floor coverings—all this in the presence of the agent of respondent. The same evidence supports instruction No. XXXI concerning ratification by implication. The evidence by no means compels the conclusion that defendant had no knowledge of the acts of Pearce and Sibbald until after respondent had completely performed its part of the bargain. The conversation last referred to is shown in the evidence in one place to have taken place one and one-half months before the exhibit was opened.

[5, 6] The instructions requested by defendant, and shown on pages 29 and 30 of appellant's opening brief, were properly refused. They both undertook to direct a verdict for defendant in case of certain findings of the jury. The first did so in case the jury found that defendant only authorized Pearce to use his house without consideration being given to the evidence of ratification. The substance of the law contained in it was given in other instructions shown on pages 23 and 24 of respondent's brief. The second of these two refused instructions directing a verdict for defendant was faulty and confusing for omitting to state what the jury should do if they found that plaintiff had made an absolute sale of the goods to defendant as a part of their arrangement. Owing to this defect, the instruction directed a verdict for the defendant in case plaintiff failed to perform a certain part of whatever the arrangement was between the plaintiff and defendant, without stating what the terms of that arrangement would have to be in order that the defendant should be entitled to a verdict on account of plaintiff's not performing such part of it.

The two general instructions requested about the inability of an agent to define his agency were given in substance by the court in instructions VIII and IX.

[7] Before giving the requested instruction on page 31 of appellant's opening brief, the court did not err in striking the parts inclosed in brackets. The given part is complete upon the subject, and the excluded part has the vice of assuming facts and also of telling the jury to consider as immaterial on the main issue the fact that Pearce was authorized by appellant to sell houses. This was a part of the evidence of the case which was in the record, not stricken out, nor subject to other infirmity. The jury must consider all the evidence of the entire case before deciding the issues. The relationship of all kinds existing between Pearce and Allred as shown in the evidence could be considered by the jury in drawing inferences respecting all the issues in the case so far as it appealed to their minds as rational men.

The judgment is affirmed.

DAWSON v. TULARE UNION HIGH SCHOOL DISTRICT et al.★

(Civ. 3701.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 5, 1929.

Rehearing Denied May 4, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court June 3, 1929.

1. Trial 🔑163—Motion for nonsuit on ground of plaintiff's failure to prove case for jury must point out grounds upon which it is based (Code Civ. Proc. § 581, subsec. 5).

Motion for nonsuit under Code Civ. Proc. § 581, subsec. 5, permitting dismissal upon plaintiff's failure to prove sufficient case for jury, must point out to the court and counsel precise grounds on which it is made, and it is not sufficient to state generally that there is no evidence justifying granting of relief, or that plaintiff has failed to prove case, but motion must show wherein failure consists.

2. Trial 🔑165—Only evidence most favorable to plaintiff need be considered in determining motion for nonsuit (Code Civ. Proc. § 581, subsec. 5).

Only evidence most favorable to plaintiff need be considered in determining motion for nonsuit on ground of plaintiff's failure to prove sufficient case for jury under Code Civ. Proc. § 581, subsec. 5.

3. Schools and school districts 🔑122—Negligence of school district in permitting piano used in connection with physical education in high school to remain in insecure position on dolly held for jury in action for injuries to student.

Negligence of school district in permitting piano used in school gymnasium to rest in insecure position on dolly held question for jury, in action for injuries to high school student caused by fall of piano while she was engaged in playing jumping game as part of school instruction in physical education, under evidence of previous accident resulting from fall of piano and knowledge thereof on part of physical director.

4. Appeal and error 🔑997(2)—That evidence may justify inference against plaintiff is immaterial on appeal from judgment of nonsuit (Code Civ. Proc. § 581, subsec. 5).

It is immaterial on appeal from judgment of nonsuit under Code Civ. Proc. § 581, subsec. 5, that there may be sufficient evidence to justify inference contrary to plaintiff's recovery as well as inference in favor of plaintiff.

5. Schools and school districts 🔑89—Long-continued defective condition of its property may establish constructive notice on part of school district, rendering it liable for injuries if it fails to remedy defect (St. 1923, p 675).

Long-continued existence of defective condition of its property may establish constructive notice thereon on part of school district, so as to render it liable to person injured for failing to remedy such condition within reasonable time after notice under St. 1923, p. 675.

6. Schools and school districts 🔑89—Neglect of duty by school district cannot be made basis of exemption from liability for injuries resulting from defective condition of its property (St. 1923, p. 675).

Neglect of duty on part of school district cannot be made basis of exemption from liability under St. 1923, p. 675, rendering counties, municipalities, and school districts liable for injuries resulting from defective conditions of their property which are not remedied within reasonable time after notice thereof.

7. Schools and school districts 🔑62—School trustees held not personally liable for injury to student in high school resulting from fall of piano during physical exercises (Pol. Code, § 1623).

Members of board of trustees of school district held not personally liable for injuries sustained by student from fall of piano while playing game in high school as part of instruction in physical education, under Pol. Code, § 1623.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; J. A. Allen, Judge.

Action by Mary Dawson, a minor, by her guardian ad litem, L. G. Dawson, against the Tulare Union High School District and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed in part, and affirmed in part.

★Rehearing denied. Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

Joseph A. Brown and F. A. Anderson, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

LeRoy McCormick, Dist. Atty., and Leslie A. Cleary, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Visalia, Glenn Moran, of Tulare, and H. B. McClure, of Visalia, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. [1] The plaintiff brought this action to recover damages caused by an upright piano falling upon and crushing one of her ankles while she was engaged in school work as a student in the Tulare union high school. The trial court granted defendants' motion for a nonsuit, made on the ground set forth in "section 581 of the Code of Civil Procedure, subsection 5, which reads to the effect that 'An action may be dismissed, or a judgment of nonsuit entered, in the following cases: * * * 5. By the court, upon motion of the defendant, when upon the trial the plaintiff fails to prove a sufficient case for the jury.'" No other ground was specified in the motion. The plaintiff has appealed from the judgment. "It is * * * settled law that a motion for a nonsuit must point the attention of the court and counsel to the precise grounds upon which it is made. * * * It is not sufficient to state generally that there is no evidence before the court justifying it in granting any relief to the plaintiff, or that plaintiff has failed to prove a sufficient case. The motion should show wherein the plaintiff failed to prove its case or why he is not entitled to recover." 9 Cal. Jur. 548; Masero v. Bessolo (Cal. App.) 262 P. 61; Henley v. Bursell, 61 Cal. App. 511, 215 P. 114.

[2-4] There is no dispute as to the injuries received by the plaintiff or the serious nature thereof. Under the settled rules governing the determination of a motion for nonsuit, only the evidence most favorable to the plaintiff need be considered. There is evidence in the record from which the facts herein stated may be inferred. The piano in question was the property of the defendant district. It was frequently moved from one room to another. To facilitate the moving thereof, it was kept upon what the witnesses referred to as a dolly. This dolly consisted of a skeleton structure, rectangular in form, of the same size as the bottom of the piano, and made of two by four inch lumber. Near either end, between the side pieces of the framework, was a wooden roller about four inches in diameter and twelve in length, through which there was a metal rod forming the axis of the roller and supporting the frame. The piano was not fastened to the dolly, but merely rested upon it, with no stays to keep it in place. The bottom of the piano, when on the dolly, was five or six inches above the floor. It was "awfully wobbly." "It seemed to be on a very unsteady platform. Oh, just like the wheels in it were loose." "It was shaky." "When the girls would play the piano, it would rock backwards and forwards." "It seemed to go backwards more than forwards." "When you press on the pedals, * * * that caused the piano to tip." "It was plain and marked, the shaking of the piano." "Different times in our gym class we noticed the piano shook; * * * about every time we used the piano." "We used it once a week." "I think it was the vibration from the different jumping games" that caused the piano to fall. The piano had been kept upon the dolly for more than a year before the injury to the plaintiff. About a year before the accident it fell backwards upon the leg of a student who was endeavoring to move it. The physical director, employed by the school and who had charge of the gymnasium at the time of the accident last referred to, was present when it occurred. The student who was injured in that accident was unable, by reason thereof, to attend school for about two weeks. On his return he made a report as to the reasons for the accident. The principal of the school, who was also district superintendent, testified that he had no knowledge of that accident. He knew, however, that the piano was kept upon the dolly, but made no examination as to its stability. He did not know whether it shook or rocked. The dolly was not used after the injury to the plaintiff. The "director of girls' physical education" had charge of the piano and the room in which it was used during their class period. This teacher and the physical director had the same opportunity as the students to observe the instability of the piano on the dolly.

At the time of the accident the plaintiff and several other girls were playing a game as a part of their instruction in physical education. While they were "all jumping up and down on the floor" the piano "fell without warning," going over backwards and crushing the plaintiff's "ankle to the floor."

It may be inferred from the facts stated that the vibration resulting from the "jumping game" caused the piano to slip backwards until its unstable equilibrium on the dolly was destroyed, and that, therefore, the keeping of the piano on the dolly in the manner shown was the proximate cause of the accident. The evidence is clearly sufficient to warrant the inference that it was negligence to maintain such defective condition, and it is wholly immaterial, on this appeal from the judgment of nonsuit, that there may be sufficient evidence to justify a contrary inference.

[5, 6] "Counties, municipalities and school districts shall be liable for injuries to persons and property resulting from the dangerous or defective condition of public streets, highways, buildings, grounds, works and property in all cases where the governing or managing board of such county, municipality, school district, or other board, officer or person having authority to remedy such condition, had knowledge or notice of the defective or dangerous condition of any such street, highway, building, grounds, works or property and failed or neglected, for a reasonable time after acquiring such knowledge or receiving such notice, to remedy such condition or failed and neglected for a reasonable time after acquiring such knowledge or receiving such notice to take such action as may be reasonably necessary to protect the public against such dangerous or defective condition." Stats. 1923, p. 675.

In a similar case it was held by this court that a school district is liable for injuries to a pupil, caused by the maintenance of a dangerous condition of which the district superintendent has notice and which he neglects to remedy within a reasonable time. Huff v. Compton City Grammar School Dist. (Cal. App.) 267 P. 918. The statute does not provide that actual notice is a prerequisite to recovery in such a case. The long-continued existence of a defective condition may establish constructive notice thereof. Wurzburger v. Nellis, 165 Cal. 48, 53, 130 P. 1052; 43 C. J. 1043 to 1057. It may be inferred from the circumstances in evidence that the principal had constructive notice of the defective condition and he certainly had "authority to remedy such condition." To hold that actual notice is required in such a case would be to place a premium on indifference and neglect of duty. "Neglect of duty cannot be made the basis of exemption from liability." Kramer v. City of Los Angeles, 147 Cal. 668, 681, 82 P. 334, 339.

[7] Under the provisions of section 1623 of the Political Code, a judgment in a case such as this is a charge against the school district, but the members of the board of trustees are not "personally liable for accidents to children * * * in connection with school work." The judgment of nonsuit in favor of the trustees personally, therefore, should stand, notwithstanding the insufficiency of the motion therefor, because it appears that the plaintiff will be unable to prove a cause of action against them.

The judgment in favor of the defendant Tulare union high school district against the plaintiff is reversed. The judgment in favor of the other defendants is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. WALTON. (Cr. 1773.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. March 26, 1929.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing April 10, 1929.

1. Criminal law ⚷603(11)—Denying continuance where motion was made on day of trial held not error; diligence not being shown on absent witnesses' testimony.

In prosecution for forgery, denial of defendant's motion for continuance made on day of trial, and based on want of preparation and the absence of material witnesses, held not error, where there was no showing of reasonable diligence on part of defendant in his affidavit in support of motion and affidavit failed to state facts to which witnesses would testify if present.

2. Criminal law ⚷597(1), 603(11)—Refusing continuance held not error; reasonable diligence to discover new testimony and probability of different verdict not being shown.

Refusal to grant motion of defendant in prosecution for forgery for new trial on ground of newly discovered evidence, consisting of testimony of defendant, his father, and friend, as to whereabouts of defendant on certain date, and that he did not wear certain clothing on that date, held not error, where defendant was witness at trial, his father assisting him, and there was no showing of reasonable diligence to discover testimony before verdict or that, if evidence were introduced on retrial, different verdict would be probable.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Elliot Craig, Judge.

M. K. Walton, also known as Kelly Walton, was convicted of forgery, and he appeals. Affirmed.

William Christensen, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Warner I. Praul, of Los Angeles, for the People.

CRAIL, Justice pro tem. [1] Defendant was convicted of the crime of forgery. It is his first contention that the trial court erred in denying his motion for a continuance, made on the day of trial, and based on the want of preparation and the absence of material witnesses. However, there is no showing of reasonable diligence on the part of defendant in his affidavit in support of the motion (People v. Ponchette, 30 Cal. App. 399, 158 P. 338; People v. Winters, 125 Cal. 325, 57 P. 1067); and the affidavit fails to state the facts to which the witnesses would testify if present (People v. Fountain, 170 Cal. 460, 150 P. 341).

[2] The only other contention of defendant is that the trial court committed prejudicial error in refusing to grant appellant's motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. The newly discovered evidence consisted of the testimony of the defendant, his father, and a friend, as to the whereabouts of the defendant on a certain date, and also that he did not wear certain clothing on that date. The defendant was a witness at the trial, and, as shown by his affidavit, made on the day of the trial, his father was assisting him in marshaling the evidence in his defense. There is no showing of reasonable diligence to discover this testimony before the verdict was returned, and it does not appear that, if the evidence were introduced on a retrial of the cause, a different verdict would be probable. People v. Froehlich, 65 Cal. App. 502, 224 P. 471; People v. Oxnam, 170 Cal. 211, 149 P. 165. There was no abuse of discretion with regard to either order.

BLOOM v. BLOOM. (S. F. 12759.)

Supreme Court of California. April 16, 1929.

1. Mortgages 🔑608½—Judgment requiring reconveyance on defendant's payment of indebtedness secured by deed held inadequate as not requiring payment within reasonable time.

In action to quiet title where defendant alleged that deed under which plaintiff claimed was given as security for indebtedness, judgment refusing to quiet plaintiff's title, and directing that plaintiff reconvey property to defendant on payment of amount found to be due, held erroneous as inadequate to protect plaintiff's rights; no time being fixed for defendant's payment of indebtedness.

2. Mortgages 🔑608½—Defendant held to have waived equity of redemption and objections to decree quieting title, unless indebtedness be satisfied within reasonable time.

In action to quiet title, where defendant alleged that plaintiff's deed was merely security for indebtedness and prayed accounting and reconveyance on payment of indebtedness and filed no brief on plaintiff's appeal from judgment fixing no time for defendant to pay such indebtedness, he must be held to have waived any equity of redemption and any objection to decree requiring him to pay indebtedness within reasonable time or suffer plaintiff's title to be quieted.

3. Mortgages 🔑608½—Decree quieting title under deed securing indebtedness, unless defendant pays indebtedness within specified reasonable time, held appropriate.

In action to quiet title where court found that plaintiff's deed was given as security for indebtedness, decree requiring defendant to pay such indebtedness within specified reasonable time, in default of which plaintiff's title will be quieted, held appropriate.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; H. C. Lucas, Judge.

Action to quiet title by W. R. Bloom against Irvin T. Bloom, also known as Irwin T. Bloom. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Stanford G. Smith, of Santa Cruz, and Lucas F. Smith, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Rittenhouse & Snyder, of Santa Cruz, for respondent.

SHENK, J. The plaintiff filed a complaint in the usual form to quiet his title to three parcels of land in the county of Santa Cruz. The defendant answered, denying absolute title in the plaintiff, and alleged that the plaintiff's interest was founded upon a deed conveying to him the title to the three parcels of land described in the complaint and two other parcels described in the answer, which deed, although absolute in form, was alleged to be in fact a conveyance of the title to the plaintiff upon the trusts resulting from an agreement of the parties and evidenced by a letter exchanged between them whereby the title was to be held by the plaintiff as security for loans and advances, reconveyance to be had upon payment to the plaintiff of the amount of such loans and advances. The defendant prayed that an accounting be had as to all five parcels, and that, upon the ascertainment of the amount due from the defendant to the plaintiff, the plaintiff be required to reconvey the three parcels described in the complaint upon the payment or tender to the plaintiff of the amount so found to be due.

Prior to the commencement of the action the plaintiff had conveyed the two parcels described in the answer to innocent third parties for value without notice of the defendant's claims. The accounting was had, and the amount of the loans and advances from the plaintiff to the defendant was found to be the sum of $8,930.24 with interest at the legal rate from June 9, 1925. The court found that the deed was as and for the purposes alleged in the answer and adjudged that the plaintiff's title be not quieted but that the plaintiff execute a deed conveying to the defendant the title to the property described in the complaint upon the payment to the plaintiff of the amount found to be due in accordance with the agreement of the parties.

The plaintiff appeals from the judgment on the ground that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings and that the judgment is uncertain and incomplete in that no time was fixed within which the defendant was required to pay the amount found to be due the plaintiff as a condition upon which the defendant would be entitled to a reconveyance.

[1, 2] The evidence is sufficient to support the findings, but it is clear that the judgment did not adequately protect the plaintiff's rights nor completely dispose of the controversy. By the judgment in its present form the burden of further advances by way of taxes and maintenance charges is placed upon the plaintiff and the defendant is permitted to delay indefinitely the payment of the amount found to be due. If the judgment be permitted to stand, the plaintiff's title is not quieted, notwithstanding the defendant may never pay the amount found to be due. On the other hand, the defendant may wait indefinitely and gamble on the increase or decrease in value of the property. In any event, further litigation would seem to be inevitable unless this controversy be settled in this action. The plaintiff in his brief suggests that the proper method to have been pursued was that an interlocutory judgment should have been rendered directing that a reconveyance be executed upon the payment by the defendant of the amount found to be due from the defendant to him and that a time should have been fixed within which the defendant should be permitted and required to make such payment, in default of which the plaintiff's title should be quieted. Or, the plaintiff further suggests, the court should have ordered the property sold, subject to the right of the defendant to redeem as in foreclosure. Under the contract of the parties and the allegation of the defendant's answer and the form of his prayer for affirmative relief, he has consented to the procedure first suggested by the plaintiff. The defendant has filed no brief and has stipulated that the appeal be determined on the record and plaintiff's opening brief. On the record the defendant must be deemed to have waived any equity of redemption which he might otherwise have had and to have consented to the procedure first suggested by the plaintiff.

[3] Under the circumstances here shown, the trial court should have entered an appropriate interlocutory judgment requiring the defendant to pay the amount found to be due the plaintiff within a specified reasonable time; that upon such payment within the time specified the defendant would be entitled to a reconveyance and that in default of payment within such time the plaintiff would be entitled to a decree quieting his title. Such a procedure was outlined and an interloctory judgment was by the trial judge actually ordered to be prepared in accordance with a memorandum opinion filed in the case. This procedure, however, was not followed, but a final judgment was signed and entered with the infirmity above indicated.

The situation of the parties under their contract and the pleadings is such as to indicate that the plaintiff, in order to protect his interest in the property, probably has been required to make further advances or to assume further financial burdens to protect his interest in the property since the close of the accounting already had, or at least since the entry of the judgment on June 1, 1927.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded for further proceedings consistent with the views herein expressed.

Divorce ⚷186—Trial court to correct clerical errors may vacate interlocutory decree entered pursuant to Supreme Court's mandate and order judgment on corrected findings.

and for the City and County of San Francisco. Writ granted.

H. H. McPike and Alan H. Critcher, both of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Walter A. Dold, of San Francisco, for respondent.

SHENK, J. This is a proceeding in mandamus to compel respondent, as judge of the superior court in and for the city and county of San Francisco, to pass upon a motion to set aside an interlocutory decree of divorce, correct an alleged clerical error in the findings in the action, and then render judgment on the findings so corrected.

In October, 1924, Claude H. Harman commenced an action for divorce against his wife, the petitioner herein. In paragraphs VI and VII of the complaint certain acts of extreme cruelty on the part of the defendant therein were alleged. The answer denied the alleged acts of cruelty, prayed that the divorce be denied, and affirmatively sought relief by way of separate maintenance. After trial the court denied the divorce, made no award for maintenance, but ordered the plaintiff to pay to the defendant $100 as and for counsel fees and $10 costs. The plaintiff appealed, and the judgment was reversed on the ground that the record showed that the trial court had found that all of the allegations of the complaint were true and that the plaintiff was therefore entitled to a divorce. By the judgment of this court the trial court was directed to enter an interlocutory decree of divorce in favor of the plaintiff. Harman v. Harman, 198 Cal. 695, 247 P. 194. Upon the going down of the remittitur the trial judge, pursuant to the mandate of this court and not otherwise, signed and filed on January 27, 1927, an interlocutory decree of divorce in favor of the plaintiff. Thereafter on due notice the defendant moved the court for an order setting aside said interlocutory decree, correcting an alleged clerical error in the findings, and ordering judgment in accordance with the corrected findings. On the hearing of the motion the court recognized the merit of the defendant's position, declared his belief that all of the facts alleged by the defendant were true, and that in the interests of justice the motion should be granted, but felt that he could not do so in view of the mandate of this court to enter judgment for the plaintiff. The trial court continued the matter for decision until its power in the premises should be defined. Accordingly this proceeding was commenced to compel action on the motion and to grant the same.

There would seem to be no impropriety in entertaining and passing upon the motion. The mandate of this court on the determination of the appeal had been complied with by the entry of a judgment as directed. What occurred thereafter was new matter not presented nor involved on the appeal from the judgment and was first made to appear on the presentation of the motion. The return alleges that the sole ground of the refusal to hear and pass upon the motion was the opinion of the respondent that said superior court was without jurisdiction in the premises in this, that having been directed by this court on the determination of the appeal to enter a judgment for the plaintiff, all authority to set aside the judgment entered in accordance with the direction had ceased.

Unquestionably the court, under the circumstances here presented, had and has the power to entertain and pass upon the motion. It has full power to determine whether the alleged error was clerical or judicial in character, and, if clerical, to set aside the interlocutory decree, correct the error, and enter judgment on the findings as corrected and conclusions of law to be drawn therefrom. See Biaggi v. Ramont, 189 Cal. 675, 209 P. 892. The form of the return has narrowed the issue to one of jurisdiction only. Consequently we do not feel justified in deciding, as urged by the petitioner, whether the showing made on the motion would require us to compel the granting of the same.

The peremptory writ should issue commanding the respondent to hear and pass upon the motion in question.

It is so ordered.

SAN FRANCISCO SULPHUR CO. v. CONTRA COSTA COUNTY. (S. F. 12806.)

Supreme Court of California. April 8, 1929.

1. Counties 🔑150(3)—Street improvement bonds issued by county, made payable out of fund of road district exclusively, held not to create county indebtedness beyond constitutional limit (Street Improvement Law 1907 as amended by St. 1921, p. 312; Const. art. 11, § 18; St. 1921, p. 326, § 22).

Street pavement and improvement work by county, under Street Improvement Law (St. 1907, p. 806) as amended by St. 1921, p. 312, held not to involve indebtedness of county over limit of indebtedness under Const. art. 11, § 18, in connection with county's bond issuance, so as to entitle property owner to enjoin levy and collection of special tax to supply bond retirement fund, since section 22 of 1921 Act makes bonds payable exclusively out of road district improvement fund, without liability on part of county, and provides for levy of special assessment tax in amount sufficient to pay principal and interest.

2. Dedication ⚿19(1), 35(3)—Making and recordation of maps showing streets, constituted dedication to public, which was impliedly accepted by supervisors ordering improvement work.

Making and recordation of maps on which streets were shown constituted offer of dedication to the public, which was impliedly accepted by the public by ordering of improvements and paving work by board of supervisors, and completion thereof before offer of dedication had been withdrawn.

3. Highways ⚿135—Assessment for street improvements held valid, though assessment was equal to market value of property (Street Improvement Law 1907 as amended by St. 1921, p. 312).

County's assessment against property of special tax to supply fund for retirement of bonds maturing under street improvement proceeding, pursuant to Street Improvement Law (St. 1907, p. 806), as amended by St. 1921, p. 312, held valid, though assessment was not only equal to assessed value of property, but equal to its market value; defects in proceeding being no defense in view of sections 19, 20, 23 of 1921 act.

4. Highways ⚿148—Property owner could not, in injunction suit, assert county's favoritism in fixing boundaries of assessment district, or attack amount or inequality of assesssment, where all jurisdictional steps were followed (Street Improvement Law 1907, as amended by St. 1921, p. 312; St. 1921, p. 312, §§ 19, 20, 23).

Where all jurisdictional steps were followed by county in levying special assessment under Street Improvement Law (St. 1907, p. 806), as amended by St. 1921, p. 312, property owner could not, in injunction suit, assert favoritism in fixing boundaries of the district, or attack the amount or inequality of the assessment under sections 19, 20, 23 of 1921 act.

Appeal from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; A. B. McKenzie, Judge.

Action by the San Francisco Sulphur Company, substituted in the place of the Pacific Sulphur & Chemical Company, against the County of Contra Costa. From a judgment of dismissal, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Marvin C. Hix, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Heller, Ehrman, White & McAuliffe, of San Francisco, A. B. Tinning, of Martinez, and F. Whitney Tenney, of San Francisco, for respondent.

Morgan V. Spicer and Vincent Surr, both of San Francisco, amici curiæ.

PRESTON, J. The second amended complaint filed February 20, 1926, shows this action to be one by plaintiff as a property owner against the county of Contra Costa to enjoin the levy and collection of a special tax designed to supply a bond fund to retire a quota of the bonds maturing under a street improvement proceeding begun by the said county under the Street Improvement Law of 1907, as amended by the statutes of 1921, p. 312, c. 232. To said complaint, which was supplemented by additional allegations, a demurrer was interposed by said county. Thereafter a hearing upon the said demurrer was had, and the court sustained the same without leave to amend, and on the 26th day of August, 1927, judgment of dismissal passed in favor of said county, from which plaintiff has appealed.

Appellant assigns three grounds of error. First, that the action of the board of supervisors of said county in creating an assessment district and in causing the improvement to be made therein and in issuing the bonds in payment therefor violated section 18, article 11, of the state Constitution; second, that the action of the county in this behalf was also void, because a large portion of the improvement made was upon private property and not upon public thoroughfares; and, lastly, that said tax was so discriminatory in its operation as to be void for this reason.

Appellant meets at the outset the provisions of sections 19 and 20 of the act (Stats. 1921, p. 324, 325) to the effect that, failing to protest at the time of the completion of the work, the "decision and determination of said board of supervisors * * * shall be final and conclusive as to all matters determined at said hearing and as to all errors, informalities, irregularities, or omissions which said board of supervisors might have avoided or remedied during the progress of the proceedings, or which it can at that time remedy, upon all persons entitled to be heard before said board on said matters, and no bonds and assessment or tax thereafter levied for the payment of the bonds to be issued for said work and expenses shall be held invalid by any court for any error, informality, omission or other defect in the proceedings where the resolution of intention has been actually published as in this act provided, before the said board shall have ordered the work to be done."

And appellant must meet also section 23 of the act (Stats. 1921, p. 327), which reads as follows: "Said bonds by their issuance shall be conclusive evidence of the regularity of all proceedings prior thereto under this act, and after the same are issued, no tax levied or collected for the purpose of paying the principal or interest on said bonds shall be held to be illegal or set aside or refunded by reason of any informality, irregularity, omission or defect in any of the proceedings prior to the issuance of said bonds, nor shall any action or proceeding be thereafter commenced or maintained to cancel or set aside said bonds, or to prevent the payment thereof, or the levy or the collection of a tax for such payment."

[1] Appellant's points will now be considered in the order named. Section 18 of article 11 of the Constitution, so far as here involved, reads as follows: "No county * * * shall incur any indebtedness or liability in any manner or for any purpose exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for such year. * * *" Without the assent of the electors voting at an election to be held for that purpose. Admittedly, if the tax here in question may be said to be an indebtedness or liability of the county of Contra Costa, such liability will exceed the current income and revenue for the year in question. But it is our view that the said provision is in no sense applicable to paving and other improvement work done under said act of 1907 as amended in 1921. Under the interpretation as claimed, a vote of the electors would be required in every undertaking of any considerable extent.

It will be noted that the plan provided for in said act is that the supervisors of the county shall act legislatively and as agents of the property owners benefited by the proposed work. The board fixes the boundaries of the district comprising the property believed to be benefited, and takes the lead in securing plans and specifications for the paving, the awarding of the contract, the superintendence of the construction, the acceptance of the work when completed, and the issuance of the bonds to pay for same. But in all these proceedings the county incurs no liability whatsoever, unless it specifically agrees to donate to the cost of the work. The cost of the proceedings is borne by the property benefited. The resolution of intention provides that, for the costs and expenses of the work, bonds will be issued, and that a certain portion of the principal will be payable annually, and that a special fund for the payment of said bonds will be created by the levy of special assessment taxes upon the land in the district described in said resolution.

Section 22 of the act (Stats. 1921, pp. 326, 327) provides the form of the bond, and, so far as material here, the provision is as follows: "* * * This bond is payable out of road district improvement fund number * * * exclusively, * * * and neither said county nor any officer thereof shall be holden for its payment otherwise; but in accordance with said act the Board of Supervisors * * * will annually, at the time of levying other taxes, levy upon all the land in said road improvement district a special assessment tax in an amount clearly sufficient to pay the principal and interest of said bonds as the same shall become payable. * * *" Under a fair construction of this provision of the Constitution not only is a debt or liability in excess of the current revenue not incurred, but no debt or liability is in point of fact incurred by the county. While there is no express California authority on the question, this construction was evidently conceded by the court and parties litigant in the recent case of City of Pasadena v. McAllaster (Cal. Sup.) 267 P. 873, wherein it is said: "It is admitted by the parties that if no municipally owned property be included in the assessment district no questions may arise concerning the constitutional debt limit or the charter tax limit." See the principle considered in People v. Pacheco, 27 Cal. 175, 207.

This question, however, has been the subject of discussion in many of the other states of the union, where the rule appears to be practically uniform as follows: "Contracts by a municipality for local improvements, the cost of which is to be borne by the property benefited, form no part of the indebtedness of the municipality within a constitutional limitation thereof. Therefore the municipality has a right to contract for the improvements although their cost, added to existing indebtedness, exceeds the debt limit." Note 33 A. L. R. page 1415, where decisions from many states are cited. A later note to the same effect is found in 41 A. L. R. p. 797.

Counsel cites Schuster v. City Council of City of Oakdale, 180 Ky. 760, 203 S. W. 715, to the contrary, but in this he is mistaken, for in that case the city actually pledged its credit to the payment of the bonds. The decisions of the state of Kentucky are in point of fact in line with the holding here announced, as will appear from examination of the following cases: German Nat. Bank v. Covington, 164 Ky. 292, 175 S. W. 330, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 189; Tartar v. Skaggs, 184 Ky. 58, 211 S. W. 203. A case exactly parallel with the case at bar is City of Bainbridge v. Jester, 157 Ga. 505, 121 S. E. 798, 33 A. L. R. 1406. See, also, Quill v. City of Indianapolis, 124 Ind. 292, 23 N. E. 788, 7 L. R. A. 681. The case of Chester v. Carmichael, 187 Cal. 287, 201 P. 925, is not in conflict with these views.

[2] We next pass to the contention that the improvements were made upon property not in fact public thoroughfares, because not dedicated to the public use. We have no hesitancy whatever in holding that under the allegations of said complaint appellant is in no position to attack the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the action of the board of supervisors in improving these thoroughfares as public streets. The contention of appellant is that, as to some of the subdivisions described in the district, the recorded maps of such subdivisions which named streets and thoroughfares were not accepted by the board of supervisors, but, on the contrary, acceptance had been denied, and that, as to others thereof accepted, the acceptance though granted was not indorsed upon the maps. It is plain that the making and recordation of these maps was an offer of dedication to the public of these spaces as thoroughfares and public streets. It is also clear from the complaint that no withdrawal of said offer of dedication has ever been made. The mere ordering of the work "done" and the completion thereof by the board of supervisors is, therefore, an implied acceptance of the offer of dedication. Neither party could thereafter successfully contend that the thoroughfares were anything other than public streets. While it is true that the statutory proceedings for express dedication were not literally complied with, ample appears to show that an implied acceptance of dedication offer was made by the board. Wolfskill v. County of Los Angeles, 86 Cal. 405, 24 P. 1094; People v. County of Marin, 103 Cal. 223, 227, 37 P. 203, 26 L. R. A. 659; Davidow v. Griswold, 23 Cal. App. 188, 137 P. 619. In the case of Spaulding v. Wesson, 115 Cal. 444, 47 P. 249, relied upon by appellant, there was no offer of dedication on behalf of the property owner and nothing to show that either an express or implied offer to dedicate had ever been made. In the case of County of Inyo v. Given, 183 Cal. 415, 191 P. 688, the offer of dedication was withdrawn before the act claimed as an acceptance occurred, and moreover said act was not one that legitimately tended to show acceptance.

[3, 4] The last point made by appellant that the discrimination against plaintiff is so great that the proceeding is void for that reason is untenable under the recent holding of this court in Municipal Imp. Co. v. Thompson, 201 Cal. 629, 637, 258 P. 955, where in a situation almost exactly parallel with this, to wit, where the assessment was not only equal to the assessed value but equal to the market value of the property, the assessment district was sustained, and this too before a contract to let the work had been entered into. See authorities cited in said case. Moreover, inasmuch as all jurisdictional steps were followed, appellant may not be heard now collaterally upon such questions as favoritism in fixing the boundaries of the district or the amount or inequality of the assessment. See Noyes v. Chambers & DeGolyer, 202 Cal. 542, 544, 261 P. 1006; Blake v. City of Eureka, 201 Cal. 643, 258 P. 945; Watkinson v. Vaughn, 182 Cal. 55, 58, 186 P. 753; Chase v. Trout, 146 Cal. 350, 357, 80 P. 81.

Filing of notice of appeal 70 days after entry of interlocutory divorce decree was timely, where no notice of entry of judgment was served on defendant; such failure extending time for decision on motion for new trial and filing of notice of appeal far beyond such time, under Code Civ. 2. Appeal and error 🔑345(1)—New trial proceedings were duly initiated, though memorandum was not served and filed within 10 days after filing notice of intention (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 660, 939; Superior Court Rule 20, subd. 5).

New trial proceedings were duly initiated, so as to extend time for filing notice of appeal 30 days from termination thereof, under Code Civ. Action by Maude C. Bellew against J. D. Bellew. Decree for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. On motion to dismiss the appeal. Motion denied.

J. D. Bellew, in pro. per.

Kemper Campbell and Chas. L. Nichols, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHENK, J. The respondent has moved to dismiss the appeal herein on the ground that the appeal was not taken within the time prescribed by law. The action is one for divorce. An interlocutory decree of divorce was granted to the plaintiff and was entered on August 16, 1928. No notice of entry of judgment was ever served on the defendant. The defendant served his notice of intention to move for a new trial on August 21, 1928, and said notice was filed on August 22, 1928. The memorandum of points and authorities required by subdivision (5) of rule 20 of rules regulating business of the superior court, effective August 1, 1928, to be served and filed within 10 days after the filing of notice of intention to move for a new trial, was not served or filed. On October 25, 1928, without any further steps in the new trial proceedings, the defendant filed his notice of appeal.

[1] The respondent contends that the effect of a noncompliance with the provisions of said subdivision (5) of rule 20 was that the new trial proceedings were not duly initiated, and therefore that the time within which the appeal might have been taken was not extended 30 days from any termination in the trial court of the new trial proceedings, and that the notice of appeal should have been filed within 60 days from entry of judgment. Code Civ. Proc. § 939.

If, nothwithstanding the rule, the new trial proceedings were duly initiated, then the notice of appeal was unquestionably filed in time, for the failure to serve notice of entry of judgment had the effect of extending the time within which the trial court might pass on the motion for a new trial and of extending the time for the filing of the notice of appeal far beyond the time when it was actually filed. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 660, 939; Gross v. Hazeltine (Cal. Sup.) 273 P. 550.

[2, 3] We think the existence of the rule and noncompliance with the requirement thereof, as shown, did not have the effect contended for by respondent. Under the rule in force at the time no penalty was prescribed for its violation and its provisions must be deemed to have been directory only. As amended (rule 19, sub. 4, effective February 1, 1929), the rule provides as a penalty for its violation an abandonment by implication of the right to argue the motion.

We conclude that the new trial proceedings were duly initiated within the meaning of the decisions in Estate of Bergland, 177 Cal. 227, 228, 170 P. 400, and Gross v. Hazeltine, supra.

The motion to dismiss the appeal is denied.

MELVIN v. CARL et al. (L. A. 11035.)

Supreme Court of California. March 30, 1929.

1. Appeal and error 🔑783(2)—Failure to file memorandum supporting motion for new trial held not ground for dismissing appeal (Superior Court Rule 20, subd. 5; Code Civ. Proc. § 939).

Failure to file memorandum of points and authorities, required by Superior Court Rule 20, subd. 5, to be filed within 10 days after filing notice of intention to move for new trial, held not ground for dismissal of appeal for failure to file notice thereof within 60 days after entry of judgment, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 939, where new trial proceedings have not been duly initiated.

2. New trial 🔑155—Failure to set motion for new trial for hearing within 50 days after service of notice of judgment entry would not prevent ruling on motion within two months (Superior Court Rule 20, subd. 5; Rule 19, subd. 4; Code Civ. Proc. § 660).

Noncompliance with superior court rule 20, subd. 5, readopted as rule 19, subd. 4, requiring that motion for new trial be set for hearing within 50 days after service of notice of entry of judgment, would not divest trial court of jurisdiction to pass on motion at any time within two-months period prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 660; penalty implied by rule being to permit denial of motion by operation of law.

3. Courts 🔑92—Opinion that notice of motion for new trial, which was found sufficient, must substantially comply with statute, held dicta (Code Civ. Proc. § 659).

Declaration in Supreme Court opinion that trial court has no jurisdiction to entertain motion for new trial, unless notice of intention is given substantially as prescribed by Code, held dicta, not determinative of question whether appeal should be dismissed, because such notice did not state whether motion would be made on affidavits, court minutes, or both, as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 659, where notice involved in such case was found sufficient.

4. Appeal and error 🔑783(2)—Failure of notice to state whether motion for new trial would be made on affidavits or court minutes held not ground for dismissing appeal (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 659, 939).

That notice of intention to move for new trial did not state whether motion would be made on affidavits, court minutes, or both, as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 659, held not ground for dismissal of appeal; proper course being for trial court to deny motion or dismiss proceedings, which would constitute termination thereof, within section 939.

Action by Martha E. Melvin against Ida M. Carl, executrix of the estate of Fred W. Carl, deceased, and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. On motion to dismiss the appeal. Motion denied.

Robert Shippee and C. C. Caswell, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Lucian J. Clarke, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHENK, J. The respondents filed a motion to dismiss the appeal herein on the ground that the same was not taken within the time prescribed by law. Judgment in the action was entered on July 23, and notice of entry of judgment was served on July 27, 1928. Plaintiff served and filed her notice of intention to move for a new trial on August 1, 1928. The motion was noticed to be heard on September 26, 1928, and was called for hearing on that day. The motion was opposed on the grounds (1) that the notice of intention to move for a new trial was defective because it did not state whether the same would be made upon affidavits or the minutes of the court or both, as provided by section 659 of the Code of Civil Procedure; (2) that the motion was not set to be heard in compliance with subdivision (5) of rule 20 of the rules regulating business of the superior court, effective August 1, 1928, which required that the motion shall be set for hearing not later than 50 days after service of notice of entry of judgment; and (3) that the memorandum of points and authorities required by said subdivision (5) of rule 20, as then in force, to be filed within ten days after the filing of the notice of intention to move for a new trial had not been filed. The trial court denied the motion for a new trial, and on October 5, 1928, the plaintiff served and filed her notice of appeal.

The respondents contend that the grounds of opposition to the granting of the motion for a new trial made to the trial court are sufficient grounds for the dismissal of the appeal for the reason, as contended, that the requirements of the statute and rule are mandatory, and unless complied with the trial court had no jurisdiction to entertain the motion; that the new trial proceedings therefore have not been duly initiated; and that the time within which the notice of appeal should have been filed was the 60-day period, commencing from the entry of judgment, as provided by section 939 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[1, 2] The third ground for the motion to dismiss the appeal is disposed of by our decision in the case of Bellew v. Bellew (L. A. No. 11106) 276 P. 573, this day filed. As to the second ground, it will be noted that in the rule as originally adopted and effective August 1, 1928, and as readopted (rule 19, subdivision 4, effective February 1, 1929, and applicable only to counties having nine or more judges), no specific penalty was or is provided for failure to set the motion for hearing not later than 50 days after the service of notice of the entry of judgment. The obvious purpose of the rule is to have the motion for a new trial set down for hearing at a time sufficiently in advance of the expiration of the two-months period prescribed by section 660 of the Code of Civil Procedure to enable the trial judge properly to consider and act upon the motion and avoid a denial thereof by operation of law. The penalty plainly implied by the rule is that, if the motion be not set down for hearing within the provided time, the noncompliance with the rule would operate as a good and sufficient reason or justification for the trial court to permit the motion to be denied by operation of law. In any event the failure to comply with the rule would not divest the trial court of jurisdiction to pass upon the motion at any time within the full two-months period.

[3, 4] The final ground urged for a dismissal of the appeal presents a more difficult problem. The effect of informalities and defects in a notice of intention to move for a new trial has frequently been considered by our appellate tribunals. See Hoover v. Wolfe, 167 Cal. 337, 139 P. 794, and cases cited; Hughes v. Alsip, 112 Cal. 587, 590, 44 P. 1027; Truitner v. Knight, 78 Cal. App. 508, 248 P. 702; Cormond v. United Railroads, 41 Cal. App. 683, 183 P. 218; 20 Cal. Jur. p. 178. From an examination of the cases it will be seen that defects in the notice have often been held fatal on an appeal involving the ruling on the motion. Yet, so far as we have been able to ascertain, it has never been held that a defective or informal notice has had the effect of depriving the party intending, as here, in good faith to move for a new trial, of the right to delay the filing of his notice of appeal until after the termination of the new trial proceedings. We are aware that in the case of O'Connell v. Main & Tenth St. Hotel Co., 90 Cal. 515, at page 518, 27 P. 373, the court declared itself in agreement with the contention of the respondent that the trial court had no jurisdiction to entertain the motion for a new trial unless the notice of intention was given substantially as prescribed by the Code. However, the notice of intention involved in that case was found to be sufficient. The declaration of the court on the question of jurisdiction was therefore not necessary to the decision. We incline to the view, and therefore hold, that if the notice of intention to move for a new trial be not substantially as prescribed by the statute, the proper course to be pursued is for the trial court either to deny the motion or to dismiss the proceedings. Such denial or dismissal would constitute a "termination in the trial court of the proceedings upon such motion" as contemplated by section 939 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the time for filing notice of appeal would run from such denial or dismissal.

The motion is denied.

(L. A. 8976.)

Appeal and error 🔑781(6)—Appeal will be dismissed as moot where appellant had filed formal waiver of further right to prosecute it.

Appeal in suit to cancel land contract will be dismissed as having become moot, where appellant deposited quitclaim deed to respondents together with formal receipt and satisfaction of all claims which appellant might have against respondents and formal waiver of any further right to prosecute appeal.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; C. P. Vicini, Judge.

Suit by Joe Cappellino and another against L. M. Moore and others to cancel a contract for the sale and purchase of real property. Judgment for plaintiffs, and named defendant appeals. Appeal dismissed.

L. M. Moore and I. Henry Harris, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Andreani & Haines and Dana R. Weller, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. This appeal is from a judgment of the superior court in and for the county of Los Angeles, made and entered in the plaintiffs' favor, canceling a certain contract which had been entered into between the parties to this action for the sale and purchase of a certain tract of land, by the terms of which the defendant and appellant Moore had agreed to purchase and to make certain installment payments upon the purchase price of said land. Having failed to make payment of certain of these installments plaintiffs elected to declare a forfeiture of the contract and to procure a cancellation thereof by means of this action. Upon the trial of the cause upon the issues framed by the pleadings the trial court made its findings in favor of the plaintiffs and thereupon entered the judgment, from which this appeal was taken. The date of the entry of the judgment was July 11, 1925, and the date of the defendant's appeal therefrom to this court was August 7, 1925. The opening brief of the appellant was filed on January 4, 1926. No respondents' brief having been filed, this court on November 2, 1928, issued and caused to be served upon counsel for the parties to this appeal an order to show cause why the respondents' brief had not been filed and why this court should not make such order as should be meet in the premises.

In response to this order counsel for the respondents presented an affidavit, which set forth in substance that on or about April 26, 1926, they had entered into a contract with one Hersie Mau for a sale of a portion of the property involved in this action, and as part of the consideration of such sale the respondents had agreed with said Hersie Mau to credit on account of the purchase price certain moneys which had theretofore been paid to and accepted by the appellant L. M. Moore; that said L. M. Moore and one P. M. Reidy had participated in the execution of the contract above referred to; and that as a condition to the execution of said contract the respondents herein had demanded that Hersie Mau and his associates procure a quitclaim deed to all the property involved in this action from said L. M. Moore and a release of any and every claim which said L. M. Moore might make against the respondents, and also a dismissal of this appeal; that the papers containing the foregoing stipulation were deposited in escrow on said date with the Merchants' National Trust & Savings Bank of Los Angeles for the purpose of delivery upon the completion of the escrow through the deposit of said quitclaim deed and release and of a formal dismissal of this action; that on or about the 2d day of July a quitclaim deed from said L. M. Moore to the respondents was so deposited, together with a formal receipt and satisfaction of any and all claims and demands which said L. M. Moore might have or make against the respondents, and also a formal waiver of any further right to prosecute this appeal. Thereupon the escrow was closed, and counsel for the respondents supposed that this appeal had been dismissed, and for that reason presented no respondents' brief therein. In response to this affidavit the appellant caused to be filed an affidavit wherein the facts of the creation of said escrow and of the making and execution by appellant of said quitclaim deed and acquittance and waiver of this appeal were admitted, but affiant deposed that he had never received the benefits to which he would have been entitled under said escrow and that the same had never been closed in such manner as to entitle him to receive such benefits, and hence that his quitclaim deed and acquittance were ineffectual, and that this appeal should not be dismissed. Upon the submission of said order to show cause certain other affidavits were presented by the respective parties, bearing upon the question as to whether or not the said escrow had been closed in accordance with the spirit and intent of those who were parties thereto, and whether as the result thereof said deed, acquittance, and waiver of this appeal had been duly delivered to the respondents herein. Without reciting the content of these affidavits in detail we are satisfied that they sufficiently show that said escrow and the transaction to which it related were duly completed during the month of July, 1926, and that thereupon the respondents became entitled to and actually received the delivery of the appellant's quitclaim deed, acquittance, and waiver of this appeal. Whether or not the appellant received all or any of the anticipated benefits arising from the execution and delivery of said documents are or may be matters of controversy between himself and those certain parties who were interested with him in said transaction, but are of no concern to the respondents herein as to whom the appellant by virtue of the execution and delivery in due course of said documents fully waived all of his claims and demands against the respondents as set forth in his pleadings and proofs in this action, and also fully waived and abandoned his rights under this appeal.

This being so, it appears that by virtue thereof this appeal has become moot, and upon the hearing to show cause issued by this court herein and the showing made thereon, it is hereby ordered that this appeal be and the same is hereby dismissed.

KUHLKEN et al. v. MANGINI et al.

Supreme Court of California. April 9, 1929.

New trial ⚷159—Judge sitting in place of judge hearing case properly declined to rule on motion for new trial, evidence not being written up.

Judge sitting in place of judge hearing case properly declined to make order on motion for new trial, and ordered motion dropped, where testimony taken upon trial of action had not been written up by reporter, and no request had been made that it should be written up, and the two months' period provided for in Code Civ. Proc. § 660 limiting court's power to pass on motions for new trial expired three days later.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. D. Murphey and Edward W. Engs, Judges.

Action by Anna Mary Ernest Kuhlken and others against Maria Mangini, individually and as administratrix of the estate of Luigi Mangini, deceased. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

R. M. F. Soto, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Jas. T. O'Keefe, of Redwood City, and J. A. Kennedy and Raymond Salisbury, both of Oakland, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. The plaintiffs have appealed from a judgment in favor of the defendants in an action to quiet title to certain real property described in the complaint, in which action a cross-complaint was filed by the defendant Maria Mangini in her individual capacity and as administratrix of the estate of Luigi Mangini, deceased. Upon the trial of the cause judgment was rendered and entered denying the plaintiffs the relief sought, and adjudging that the title to the property be quieted in favor of the defendants upon their cross-complaint. Thereafter the plaintiffs gave notice of intention to move for a new trial upon three grounds, namely: (1) Insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision; (2) that the decision is against law; and (3) errors of law occurring at the trial and excepted to by the plaintiffs. The notice of intention stated that the motion for new trial would be made upon the minutes of the court, and that the motion would be called for hearing on May 20, 1927. The cause had been tried and the judgment therein rendered by Hon. J. D. Murphey, judge of the superior court of Alameda county. Thereafter Judge Murphey was assigned to sit for a season in the District Court of Appeal in and for the Second Appellate District, sitting in the county of Los Angeles, and, when the plaintiffs' motion for a new trial came on for hearing on May 20, 1927, Hon. J. J. Trabucco was sitting in the place and stead of Judge Murphey in the superior court of the county of Alameda. The motion was continued on the calendar from May 20 to June 3, 1927, on which date Hon. Edward W. Engs, judge of the superior court of the county of Sierra, was sitting in the place and stead of Judge Murphey, and said motion coming on for hearing before him was again continued to June 10, and upon that date was again continued until June 24. Counsel for plaintiffs and defendants were present in court upon each occasion when these several continuances were had, and upon each occasion it was manifest that the motion was in no condition to be heard upon its merits, for the reason that the testimony taken upon the trial of the action had not been written up by the reporter, and that no request had been made by the plaintiffs that it should be so written up or presented to the judge presiding in said court upon each occasion when the motion came on to be heard. Upon several of these occasions the respondents offered in open court to stipulate for the submission of the motion upon briefs to be filed and for the transmission of such briefs to Judge Murphey, in order that he might act upon said motion. Counsel for the appellants, however, refused to enter into such stipulation, and the matter stood in the foregoing condition when the motion finally came on for hearing on June 24, 1927, when counsel for the respective parties were present and offered to submit the motion without argument to Judge Engs, who was then presiding in said court. In the absence of such argument and of the evidence taken at the trial, it is obvious that Judge Engs, who had not presided at the trial, and who was wholly unfamiliar with the evidence taken therein and with the rulings of the trial judge thereon, was utterly unable to act intelligently upon said motion. He therefore made the following order: "Counsel for plaintiffs present said motion and after statement of respective counsel and in the absence of J. D. Murphey, judge who presided at the trial of said action, and owing to the short time left to consider the said motion, the court not being fully advised in the law and premises declines to make a ruling and said motion is ordered dropped." The foregoing was the only order or ruling made upon the motion for a new trial or in any manner disposing of said motion. Three days later, however, the two months' period provided for in section 660 of the Code of Civil Procedure, limiting the power of the court to pass upon motions for new trial, expired, and, such motion not having been otherwise determined within said time, the effect thereof under said section amounted to a denial of the motion. After the expiration of said period, and within the time provided by law, the plaintiffs gave notice of appeal from said judgment and also gave notice of an appeal from the order made and entered on June 24, 1927, the substance of which is above set forth. Upon said appeals the plaintiffs caused to be prepared and filed a bill of exceptions, which relates wholly to their motion for a new trial and to the order made and entered therein from which the latter appeal was attempted to be taken, and in which bill of exceptions the facts above stated are substantially set forth.

The brief upon these appeals presented on behalf of the appellants contains no word of attack or criticism upon the integrity of said judgment, but is wholly devoted to the appellants' contention that they have suffered substantial injury through the order of Judge Engs, declining to take cognizance of the appellants' motion for a new trial for the reasons which are above set forth. There is no merit in the appellants' contention in the foregoing regard. By their own action or nonaction Judge Engs had been rendered unable at the time the said motion came finally before him for hearing to make any intelligent order in the premises, and he therefore properly declined to make said order. The effect of his declination in that regard was simply to leave the matter in a condition wherein section 660 of the Code of Civil Procedure would inevitably become effective in woking a denial of the plaintiffs' motion for a new trial in the absence of any further effort on the part of the plaintiffs to prosecute said motion or to provide for its submission upon the merits. They therefore suffered no further or other injury from the making and entry of said order than that which inevitably befell them when, by reason of their own passivity, the two months' period provided in section 660 of the Code of Civil Procedure was permitted to pass without the determination of the motion upon the merits.

The appellants having, upon their appeal from the judgment, presented no reason why the judgment should be reversed or why their motion for a new trial was not properly disposed of on the merits, the judgment and order herein are, and each of them is, affirmed.

PEOPLE v. KUDER et al. (Cr. 1757.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. April 10, 1929.

1. Licenses 🔑42(4)—Evidence as to sale of stock to incorporators who paid therefor with checks of corporation, leaving no bank balance in corporation's favor, held to show violation of Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673).

In prosecution for violating the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673), evidence that articles of incorporation and application for permit to sell stock stated that proceeds of sale of stock for full cash value would be devoted to purposes specified in articles of incorporation and permit was issued in conformity therewith, and evidence that incorporators issued stock to themselves and paid for same by checks of corporation in same amounts as stock, so that corporation had no bank balance at any time, showed violation of Securities Act and fraud on public.

2. Licenses 🔑42(4)—Attorney for corporation held shown to have participated in offense of issuing stock to himself and others without consideration (Corporate Securities Act).

In prosecution against incorporators for violation of Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673) by issuing stock of corporation to themselves without paying cash therefor to corporation, as required by application for permit to sell stock, evidence that defendant was attorney for corporation, organizing and signing articles of incorporation, reciting that he subscribed $100 and was stockholder to extent of one share, and evidence that defendant as secretary of corporation, had possession of records, was not entirely circumstantial, but was sufficient to show that defendant had knowledge of unlawful scheme and participated in offense.

3. Licenses 🔑42(4)—Application and permit to sell capital stock constituting original files offered by corporation commissioner through assistant held properly admitted in prosecution for violation of Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673; Code Civ. Proc. § 1918, subd. 6).

In prosecution against incorporators for violation of Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673) by issuing stock of corporation to themselves without paying cash therefor to corporation as required by application for permit to sell stock, application for permit and permit to sell stock were properly admitted in evidence, where auditor testified that he prepared records of corporation from official archives thereof and application and permit were stamped "Received State Corporation Department" and records were original files offered by corporation commissioner through one of his assistants and not required to be identified, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1918, subd. 6.

4. Licenses 🔑42(4)—Evidence that defendant, prosecuted for violating Corporate Securities Act, signed minutes of meetings and other documents, held sufficient to show he was secretary of corporation (Corporate Securities Act).

In prosecution against incorporators for violation of Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673) by issuing stock of corporation to themselves without paying cash therefor to corporation, as required by application for permit to sell stock, evidence that defendant signed minutes of meetings of board of directors as secretary and other documents and evidence identifying signatures as defendant's was sufficient to show that defendant was secretary of corporation.

5. Criminal law ⚷444—Corporate books and records of corporation signed by secretary held properly admitted in prosecution for violation of Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673).

In prosecution against incorporators for violation of Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673) by issuing stock of corporation to themselves without paying cash therefor to corporation, as required by application for permit to sell stock, books, and records, held properly received in evidence as official recitals of corporate acts and defendant's participation therein, where auditor testified that he examined books received from defendant, showing that records were signed by defendant as secretary and were in harmony with operations of corporation.

6. Criminal law ⚷444—Records of bank made in regular course of business and testified to by witness who was cashier when records were made held properly admitted in evidence (Corporate Securities Act).

In prosecution against incorporators for violation of Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673) by issuing stock of corporation to themselves without paying cash therefor to corporation as required by application for permit to sell stock, records of bank with which corporation did business held properly received in evidence, where bank cashier swore records were part of corporation's account, though he was not cashier at time records were compiled, but further testimony showed that records were made in regular course of business, and witness who was cashier when records were compiled testified to records.

7. Criminal law ⚷1144(13)—Records of bank made in regular course of business will be presumed correct (Corporate Securities Act).

In prosecution against incorporators for violation of Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673) by issuing stock of corporation to themselves without paying cash therefor to corporation as required by application for permit to sell stock, records of bank shown by evidence to have been made in regular course of bank's business, though not showing connection with bank on their face, but explained and read into record, will be presumed to have been correct and evidence taken as true.

8. Licenses ⚷18½—Corporate Securities Act is intended to protect stockholders and merchants dealing with corporation from loss (Corporate Securities Act).

Purpose of Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673) is to shield purchasing stockholders from fraud and to protect merchants and tradesmen who may deal with corporation from loss through extended credit.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Charles L. Allison, Judge.

J. M. Kuder and others were convicted of violating the Corporate Securities Act, and defendant Stephen Bedford appeals. Affirmed.

Raymond E. Hodge and William Guthrie, both of San Bernardino, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Warner I. Praul, of Los Angeles, for the People.

CRAIG, J. This case was before us on motion to dismiss an appeal by the People (People v. Kuder et al. [Cal. App.] 266 P. 337), and upon the merits of that appeal; the same being from an order granting a motion in arrest of judgment (People v. Kuder et al. [Cal. App.] 269 P. 198; Id. [Cal. Sup.] 269 P. 630).

It appears that during the month of July, 1925, a corporation named Fishelton Farms, Inc., was incorporated under the laws of this state by J. M. Kuder, Edward B. Fishel, U. R. Fishel, C. G. Luke, and Stephen Bedford, appellant herein. In August of the same year, by a petition verified by J. M. Kuder, filed with the commissioner of corporations, it was recited, among other things, that the corporation was organized with a capital stock of $25,000, divided into 250 shares of the par value of $100 each, which the incorporators agreed to subscribe and pay for in cash, and prayed leave to issue and sell the whole thereof to said incorporators at par, without payment of brokerage. A permit was thereafter issued, authorizing Fishelton Farms, Inc., a California corporation, to sell and issue to its five incorporators an aggregate of 250 shares of its capital stock at par, for cash, so as to net the applicant the full amount of the selling price thereof.

The appellant and his coincorporators were subsequently indicted by the grand jury of San Bernardino county, and charged with having violated the Corporate Securities Act, a felony. Specifically, they were alleged to have willfully, unlawfully, knowingly, fraudulently, and feloniously authorized and directed and aided in the issue and sale of, and caused and assisted in causing to be issued, executed, and sold, 246 shares of the capital stock of said corporation, without paying, remitting or delivering to the corporation, or demanding, obtaining, or receiving for and on its behalf, or paying, remitting, or delivering thereto, cash, so as to net it the full amount of the selling price of said shares as provided by the terms of the permit, with intent to avoid and violate the terms thereof, contrary to the uses and purposes to which the petition of the applicant had represented to the commissioner of corporations that the proceeds of sale should be applied. Briefly stated, the grand jury charged the defendants with having issued to themselves $24,600 worth of corporate stock without paying anything therefor, but for which they agreed, as a basis for obtaining a permit, and were accordingly directed to pay to the corporation full cash value at par. Pursuant to a trial upon the foregoing charges, a verdict was returned reciting that "the jury in the above entitled action, find the defendant guilty as charged in the indictment." The trial court, following the proceedings therein and in the appellate tribunals, as above recited, ruled that: "This is not a felony. They are guilty of a misdemeanor. They are not guilty of a felony. * * * I think the law is clear enough that the penalty determines the degree of the crime"—and assessed a fine of $500 in each instance, with the alternative of being imprisoned in the county jail one day for each $2 thereof. The defendant Stephen Bedford appealed "from the order * * * denying his motion for a new trial, and from the judgment rendered in this cause."

The appellant's argument is premised by quoting the indictment as a "statement of the offense," and a presentation of certain exhibits introduced upon the trial which it is asserted constitute all of the evidence against him. The exhibits in their numerical order, as introduced by the people, consist of the following: (1) A book entry showing assets in the nature of a poultry business in Indiana inventoried at $34,990, and one in California inventoried at $33,319.64; liabilities, $23,869.46; surplus, $44,440.18; and reciting that the poultry business was purchased from J. M. Kuder for $25,000 by Fishelton Farms, Inc., whose entire authorized capital stock of $25,000 was sold to the five incorporators for cash, with the agreement that the corporation should pay the liabilities above mentioned, all "as set forth in the following balance sheet," which latter does not exist. (2) Certain book entries showing credits to the corporation by issuance of stock, $24,600 to Kuder, and $100 to each of the other incorporators, with corresponding debits of like amounts appearing as cash in bank received from the same persons on the same date; also entries, "Purchase price $24,600," "Stephen Bedford, legal services, $100," and $100 to each of the other incorporators for services rendered. (3) Stock journal showing stock certificates issued, of which appellant received one share. (4) Minutes of directors' meeting, authorizing purchase of certain real and personal property from Kuder at $24,600 cash and promissory note of $12,000, and payments for services above noted. (5) Stock certificate book showing issuance of said shares. (6) Articles of incorporation. (7) Application of the corporation for permit; and (8) the permit to issue stock. (11) Five bank checks in favor of Kuder in the sum of $24,600, and $100 each to the other incorporators. (12) Ledger sheet, bearing entries to account of the corporation of a deposit of $25,000 on September 30, 1925, and issuance on the same date of the checks last mentioned, leaving "Balance .00," and deposit to the company's credit on October 2, 1925, of $6.10. (13) Loose-leaf ledger sheet account of Stephen Bedford, consisting of a deposit September 30, 1925, of $100 and corresponding withdrawal of the same amount by check on the same date, leaving "Balance, .00" (14, 15, 16). Like accounts of others of the incorporators, including J. M. Kuder, "deposit $24,600, checks $24,600, balance .00," on September 30, 1925. (17) "San Bernardino Valley Bank, Deposit of Fishelton Farms, Inc.," deposit slip of the same date last mentioned, of checks received from the incorporators, four of $100 each, and one of $24,600. (18, 19, 20, 21, 22) Five individual deposit slips, showing deposits in the same bank on the same date to their respective private accounts of similar amounts, including "Stephen Bedford 9—30—25 Check $100.00."

The case was prosecuted upon the theory that, as to appellant herein, a certificate for one share of stock for which he was required by the permit to pay cash was issued to him; that he deposited in an account wherein he had no funds, a check of the corporation for $100 which his coincorporators issued against its account which had no funds, and that appellant in turn gave to the corporation as an ostensible payment for his share of stock a personal check for $100, which merely offset the worthless check of the corporation. In short, it was contended by the People, and the evidence strongly tends to show without contradiction, that the whole purpose of the incorporators was to mulct the corporation of the entire issue of $25,000 in capital stock without payment of one dollar of cash or credit. The purported entries tend to indicate that appellant received $100 by check for legal services in incorporating the Fishelton Farms, Inc., which he deposited in its bank, and immediately checked out in its favor for his one share of capital stock. All of the respective accounts consist of contemporaneous credits and debits, in spite of which there were no funds ever in the possession of the bank, and it requires no degree of expert bookkeeping to reveal the fact that it received nothing and disbursed nothing through the checking system of the depositors, and the corporation received nothing for the certificate of stock issued to appellant.

No evidence was offered by the defendant Bedford, except through witnesses who testified to his previous good character, and through the briefs there is no attempted denial of the facts as herein recited.

[1] It is first contended that the Corporate Securities Act (St. 1917, p. 673) does not make it unlawful to pay to the corporation cash for its capital stock, or to use cash obtained from the sale thereof for purposes other or contrary to those recited in the application, or to issue or sell shares of stock without demanding or receiving cash for capital stock; that it does provide that it is a crime to violate any provision of a permit; but that the permit here involved does not require that persons receiving its stock shall pay cash therefor to the corporation, or that the corporation shall use the cash so obtained for the uses and purposes recited in the application. It is sufficient answer to this argument, however, that the articles of incorporation specified the purposes of the corporation, its application for permit stated under oath that the proceeds of sales of stock for full cash value, at par, would be devoted to those purposes, and the permit itself was issued in pursuance and conformity with these and other documentary evidences of responsibility and good standing of the incorporators and of their fictitious creation, requiring that each share of stock should be issued and sold to the incorporators for the sum of $100, in cash, "so as to net the applicant the full amount of the selling price thereof." Since the corporation had no balance in the bank at its inception, and none after the stock was issued and disposed of, it results that the permit was flagrantly ignored and violated in its most essential requirement, and that the public, in dealing with a concern ostensibly having a cash capitalization of $25,000 on hand, would be compelled to resort for satisfaction of corporate obligations to the unexplained ultimate balance of $6.10, which was deposited after the evident "wash" had been consummated.

[2] It is argued, however, that appellant was not alleged to have been an officer or employee of the corporation, or to have been charged with the duty of participating in the issuance or sale of stock; that, although there was evidence that he was a director, and treasurer, and that he participated in meetings of directors which resolved that the stock should be sold for cash, this all tended to show compliance by him with the requirements of the permit, and that he cannot be held chargeable with knowledge of the contents of the accounts. The effect of this argument is that there is no evidence that appellant received the share of stock issued in his name, or that he took any part in the alleged violation of the terms of the permit. In this he attempts to rely upon People v. Blackman, 127 Cal. 248, 59 P. 573, which merely holds that books and records kept by a deceased accountant, over which it did not appear that the defendant had supervision or control, were not sufficient evidence of embezzlement of funds therein appearing to have been illegally converted. The record before us discloses that appellant was attorney for the Fishelton Farms, Inc., that he organized it, signed and acknowledged its articles of incorporation, stating that he subscribed $100, and that he was a stockholder to the extent of one share; that he prepared the application for permit to issue and sell the stock for net cash, stating therein that he was treasurer and a director, and making the articles of incorporation a part thereof. The by-laws of the corporation, which bear the legal form and phraseology creditable to an experienced lawyer, recite for the information of the corporation commissioner, "The treasurer shall receive and keep all the funds of the corporation and pay them out only on the check or warrant of the president countersigned by the secretary"; and are also made a part of the application. As secretary of the corporation, appellant had possession of its books and records, and delivered them to an auditor who examined them, and from whose testimony as a witness in the case the financial manipulations of the incorporators are detailed herein. We think the evidence from which the jury may have concluded that appellant participated in the offense, by aiding in the issuance of stock to himself as well as to others, without consideration and in violation of the permit, was ample. It was by no means wholly circumstantial, and in its entirety it cannot be said as a matter of law insufficient to convince an unbiased mind beyond a reasonable doubt that appellant as attorney for the others was cognizant of, and directed, the machinations of their unlawful scheme, and that he received stock of the corporation without paying for it.

[3] It is insisted that the application for permit and the permit to issue and sell the capital stock in question were improperly admitted in evidence over objections that they were incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, and that no foundation for their introduction had been laid. The auditor of the corporation commission testified that he had been such for two and a half years, that he made an examination and investigation of the books and records of the corporation in controversy, and that he had with him and was then and there producing the files of the Fishelton Farms, Inc., from the official archives of the Corporation Commission. The application and permit were stamped, respectively, "Received State Corp. Dept.," August 13, 1924, and September 5, 1925. Appellant contends that there is no provision in the statute authorizing the employment of an auditor by the commission, and that these documents were therefore not offered "by the original, or by a copy, certified by the legal keeper thereof," as provided by subdivision 6 of section 1918 of the Code of Civil Procedure, nor brought into court by a legal officer of that department. The witness swore, however, that they were the files of both the Sacramento and Los Angeles divisions of the department; that he knew one of them to be the application filed by Fishelton Farms, Inc., with the Corporation Commission, and that he knew the other to be the permit issued by that commission to said corporation. Section 16 of the statute authorizes the commissioner to employ such clerks and deputies as may be necessary to discharge the duties of his office, and, since the witness was admittedly employed as a bookkeeper or accountant, we are unable to perceive any ground for disqualifying him because he may have been an expert, or for doubting his knowledge of the genuineness of the records of his superior. Under the existing circumstances, the documents in controversy did not require certification by their legal keeper, since they were the original files, in the hands of a member of the department, regardless of the name by which such a clerk or deputy might be designated by the commissioner. There is no merit in this contention.

[4, 5] Appellant next contends that there is no legal evidence of the fact that he was secretary of the corporation, or that any of the corporate records comprising exhibits heretofore mentioned were its property, or were under his control, or were true and correct, and that they should not have been admitted over objections interposed upon the foregoing grounds. A witness, J. K. Culton, testified that, as an auditor employed by the corporation to examine its books, he received them from appellant, who then indicated that he had been secretary by stating that he had theretofore resigned from that office. The minute book bore appellant's name as such secretary, repeatedly signed to minutes of directors' meetings, and the journal and ledger contained entries of items recited earlier in this opinion which but for the absence of an actual money consideration exactly comport with the numbers of shares of stock and amounts of money set forth in the application for permit, a part of which are the articles of incorporation under oath of the incorporators, including Bedford. Whether or not appellant made the entries therein, or caused them to be made, that he was secretary, cannot under all of the evidence be seriously questioned, and that he was treasurer is borne out by the records of which he at times had custody and control. Hence he was at least responsible for their accuracy, and for the funds of the corporation as prescribed by the by-laws. Appellant's signature was identified upon certain exhibits by an expert, and as we have observed, all of their dates and other entries correspond without an exception with the objects, purposes, methods and interests outlined by the articles of incorporation signed by appellant, and which he concedes were properly received in evidence. That the records of the corporation were correct in every respect need not, and in many instances cannot, be established. Patrick v. Tetzlaff, 46 Cal. App. 243, 189 P. 115. However, appellant does not attempt to advance the theory that any of them were false, and, in view of many unavoidable facts and circumstances, we think they were properly received in evidence as official and genuine recitals of the corporate acts and of appellant's participation therein. It is asserted by appellant in his briefs that Culton's testimony was stricken out, but reference to the ruling discloses that only "the testimony of Mr. Culton as to Mr. Luke's signature," as secretary, to the minutes of a special meeting of September 30, 1925, was stricken from the record.

It is also advanced as a ground for reversal that the prosecution should first have shown as a foundation for the reception of such testimony and documentary evidence, that they were kept in the regular course of business, by persons having personal knowledge of the transactions, or by those who obtained such knowledge from memoranda regularly made by persons authorized and invested with the power and duty to furnish the latter.

As to the records of Fishelton Farms, Inc., it appears that the minutes of the corporate proceedings and entries of moneys claimed to have been received and expended, were obtained from the original incorporators who at convenient and appropriate intervals were officers in charge, custody, and control of them. That appellant organized the corporation is undisputed, and his name appears as the attorney who filed the application for permit. The application contained, as exhibits, a copy of the articles and by-laws. He delivered to an auditor, when asked for the records of Fishelton Farms, Inc., the books from which were taken the entries of items constituting the evidence before us, at that time admitting that he had been secretary, and no question appears to have arisen as to the authenticity of such entries. They reflect a complete consummation of the issuance and sale of the exact number of shares, and amounts of proceeds therefrom, outlined by the application to the corporation department. All of the exhibits bear the name of appellant as incorporator, director, secretary, and treasurer, and his only complaint is that the book entries were not admitted to have been made by him or under his direction. We think, however, that their former custody, and their perfect harmony, cause all of the exhibits to so completely dovetail that the disputed ones are, as evidence of corporate operations, inseparable from those which cannot be denied, and that they were clearly admissible.

[6, 7] The bank records also were properly received in evidence. The foundation was laid by two witnesses. The witness Thompson testified that he was cashier of the San Bernardino Valley Bank at the time of the trial, and produced a number of documents, later admitted in evidence and marked "12 to 22," inclusive, which he swore were parts of the corporation account with his institution. This witness, not having been cashier or otherwise having had supervision of the bank records at the time they were compiled, could do no more than state that they were such. However, it appears from the testimony of the witness Haubert that they were made in the regular course of business, by clerks and tellers who had been instructed as to the custom and methods of the bank when they were employed. He was placed upon the stand and completed the laying of the foundation by testifying that he was cashier and was in charge and control of the records during the period when they were made up. He had had charge and general supervision of the bank's working forces and accounts. Many of these exhibits indicate on their face their connection with the bank. Exhibits 12 and 13 do not so show, but the foundation for their introduction was laid as above indicated, and each was explained and read into the record. Under such circumstances they will be presumed to have been correct, and the evidence will be taken as true. People v. Woollacott, 80 Cal. App. 275, 251 P. 826.

[8] Both classes of exhibits might properly have been deemed by the trial court competent as parts of the res gestæ. They represented, as contended by appellant, honest transactions; but their fallacy lay in the fact that none of the moneys which they so represented had any existence. The purpose of the Corporate Securities Act is to shield the purchasing stockholder from fraud, and to protect merchants and tradesmen who may deal with the corporation from loss through extended credit. All of the statements, representations, book entries, and stock holdings, from the initial step in organizing the corporation to the time of auditing its accounts, tallied and harmonized, and were apparently regular. But the entries, sham and meaningless, were created by reciprocating deposits and withdrawals at the bank, without the use of funds, which perpetrated a fraud upon the public and upon the corporation department, and thus constituted a violation of the statute, since there was not the slightest prospect of financial security or return to the corporation or to its prospective constituents or creditors. The exhibits were therefore instruments by means of which the defendants accomplished the fraud at which the Corporate Securities Act is directed, and all of the evidence consisted of circumstances, facts, and declarations growing out of the main fact, contemporaneous with it, and serving to illustrate its character. Each case turns upon its own circumstances, and, while the evidence in the instant case was by no means entirely circumstantial, the fact of incorporation followed by uninterrupted insolvency, accomplished by interlacing credits and debits which were the cause, and a part of, the fraud, and were things done during the progress and accomplishment of the offense. Walker v. State, 137 Ga. 398, 73 S. E. 368; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Houchins, 125 Ky. 483, 101 S. W. 924; Hermes v. C. & N. W. Ry. Co., 80 Wis. 590, 50 N. W. 584, 27 Am. St. Rep. 69; Coffin v. Bradbury, 3 Idaho (Hasb.) 770, 35 P. 715, 95 Am. St. Rep. 37.

The jury and the trial judge had before them all of the facts and circumstances, observed the witnesses on the stand, and took the case as a whole. Under an instruction that neither of the defendants could be convicted upon circumstantial evidence alone, unless all of the circumstances concurred to show that the crime charged had been committed by him, excluding to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt every other conclusion than that of guilt, appellant was convicted. As heretofore stated, the evidence was not wholly circumstantial, and, upon the record before us we are satisfied that there was no prejudicial error or miscarriage of justice.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

LOBB v. BROWN et al. (Civ. 6562.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. April 1, 1929.

Rehearing Denied April 30, 1929. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court May 29, 1929.

1. Parties ⚷76(5)—Want of capacity to sue is deemed waived, unless objection thereto is taken by demurrer (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430, 434).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 434, objection to want of capacity to sue, apparent on face of complaint, is deemed waived, unless taken by demurrer in accordance with provisions of section 430.

2. Wills ⚷667—Legatee had legal capacity to bring action to enforce forfeiture against other legatees under provision of will forbidding contest (Civ. Code, § 2224).

Legatee had legal capacity to bring action against other legatees for purpose of having it declared that defendants held property received under decrees of partial distribution in trust for him, on ground that they had contested will in violation of provisions thereof, since, being the only party in interest in having forfeiture declared, he was in the same position as that of an heir suing distributee under will to impress constructive trust on property which legatee has received under conditions making him an involuntary trustee within Civ. Code, § 2224.

3. Pleading ⚷406(8)—Misjoinder of causes of action is deemed waived when not raised by either demurrer or answer (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 427, 430, 434).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 434, objection that there was a misjoinder of causes of action under sections 427 and 430 must be deemed to have been waived when such objection was not raised by either demurrer or answer.

4. Appeal and error ⚷193(2)—Defendant waiving objection to misjoinder of causes of action, by failing to raise objection by demurrer or answer, could not raise point on appeal (Code Civ. Proc. § 434).

Defendant having waived objections that there was misjoinder of causes of action in accordance with Code Civ. Proc. § 434, by failing to raise objection either by demurrer or answer, was in no position to raise such point on appeal.

5. Action 🔑50(1)—Joining legatees as defendants in action by other legatee to enforce forfeiture under will was not misjoinder of causes of action (Code Civ. Proc. § 379).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 379, to effect that any person claiming adverse interest in controversy may be made a party defendant, the joining of two legatees, in action by the other legatee to enforce forfeiture under provision of will forbidding contest, did not constitute a misjoinder of causes of action, in that all legatees were proper parties either as plaintiff or defendant.

6. Wills 🔑651—Clause providing for forfeiture in event of contest is valid.

Clause of will providing for forfeiture in the event of a contest of will by legatee is valid as within public policy.

7. Wills 🔑665—Payment of expenses and fees in contest of will was contest thereof within provision for forfeiture of legacy of those contesting will.

Legatee's payment of court expenses incurred in contest of will and payment of fees of contestant's counsel was a contest within provision of will providing for forfeiture of the legacy of those contesting will, though legatee did not appear as party of record to contest.

8. Trial 🔑396(7)—Finding contrary to admission of answer and to evidence must be disregarded.

Finding contrary to admission in answer to direct allegation of fact in complaint, and directly contrary to evidence, must be disregarded.

9. Wills 🔑667—Decrees of partial distribution did not prevent legatee from impressing trust on property obtained by other legatees pursuant to forfeiture provision.

Decrees of partial distribution of estate did not prevent legatee from impressing trust on property obtained by other legatees under decrees of distribution in accordance with provisions of will providing for forfeiture of interest of legatee contesting will.

10. Wills 🔑717—Legatees filing petitions for partial distribution agreed to abide by will and forfeit legacies in case of contest as provided therein.

Legatees filing petitions for partial distribution of property of estate must be deemed to have elected to stand by terms of will, and could not thereafter openly contest will without first restoring to estate property which they had procured under it, and must be deemed to have contracted to abide by terms of will and agreed that in case of contest they would forfeit their legacies in accordance with provision to that effect.

11. Appeal and error 🔑1178(6)—Evidence as to whether legatee contested will within forfeiture provision thereof required that cause be remanded for additional evidence.

Evidence as to whether legatee had contested will, within meaning of clause providing for forfeiture of legatee's interest in case of contest, held such as to require that the cause be remanded for purpose of taking additional evidence on the issue.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. D. Murphey, Judge.

Action by Harry W. Lobb against Frank Arthur Brown and another. From a judgment for defendants, and denial of a motion for order to set aside and vacate the judgment, and for entry of judgment in favor of plaintiff on the findings, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded on appeal from the judgment, and appeal otherwise dismissed.

Hadsell, Sweet & Ingalls, of San Francisco, and Earl Warren and Ralph E. Hoyt, both of Oakland, for appellant.

Byrne & Lamson and Knight, Boland & Christin, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

NOURSE, J. The plaintiff sued in equity to have it declared that the defendants held in trust for him properties which they had received under decrees of partial distribution under the estate of Mary Ellen Moore, deceased. The defendants had judgment, and the plaintiff has appealed upon typewritten transcripts.

Mary Ellen Moore died testate on August 14, 1920, in the county of Alameda. In her will she made a number of special bequests in which she bequeathed to the defendants both real and personal property. The seventeenth paragraph of her will devised all the residue to the two defendants and to this plaintiff, share and share alike. The eighteenth paragraph of the will reads as follows: "If any person named herein, or unnamed herein, shall institute proceedings in anywise contesting this my last will and testament, then I give, devise and bequeath to such person or persons the sum of one dollar ($1.00), and no more. In the event of any person named herein contesting this will, then the share of said person mentioned in this will shall go to the residuary legatees or legatee not contesting." Previous to making said will, and on the 4th day of April, 1910, Mary Ellen Moore had made another will wherein she bequeathed to these defendants certain specific legacies and left to them all the residue of her estate. On January 7, 1921, the two defendants received under a decree of partial distribution property valued at $103,926, and on July 20, 1921, they received under another decree of partial distribution additional property valued at $14,564.

Between the dates of these two decrees of partial distribution and on June 9, 1921, George J. Moore and certain named stepchildren of the decedent, Mary Ellen Moore, filed a contest directed solely to that portion of the 17th clause of the last will of Mary Ellen

Moore which bequeathed one-third of the residue of the estate to the plaintiff herein. Thereafter, and in August, 1922, this contest of the will came to trial, and the defendant herein, Frank Brown, secretly supplied witnesses, documentary evidence, and advice to the contestants and to their counsel, and the defendant Herbert Brown paid all the costs and expenses of the litigation for the contestants, including their attorney's fees.

On September 2, 1920, the will of Mary Ellen Moore was duly admitted to probate upon the petition of the plaintiff herein, who was named in said will as executor. Immediately thereafter, and on September 8, 1920, one of the law firms representing the defendants herein (but not the same attorneys who represent Herbert Brown on this appeal) filed in the offices of the county clerk of Alameda county their notice of appearance and demand for notices as such attorneys. This firm continued to act as the attorneys for these defendants throughout the proceedings of probate of said estate, applied for and conducted the proceedings leading up to the two decrees of distribution, and appeared for them openly and at the time of the trial in all the matters relating to the contest of the will on the part of George Moore and others heretofore mentioned. (The trial court found that this firm of attorneys was not authorized to appear at the trial of said contest on behalf of defendant Herbert Brown, and that said defendant had no knowledge that any member of said firm did appear at said trial, but the record evidence is all contrary to the finding, and the finding is directly contrary to the express admissions in Herbert's answer.) In this contest R. L. McWilliams appeared as attorney for the contestants. His entire fee for these services and all the costs of the contest were paid to him by a member of said firm of attorneys with moneys secured by him from Herbert Brown, one of the defendants herein. Following the trial of that contest and the judgment adverse to the contestants therein, and at the special urgence of this attorney, McWilliams took an appeal from said judgment, which was wholly financed through moneys paid to him by said attorney and obtained from Herbert Brown for that purpose. The activities of the defendant Frank Brown consisted mainly in supplying witnesses and documentary evidence to Mr. McWilliams during the course of the contest and in his attendance at the time of the trial, but manifestly the most substantial aid given to the contestants, other than supplying the funds, was that given by their counsel in filing their joint answer in which they failed to deny the allegations of the petition charging Lobb with undue influence in procuring the residuary bequest from Mrs. Moore, in his attendance at the counsel table during the course of the trial, in his encouragement and co-operation with Mr. McWilliams, and in his open declaration in court that, though appearing for the two contestees, "I have no hesitancy in saying that we would like to see the contestants succeed in this case," and that his clients had a financial interest in it if the contestants did succeed. The "financial interest" of the defendants in the contest of the will was this: Under a previous will executed by Mrs. Moore these two defendants were named as the only residuary legatees; if, therefore, the contestants were successful in defeating the portion of the will probated, it was agreed between them that they would offer the prior will for probate and thus secure for themselves the entire residue of the estate, except that, as Herbert Moore testified, the "understanding was that in case they (contestants) were successful in the contest they (contestants) were to receive $15-000."

With the exceptions noted and those hereinafter referred to, the trial court found all the foregoing facts to be true. Upon these findings the trial court drew the conclusions of law that the plaintiff had no legal capacity to sue; that there was a misjoinder of causes of action and a misjoinder of defendants; that the defendant Frank A. Brown did not institute proceedings or contest the will or any portion thereof; and that the plaintiff was not entitled to any judgment against either defendant. Following the entry of the judgment the plaintiff moved the trial court, in accordance with sections 663 and 664, Code of Civil Procedure, for an order setting aside and vacating the judgment, and for the entry of a judgment in favor of plaintiff upon the findings. This motion was denied, and an appeal was taken. This appeal is presented upon the same transcript with the appeal from the judgment.

[1, 2] At the outset the appellant attacks the conclusions of law touching the matter of procedure. He insists that the trial court was in error in concluding that he had no legal capacity to sue. We agree with his contention in this respect. Want of legal capacity to sue is a ground for special demurrer within the provisions of section 430, Code of Civil Procedure. When the want of capacity is apparent from the face of the complaint, and objection thereto is not taken by demurrer, it is deemed waived. Section 434, Code Civ. Proc.; Agricultural Extension Club v. Hirsch & Son, 39 Cal. App. 433, 435, 179 P. 430; Crittenden v. Superior Court, 166 Cal. 340, 345, 136 P. 287. The ground upon which the respondents seek to sustain this conclusion of law is that, because the appellant was the executor of the estate and the property in suit was estate property, he should have sued as an executor, and that he could not sue as an individual. Though the theory is wholly untenable, all the facts covering the relation of the appellant in his character as an executor, his interest as a residuary legatee, the proceedings in the estate by which partial distribution was made, and the manner in which the respondents secured possession of the property in suit appeared on the face of the complaint. If these facts would render the appellant incapable of suing in his individual capacity, that plea should have been made by special demurrer, and this was not done. But the appellant did have legal capacity to sue. The property had been in the possession of the executor and had gone out of the estate by means of decrees of distribution, which had become final. Neither the executor nor the probate court had any jurisdiction over the property thereafter. Estate of Baird, 181 Cal. 742, 744, 186 P. 351. By the terms of the will a contest on the part of the respondents herein forfeited their legacies to the appellant. The appellant was, therefore, the only party in interest in having such forfeiture declared. He is, therefore, in the same position as that of an heir who sues the distributee under the will to impress a constructive trust upon property which the distributee has received under such conditions as would make the distributee an involuntary trustee within the terms of section 2224, Civil Code. Such cases are numerous. Brazil v. Silva, 181 Cal. 490, 185 P. 174; Morgan v. Asher, 49 Cal. App. 172, 193 P. 288; Thompson v. Thompson (Cal. App.) 267 P. 375; McCabe v. Healy, 138 Cal. 81, 70 P. 1008. In support of their position respondents cite Holland v. McCarthy, 177 Cal. 507, 171 P. 421. The case is not in point. There the plaintiff sought to recover property alleged to have belonged to the decedent during her lifetime. The plaintiff, though an heir to the estate, was not the executor, and the court merely held that it was the executor's function to sue for this purpose. But it will be noted that the property had never gone through administration, as is the case here. The real ground upon which the decision rested was that a judgment in such a case in favor of an heir would be no plea in bar in an action against the same defendant for the same property brought by the executor of the estate. Estate of Clark, 190 Cal. 354, 212 P. 622, cited by respondents, merely holds that a judgment in an action between the administrator and another involving title to property claimed by the estate is binding upon an heir under the well-accepted rule that the administrator is the representative of the heirs in all such proceedings.

[3] The appellant complains of the findings that there was a misjoinder of causes of action, and that there was a misjoinder of parties defendant. In the discussions in the brief counsel have argued these two findings as though they presented but one issue. But they are separate issues and should be separately treated. The question of a misjoinder of causes of action takes us to section 427, Code of Civil Procedure, which provides what character of causes of action may be united in the same complaint, but section 430, Code of Civil Procedure, specifies the improper union of several causes of action as a ground for demurrer to the complaint, and section 434, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that, if no objection is taken, either by demurrer or answer, the defendant must be deemed to have waived the same; the objection by answer being permitted only when the matters enumerated in section 430 do not appear upon the face of the complaint. Here the objection on the ground that there was a misjoinder of causes of action was not raised by either demurrer or answer, and it must, therefore, be deemed waived. This has been the rule since Macondray v. Simmons, 1 Cal. 393, and further discussion of the point is unnecessary.

The objection on the ground that there was a misjoinder of parties defendant was not raised by demurrer by either party, and was not raised by answer or other plea on behalf of the respondent Frank Brown. Under the rule just cited this respondent must, therefore, be deemed to have waived the objection.

[4] As to the respondent Herbert Brown, he did make the objection in his answer that he was improperly joined with his co-respondent. Manifestly, if the misjoinder is apparent on the face of the complaint, objections should have been made by demurrer (section 433, Code Civ. Proc.), and, not having been so made, it could not have been raised in the answer. As far as we are able to understand the argument of counsel for Herbert Brown, it seems to be that he was prejudiced by the joinder of Frank as a party defendant, because the appellant was thereby enabled to bring before the court the activities of Frank which were alleged to have been made in behalf of the contestants of the will. This may have emphasized the evil committed by Herbert, but the cause of action framed by the complaint was that Herbert and Frank, admittedly represented in the contest by the same attorney, were working in concert for the purpose of defeating the will, one furnishing the money to enable their adversaries in the trial to prosecute the contest, the other furnishing evidence and information to their adversaries' counsel for the same purpose. That the appellant was unable to prove all these allegations does not support a finding that the respondents were improperly joined in that cause of action. But, aside from this, the complaint stated a good cause of action against Herbert Brown, and the evidence required a finding and judgment against him as we will hereafter point out. This being so, he cannot object that another has been joined with him against whom a cause of action may not have been proved. Frank Brown having waived the objection and thus consented to the joinder of Herbert is in no position to raise the point on this appeal, and, if it be Herbert's position at this time that his case should have been separated from Frank's because of his residence in another county, then he too has overlooked his legal rights during the course of the proceedings in the trial court. Gardner v. Samuels, 116 Cal. 84, 89, 47 P. 935, 58 Am. St. Rep. 135.

[5] Aside from the question of procedure in raising the objections, there is no merit in the point. The three parties were all beneficiaries under the same clause of the will which provided that, in the event that one or more should contest the will, his interest should go to the one or to those who did not contest. Thus, if appellant was right in his claim that both Frank and Herbert Brown contested the will, he would be the sole beneficiary under that clause and would be the sole party plaintiff in an action to have a trust declared with himself as the beneficiary. On the other hand, if one of the Browns contested and the other did not, then the one contesting would alone forfeit his interest in the estate, and in that event the appellant herein and the noncontesting Brown would be the beneficiaries under the will and under the trust which was sought to be established. They then would be the proper parties plaintiff, but, if one should fail to join as a party plaintiff, he would be both a proper and a necessary party defendant. This is so because of the rule that in an action to declare a trust in relation to particular property all those who are entitled to or claim to be entitled to any portion of the trust estate are proper parties defendant. Jenkins v. Frink, 30 Cal. 586, 89 Am. Dec. 134, O'Connor v. Irvine, 74 Cal. 435, 443, 16 P. 236.

Aside from the rule of these decisions, the right of the appellant to join both respondents as parties defendant is statutory. Section 379, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that, when any person claims an interest in a controversy adverse to the plaintiff or "who is a necessary party to a complete determination or settlement of the question," he may be made a party defendant. This, of course, is particularly applicable to all actions in equity such as we have here, because of the principle of public policy enforced in courts of equity "that a decree should finally and completely determine the rights which all persons have in the subject matter decided, so that the parties may safely obey and act upon the decree, and a multiplicity of suits or a circuity of proceedings may be avoided." 21 C. J. 258.

For the foregoing reasons we conclude that the trial court was in error in finding that the appellant here did not have capacity to sue, that there was a misjoinder of causes of action, and that there was a misjoinder of parties defendant. The finding that the attorneys appearing were not authorized to appear at the trial on behalf of the defendant Herbert Brown, and that said Herbert Brown had no knowledge that they did appear at said trial, is wholly unsupported by any evidence of any character, and is without force, because it was admitted in the answer of this defendant. The finding that the said Herbert Brown paid to the attorney for the contestants costs and attorney's fees expended in that contest, as well as the expenses of prosecuting an appeal therein, and that, when he did so, "he knew that said money was to be so used and thereafter he knew that the same was so used," was sufficient to support a judgment against said respondent Herbert Brown. The matter to be determined as to his interest is whether his codefendant, because of nonparticipation in the contest, should be held a joint beneficiary with the appellant in the share forfeited by Herbert. The finding or conclusion that Frank Brown did not contest the will is a mixed finding of fact and law, and, as we have reached the conclusion that the appellant is entitled to a new trial as to that issue, it will be necessary to relate the evidence covering his activities in the contest more at length.

On the merits of the controversy two questions present themselves for consideration: First, whether the acts of respondents or of either of them were sufficient to constitute a contest within the terms of the will, and second, whether, if this be so, the appellant should be permitted to follow the properties received by the respondents under the decrees of partial distribution and to hold the respondents or either of them as trustees of such property for his benefit.

[6] Clauses of this character, providing for a forfeiture in the event of a contest of a will, have long been approved by the courts of this state as within public policy. The reason for the rule is found in Estate of Hite, 155 Cal. 436, 441, 101 P. 443, 445 (21 L. R. A. [N. S.] 953, 17 Ann. Cas. 993), where the court said: "Experience has shown that even after the death of a testator, unexpected difficulties arise, technical rules of law are found to have been trespassed upon, contests are commenced, wherein, not infrequently, are brought to light, matters of private life that ought not be made public, and in respect to which the voice of the testator cannot be heard, either in explanation or denial, and as a result the manifest purpose of the testator is thwarted." In re Kitchen, 192 Cal. 384, 388, 220 P. 301, 302 (30 A. L. R. 1008), the Supreme Court in approving a similar clause in a will said: "The testatrix could give or refrain from giving; and could attach to her gift any lawful condition which her reason or caprice might dictate. She was but dealing with her own property and the beneficiary claiming thereunder must take the gift, if at all, upon the terms offered." In Donegan v. Wade, 70 Ala. 505, it was held that one David

Wade, Jr., was subject to the forfeiture under a similar clause of a will because he aided and abetted his sister in a contest of the will "that he was even bearing the expenses of the litigation, and advising in its management." In that case it was argued that Wade had not participated in the contest because he never appeared upon the records of the court as a contestant. But the court held that the steps taken by his sister constituted opposition to the unlitigated probate of the will "and the participation of David Wade, Jr., in such contest, was of the same character, however deficient in the candor of open resistance." The court further said in this opinion that to relieve him under these circumstances, and to visit the penalty of forfeiture upon his sister, would permit the law to place a premium upon artifice, and to suffer the just reproach of seeking after the shadow instead of the substance. It was said by the court to be a case for the application "of the principle, 'qui facit per alium, facit per se.'" In Re Stewart's Will (Sur.) 5 N. Y. S. 32, 35, one Mrs. Wetherell was a legatee under a will containing such a forfeiture clause. A contest was filed by others, and Mrs. Wetherell entered into an agreement with them providing that she was to receive her legacy without regard to the outcome of the contest. The court held that by this agreement she elected to disregard the terms of the will and to cast her lot with the contestants. In Kayhart v. Whitehead, 77 N. J. Eq. 12, 76 A. 241, the court enforced the forfeiture clause upon the ground that, while Mrs. Whitehead was in attendance of the case in open court, counsel stated to the court that he appeared to argue on her behalf against the admission of the will to probate. Moran v. Moran, 144 Iowa, 451, 123 N. W. 202, 30 L. R. A. (N. S.) 898, 903, is authority to the point that an attack upon a single clause of the will is a "contest" within the terms of the will providing for forfeiture in the event of a contest of the will.

[7] Respondents argue that the eighteenth paragraph of the will is aimed to penalize those who "institute proceedings" contesting the will, and that the facts here disclose that the contest was instituted without their knowledge. However, the same clause provides, "in the event of any person named herein contesting this will," then his share shall go to those not contesting. Manifestly, the payment of the court expenses incurred in the contest of a will and the payment of the fees of contestants' counsel, though the legatee does not appear a party of record to the contest, are acts contemplated by the testator in providing for a forfeiture of the legacy of those who contest the will. As was said in Estate of Hite, 155 Cal. 436, 443, 101 P. 443, 445 (21 L. R. A. [N. S.] 953, 17 Ann. Cas. 993), after referring to Smithsonian Institution v. Meech, 169 U. S. 398, 18 S. Ct. 396, 42 L. Ed. 793, the purpose of these clauses is "to prevent the implication of any of the technical rules of law to be employed to thwart his expressed wishes; it was to prevent all attacks upon his character, reputation, or sanity by dragging into publicity his private life, and it was equally to secure to the beneficiaries whom he named, the fruits of his bounty. When it appears that the effect of the legal action which a contestant has taken has been to thwart the testator in any of these most obvious purposes, can the party, who has deliberately and designedly taken such action, be heard to say that he has not contested? We think not."

[8] Here the trial court found that Herbert Brown paid through his attorney to McWilliams, the attorney for the contestants, the sum of $706.40, while the contest was in progress before the probate court for the payment of the expenses of the contest and of the contestants' counsel fees therein; that after the decision of the probate court adverse to the contestants he paid in the same manner to McWilliams the sum of $100 for the prosecution of an appeal therein; and that at the time he paid these moneys he knew that they were to be used and were used for those purposes. It is true, as pointed out by this respondent, that the court found that Herbert Brown stated to his counsel that these advances were made as loans to the contestants. There is no competent evidence to support this finding, but it is immaterial any way as these loans were made, as stated by Herbert Brown, without any arrangement or communication with the contestants, without any evidence of indebtedness, and without any promise or terms of repayment. They were just as efficient an aid to the contestants whether they be called "payments" or "loans." But the advancement of the necessary funds to finance the contest was not the only act on the part of this respondent. His attorney appeared in open court with the attorney for the contestants, aided him in procuring witnesses in support of the contest, stated in open court on behalf of both respondents that they desired the contestants to succeed, and that they had a financial interest in the matter if the contestants were successful, and thereafter urged the attorney for contestants to take an appeal from the judgment. It is true that the trial court found that no member of this firm was authorized to appear at the trial of the contest on behalf of Herbert Brown, and that Herbert Brown had no knowledge that any such attorney did appear at said trial, but this finding must be disregarded because the allegation of that fact in the complaint was admitted in Herbert Brown's answer, and furthermore, the finding is directly contrary to the evidence. The interest of this respondent is disclosed by his own testimony, which is that he had discussed with his attorney the probability of the contestants' success in voiding the portion of the will attacked, and that it had been agreed in that event that his attorney would on behalf of himself and Frank Brown offer an earlier will of Mary Ellen Moore for probate under the terms of which this respondent and Frank Brown would receive the entire residue of the estate. Also that it was understood that if the contestants were successful that the contestants would receive the sum of $15,000.

The activities of the respondent Frank Brown are of a somewhat different character. He admitted in his answer that the defendants (himself and Herbert Brown) paid all the costs and attorneys' fees of the contestants in the contest. He attended, with one exception, every session of the court during the trial of the contest, which lasted nine days; he knew that his attorney was sitting at the counsel table with Mr. McWilliams, attorney for the contestants, was suggesting questions to him, and otherwise aiding him in the contest; he took books, papers, and documents from the former home of the deceased and delivered them to the attorney for the contestants to aid him in the prosecution of the contest; he frequently met the attorney for the contestants prior to and during the trial, discussed the testimony which he could give at the trial, and brought other witnesses to the attorney for the contestants to aid in the contest. In consideration for this aid to them, the contestants, through their counsel, agreed that they would not oppose the probate of the former will of Mrs. Moore. The foregoing activities, which were established by competent evidence, would have supported a finding and conclusion by the trial court that Frank Brown had aided the contestants in their assault upon the will. In some respects, which are not necessary to detail here, the trial court found contrary to this evidence and drew the conclusion that Frank Brown did not contest the will, and for this reason a new trial will be necessary to determine that issue.

[9] It is argued on behalf of both respondents that, notwithstanding their asserted activities in support of the contest, the appellant cannot recover in this action, because the decrees of partial distribution have become final and are conclusive upon any attack of this nature. They cite numerous authorities to the effect that a decree of distribution in a probate matter is a conclusive determination of the meaning and effect of the will, and that it is not subject to collateral attack nor to be impeached by resort to the terms of the will. All these authorities are beside the mark. The appellant herein sues to impress a trust upon the property obtained under the decrees of distribution, and does not attack the decrees themselves. The rule is well stated in Simonton v. Los Angeles T. & S. Bank, 192 Cal. 651, 658, 221 P. 368, 370, where the court said: "The sanctity and immunity of a decree of distribution which has become final attaches to the decree itself and not to those who under it may have derived an unconscionable advantage through fraud, accident or mistake." The cited case quotes with approval from Silva v. Santos, 138 Cal. 536, 541, 71 P. 703, where the authorities are gathered and the rule followed that equity has jurisdiction to do justice to the injured and to follow the property obtained under a decree of distribution to the extent that the one wrongfully holding the property may be declared a trustee for the one rightfully entitled thereto. In other words, actions of this character are actions in rem to have it declared that one who has wrongfully procured property under color of a decree or judgment becomes a trustee for those to whom it rightfully belongs. The case is on a line with Brazil v. Silva, 181 Cal. 490, 185 P. 174; Estate of Walker, 160 Cal. 547, 549, 117 P. 510, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 89; 25 Cal. Jur. 150.

Though many of the cases just cited stress the point that the property was gained by "fraud, accident or mistake" so as to bring them expressly within the terms of section 2224, Civil Code, the power of a court of equity is not confined to a case of that character. The broader view is expressed in 1 Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence, § 155: "Constructive trusts are raised by equity for the purpose of working out right and justice. * * * If one party obtains the legal title to property, not only by fraud or by violation of confidence or of a fiduciary relation, but in any other unconscientious manner, so that he cannot equitably retain the property which really belongs to another, equity carries out its theory of a double ownership, equitable and legal, by impressing a constructive trust upon the property in favor of the one who is in good conscience entitled to it, and who is considered in equity the beneficial owner." This rule was approved in Teich v. San Jose, etc., Bank of Savings, 8 Cal. App. 397, 402, 97 P. 167. It has been followed generally by the authorities. The appellant applies the rule to the case before us, through the argument that the noncontest clause of the will was in effect a stipulation or contract on the part of the testatrix under which the legacies were made, and that when the legatees took the property under the decrees of distribution they consented to all the terms of the will, including this clause. That is to say, that they thereby contracted with the testatrix and the beneficiaries under the will that, in the event they should contest the will, they would forfeit their legacies in accordance with the terms of the will. From this it is argued that, having agreed to the terms of the will, they are in equity bound to relinquish the property which they procured under it, and that, having refused to do so, equity should declare that they hold the property as involuntary trustees for those who in equity are entitled to it. The argument is supported by many authorities holding that one who accepts a legacy which is given under conditions mentioned in the will thereby ratifies and accepts the conditions and is bound to give effect to all its provisions and to perform the burdens attached to its benefit. Moore v. Baker, 4 Ind. App. 115, 30 N. E. 629, 51 Am. St. Rep. 203; Shaver's Adm. v. Ewald's Exr., 143 Ky. 160, 136 S. W. 130; Van Schaack v. Leonard, 164 Ill. 602, 45 N. E. 982; Tripp v Nobles, 136 N. C. 99, 48 S. E. 675, 67 L. R. A. 449. The same principle is followed in Re Morrison, 29 Cal. 346, where it was said that he who accepts a benefit under a deed or will must adopt the whole contents of the instrument, conform to all its provisions, and renounce every right inconsistent with it. The principle underlying the rule of these authorities is stated in Holliday v. Perry, 38 Ind. App. 588, 597, 78 N. E. 877, 880, as follows: "The fact that the transaction was without fraud in its inception did not prevent its becoming fraudulent upon the subsequent refusal of appellee to perform his part of the agreement." The Indiana court in the same case stated the principle somewhat differently in its quotation from Story's Equity Jurisprudence: "Fraud, indeed in the sense of equity, includes all acts, omissions and concealments which involve a breach of legal or equitable duty, trust, or confidence, justly reposed, and are injurious to another."

[10] Respondents first filed their petition for partial distribution for portions of the property bequeathed them under the terms of the will. After having obtained this property the contest of the will was filed. Thereafter, the respondents filed another petition for further partial distribution, and obtained additional property through a decree which recited that this property was a "portion of the property to which the said petitioners are entitled under the will." The contest was then heard and determined, and thereafter the respondents filed their petition for a final distribution of the property claimed by them under the will. Under these circumstances the respondents must be deemed to have elected to stand by the terms of the will. They could not, therefore, openly contest the will without first having restored to the estate the property which they procured under it. Holt v. Rice, 54 N. H. 398, 20 Am. Rep. 138. They must, therefore, be held to have contracted to abide by the terms of the will and to have agreed that, if they did contest it, they would forfeit their legacies under it. If, therefore, the acts here proved constituted a contest of the will on their part, they are now holding property which in equity and good conscience they are not entitled to, and their acts are a fraud upon the testatrix and upon the beneficiaries under the will. The case is on a line with those authorities which hold that, where one has made an oral promise with a decedent to make a special use of a devise to him and thereby obtain the legal title to the property, equity will hold that he is an involuntary trustee for the beneficiary, even though the oral promise is within the statute of frauds. As said in Re O'Hara, 95 N. Y. 403, 47 Am. Rep. 53, cited with approval in Brazil v. Silva, 181 Cal. 490, 497, 185 P. 174, 177: "Equity acts in such case not because of a trust declared by the testator, but because of the fraud of the legatee. For him not to carry out the promise by which alone he procured the devise and bequest, is to perpetrate a fraud upon the devisor which equity will not endure."

From the foregoing we conclude that the acts of the respondent Herbert Brown recited herein, and found to be true by the trial court, constituted a contest of the will on his part, and entitled appellant to judgment against him. The cause as to this respondent must, therefore, be reversed, with directions to the trial court to enter judgment against him as prayed for in the complaint, subject, however, to the further finding of the participation of his co-respondent in such contest. That is to say, that if on a retrial of this issue, it be found that the respondent Frank Brown did participate in said contest, then separate judgments should be entered against each respondent, decreeing that each is holding the properties procured by him under these decrees of distribution in trust for the use and benefit of the appellant herein. If, on the other hand, it be found on a retrial of that issue that the respondent Frank Brown did not participate in said contest, then the judgment should run against Herbert Brown, decreeing that he holds the property obtained by him under these decrees of distribution in trust for the use and benefit of the appellant herein and of the respondent Frank Brown, share and share alike.

[11] This brings us to a consideration of the case relating to the respondent Frank Brown, as distinguished from the case made against his co-respondent. The trial court drew its conclusion of law from the facts found that this respondent did not institute proceedings in anywise contesting the will, and did not contest the will. We are satisfied from our review of the record that the findings of fact are all too favorable to this respondent. The evidence is that this respondent attended the sessions of the trial of the contest on all but one day thereof, and was mainly active in furnishing the contestants' counsel with evidence to support their attack upon the will. In addition to this, it is conceded that his counsel appeared at the same trial and consulted with the contestants' counsel during the course of the trial. As has heretofore been pointed out, these attorneys were the attorneys for both Herbert Brown and Frank Brown in the trial of that contest. These parties appeared jointly as defendants in the contest, and filed a joint answer through these attorneys. The interest of Herbert Brown in financing this contest through his attorney has already been detailed, but the trial court found that the respondent Frank Brown had no knowledge of this fact. Appellant insists that such knowledge must be presumed under the well-known rule that knowledge of the attorney is knowledge of the client. 6 Cor. Jur. 638; Wittenbrock v. Parker, 102 Cal. 93, 36 P. 374, 24 L. R. A. 197, 41 Am. St. Rep. 172; Bogart v. Geo. K. Porter Co., 193 Cal. 197, 210, 223 P. 959, 31 A. L. R. 1045. Respondents argue that the rule should not be applied here, because the interests of the two respondents were adverse, that is to say, that if Frank Brown through their common attorney was able to have Herbert Brown successfully contest the will without his being involved therein, he would succeed to a portion of the legacy forfeited by Herbert Brown and that, if Herbert was able in the same way to have Frank carry on the contest, Herbert would succeed to a portion of Frank's forfeited legacy. There is nothing, however, in the record to support this dual relation. As we have said, both parties appeared by the same attorney, and both had an equal interest in the success of the contest to the portion of the will covering the legacy to this appellant.

It is inconceivable that this respondent did not have actual knowledge of the activities of his co-respondent in financing the contest or of the agreement made by his counsel with Mr. McWilliams to compensate the contestants in the event of a favorable judgment. But, if he did not have actual knowledge of these facts, this would seem to be a proper case for the application of the presumption of knowledge of the client because of the actual knowledge of the attorney. However, the trial court found in favor of this respondent in both instances, and we do not feel that the undisputed evidence, however persuasive it may be, is sufficient to support a contrary finding by this court. We are asked to take additional evidence under section 956a, Code of Civil Procedure, as added by St. 1927, p. 583, for this purpose, but we are satisfied that the convenience of the witnesses, and of the parties as well, would best be served by having this done in the trial court, and the cause will be remanded for that purpose. In remanding the cause it is with the direction that the trial court take evidence on this issue alone, that is to say, the acts and conduct of the respondent Frank Brown in relation to the contest of the will and his participation therein, either individually or through his attorney and associate, Herbert Brown, and his knowledge of the acts and conduct of his associate, Herbert Brown, in aid of said contest. Upon the conclusion of said trial, judgment should be entered against the respondent Herbert Brown as heretofore directed and in favor of the appellant for the whole or for the half of Herbert Brown's interest as the case may be, and judgment should be entered either in favor of or against the respondent Frank Brown as the court shall determine the issue of his participation in said contest.

The appeal from the order denying appellant's motion to enter a different judgment on the findings requires but a word. Obviously, upon the record as it stood at the time, this motion should have been granted in part. The finding of participation by Herbert Brown and of nonparticipation by Frank Brown demanded a judgment in favor of appellant for one-half of Herbert Brown's forfeited share of the estate. But, as we have shown that the finding and judgment favorable to Frank Brown must be reversed, it is apparent that this motion should not be granted at this time. The appeal from this order is, therefore, dismissed.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded for the purposes heretofore indicated.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

98 Cal. App. 189

MICHAEL v. KEY SYSTEM TRANSIT CO.
(Civ. 6753.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1. California. April 9, 1929.

1. Appeal and error 🔑1057(1)—Exclusion of testimony as to habit of storing street cars on street held not prejudicial error, in view of uncontradicted testimony and statement in appellant's brief.

In action for injury to one riding in automobile, which collided with standing street car, exclusion of testimony that defendant habitually stored cars on street approximately in position of that involved for several hours, held not prejudicial error, in view of uncontradicted testimony as to defendant's practice in moving its cars back and forth between barn and street, and statement in plaintiff's brief that her cause of action for negligence in such respect was entirely sustained by evidence.

2. Negligence 🔑56(2, 3)—Negligence must be proximate cause of injury to warrant recovery, though arising from violation of law or ordinance, or maintenance of nuisance.

To recover for negligence of another, such negligence must have been proximate cause of or proximately contributed to injury, even though it arises because of violation of law or ordinance, or results from maintenance of nuisance.

3. Street railroads 🔑102(1)—Whether street railway company habitually stored cars on street held immaterial in action for injury in automobile collision with standing car.

Whether defendant street railway company on previous occasions or habitually stored its cars on street held immaterial in action for injury to one riding in automobile which collided with standing car; such habit having no causal connection with injuries sustained.

4. Trial 🔑260(8)—Refusal of instructions that permitting street cars to stand on street constituted nuisance and negligence held not error, in view of instruction given.

Refusal of instructions that permitting street cars to stand or be stored on street constituted a nuisance, and negligence as matter of law, held not error, in view of instruction to find for plaintiff, in action for injuries in collision between automobile and standing car, if defendant negligently permitted car to stand on street insufficiently or improperly lighted or guarded.

5. Street railroads 🔑90(1)—Leaving street car standing on tracks for reasonable time, properly lighted or guarded, is not negligence per se.

Leaving a street car standing on tracks for a reasonable time, properly lighted or guarded, does not constitute negligence per se.

6. Street railroads 🔑90(1)—Street car, left standing in street for few minutes about 1:30 a. m., held not unlawful obstruction or nuisance as matter of law.

Street car left on tracks in street near car barn for a few minutes about 1:30 a. m., with street clear for vehicular traffic on both sides, as authorized by franchise, held not unlawful obstruction of street, nor nuisance as matter of law; whether street car company should be permitted to leave cars standing in street when not in use being for municipal authorities to determine.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; L. D. Jennings, Judge.

Action by Jeane Michael against the Key System Transit Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Vincent W. Hallinan and Charles R. Boden, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison, of San Francisco (Frank S. Richards, of Oakland, of counsel), for respondent.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. Appellant sustained certain personal injuries while riding in an automobile driven by one Harold Wagner on July 31, 1926, when the automobile collided with a street car owned and operated by respondent. The collision occurred about 1:30 o'clock in the morning on East Fourteenth street, near Ninety-Sixth avenue, in the city of Oakland. The street car involved in the collision was at the time of the accident standing on the south track of respondent's car line in the vicinity of one of its barns. It had been moved out of the car barn and onto the street approximately 45 minutes prior to the accident, but had been at the place where the accident occurred only about 15 minutes. The street car had been moved out so that respondent could properly handle and repair cars at the barn. It was necessary to run cars back and forth between the track on East Fourteenth street and the car barn. This was done late at night or early in the morning when the traffic on the street was light.

At the time of the accident Harold Wagner was operating the automobile in question along East Fourteenth street in the direction of San Leandro at about 24 or 25 miles an hour and for some distance had been straddling the south street car track. The street on both sides of the car tracks was clear and unobstructed, and, if the automobile had been driven on that part of the street customarily used for vehicular traffic, the collision would not have occurred. The street car was standing parallel with the sidewalk and in the same position occupied by it when operating along East Fourteenth street in the direction of San Leandro. Wagner testified that his headlights were adjusted so that he was unable to see clearly any object more than 10 or 12 or 10 or 15 feet ahead of him; that when he first saw the street car it was 10 or 12 feet away; that he attempted to turn out, but collided with it. There is a conflict of testimony as to whether or not the street car was lighted at the time of the accident, several witnesses testifying that it was. Appellant testified that she was dozing in the automobile and did not see the street car until she was about 4 feet from it. The case was tried before the court and jury, and resulted in a verdict for the defendant, and from the judgment entered upon such verdict plaintiff has appealed.

The complaint sets out three separate causes of action charging negligence. The first cause of action alleges that the street car at the time of the collision was unlighted and unguarded, and by reason of the failure of defendant corporation to properly light or otherwise guard the street car it was not discernible to persons driving vehicles, and that by reason of its indiscernibility the automobile was caused to collide with it. The second cause of action charges negligence, specifying that negligence to be that defendant had been accustomed to lease unused cars owned and operated by it standing on the tracks on East Fourteenth street for several hours each night and particularly on the night that the accident took place, and that the street car with which the automobile collided had been standing upon the street in accordance with such custom for a number of hours, and that it was thereby an obstruction and an impediment to traffic, and constituted a menace to the safety of persons operating automobiles on East Fourteenth street, and was a nuisance. The third cause of action charges negligence, in that the street car was permitted to stand on the street for an unreasonable length of time, and was not properly lighted or guarded, and that this was a proximate cause of the collision. The jury was fully and correctly charged with respect to the first and third causes of action and no contention is made by appellant that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict in favor of defendant. It is merely with respect to the second cause of action that complaint is made and with which we are concerned.

[1] In support of her second cause of action appellant offered to prove certain facts to which objection was sustained and which ruling is assigned as error. The offer is as follows: "We offer at this time, if the court please, to show by this witness (Futardo) that the defendant, Key System Transit Company, for the last three or four years habitually stored their cars on the street for two or three hours, by leaving two, three or four cars standing on the street approximately in that position, and that this car was one of the cars left standing on the street as part of that procedure." An examination of the testimony of the witness Futardo, an employee of Key System Transit Company, which is uncontradicted, discloses that the witness described in detail the practice of the company in moving its cars back and forth between the car barn and East Fourteenth street, and therefore the record contains practically all of the testimony appellant proposed to offer. In fact, appellant states in her brief that her second cause of action is entirely sustained by the evidence. This being true, appellant was not prejudiced by the court sustaining the objection to her proof of the facts stated in her offer, if such facts were material.

[2, 3] We think it immaterial under the facts disclosed whether respondent on previous occasions, or habitually, stored its cars on the street, for, to entitle one to recover for the negligence of another, that negligence must have been the proximate cause of, or must have proximately contributed to, the injury. This is so, even though negligence arises because of the violation of a law or an ordinance. Arrelano v. Jorgensen, 52 Cal. App. 622, 199 P. 855; Berges v. Guthrie, 51 Cal. App. 547, 197 P. 356; Williams v. Southern Pacific Co., 173 Cal. 525, 160 P. 660. So, also, where the negligence results from maintaining a nuisance, the nuisance must contribute to the injury. It cannot be said that the mere fact—if it be a fact—that respondent permitted its cars to remain at approximately the same position of the car in question at the time of the accident on other occasions had any connection whatever with the injury suffered by appellant. Appellant sustained her injuries by being driven into a particular standing car on the morning of July 31, 1926. There could be no causal connection between that injury by striking that car at that particular time and the maintenance of other cars at approximately the same place on other nights prior to the accident. While it is well settled that the violation of an ordinance is conclusive evidence of negligence in this state (Scragg v. Sallee, 24 Cal. App. 144, 140 P. 706), and that a person who wrongfully places an obstruction in the public highway must be held responsible for such accidents as occur by reason of its presence (Cohen v. Mayor, etc., of New York, 113 N. Y. 532, 21 N. E. 700, 4 L. R. A. 406, 10 Am. St. Rep. 506), the violation of an ordinance or maintenance of an obstruction must have contributed directly to the injury, for, however improper or illegal such violation or maintenance may be in the abstract, unless such contribute directly to the injury no action for damages can be founded upon them (Berges v. Guthrie, supra). Although the violation of a penal statute constitutes negligence per se, to make such negligence actionable it must be a proximate cause of the injury for which the action is brought. Williams v. Southern Pacific Co., supra.

[4] Appellant urges that the court erred in refusing certain instructions to the jury proposed by her on the theory embraced in her second cause of action, which is stated in her brief to be in short this: "That by keeping the street car in the position which it occupied the defendants were maintaining a public nuisance, that such maintenance of a public nuisance constituted negligence per se, and that if this maintenance of a nuisance were established, and the plaintiff was free from contributory negligence, she was entitled to a verdict as a matter of law." Appellant contends that instructions proposed covering this theory were refused, and that no instructions were given involving the element of nuisance. It is true the court did refuse several instructions requested by appellant on this question, appellant's particular objection being that the court refused to instruct that permitting cars to stand or be stored on the street constituted a nuisance and was negligence as a matter of law, and no further proof on plaintiff's part was required. The court, however, gave the following instructions, which correctly state the law applicable to the facts, and which sufficiently enlightened the jury on the question of nuisance as here involved:

"I further instruct you that anything which unlawfully obstructs the free passage or use in the customary manner of any street or highway is a public nuisance. If you believe from the evidence that the defendant, Key System Transit Company, unlawfully obstructed the public highway by permitting its street cars to remain upon the same for an unreasonable length of time, then I instruct you that it is no excuse or defense to them that they were permitted to do so by the municipal authorities, or that no objection was made to such practice by the police or other municipal authorities, as such authorities have no right to license or permit the maintenance of a nuisance. If you believe from the evidence that the defendant, Key System Transit Company, permitted the street car involved in this action to stand upon the street, and that the said street car was insufficiently or improperly guarded or lighted, or that it was not sufficiently lighted, so as to render the same clearly discernible to persons operating automobiles along that street, and if you believe from the evidence that it was negligence for them to permit or cause the said street car to so remain on the street, or that it was negligent for them to fail to properly or sufficiently light or guard the said street car, and that, by reason of such negligence, plaintiff sustained injury and was herself free from contributory negligence, then your verdict should be in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant, Key System Transit Company."

[5, 6] We are not in accord with appellant's contention that a street car standing on its tracks, if so left for not an unreasonable time and being properly lighted or guarded, constitutes negligence per se; nor that the street car in question, which was left standing on the tracks where the accident occurred for but a few minutes and the street on both sides of the car tracks used for vehicular traffic being clear, constitutes an obstruction or renders the street dangerous and unfit for use by the traveling public. At the time of the accident and for a long time prior thereto the respondent company maintained its tracks and equipment and operated its cars on East Fourteenth street by authority of franchises from the county of Alameda and the city of Oakland. It was not only expressly authorized to use the streets, but was required to do so under its franchises. These facts place respondent in a different position from a private individual using the streets. Whether respondent should have been permitted to leave its cars standing on its tracks in the street when not in use was a matter for determination by the authorities.

As was said in George v. Los Angeles Railway Co., 126 Cal. 362, 58 P. 821, 46 L. R. A. 829, 77 Am. St. Rep. 184: "Instruction 10 was as follows: 'Whether the defendant's trailer cars should have been permitted to stand on the track in the street during the hours of the day when they were not needed for carrying passengers, was a question to be determined by the city authorities, and is a wholly irrelevant and immaterial question in this case.' It is objected that this instruction was confusing and misleading to the jury, because they had been previously told that the questions of the manner of leaving the cars, the place where they were left, et cetera, were to be considered by them in determining whether defendant was negligent or not. It seems to us that this particular instruction was intended to show simply that the city authorities alone could determine whether the cars should be permitted to be left on the street for the convenience of defendant. It is true that the right to so use the street must come from the city, and in so saying to the jury the court did not weaken the force of the other instructions as to the care defendant should exercise in so occupying the street."

In Poland v. United Traction Co., 107 App. Div. 561, 95 N. Y. S. 498, the court says: "A street railway company has the right, without being charged with a breach of duty or an unlawful obstruction of the highway, to allow its cars to stand upon its tracks for a reasonable length of time. Adams v. Metropolitan Street Railway Co., 82 App. Div. 354, 81 N. Y. Supp. 553. In the case cited, the fender was down and the car was unlighted and unattended, which presented a stronger state of facts than those of the case at bar, and yet the defendant was held blameless because the car had not remained in such condition for an unreasonable length of time."

Section 3479 of the Civil Code provides: "Anything which is injurious to health, or is indecent or offensive to the senses, or an obstruction to the free use of property, so as to interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of life or property, or unlawfully obstructs the free passage or use, in the customary manner, of any navigable lake, or river, bay, stream, canal, or basin, or any public park, square, street, or highway, is a nuisance." It follows, therefore, that leaving the car in question on the company's tracks on East Fourteenth street for the few minutes it was left on the morning of the accident did not constitute it an unlawful obstruction, nor a nuisance as a matter of law. On the contrary, the street car not having been left standing on the street, as found by the jury, for an unreasonable time, respondent was lawfully using the car tracks at the time of the accident as authorized by its franchise from the city of Oakland, and the street on both sides of the tracks used for vehicular traffic being clear, no obstruction in fact existed.

Appellant has cited a number of cases where the acts of individuals have been held to constitute nuisances per se, but in these cases the obstructions were unlawful—the California cases cited being Colgrove v. Smith, 102 Cal. 220, 36 P. 411, 27 L. R. A. 590, where a contractor unlawfully dug trenches without authority from the city; McKune v. Santa Clara V. M. & L. Co., 110 Cal. 480, 42 P. 980, where a mill operator maintained an unauthorized obstruction on the highway; Stockton Automobile Co. v. Confer, 154 Cal. 402, 97 P. 881, where an unlawful obstruction to the free use of the highway was erected, and Monsch v. Pellissier, 187 Cal. 790, 204 P. 224, wherein it is said that gratings which were apparently in a condition which might render them in their character "of the nature of a nuisance," the defendant who had or was charged with knowledge of their condition cannot escape liability upon the ground that she had not received statutory notice of such nuisance.

We fail to see the applicability of these authorities, as the facts are not analogous to those in the present case. In Chicago Northwestern Railroad Co. v. Prescott (C. C. A.) 59 F. 237, 23 L. R. A. 654, cited by appellant, in which case a railroad train obstructed a cross street and injury resulted to a person endeavoring to pass, the court uses this language: "And according to well-established rules, the issue as to whether a street was rightfully obstructed, should be submitted to the jury, if the circumstances attending the blockade are such that reasonable persons might entertain different views as to whether the action of the company was justifiable."

So in the present case the court properly submitted this question to the jury, and as the evidence is sufficient to support the verdict in favor of defendant, the judgment should be and it is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. AYMAR et al. (Civ. 6142.) ★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. March 27, 1929.

Rehearing Denied April 25, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 23, 1929.

1. Criminal law ⟹636(1)—Defendant charged with misdemeanor must be present in person at trial in municipal court (Pen. Code, §§ 977, 1043, 1148, 1193, 1305, 1306, 1434, 1438, 1451, 1461a; Wright Act).

One charged with violating Wright Act (St. 1921, p. 79), a misdemeanor, is required to be present at trial in municipal court under Pen. Code, §§ 1434, 1438, 1451, since sections 977, 1043, 1148, and 1193, relate to superior courts only, under section 1461a, and forfeiture of bail bond under sections 1305 and 1306 was therefore proper when defendant failed to appear.

2. Appeal and error ⟹125—Summary judgment forfeiting bail bond when one accused of misdemeanor failed to appear in municipal court held not appealable, in view of surety's consent (Pen. Code, §§ 1305, 1306; Wright Act).

Summary judgment forfeiting bail bond entered under Pen. Code, §§ 1305, 1306, when defendant accused of violating Wright Act (St. 1921, p. 79), a misdemeanor, failed to appear for trial in municipal court, held entered in accordance with consent of surety and therefore not appealable, in view of language of bond.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Elliot Craig, Judge.

James Aymar was charged with violating the Wright Act, and from a judgment against the Seaboard Surety Corporation of America forfeiting bail bond, it appeals. Appeal dismissed.

Arthur T. Stollmack, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Lloyd S. Nix, City Prosecutor, and Joe W. Matherly, Deputy City Prosecutor, both of Los Angeles, for the People.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J. [1] The defendant was charged with a violation of the Wright Act (St. 1921, p. 79), a misdemeanor, and the appellant Seaboard Surety Corporation of America executed a bail bond for him, which bond reads in part as follows: "Now, we, the Seaboard Surety Corporation of America, hereby undertake that the above defendant, James Aymar, will appear and answer the charge above mentioned in whatever court it may be prosecuted, and will at all times hold himself amenable to the orders and process of the court, and, if convicted, will appear for judgment and render himself in execution thereof, or if the said defendant fails to perform either of these conditions, that he will pay to the people of the state of California the sum of seventeen hundred dollars, lawful money of the United States. If the forfeiture of this bond be ordered by the court, judgment may be summarily made and entered against said Seaboard Surety Corporation of America and the said defendant, if he be a party to the bond, for the amount of their respective undertakings herein, as provided by sections 1305 and 1306 of the Penal Code." On January 4, 1928, the defendant was arraigned in the municipal court of Los Angeles, and his trial set, before a jury, for February 1, 1928. On the latter date, the defendant failed to appear for trial, and his bail was declared forfeited. Thereafter judgment was entered in the superior court against the surety for the amount of the bond in accordance with sections 1305 and 1306 of the Penal Code, and it is from this judgment that the surety appeals. The respondent has made a motion to dismiss on the ground that the judgment is not appealable. Inasmuch as the motion and the merits involve identically the same questions of law, the cause has been submitted as to both.

It is asserted by appellant that the presence of a defendant at the trial upon a misdemeanor charge is not necessary unless an order has previously been made requiring him to be present for the purposes of identification, and it points to sections 977, 1043, 1148, and 1193 of the Penal Code for confirmation of its contention. Section 1043 reads: "If the prosecution be for a felony, the defendant must be personally present at the trial; but if for misdemeanor, the trial may be had in the absence of the defendant: if, however, his presence is necessary for the purpose of identification, the court may, upon application of the district attorney, by an order or warrant, require the personal attendance of the defendant at the trial." Section 977 provides that in misdemeanor cases the defendant "may appear upon the arraignment by counsel." Section 1148 says that verdicts in misdemeanor cases may be received in the defendant's absence, and section 1193, that judgment may be pronounced in his absence. It is to be noted, at this juncture, that none of the sections to which we have referred are to be found in part II, title 11 of the Penal Code, which outlines the proceedings in justice and police courts and is made applicable by section 1461a thereof to proceedings in the municipal courts. They therefore relate to the superior courts only. While the reason for requiring the presence of a defendant in the inferior courts named and not in the superior court may appear difficult of comprehension, nevertheless we find that the Legislature has declared a different policy with respect to the trial of misdemeanor cases before the former tribunals from that which applies to the superior court.

Section 1434 of the Penal Code, which is found in the title above mentioned, reads: "The defendant must be personally present before the trial can proceed." Section 1438 of the same Code provides that the proofs and allegations shall be delivered in the presence of the defendant, and section 1451 says that a new trial shall be granted "when the trial has been had in the absence of the defendant, unless he voluntarily absent himself, with full knowledge that a trial is being had." Both of these appear in the same title. It would be difficult to find language less free from uncertainty than the wording of section 1434, and if the authorities were equally as free from doubt we would have no difficulty in saying that the presence of the defendant is required in the municipal court. However, appellant also relies upon the cases of Carroll v. Police Court, 66 Cal. App. 66, 225 P. 35; People v. Ebner, 23 Cal. 158, and People v. Budd, 57 Cal. 349. Carrol v. Police Court, supra, cannot be considered, for the reason that there the police judge made an order requiring the defendant to appear at the time of trial for the purpose of identification, thus removing all doubt concerning the question. It is also apparent that the case of People v. Budd is not controlling here, for the reason that the defendant was there indicted; that he was admitted to bail by a judge of the Fifth judicial district, and called for trial in the county court of Stanislaus county. This court was comparable to our superior court (Stats. 1863, p. 337), and governed in its procedure by law similar to those statutes now pertaining to trials in the superior court. The case of People v. Ebner was tried in the court of sessions, a court created by the Constitution of 1849, with the proviso that the Legislature should prescribe its criminal jurisdiction. Article 6, § 8, Constitution 1849. In 1850 the Legislature, it is true, fixed the jurisdiction of this court as follows: "The court of sessions shall have jurisdiction throughout the county over all cases of assault, assault and battery, breach of the peace, riot, affray, and petit larceny, and over all misdemeanors punishable by fine not exceeding five hundred dollars, or imprisonment not exceeding three months, or both such fine and imprisonment." Stats. 1849–50, p. 210. At the second session of the Legislature, however, this jurisdiction was materially increased and altered by the following provision: "The court of sessions shall have jurisdiction: First, to inquire, by the intervention of a grand jury, of all public offenses committed or triable in its county; second, to try and determine indictments found therein, for all public offenses, except murder, manslaughter, and arson; and to try and determine indictments in these excepted cases against a person holding the office of a district judge; third, to hear and determine appeals from the justice and recorders' courts, in cases of a criminal nature." Stats. 1851, p. 19. Thus was the jurisdiction of the court defined at the time the Ebner Case was tried, except that there was probably included in the excepted criminal cases "fighting a duel, and killing or wounding any person therein," added in 1860 (see Stats. 1860, p. 31), shortly after the decision in People ex rel. Terry v. Bartlett, 14 Cal. 652, which case grew out of the Broderick-Terry duel, and wherein it was decided that the court of sessions had jurisdiction of an indictment charging Terry with "the fighting of a duel by agreement with David C. Broderick, and the death of Broderick as the result of the meeting." It is obvious from what we have said that neither the case of People v. Ebner, supra, nor People v. Budd, can be considered either as controlling the situation or helpful as precedents in solving the problem. We conclude that section 1434 of the Penal Code is determinative, and that the presence of the defendant was required.

[2] It thus becomes apparent that the summary judgment was entered in accordance with the consent of the appellant and is not appealable. Duerr v. Sloan, 50 Cal. App. 512, 195 P. 475; Roberts v. Fitzgerald (Cal. App.) 271 P. 1110. We are fully aware of the fact that the sureties on an undertaking executed in accordance with section 942 of the Code of Civil Procedure secured a reversal in the case of Hawley v. Gray Bros. Artificial Stone Paving Co., 127 Cal. 560, 60 P. 437, because the summary judgment was prematurely entered, and that a reversal was ordered in Reay v. Butler, 118 Cal. 113, 50 P. 375, because the bond given was ineffectual as a stay, and therefore the consent was likewise ineffectual to authorize a summary judgment. We see no inconsistency, however, in saying that a consent judgment is not appealable, but where the judgment is not entered in accordance with the consent it is appealable, because in the latter case a consent judgment is not involved. The view thus expressed is a sufficient reason for saying that the appeal should be dismissed rather than declaring that the judgment should be affirmed.

Appeal dismissed.

PUREXO PRODUCTS CO. v. YAMATE.
(Civ. 6601.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. April 1, 1929.

1. Intoxicating liquors 🔑329(2)—Buyer defending action for goods sold and delivered had burden on issue whether contract was illegal, as for alcohol.

In action for goods sold and delivered, burden of proof was on defendant on issue presented by him as to whether contract was illegal; subject-matter of sale consisting of wine tonic containing alcohol.

2. Appeal and error 🔑930(4)—In support of judgment for plaintiff, reviewing court assumes jury found against defendant on issue of illegality of contract.

In support of judgment for plaintiff in action for goods sold and delivered, reviewing court must assume that jury found against defendant on issue of illegality of contract.

3. Sales 🔑218½, 340—Facts held to show that title passed to buyer, authorizing seller to sue for balance of contract price rather than for damages.

In action for goods sold and delivered, facts held to warrant jury in inferring that title to goods passed from seller to buyer, so that seller was not required to sue for damages, but could bring action for balance of contract price.

4. Appeal and error 🔑174—Plaintiff's failure to prove corporate capacity cannot be complained of for first time on appeal.

It is too late on appeal to claim for first time, that plaintiff failed to introduce proof of corporate capacity, where point was not called to trial court's attention and was not included in motion for nonsuit nor in instructions.

5. Pleading 🔑121(4)—Denial based on want of information or belief of plaintiff's incorporation and compliance with local state laws held insufficient as to matters of record in office of secretary of state.

Defendant's denial by allegations based on want of information or belief of plaintiff's allegations that it was incorporated under Nevada laws and had complied with California laws held insufficient at least as to matters of record in office of secretary of state at Sacramento.

6. Corporations 🔑29(2)—Showing that plaintiff, a foreign corporation, had filed copy of articles of incorporation with secretary of state was sufficient on collateral attack (Civ. Code, §§ 358, 405).

Showing that plaintiff, a foreign corporation, had filed certified copy of purported articles of incorporation with secretary of state, was showing that it was corporation de facto under Civ. Code, § 405, and this was sufficient on collateral attack under section 358.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; T. I. Fitzpatrick, Judge.

Action for goods sold and delivered, brought by the Purexo Products Company against Sasto Yamate, doing business under the firm name and style of Yamate Bros. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Joseph J. McShane, Anthony S. Devoto, and Devoto & Richardson, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Harold L. Levin, of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff sued the defendant to recover a balance due for goods sold and delivered. The defendant appeared and answered, and a trial was had before the trial court sitting with a jury. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff. From a judgment entered on the verdict, the defendant has appealed.

[1, 2] Before proceeding further, it will clarify the situation to state that the subject-matter of the alleged sale consisted of a number of cases of wine tonic containing alcohol. Both in the trial court and in this court something has been said regarding the contract being illegal. That issue was presented by the defendant. On him rested the burden of proof. On the subject of legality or illegality, the evidence was distinctly conflicting. In support of the judgment, we must assume that the jury found against the defendant on that issue.

[3] The defendant contends that his motion for a nonsuit should have been granted, that the trial court erred in giving to the plaintiff as damages the contract price, and that there is no evidence as to the amount of the damage suffered by the plaintiff. These three contentions the defendant presents as one point, the contention that the plaintiff should have sued for damages instead of for the balance of the contract price. In making this point, the defendant is relying principally upon the rule as stated in Gopcevic v. California Packing Corp., 64 Cal. App. 132, 220 P. 1078. He concedes that, as stated in the case cited, "If tender is made by the vendor with intent to pass title in the goods to the vendee, title is thereby deemed to have passed, and the vendor may sue for the contract price." Civ. Code, § 1141. In Turner, Kuhn & Fraser, Inc., v. Jones, 61 Cal. App. 732, at page 734, 215 P. 1033, 1034, the court said: "Under a contract of sale the parties may agree when title shall pass. If they expressly do so, their contract controls, even though the subject matter has only a potential existence. If they do not so previously agree and a dispute arises as to the true character of the agreement, the question is one rather of fact than of law." We do not understand the defendant to question the rule as so stated, but we do understand him to contend that, under the facts in the instant case, the title did not pass. Whether it did or not can be determined only from a number of circumstances which were introduced in evidence. The purchaser maintains an office where he transacts business, but there are not at that office storerooms for the purpose of holding his merchandise. The written order out of which this litigation arose contained the language: "This confirms my order for 200 cases of Vin Zymo Tonic at $5 per case. Same to be delivered on or before January 10, 1927. The order is not subject to cancellation." The last sentence was written into the contract by the seller. In the trial court and in this court it contends that the sentence was meant to indicate that it was passing to the purchaser the title to the tonic at the time the order was accepted. On the trial of the case, the plaintiff's manager testified that he asked the purchaser to give the seller shipping directions, but the purchaser refused to do so. He also testified that on many occasions he offered to make delivery, and the purchaser refused to accept delivery. Furthermore, it is a conceded fact that the bottles were to be labeled by the seller with the purchaser's labels. These facts and other facts we think warranted the jury in inferring that the title to the goods passed from the seller to the purchaser. That being so, the first three contentions made by the defendant are not supported.

The defendant makes the point that two of the court's instructions erroneously stated the law regarding illegal contracts. But we think his authorities do not sustain his contention. If at one instant a sale is illegal for want of a permit, non constat, the same act, at a later date, after a permit has been obtained, is entirely legal. That was the substance of the instructions.

[4-6] In its complaint, the plaintiff alleged that it was a corporation organized under the laws of the state of Nevada and doing business in California. In his answer, the defendant pleaded: "Denies any knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief whether, * * * etc." No proof was introduced at the trial. At this time the defendant claims that the plaintiff failed to prove his allegation. To that claim there are two answers. Assuming that the plaintiff did not introduce sufficient proof of corporate capacity, the record shows that the point was not called to the attention of the trial court and that the court made no ruling thereon. At the end of the plaintiff's case the defendant made a motion for a nonsuit. The grounds of the motion appear in the reporter's transcript. Nothing was said on the point. The instructions requested by the defendant and refused by the trial court are set forth, but no instruction was requested on the subject of failure to introduce proof of plaintiff's corporate capacity. It is now too late to make the claim for the first time. 2 Cal. Jur. 248. The other answer is this: The plaintiff alleged (1) that it was incorporated under the laws of Nevada, and (2) that it had complied with all the laws in relation to doing business in California. Both allegations the defendant attempted to deny by allegations based on want of information or belief. At least as to matters of record in the office of the secretary of state at Sacramento, the denial was insufficient. The answer admitted, therefore, that the plaintiff had filed a certified copy of purported articles of incorporation with the secretary of state—in other words, that it was a corporation de facto. Civ. Code, § 405. This showing was sufficient on a collateral attack. Civ. Code, § 358.

We find no error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

James Farraher and Ewell D. Moore, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

MONCUR, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from an order of the trial court relieving respondents from their failure to file a bill of exceptions within 10 days after notice of entry of an order denying a motion for a new trial.

In an action commenced by respondents herein, plaintiffs below, against appellants, judgment went for the appellants. Plaintiffs, within the time allowed by law, moved for a new trial, and the motion was denied on September 8, 1925, and notice of decision was served on respondents' counsel on September 17, 1925. No order or stipulation extending time within which to file a bill of exceptions was made. On October 31, 1925, plaintiffs, without notice to the defendants, or their counsel, made an ex parte application to the court for relief from their failure to file a proposed bill of exceptions within the period provided by law, and asked for leave of court to serve and file their proposed bill of exceptions to be used on appeal from the judgment rendered in the action, by November 6, 1925. The application was made upon the affidavit of one of counsel for plaintiffs, and on October 31, 1925, the trial judge made and entered an order relieving plaintiffs from their said failure to so file their bill of exceptions, and permitted them to serve and file the same on or before November 15, 1925.

It is the contention of appellants that the trial court was without authority to relieve the respondents from such failure to so file their bill of exceptions, for the reason that the time limit embraced in section 650 of the Code of Civil Procedure, within which the draft of a proposed bill of exceptions may be served upon the adverse party, is mandatory. This contention, however, cannot be sustained. See Banta v. Siller, 121 Cal. 414, 53 P. 935, and cases therein cited. The relief granted, of course, is based upon section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and it is contended by appellants that the requirements of said section, particularly in respect to notice to counsel on the other side and an affidavit of merits, have not been complied with. However, in the view we take of the appeal, it is not necessary to decide this matter. It is the contention of respondents that the order appealed from is not an appealable order, and we are satisfied that this contention must be sustained. The case of Kaltschmidt v. Weber, 136 Cal. 675, 69 P. 497, seems to be squarely in point, and at page 676 (69 P. 497) of said decision it is said: "After a judgment of nonsuit had been entered in the above-entitled action, the plaintiff served upon the defendant a proposed bill of exceptions to be used upon his motion for a new trial, to which the defendant served his proposed amendments. The plaintiff gave notice to the defendant that he did not accept the amendments, and that on a day designated he would present the same for settlement to the judge who had tried the cause. On that day the defendant objected to the settlement of the bill upon the ground that the same was not presented within the time allowed by law, presenting an affidavit in support of his objection. The judge continued the hearing until a subsequent day, at which time the plaintiff applied to be relieved from his neglect to present the bill for settlement, upon the ground that such neglect was excusable and owing to inadvertence, and presented certain affidavits in support of his motion. Affidavits in opposition thereto were also presented on the part of the defendant, and upon hearing the same the court granted the plaintiff's motion for relief. From this order the present appeal has been taken. The respondent now moves to dismiss the appeal upon the ground that the order is not appealable. The order appealed from is not 'a special order made after final judgment,' within the meaning of subdivision 2 of section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure although it was made subsequent to the entry of judgment. 'It in no manner affected the judgment, or bore any relation to it, either by way of enforcing it or staying its operation.' [Griess v. State Investment, etc., Co., 93 Cal. 411, 28 P. 1041.] Neither is it a final determination of any matter affecting the appellant in the proceeding before the court in which it was made."

Also, the case of Kramm v. Stockton Electric R. Co., 22 Cal. App. 737, 136 P. 523, seems to be conclusive upon the right of appeal involved herein. At page 741 (136 P. 526) of said last-named decision it is said: "A preliminary objection is urged by the plaintiff against a consideration of the bill of exceptions and the affidavits used by the defendant on its motion for a new trial, on the ground that the same were not prepared and served within the time prescribed by law. The same point is made the subject of a distinct appeal in Kramm v. Stockton Elec. R. R. Co. (Civil No. 1126) [22 Cal. App. 761], 136 P. 534, but the order relieving the defendant from its alleged default is not one from which an appeal is authorized (Kaltschmidt v. Weber, 136 Cal. 675, 69 P. 497); hence said appeal has this day been dismissed." See, also, to the same effect, Lake v. Harris, 198 Cal. 85, 89, 243 P. 417.

The order appealed from herein not being an appealable order, it is ordered that the said appeal be, and the same is hereby, dismissed.

PALOS VERDES LIBRARY DIST. OF LOS ANGELES COUNTY v. McCLELLAN.

(Civ. 6360.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. March 26, 1929.

1. Constitutional law 🔑290(3)—Municipal corporations 🔑4—Statute authorizing organization of library districts does not deny due process because not providing opportunity for objection to inclusion in district (Const. art. 9, § 1; St. 1909, p. 815, §§ 1, 15).

As, in view of Const. art. 9, § 1, and St. 1909, p. 815, §§ 1, 15, relative to establishment of libraries, library district organized under such act is an educational district, statute does not deprive taxpayers of property without due process of law because providing for including their property without notice and opportunity to object to its inclusion.

2. Municipal corporations 🔑12(8)—Notice of library district election need not be published in newspaper when none is published within district (St. 1909, p. 815, § 3).

Under St. 1909, p. 815, § 3, requiring election on question of organizing library district to be posted and published in "daily or weekly paper therein, if there be one," where no paper is printed or published within the district, notice need not be published in newspaper printed outside the district and circulated within the district.

3. Municipal corporations 🔑12(8)—General statute as to publication of notices is inapplicable to library district election (Pol. Code, §§ 4458–4466; St. 1909, p. 815, § 3).

Pol. Code, §§ 4458–4466, respecting publication of legal notices, is inapplicable to notice of election on question of organizing library district, in view of special provision in St. 1909, p. 815, § 3.

4. Municipal corporations 🔑918(4)—Library district bond election was not invalid because statutory hours were not observed, when votes cast within statutory hours were largely in favor of bonds (St. 1909, p. 815, § 22).

Though, at election in library district on question of issuing bonds, polls were opened before 1 p. m. contrary to St. 1909, p. 815, § 22, election was not invalid, where 68 votes were cast for the bonds and seven against, and at least 35 of the votes were cast after 1 p. m.

Original application by the Palos Verdes Library District of Los Angeles County for a writ of mandate, directed to R. F. McClellan, as Chairman of the Board of Supervisors of the County of Los Angeles. Writ granted.

Everett W. Mattoon, County Counsel, and J. H. O'Connor, Assistant County Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

O'Melveny, Tuller & Myers, and Paul E. Schwab, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. Pursuant to a petition therefor, signed by more than 50 taxpayers and residents of the unincorporated village or town of Palos Verdes Estates, in Los Angeles county, the board of supervisors by resolution enacted that on January 31, 1928, between the hours of 1 p. m. and 7 p. m., an election be held to determine whether or not a library district should be formed in accordance with the provisions of the act of April 12, 1909 (page 815). In said petition and resolution it was recited that the territory to be included in such district is entirely located within the county of Los Angeles, and the same was described by metes and bounds. A notice of election was accordingly given by posting in three of the most public places in said district, but, there being no newspaper published within the boundaries thereof, "no publication of said notice in any newspaper was given or made." It is alleged that on the date mentioned an election was held between the hours of 1 p. m. and 7 p. m., at which election the question was submitted by ballots to the qualified electors, and that of 238 qualified electors 45 voted, 44 of whom cast their votes in favor of the proposition and but one opposed it. Thereafter, at a regular meeting of the supervisors the returns of said election were canvassed, and by resolution reciting the antecedent proceedings, it was enacted that "a public library district to be known and designated as Palos Verdes library district be and the same is hereby ordered formed." It is alleged by both parties to this proceeding that no hearing was had before the board of supervisors as to the extent of the boundaries of the proposed district or upon the question as to whether or not the lands within its limits would be benefited by being included therein; that no taxpayer had an opportunity to be heard as to the extent of the tax to be imposed upon him or as to whether or not his land should be included in such proposed district. By a subsequent resolution the supervisors directed that an election be held on June 28, 1928, between the hours of 8 o'clock a. m. and 7 o'clock p. m. of said day, for the voting of bonds in the amount of $90,000, and authorizing their sale, for the purpose of establishing and equipping a library. On the date last mentioned 75 votes were cast, 68 of which were in favor of the bond issue, and 7 were opposed thereto. It is alleged by the petitioner that at least 35 of such ballots were cast between the hours of 1 o'clock p. m. and 7 o'clock p. m. Following a canvass of the election the board of supervisors ordered and directed that the chairman of said board and the county auditor sign each bond, and that they be issued and sold. Bids having been submitted to the trustees and accepted, the bonds were issued and presented to the chairman of the board of supervisors for his signature. Respondent refused to sign them, contending, as he here insists, that: (1) The statute under which the library district was formed is unconstitutional and void, in that it fails to provide for a hearing upon the extent of the boundaries of a proposed district or upon the amount of benefits to property included therein; (2) that the district was not legally organized, for the reason that notice of the election with respect to organization was not published in any newspaper; and (3) that the proceedings authorizing the issuance of the bonds were void by reason of the fact that the polls were open from 8 o'clock a. m. until 7 o'clock p. m., whereas the lawful period of time for holding such an election is from 1 o'clock until 7 o'clock p. m. Petitioner herein prays that respondent be required by writ of mandate from this court to affix his signature to each of said bonds, and insists that the statute is constitutional, that publication of said notice was not required, and that, a sufficient number of ballots having been cast within the legal limitation of time, the fact that the polls were actually open and other votes were received before 1 o'clock p. m. did not invalidate the proceedings.

[1] In support of the respondent's refusal to execute the bonds in question, the act under which the petitioning district was created is attempted to be placed in the same category with the legislation authorizing the creation, conduct, and maintenance of highway lighting districts, which latter enactment was held unconstitutional upon the grounds above mentioned.

It was provided by section 2 of the Lighting District Act (Stats. 1909, p. 551) that: "Any unincorporated town or village of this state may establish a highway lighting district for the purpose of installing and maintaining a system of street lights on public highways, for the better protection of its residents, in accordance with the provisions of this act."

Other sections thereof recite that the county supervisors shall ex officio constitute the supervisors of the district; that they shall invite bids and accept only those offering gas or other lighting commodity at rates not exceeding the rates paid by the county for highway lighting in other portions of the county; that the lighting is "for the better protection of its residents." The supervisors of the county have power to make rules, regulations, and laws for the administration, operation, and maintenance of the district; to estimate the cost thereof for each ensuing year, which, added to the rate paid to the contracting distributors, is taxable to the property within the lighting district at the equalized value thereof.

In People v. Van Nuys Lighting District, 173 Cal. 792, 162 P. 97, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 255, quoting, in part, from Fallbrook Irrigation District v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112, 17 S. Ct. 56, 41 L. Ed. 369, it was said: "In all substantial particulars regarding this question the act was similar to the lighting district act here involved. The court recognized the fact that the formation of such districts involved two distinct features, one of which was the creation of a public corporation and the other the levying of an assessment or special tax upon property benefited by the proposed improvement. With respect to the creation of the corporation the court said: 'There is nothing in the essential nature of such a corporation, so far as its creation only is concerned, which requires notice to or hearing of the parties included therein before it can be formed. It is created for a public purpose, and it rests in the discretion of the legislature when to create it and with what powers to endow it.' See, also, People v. California Fish Co., 166 Cal. 576, 606, 610, 138 P. 79. With respect to the other consequences the court said: 'In the act under consideration, however, the establishment of its boundaries and the purposes for which the district is created, if it be finally organized by reason of the approving vote of the people, will almost necessarily be followed by and result in an assessment upon all the lands included within the boundaries of the district. The legislature thus in substance provides for the creation not alone of a public corporation but of a taxing district whose boundaries are fixed, not by the legislature, but, after a hearing, by the board of supervisors.' The court then proceeds to declare that when the power to form such district is delegated to a local board or tribunal, it acts judicially in fixing the boundaries, and the parties whose lands are proposed to be included are entitled to a hearing upon the question of benefits, before the formation of the district, and to have their lands excluded if it appears that they are not benefited."

The petitioner likens library districts to school districts in this respect, and maintains that no lands are benefited or affected by the library service, that the creation of such districts does not result in an assessment, or permit of the exclusion of the property of any inhabitant thereof, and that neither notice nor hearing upon these questions is required.

Section 1, article 9 of the Constitution of California, which article relates to education, provides: "A general diffusion of knowledge and intelligence being essential to the preservation of the rights and liberties of the people, the legislature shall encourage by all suitable means the promotion of intellectual, scientific, moral, and agricultural improvement."

Sections 1 and 15, respectively, of the Library District Act (St. 1909, p. 815), read as follows:

"Any unincorporated town or village of this state may establish, equip and maintain a public library for the dissemination of a knowledge of the arts, sciences and general literature, in accordance with the provisions of this act."

"Every [public] library established under the provisions of this act shall be forever free to the inhabitants and non-resident taxpayers of the library district, subject always to such rules, regulations, and by-laws as may be made by the board of library trustees. * * * "

It is therein further provided that the board of supervisors of the county where the district is situated shall appoint three trustees, who shall be vested with power to make and enforce all rules, regulations, and by-laws necessary for the administration, government, and protection of libraries and library property; that they shall estimate the cost thereof for each ensuing year, and report the same to the supervisors of their county; that they may borrow from and loan to libraries books, periodicals, magazines, etc.; they must be "open for the use of the public during every day in the year," alike to residents, to nonresident taxpayers, and to nonresidents who pay no taxes, under such conditions as the trustees may impose.

It will thus be seen that, subject to the appointment of trustees by the county supervisors, and reporting to the latter of each annual estimate of the cost of maintenance, a library district, as distinguished from a highway lighting district, is wholly local in management and control, and is independent of the county government. That a public library is educational in character has repeatedly been held when its liability to taxation has been questioned. In Webster City v. Wright County, 144 Iowa, 502, 123 N. W. 193, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1205, the Supreme Court of Iowa, in construing the statutes of that state, exhaustively reviewed the authorities of various states, and concluded:

"Indeed, it would seem that little doubt should be entertained regarding the educational character of such institutions. On no other theory can a tax levy in their support be sustained. The national bureau of education at Washington has always taken the position that public libraries are institutions of learning. In interpreting the will of John Crerar, the founder of the great public library in Chicago, Judge Tuley, at circuit, said in an opinion, adopted by the appellate court as its own: 'Such a library, beyond dispute, is a great public blessing to all within its range, rich and poor alike. It will make all of them wiser and better and more useful and powerful for good in all the relations of life. It is preeminently an educational institution, because its benefits will extend to a larger body of people than can be reached by any college or other school of learning.' Crerar v. Williams, 44 Ill. App. 497, s. c. 145 Ill. 625, 34 N. E. 467, 21 L. R. A. 454. In this state a library is considered to be within the proper range of school apparatus, for the statute expressly authorizes the acquirement and use of books by a school township and rural independent districts, and the establishment of small libraries to aid in the dissemination of knowledge. See Acts 28th Gen. Assem. c. 110, p. 83. Indeed, it is quite generally conceded that Carlisle was right when he said that the true university of today is a collection of books."

We are satisfied that the distinction, both in legislative intent and in fact, between lighting districts and their kin, and library districts, is patent. The former are maintained for the supplying to the public of a utility, which may be furnished by private capital or by a municipality. Rawle's 3d Rev. Bouv. Law Dict. vol. 3, p. 2766; Dillon on Mun. Corp. (5th Ed.) vol. 3, p. 2089, § 1290. The latter are conducted for the general diffusion of knowledge and intelligence, and are educational, as well as quasi municipal. In re Orosi Public Utility District, 196 Cal. 43, 235 P. 1004. In the case last cited educational districts are declared to be quasi municipal in character, and our Supreme Court said that there is an obvious distinction between acts providing for their formation and acts under which are created public utility corporations or assessment districts which practically authorize property owners to place burdens upon the property of others, without notice, for the sole purpose of improving their own property. It was further said that the Constitution does not attempt to limit the power of the Legislature in providing for the determination of the question as to what shall constitute municipal territory. The decision quotes with approval from Cook v. Port of Portland, 20 Or. 580, 27 P. 263, 13 L. R. A. 533, that:

"'A city or purely municipal corporation is perhaps the highest type of corporation created for municipal purposes, because it is a miniature government, having legislative, executive and judicial powers, but there is another class of corporation, such as counties, school districts, road districts, etc., which, though varying in application and peculiar features, are but so many agencies or instrumentalities of the state to promote the convenience of the public at large, and are, in the broadest use of the term, for municipal purposes.'"

It is there plainly pointed out that, in discerning the distinction for the purpose of determining the applicability of the "due process" rule, the problem lies in deciding whether or not the act under which the district was created provides for the organization of a district which is in its nature a public corporation, the inhabitants and property owners of which are subject to taxation for municipal purposes without any hearing as to the benefits to be derived from the creation and conduct of the corporation, or is an assessment district created for the primary purpose of assessing upon private lands the benefits to be derived thereby from the public improvements for which purpose the district was formed; that the exactions which public utility corporations may enforce "are in the nature of assessments or taxes for local benefits, to be spread on the property in the districts in proportion to the peculiar advantage accruing to each parcel from the improvement. * * * Districts of the nature just discussed are not municipal corporations in the contemplation of the constitution." And, in denouncing the rule as to the other class of districts, it is said: "We have been cited to no authorities which hold that the requirement as to due process of law gives a property owner an absolute right to notice and hearing before his property may be included within the limits of a municipality or a quasi municipal corporation, by reason of the creation of which his property will be subjected only to the burden of a general tax for the purposes for which the district was formed, in contradistinction to a tax or assessment for some local benefit."

We conclude that the statute is not unconstitutional as depriving taxpayers within a proposed library district of property without due process of law, by including their property therein without notice and without opportunity to object to the intended boundaries. In respondent's briefs it is not seriously urged that the omission of a provision requiring such notice from acts authorizing the creation of educational districts would nullify them. It is, however, insisted upon cited authority that there is in this respect a distinction between school districts and park districts, since the latter, like public streets, confer special benefits upon neighboring property. From what has already been observed we do not deem it necessary to further discuss this phase of the question, as it does not tend to alter the conclusion heretofore reached.

[2, 3] It is next asserted that, assuming the statute to be constitutional, the proceedings were illegal because the notice of election was given only by posting, and was not published in a newspaper. The Library Act provides that upon filing with the board of supervisors of a petition by 50 or more taxpayers and residents of a town or village, the board must order an election to be held in the proposed district, and shall appoint three qualified electors thereof to conduct the same. And section 3 of that act requires that: "Said election shall be called by posting notice thereof in three of the most public places in said proposed library district and by publication in a daily or weekly paper therein, if there be one, at least once a week for not less than fifteen days." St. 1909, p. 815.

Respondent strenuously insists that, while no newspaper was actually printed within the prescribed boundaries of the proposed district, a daily or weekly paper was published in the city of Redondo, which was the nearest point thereto, and that publication should have been made therein. Although certain Code sections are discussed in the briefs, both sides state that they do not apply in this proceeding. The sections referred to are 4458 to 4466, inclusive, of the Political Code. We agree with counsel that these provisions are general and do not control where, as, in this instance, a special provision has been enacted for the particular proceeding. County Sanitation Dist. v. Payne, 197 Cal. 448, 241 P. 264. We are not here concerned with a statute where such terms as "newspaper of general circulation," "published," or "established, printed and published" are employed. Cases cited in which it has been held that where such terms are used the paper may be maintained and issued at a point outside of the district do not aid us. The plain wording of this act requires that the newspaper be within the district. There is no mention of the publication being within its boundaries. The requirement is that if there be a daily or weekly paper in the proposed library district notice shall be published in it. No other interpretation can, we think, reasonably be given to the language of section 3 of the act.

We think that had the Legislature intended the publication of notice in a newspaper published and printed outside of the proposed district, but at the nearest point thereto and circulated in the district, it doubtless would have so specified, or have omitted the four qualifying words, "if there be one." In other instances the intention of the Legislature is expressly indicated by various sections of the Civil Code and Code of Civil Procedure.

A summons in proceedings to quiet title must be published "in some newspaper of general circulation * * * and published in the county where the property is situated, and if there be no such paper in such county, then in some adjoining county, to be designated by the court or judge thereof." Code Civ. Proc. § 750.

Notice of assessment of corporate stock must be given by publication in "some newspaper of general circulation, * * * published at the * * * principal place of business * * * of the corporation," and, "if there be no newspaper published at the place designated as the principal place of business of the corporation, then the publication must be made in some other newspaper of the county, if there be one, and if there be none, then in a newspaper published in an adjoining county." Civ. Code, § 336.

Certificates relating to partnerships must be published "in a newspaper published in the county, if there be one, and if there be none in such county, then in a newspaper in an adjoining county," or, "in the nearest county thereto." Civ. Code, §§ 2466, 2483.

Since no daily or weekly newspaper was printed or published within the limits of Palos Verdes library district, notice of the election for its incorporation could not be so published therein, and we conclude that the law does not require it to be published in a newspaper printed and published in an adjoining municipality.

[4] Finally, respondent contends that the proceedings were irregular because the polls were opened at 8 o'clock a. m., whereas section 22 of the Library Act provides that in such districts they "must not be opened before one o'clock p. m., and must be kept open not less than six hours." Petitioner contends that had the seven opposing votes heretofore mentioned been cast between 1 o'clock and 7 o'clock p. m., more than two-thirds of the qualified electors voting expressed their assent to the bond issue, and that the result was not affected by this deviation from the statute. Respondent insists that 40, or more than one-half of the ballots, having been cast before the statutory hour for opening the polls, less than two-thirds of the qualified electors who voted cast legal ballots.

In Kenworthy v. Mast, 141 Cal. 268, 74 P. 841, wherein it appears that the polls in two precincts did not open until 7:45 and 8:10 o'clock a. m., respectively, under a statute requiring the commencement of balloting at 6 o'clock a. m. it was held that the votes of qualified electors in those precincts should not be rejected. The rule of this state is there stated in the following language:

"It is said that the provisions as to time and place of holding an election are mandatory, and that the departure from those requirements was in this case so substantial as to forbid any inquiry as to whether or not any injury resulted. That a literal compliance with the provisions of the law as to the hour of opening the polls is absolutely essential to the validity of the vote of a precinct has never been held in this state, and no good reason can be conceived for so holding. Learned counsel for respondent admit that even the disobedience of a mandatory statute must be liberally construed, and that, if the departure therefrom is slight, and it can easily be determined that no injury resulted therefrom, the vote will not be rejected. It was said by this court in Atkinson v. Lorbeer, 111 Cal. 419, 421 [44 P. 162]: 'Of course, neither the voters nor those voted for have any control over election officers, and to set aside the vote of a precinct, when there was clearly no fraud or any mistake affecting the result, for mere irregularities occasioned by the ignorance or carelessness of election boards would, in many cases, be a patent injustice. Moreover, a construction requiring an exceedingly strict compliance with all statutory provisions might tempt to irregularities contrived for the very purpose of vitiating the vote at a certain polling-place, and as was said in Whipley v. McKune, 12 Cal. 361, "might lead to more fraud than it would prevent."'

"On the other hand the election laws should not be so construed as to open the door to future frauds which it is the purpose of those laws to prevent. It is practically impossible to lay down any general rule covering all cases, but we think the true test to be applied to departures from the requirements of the laws relating to the conducting of elections on the proper day and at the proper place, be those requirements called mandatory or directory, is as to whether or not the particular departure is of such a nature as to make it impossible or extremely difficult to determine, under the circumstances of the case, whether fraud had been committed or anything done which would affect the result. If, as was said in Atkinson v. Lorbeer, 111 Cal. 419 [44 P. 162], speaking of a departure from a so-called 'directory' provision, it may be easily shown that the departure was not accompanied with fraud or any act affecting the result, and such showing is made, the vote will not be rejected. If, on the other hand, the departure from the law is so gross as to give rise to a suspicion of fraud or unfairness, and the circumstances are such that in the nature of things no evidence as to the effect thereof could be satisfactory, a court will not enter upon the task of inquiry."

Again, in People ex rel. Escalle v. Town of Larkspur, 16 Cal. App. 169, 116 P. 702, it appeared that the polls were not opened until 2½ hours later, and were closed one hour earlier, than the time fixed by the statute. It was contended that between 6 o'clock a. m. and the opening of the polls a number of qualified electors appeared and were turned away because the official ballots had not arrived, and that 12 electors cast ballots which they wrote out in full upon blank paper; that "all of said electors worked outside the territory hereinabove set forth and some of them would have voted against incorporation." In affirming a decree declaring the election valid, it was said:

"So that, in any view of the facts the expression at the polls showed that a majority of all the electors who were entitled to vote was in favor of incorporation. We are next to inquire whether, in such a case, the will of the majority is to be set aside on the ground now urged. We think the principles enunciated in the well-considered case of Kenworthy v. Mast, 141 Cal. 268, 74 P. 841, are decisive of the question. The general rule laid down in McCrary on Elections, section 165, is quoted approvingly, namely, that where there is no statutory provision expressly declaring that a failure, in the respect now being considered, shall render the election void, it will be regarded as directory only, and that, unless the deviation from the legal hours has affected the result, it will be disregarded, but that if such deviation is great, or even considerable, the presumption will be that it has affected the result, and the burden will be upon him who seeks to uphold the election to show affirmatively that it has not. That burden was successfully borne in the present case."

So, in the instant case, to deduct the 7 negative votes from the 75 cast during the whole day, or from the 35 cast within legal hours, would leave more than two-thirds in favor of the bond issue, and in either event the expression of the required number of qualified taxpayers and residents of the library district readily appears.

The following authorities cited by respondent state the same rule as that enunciated in those from which we have quoted, and for the same reasons hold the elections involved to have been invalid. Directors of Fallbrook Irrigation Dist. v. Abila, 106 Cal. 365, 39 P. 793, failed to present a sufficient showing of the number of ballots cast during the time when the polls should have been closed, and hence it did not appear that the violation of the statute was harmless. Anaheim Sugar Co. v. County of Orange, 181 Cal. 212, 183 P. 809, was an appeal from a judgment of dismissal after sustaining a demurrer to the complaint upon the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The Supreme Court reversed the judgment, holding that the rule enunciated in Kenworthy v. Mast, supra, and People ex rel. Escalle v. Town of Larkspur, supra, had properly been invoked, and that the complaint was not demurrable upon the ground alleged by the defendant, since it presented facts which, if proved, would invalidate the election.

We think that the writ of mandamus should issue directing the chairman of the board of supervisors of Los Angeles county to sign the bonds here in question, as prayed, and it is so ordered.

LAUGHLIN et al. v. HOUGHTON et al. (Civ. 6745.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 10, 1929.

Automobiles 🔑169—Leaving truck with rear extending onto pavement where there was no crossing warranted recovery for death from collision of car with truck.

The act of the driver of a truck in leaving the rear thereof extending over the paved part of the highway at night, after making a left turn crossing to turn around at a point in a busy thoroughfare where there was no crossing or intersection, and at a time when many cars were passing in both directions, held to constitute such negligence as to warrant recovery for death of person caused by collision with the truck of the car in which she was riding.

TYLER, P. J. Action for damages brought by the heirs at law of Flora Mabel Laughlin, deceased, claiming that decedent met her death in an automobile accident by reason of the negligence of the defendants. The accident occurred about 9 o'clock in the evening of May 16, 1927, on the main highway running between the towns of Tracy and Livermore. Decedent was riding in a Ford touring car, accompanied by a relative, Mr. William Laughlin. The car was being driven by one Stewart Armstrong. The party had taken the husband of the deceased to his work and was returning to the Laughlin home. Deceased was seated in the tonneau with her two minor children, the elder being three years old and the younger some thirteen months, and the car was proceeding along the highway in a westerly direction. The accident occurred at Altamount, opposite to the Summit Garage. At this place the paved portion of the highway is 20 feet in width, with a gravel road on either side. Defendant G. E. Houghton had driven a Mack truck, the body of which was some 18 feet in length, in front of the garage, facing in an easterly direction toward Tracy, and he desired to turn the truck around for the purpose of proceeding in the opposite direction. He made a left-hand turn and pulled his truck across the highway, the rear end of the truck projecting diagonally back toward the paved portion thereof. While in this position the automobile in which deceased was riding struck the rear end of the truck, seriously injuring William Laughlin and killing the mother and her youngest child. The case was tried before a jury, which resulted in a verdict in favor of the plaintiffs in the sum of $15,000. A motion for a new trial was made and denied. This is an appeal from the judgment. The sole point relied upon by defendants for a reversal is that there is no substantial evidence in the record to support the verdict. There is no merit in this claim. At the time of the accident there was a heavy traffic upon the highway, as many machines were being driven in both directions. At the point where defendant made his turn from the south to the north side of the highway, there was no crossing or intersection. The automobile occupied by deceased was being driven at a rate of speed variously estimated at from 20 to 25 miles an hour at the time of the impact with defendants' truck. There is evidence to show that at this time the truck extended over the paved portion of the highway. While there is a conflict in the testimony upon this subject, it is a matter with which we are not here concerned. In addition to the testimony, the surrounding circumstances indicate that the end of the truck projected over and across the highway proper, as broken glass and the body of the child were found exactly in the middle thereof. The act of the driver of the truck in backing the same over a busy thoroughfare where there was no crossing or intersection, and at a time when many cars were passing in both directions constituted such negligence on his part as warranted the jury in rendering a verdict for the plaintiffs.

KOPKE v. CARLSON et al. (Civ. 6742.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 6, 1929.

1. Venue 🔑5(3)—Action for specific performance of contract for sale of land is triable in county where land is situated (Code Civ. Proc. § 392, subd. 1).

Action for specific performance of contract for sale of land, without more, is local action, which cannot be removed to place of defendant's residence, under Code Civ. Proc. § 392, subd. 1, providing that actions for recovery of real property or interest therein, or for injuries to the same, must be tried in county where land is situated.

2. Pleading 🔑49—Nature of action is determinable from character of complaint and of default judgment which might be rendered thereon.

Nature of action is to be determined from the character of the complaint and from the judgment which might be rendered on default thereon.

3. Venue 🔑5(3)—Suit by purchaser for ascertainment of amount due on contract and for vendors' execution of deed on payment thereof held suit for specific performance, triable where land was situated (Code Civ. Proc. § 392, subd. 1).

Complaint, alleging that plaintiff and defendants entered into installment contract for sale and purchase of real property, and that plaintiff performed all obligations on his part, but defendants refused to give deed except on payment of certain taxes and street assessments, with prayer that amount due defendants be ascertained, and that defendants be directed to execute deed on payment of such amount, held action for specific performance triable in county where land was situated, under Code Civ. Proc. § 392, subd. 1, irrespective of residence of defendants, since prayer for determination of amount due was merely incidental.

Appeal from Superior Court, Monterey County; Fred A. Treat, Judge.

Action by August Kopke against Mary Carlson and another. From an order granting defendants' motion for change of place of trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

John Thompson, of Monterey, for appellant.

E. Fitzgerald, of Placerville, for respondents.

TYLER, P. J. [1] Venue of action. Appeal by plaintiff from an order granting defendants' motion for the change of place of trial. The action was brought by plaintiff as vendee against defendants as vendors for the specific performance of a contract for the purchase and sale of real property situate in Monterey county. Defendants are residents of El Dorado county. The motion was granted upon the theory that defendants were entitled to have the action tried in the county of their residence. The sole question here presented is whether the action is local or transitory. If local, the place of defendants' residence is immaterial. Section 392, subd. 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure, provides, in substance, that actions for the recovery of real property, or interest therein or for the determination in any form of such right or interest or for injuries to the same, must be tried in the county in which the subject of the action, or some part thereof, is situated. An action for the specific performance of a contract for the sale of land, without more, is manifestly one coming within the provisions of this section. Grocers' Fruit Growing Union v. Kern County Land Co., 150 Cal. 466, 89 P. 120; Tutt v. Davis, 13 Cal. App. 715, 110 P. 690; 25 Cal. Jur. p. 862. Counsel for respondents, in support of the order, seek to avoid the effect of this principle by claiming that, where real and personal actions are joined in the same complaint, a defendant is entitled to have the action tried in the county of his residence, and we are cited to the case of Smith v. Smith, 88 Cal. 572, 26 P. 356, and other cases of similar import, as upholding this doctrine. It undoubtedly is the rule that, where the main object of a suit is to recover a money judgment, as where a vendor seeks to recover the purchase price of land, that a defendant is entitled to have the action tried in the county of his residence, notwithstanding that the subject-matter of the action is land. But the instant case presents no such situation.

[2, 3] The nature of an action is to be determined from the character of the complaint and from the judgment which might be rendered upon a default thereon. McFarland v. Martin, 144 Cal. 771, 78 P. 239. Here the complaint alleges that plaintiff and defendants entered into an installment contract for the sale and purchase of certain real property. Further allegations show that plaintiff has complied with all the conditions and obligations in the contract to be by him performed, and has tendered the balance due on the purchase price, and demanded a deed free and clear of all incumbrances, but defendants refused to comply with his demand, except upon the payment of certain taxes and street assessments. The prayer of the complaint is that the amount due from plaintiff to defendants be ascertained, less the amount of taxes, incumbrances, and assessments, and that defendants be directed to execute a deed to plaintiff upon payment by him of the amount found to be due. It thus appears that the suit is one solely for the specific performance of the contract and nothing more. The mere fact that it is prayed that the proper amount due defendants be ascertained does not in any manner make the action twofold, or unite a real or local, and a personal or transitory, action. Robinson v. Williams, 12 Cal. App. 515, 107 P. 705. The action stripped to its essentials is one for the specific performance of a contract for the sale of land, and that portion of the prayer asking that the amount due be determined is a mere incident to the main relief sought, and does not change the nature of the action. Dial v. Homestead Land Co., 39 Cal. App. 479, 179 P. 444; Grocers' Fruit Growing Union v. Kern County Land Co., 150 Cal. 466, 89 P. 120.

The order is reversed.

GLAZER v. HANSON et ux.

CONSIDINE v. SAME.

(Civ. 3707.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 1, 1929.

1. Brokers 🔑10—Offer of exchange of property embodied in agreement employing broker held not irrevocable.

Agreement authorizing broker to effect exchange of property on terms set forth in offer embodied in agreement held not irrevocable, but subject to revocation at any time before acceptance by person to whom offer was made, notwithstanding writing purported to show agreement was coupled with interest, since agent's interest was in commissions only, and not in estate.

2. Principal and agent 🔑34—Power is coupled with interest, where grantee has interest in estate as well as in exercise of power.

Where the grantee has an interest in the estate, as well as in the exercise of the power, such power is coupled with an interest, and the agreement becomes irrevocable.

3. Brokers 🔑43(3)—Husband's oral authorization of wife's signature for him of brokerage contract held ineffective (Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6; § 2309).

Agreement employing broker to effect exchange of properties, signed only by wife, who also wrote husband's name at foot of agreement, was not binding on husband, irrespective of whether he orally expressed satisfaction with agreement; Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6, and section 2309, making said oral authorization ineffective.

4. Damages 🔑79(1)—Broker cannot recover liquidated damages for breach of contract of employment to effect exchange of properties, in absence of showing that it would be impracticable or extremely difficult to ascertain actual damage (Civ. Code, §§ 1670, 1671).

Broker cannot recover liquidated damages specified in agreement employing him to effect exchange of properties, in view of Civ. Code, §§ 1670, 1671, in the absence of any pleading or showing that it would be impracticable or extremely difficult to fix actual damage or agreed compensation.

5. Brokers 🔑11—Loss of commissions is measure of broker's damage for breach of agreement employing him to exchange properties.

The measure of damages for breach of an agreement employing broker to effect exchange of property is his loss of commissions.

6. Brokers 🔑43(3)—Contract employing broker to sell real estate on commission must contain description of land sufficient to identify same without aid of parol evidence (Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6; § 2309).

Under Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6, and section 2309, contract authorizing or employing agent or broker to sell real estate for commission, must contain description of land sufficient in itself or by reference to identify the same, without the aid of parol evidence.

7. Brokers 🔑43(3)—Contract employing broker to exchange ranch property for urban realty held unenforceable for indefiniteness of description.

Agreement employing broker to effect exchange of ranch property for property in city of Oakland, located at southeast corner of Sixteenth street and Eighth avenue, held unenforceable for indefiniteness of description of property involved.

Appeals from Superior Court, Glenn County; Claude F. Purkitt, Judge.

Separate actions by David Glazer and by J. F. Considine against Per Hanson and wife.

Judgments for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal, the cases being consolidated for purposes of appeal. Judgments affirmed.

W. T. Belieu, of Willows, for appellants.

R. M. Rankin and H. W. McGowan, both of Willows, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. The above-named actions, though based partly upon different contracts, begun separately, and asking for judgments in different sums, were consolidated for the purposes of this appeal, and have been presented upon one transcript and argued in one set of briefs. For convenience we will consider first the questions presented in the Glazer case, which to some extent will answer the questions presented in the appeal by Considine, and we will then consider the questions which are peculiar to the Considine appeal. Both cases were prosecuted to recover commissions relating to the exchange of real property, and nonsuits were granted in both cases. The appeals are from the judgments granting nonsuits.

The record discloses that Per Hanson and Susan Hanson, his wife, were the owners of certain real property situate in the county of Glenn, and that on or about the 1st day of October, 1926, at Oakland, in the office of the plaintiff Glazer, the defendant Susan Hanson signed a writing for exchange of properties. The writing, which we will call an agreement, was never signed by her husband, Per Hanson. The name "Per Hanson" was attached to the writing by Susan Hanson. Susan Hanson, however, was never authorized in writing to affix the name of her husband. The defendant Per Hanson was not present at the time his wife affixed his name to the agreement. The instrument to which we have referred is in the words and figures following:

"This agreement witnesseth: That the undersigned Per Hanson and Susan Hanson (wife) owner of the firstly hereinafter described property, in consideration of services to be rendered by David Glazer, hereinafter designated as agent, and for other valuable considerations, hereby agrees with the owner of the secondly hereinafter described property, to exchange said firstly described property for said secondly described property upon the terms and conditions hereinafter set forth.

"Said firstly described property owned by the undersigned, located in the county of Glenn, state of California, is the following: [Here follows description of real properties.]

"Terms: First property, 47 acres, more or less, subject to Federal Farm Loan of $6,400, at 5½ interest.

"Also

"First property, 40 acres more or less, to be free and clear.

"Second property, subject to $40,000.00 first loan, flat until February, 1927, then payable at $465 per month including interest for four years.

"The undersigned hereby authorize said agent to act as agent for them and said agent may also receive a commission from the owners of the hereinbefore secondly described property and the undersigned agrees to pay to said agent at their office, for services rendered $——— within ten days from the date when said agent secures from the owners of the secondly hereinbefore described property, a written agreement which completes or accepts this offer to exchange. If the undersigned refuses to complete this exchange after said acceptance is secured said undersigned then agrees to pay said agent within 15 days from date hereof as liquidated damages to be added to said commission the amount specified to be paid to said agent by the owner of the secondly hereinbefore described property, and a reasonable counsel fee if action is brought for the collection of said commission. Said agent may receive as additional compensation for their services to be added to the commission hereinabove specified, to be paid them by the undersigned any other or further profit obtained by them in said exchange; it being agreed and understood that the full consideration passing to the undersigned for this exchange is that the title to said second piece of property to be delivered to the undersigned subject only to the incumbrances herein stated.

* * * * * *

"The undersigned hereby agrees to furnish, within fifteen days after notification by said agent that this agreement has been accepted, a title insurance policy, and a deed conveying title to the property first above described, subject only to the incumbrances above named, and will allow fifteen days for the owner of said second piece of property to furnish a title insurance policy, and a deed to the property secondly above described.

"Time is of the essence of this agreement. Said agent is given until October 11, 1926, to secure said acceptance from the owners of said secondly described property and this agreement is irrevocable before that date.

"Dated at Oakland, California, this 1st day of October, 1926.

"[Seal] Per Hanson, S. H.
"[Seal] Susan Hanson."

This agreement was signed in duplicate by Susan Hanson. On the back of one of the copies of the agreement appears the following:

"I hereby accept this exchange with the proviso that there will be secured for me an additional loan of $8,600.00 on the first herein mentioned properties. Loans to be flat and for a period not less than 2 years, interest not to exceed 8 per cent per annum. This agreement is void after October 11, 1926. V. D. Accepted 10—5, 1926. V. A. Dunn. Evelyn Dunn."

It will be observed that while the agreement which we have set forth fails to specify the amount of commissions to be paid to the plaintiff, it does provide for the payment of liquidated damages in such sum as the owners of the secondly described property may agree to pay the plaintiff as commissions, and also reasonable counsel fees in the event the parties signing the agreement fail to complete the exchange. The record shows only the conditional acceptance to the agreement which we have herein set forth. On or about the 3d day of October, 1926, it appears that V. A. Dunn and Ray R. Stevenson, who appears in the case as a real estate agent or broker acting for and with the plaintiff David Glazer, visited the defendants at their home place near Orland in Glenn county. During this visit Mr. Stevenson endeavored to have the defendant Per Hanson sign the agreement to which his wife had affixed his name. The defendant refused, however, to do so, or to have anything to do with the agreement. After this visit, and on or about the 7th day of October, 1926, it appears that after some conversation between the plaintiff and V. A. Dunn, one of the signers to the conditional acceptance of the agreement of exchange which we have mentioned wrote to the plaintiff the following letter:

"Victor A. Dunn, Attorney at Law,
"Central Bank Bldg., Oakland, California.
"October 7, 1926.
"Mr. David Glazer, 1460 Webster St., Oakland, Calif.

"Dear Sir: Pursuant to our telephonic conversation of to-day beg to state that you can notify Mrs. Susan Hanson and her husband that I have accepted their offer of exchange as specified in exchange agreement dated October 1, 1926, without any qualification or change and that I am ready and able to make said exchange. The data on the back of the said exchange of course does not enter into the exchange, you having personally agreed to make the loans mentioned herein.

"Your commission is to be $3,000.00 and no more as per our understanding.

"VAD/A [Signed] V. A. Dunn."

It does not appear that the defendants were made aware of the contents of this letter, although it does appear that either the plaintiff or Mr. Stevenson notified the defendants orally that V. A. Dunn had accepted the agreement of exchange. This action is for the collection of the $3,000 mentioned in this letter addressed to the plaintiff by V. A. Dunn. On the 6th day of October, 1926, and prior to the writing of the foregoing letter to Glazer by Dunn, H. W. McGowan, an attorney at law acting as the attorney for both the Hansons, wrote a letter to the plaintiff David Glazer, notifying him that the Hansons refused, and would refuse, to have anything further to do with the exchange of the properties referred to in the agreement. The testimony of the plaintiff in relation to the letter promising him $3,000 for services by Dunn is well illustrated by the following excerpt: "So upon completing the conversation over the telephone I went over to his office and we sat into the matter for sometime and I satisfied him I could secure the money for him, and in view of that he wrote me that letter which we presented here as evidence, that he would pay that commission, and in that letter it states that if I secured the money for him he would give me $3,000.00 for my services and no more."

The record shows no unconditional acceptance of the agreement for exchange of property by V. A. Dunn and Evelyn Dunn. While it is argued that the letter written by Dunn to Glazer is such an acceptance, it is evident from an inspection of what we have herein set forth that no action for specific performance would lie against V. A. Dunn and Evelyn Dunn. It is also evident that there is nothing in the record and nothing in the agreement signed by Susan Hanson, and to which she affixed the name of her husband Per Hanson, furnishing a consideration for charging defendants with whatever sum might be named as the commissions that the owner of the secondly described property might at some future time agree to pay the plaintiff. The record shows that the plaintiff, on the 7th day of October, 1926, received the letter written by the attorney of the Hansons, notifying him of their withdrawal from the offer of exchange.

[1, 2] It is argued that the instrument called an agreement of exchange was irrevocable on the part of the Hansons. This, of course, is not the law. If the agreement were otherwise valid as an offer of exchange, it was subject to revocation at any time before acceptance by the person to whom the offer was made. If the plaintiff, as agent, suffered damages by reason of such withdrawal or revocation of offer, it might present a question which is not pertinent here. The writing which we have set forth also purports to show that it is coupled with an interest. The language in the contract, however, to that effect, does not make it so. This is shown by a reference to 4 California Jurisprudence, 562: "There is an exception to the rule that a contract of employment can be revoked at will where no time is specified for its continuance, which exists where the agency is coupled with an interest. In such a case the principal may not revoke the agreement without incurring liability to the broker therefor. A power coupled with an interest is where the grantee has an interest in the estate as well as in the exercise of the power." Here the agent has no interest in the estate. His interest is only in the commissions he might earn by effecting an exchange.

[3] There is another objection to the validity of the agreement so far as it affects the defendant Per Hanson, which precludes the possibility of any recovery against him by the plaintiff in this action. In this case of Myres v. Surryhne, 67 Cal. 657, 8 P. 523, the rule is laid down that subdivision 6 of section 1624 of the Civil Code is applicable to the employment of agents for the exchange of real property. It is there said (quoting from the syllabus): "An agent employed to exchange real estate cannot recover any compensation or commission for his services in that behalf unless the services were performed under a contract in writing subscribed by the principal." Section 2309 of the Civil Code reads: "An oral authorization is sufficient for any purpose, except that an offer to enter into a contract required by law to be in writing can only be given by an instrument in writing." One of the witnesses for the plaintiff did testify that the defendant Per Hanson said that whatever his wife did was satisfactory to him. This does not constitute an authorization required by statute. The testimony of the witness referred to is denied by the defendant Per Hanson, but whether the defendant Per Hanson did or did not make such statement is wholly immaterial, as the statute requires the authorization to be in writing. Just as stated in McRae v. Ross, 170 Cal. 74, 148 P. 215: "An authorization to an agent empowering him to make a contract on behalf of the principal to sell real estate," etc., "must be in writing." Plaintiff in that case attempted to show that the different defendants had referred the transaction to a brother, who apparently was conducting the negotiations, but the court held that section 2309 of the Civil Code is applicable, and the attempt to show oral authorization, insufficient.

[4, 5] There is another reason why the plaintiff cannot recover in this action against either of the defendants. It purports to be an action founded upon an agreement to pay liquidated damages, and, if it be assumed that the writings to which we have referred constitute an agreement to pay liquidated damages, the plaintiff's action, nevertheless, must fail, and the nonsuit was properly granted. Section 1670 of the Civil Code reads: "Every contract by which the amount of damage to be paid, or other compensation to be made, for a breach of an obligation, is determined in anticipation thereof, is to that extent void, except as expressly provided in the next section." The next section, 1671, reads: "The parties to a contract may agree upon an amount which shall be presumed to be the amount of damage sustained by a breach thereof, when, from the nature of the case, it would be impracticable or extremely difficult to fix the actual damage."

There is nothing in the complaint, and not one word in the testimony to the effect that it would be impracticable or difficult to ascertain and fix the plaintiff's damage in this case. Broker's commissions are usually based and figured at a certain percentage of the valuation of the property involved. That is the extent of the damage, and there is no showing that such damages are not easily ascertained and fixed, if any such there be, However, by reason of the fact that the pleadings are silent, and the testimony is silent, the judgment of nonsuit followed a motion therefor as a matter of course. We need only to refer to one case, to wit, Sun-Maid Raisin Growers of California v. Paul A. Mosesian & Son, 265 P. 828, where this court had occasion to examine, and also to refer to a large number of cases relating to actions wherein it was sought to recover liquidated damages. This court there said: "The law is well settled in this state that the allowance of liquidated damages, or the enforcement of a clause in a contract providing for liquidated damages, is a matter of pleading and proof. There must be proof of the surrounding and attendant circumstances connected with the execution of the contract, from which the court may make its findings of the impracticability of fixing damages otherwise." That case and the authorities there cited are conclusive as against the plaintiff's right to recover in this action. This case was affirmed in the case of Sun-Maid Raisin Growers of California v. Arakelian (Cal. App.) 265 P. 832. In both cases a hearing was denied in the Supreme Court. This disposes of the case of the appellant Glazer.

In the case of the appellant Considine, the complaint, so far as material here, alleges as follows: "That heretofore on October 1, 1926, defendant became indebted to this plaintiff in the sum of $2,000.00 for services which he had rendered to them in the exchange of their property at Orland, in Glenn county, California, for property in the city of Oakland, county of Alameda, state of California, which said sum of $2,000.00 was payable in the following manner, to wit: The sum of $500.00 cash, on or before October 11, 1926, and the balance amounting to $1,500.00, to be evidenced by a bankable note payable at the rate of $50.00 per month until paid." To this complaint the defendants interposed a demurrer, setting forth, among other things, that the complaint did not state a cause of action. The demurrer was overruled, and upon the trial the plaintiff introduced in support of his contention the following agreement:

"This agreement, entered into this 1st day of October, 1926, between Per Hanson and his wife, Susan Hanson, and J. F. Considine, agent:

"Per Hanson and Susan Hanson hereby agreed to pay J. F. Considine the sum of $2,000.00 for services rendered in the exchange of their ranch property for property in the City of Oakland, said property located at the S. E. corner of 16th Street and 8th Avenue.

"Said $2,000.00 to be paid as follows: $500 cash upon the acceptance of the agreement between the owner of the Oakland property, and the balance amounting to $1,500.00 in the form of a bankable note, payable $50.00 per month until paid.

"The option, however, is given to Per Hanson and wife to pay all cash on the completion of this transaction; and in that event J. F. Considine will accept the total sum of $1,500.00.

"Time is the essence of this agreement, and all parties hereto agree to execute said evidence of the fulfillment of this agreement immediately upon the completion of the exchange agreement, which this agreement is a part of, covering the property hereinbefore mentioned.
Per Hanson, S. H.
"Susan Hanson.
"J. F. Considine."

[6, 7] This agreement was signed by Susan Hanson only, who affixed the name of her husband, Per Hanson, without any authority, as we have shown in considering the case of the appellant Glazer. In addition to what has been said in the Glazer case, we need only to state the following: In a contract authorizing or employing an agent or broker to sell real estate for a commission, there must not only be an instrument in writing signed by the parties to be charged, but the instrument must contain a description of the land sufficient in itself, or by reference, to identify the same without the aid of parol evidence. Or, as said in one of the cases: "In short, a description of land sought to be sold under a broker's contract can be cured but not created by parol evidence." This statement of the law is supported, among others, by the following authorities: Proulx v. Sacramento Valley Land Co., 19 Cal. App. 529, 126 P. 509; Craig v. Zelian, 137 Cal. 105, 69 P. 853; Cowing v. Wofford, 68 Cal. App. 538, 229 P. 883; Dillingham v. Dahlgren, 52 Cal. App. 322, 198 P. 832. Other cases might be cited, but these are sufficient.

It necessarily follows from what has been said that the court erred in overruling the defendant's demurrer to the plaintiff's complaint, and that the plaintiff's complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The land in Glenn county is not referred to by any description, and there is nothing in the complaint showing what property the pleader had in view when mentioning the city of Oakland. Likewise, the court erred in overruling the defendant's objection to the introduction of the agreement. First, as to the defendant Per Hanson, there is no showing that he had authorized any one to sign his name, as required by the Codes; secondly, the agreement is invalid and ineffective as against either of the defendants for the reasons set forth in the cases to which we have referred. The first paragraph of the agreement of employment, as we have said, reads:

"Per Hanson and Susan Hanson hereby agreed to pay J. F. Considine the sum of $2,000.00 for services rendered in the exchange of their ranch property for property in the city of Oakland, said property located at the southeast corner of Sixteenth street and Eighth avenue."

We only need to ask, Where is the ranch property? What property is located at the southeast corner of Sixteenth street and Eighth avenue? As the appellant Considine, in addition to what we have said in the Glazer case, failed also, for the reasons which we have stated in considering his own case, to make out a cause of action, the judgment of nonsuit as to him was also properly granted.

The judgments in both cases must be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; ROLFE L. THOMPSON, J.

98 Cal. App. 175

NORTON v. MEYERS. (Civ. 6696.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 8, 1929.

1. Contracts 🔑322(4)—Testimony as to cost of building changes held not uncontradicted, so as to preclude finding that lesser sum would be sufficient, in view of evidence of oral agreement to construct smaller room than one included in estimate.

In action on note given in part consideration of agreement to perform building contract, testimony that it would require approximately $2,000 to remedy defects and make necessary changes, including reconstruction of room of dimensions originally specified, held not uncontradicted, so as to preclude finding that $750 would be sufficient, in view of evidence of oral agreement to construct smaller room.

2. Appeal and error 🔑930(1)—Intendments and presumptions from stipulation for inspection of building by trial judge must be indulged in favor of judgment.

Whatever intendments and presumptions legally flow from stipulation that trial judge should visit and inspect building with contractor and builder of his own selection, and consider any information thus obtained as if introduced in evidence, must be indulged in favor of judgment for plaintiff, in action on note given as part of consideration for agreement to perform building contract.

3. Contracts 🔑295(1)—Building contractor, substantially performing contract in good faith, can recover price, less damages for minor deviations, from owner taking possession.

Where owner has taken possession of building, contractor has substantially performed contract, failure of full performance can be compensated in damages deducted from price or allowed as counterclaim, and omissions and deviations were not willful or fraudulent, and do not substantially affect usefulness of building for intended purposes, contractor may recover unpaid balance of price, less amount allowed as damages for failure in strict performance.

4. Contracts ⚷295(1)—Substantial performance of building contract usually depends on existing facts and circumstances.

The question of what constitutes substantial performance of a building contract is usually to be determined in each case with reference to the existing facts and circumstances.

5. Contracts ⚷295(1)—Trial court's enumeration of minor departures from building contract held not to establish lack of substantial performance.

Trial court's enumeration of eight conceded departures from building contract held not to establish lack of substantial compliance with contractor's obligations, where variance from specifications did not impair building as whole, it was actually used for intended purpose, and defects can be remedied without damage to other parts of structure for amount allowed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John L. Fleming, Judge.

Action by W. A. Norton against Laura M. Meyers, who filed a cross-complaint. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. E. Haley and Birger Tinglof, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Charles J. Kelly, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LANDIS, Justice pro tem. This is an action on a promissory note in the sum of $2,185, given plaintiff as part of the consideration of his agreement to perform a building contract.

In her answer defendant alleges that, by reason of the failure of plaintiff to complete the work within the time and as provided by the agreement, the consideration for the note wholly failed, and in her cross-complaint asks damages against plaintiff in the sum of $2,925 for failure to perform the building contract, and by reason of defective construction and material furnished by plaintiff.

The trial court found that plaintiff had substantially performed the contract, and that changes necessary to make the work conform to the agreement could readily be made, and gave judgment against defendant for the amount of the note, less certain allowances for changes in the work performed by plaintiff, to make the same comply with the agreement, detriment caused by failure to perform, for which plaintiff was not at fault, and a sum certain for failure to complete the work within a reasonable time. The amount of allowances made by way of recoupment, aggregating the sum of $850, covered the following items: $100 for damages for failing to complete the contract within a reasonable time and $750 because of deficiencies in construction of the building.

Defendant appeals, and for a reversal of the judgment relies upon and urges the following two points, viz: First, insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the finding to the effect that, in certain enumerated respects, the work performed and materials furnished by the plaintiff to the defendant were not in accordance with the contract between them, as a result of which the defendant sustained a loss of $750, to be deducted from the amount sued upon; second, insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the finding to the effect that the building and work as finished by plaintiff was completed substantially in accordance with the agreement between the parties.

[1] In support of the first point urged, appellant contends that the testimony of the witnesses Howard, Brown and Johnson, to the effect that, in their opinion, it would require approximately $2,000 to remedy the defects and make the necessary changes in construction and materials in the building erected by respondent, is in no way contradicted; and that, as respondent did not introduce any testimony in contradiction of the testimony of these witnesses, there is no basis for the finding that $750 would in fact be sufficient to remedy the defects and compensate appellant; that it is not a case of conflict of evidence, but simply a case where there is no evidence in conflict with the defendant's testimony in this regard. With this contention we are unable to agree. Upon an examination of the entire record, it appears to us that this is a case where there is a substantial conflict in the evidence. For instance, and without reviewing the entire testimony, it quite clearly appears that the principal item complained of is that of a room the construction of which was smaller in size than the contract called for. While it is true that the three witnesses hereinbefore mentioned did give it as their opinion that, to replace everything in first-class workmanlike manner, including the making of that room 14 feet by 18 feet, as originally specified and agreed upon, it would cost approximately $2,000, there is evidence to the effect that the available space would not permit the construction of a room the size called for, and that, after this fact was discovered, an oral agreement was entered into by and between the parties under which the smaller size was adopted; and an examination of the entire testimony of these witnesses discloses that the estimates given were based upon the cost of a reconstruction of the room, that is, the cost of taking apart the constructed room and the rebuilding of another room of the size originally called for. In short, there is evidence that contradicts the testimony of the three witnesses Howard, Brown, and Johnson which, if believed by the court, justifies and supports the court's conclusion.

[2] The record also discloses that on the last day of the trial a discussion between the court and the respective counsel took place and resulted in a stipulation between the parties to the effect that the trial judge should visit and inspect the building in question and should take with him a contractor and builder of his own selection; that such inspection should be made in the absence of the parties and the attorneys, and that any information the judge obtained from such inspection or from the contractor so accompanying him on such inspection should have the same effect, and should by the court be considered as if such testimony had been introduced in court at the trial. The record does not show whether the judge did or did not inspect the premises, and the contention of respondent is that for the reason that the record fails to disclose that the judge did not inspect the building, under the rule often laid down by this court, all presumptions not contradicted by or inconsistent with the record on appeal must be indulged in favor of the judgment (citing Throop v. Weaver, 180 Cal. 335, 181 P. 55; Woods v. Diepenbrock, 141 Cal. 55, 74 P. 546; Jackson School District v. Culbert, 134 Cal. 508, 66 P. 741; Brown v. Vidal, 1 Cal. Unrep. 15; Myers v. Canepa, 37 Cal. App. 556, 174 P. 903, 906; Kovacevich v. Fischer Motor Body Co. [Cal. App.] 271 P. 351), and that it must be presumed in support of the judgment that the court did in fact inspect the building and consider the results of its own observations, in support of the findings complained of. Disposing of this contention of respondent in view of our having, without the consideration of the presumption urged, reached the conclusion that there is a substantial conflict of evidence, suffice it to say that whatever intendments and presumptions legally flow therefrom must be indulged in favor of the judgment.

[3] With respect to the second point urged by appellant, to the effect that there has not been a substantial performance of the contract, the law in this state on this subject has been considered in several recent decisions, and is now comparatively well settled. The rule as stated in the case of Haverty Co. v. Jones, 185 Cal. 285, 289, 197 P. 105, 107, and supported by a long list of authorities therein enumerated, is as follows:

"In the case of building contracts where the owner has taken possession of the building and is enjoying the fruits of the contractor's work in the performance of the contract, that if there has been a substantial performance thereof by the contractor in good faith, where the failure to make full performance can be compensated in damages to be deducted from the price or allowed as a counterclaim, and the omissions and deviations were not wilful or fraudulent and do not substantially affect the usefulness of the building for the purposes for which it was intended, the contractor may, in an action upon the contract, recover the amount unpaid of his contract price, less the amount allowed as damages for the failure in strict performance."

[4, 5] Appellant contends that the finding and enumeration by the trial court of eight conceded departures by respondent from the contract show and establish a lack of substantial compliance with his obligations under the contract. The findings of the trial court, after specifying the eight particulars in which the construction did not conform to the agreement, in part recites as follows:

"Such neglect and failure to complete the work and furnish the materials were in minor details only in connection with the whole of said agreement, and can, almost without exception, be readily supplied by said defendant, and that the said agreement was in all respects substantially performed."

The question what constitutes substantial performance is one of some difficulty, but is usually "to be determined in each case with reference to the existing facts and circumstances."

In this case it quite clearly appears that the variance from the specifications of the contract does not impair the building as a whole; that, after construction, the building was actually used for the intended purpose, and that the defects can be remedied without material or in fact any damage to the other parts of the structure, and, other than the item of the reconstruction of the room, which may be eliminated from consideration by reason of the subsequent oral agreement, can be remedied for the amount allowed by the trial court for that purpose.

Based upon the conclusions hereinbefore announced upon the principal issues of the case, we are constrained to hold that the judgment expresses a correct conclusion upon the facts found, and that the evidence is sufficient to justify the findings upon the material issues necessary to support the judgment.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CASHIN, J.

HILL v. KNIGHT et al. (Civ. 3690.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 3, 1929.

Rehearing Denied May 3, 1929. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court May 29, 1929.

1. Brokers 🔑88(3)—Motion for nonsuit in broker's action for commission should have been granted, under evidence showing broker was not procuring cause of sale.

In broker's action for commission where evidence showed that broker did not consummate sale of property, did not have exclusive agency, that he knew owners claimed right to sell property themselves, did not inform owners that he had endeavored to interest purchaser in property, and that owners sold property without knowledge that broker had called it to attention of purchaser, held, that defendants' motion for nonsuit should have been granted.

2. Brokers 🔑49(1)—Merely calling purchaser's attention to property and urging desirability of its purchase is not sufficient to support judgment awarding commissions.

Merely calling attention of a prospective purchaser to property and urging upon him desirability of its purchase is not sufficient basis to support judgment awarding any commissions.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yolo County; Peter J. Shields, Judge.

Action by W. L. Hill against Edna L. Knight and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

R. M. Rankin, of Willows, for appellants.

J. L. Royle, of Berkeley, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. This appeal is from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff after motion for new trial had been denied by the court. The action was for recovery of commissions alleged to be due the plaintiff on account of the sale of certain real estate, was tried before a jury, and resulted in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff.

The plaintiff was a real estate broker doing business in Sonoma county, and on or about the 19th day of November, 1923, the defendants executed and delivered to the plaintiff a writing authorizing the plaintiff, for a period of 30 days, to act as agent in making sale of certain real and personal property described and referred to in said instrument. Time was made the essence of the agreement or authorization, and under its terms it expired 30 days after date. On the 11th day of December, 1923, R. N. Rankin, an attorney for the defendants, acting under instructions from one of them, wrote the plaintiff a letter extending the authorization for 30 days from its expiration date, with the understanding that there was no change in price and that the contract or authorization did not confer any exclusive rights upon the plaintiff. The selling price of the property mentioned in the writing executed and delivered to the plaintiff fixed the real estate at $35,000, which price included all machinery, farm implements, horses, harness, and saddles then on the property. The writing also included an authorization to sell 250 head of cattle, more or less, at $30 per head. The plaintiff was to receive 5 per cent. commission on the selling price of the real estate, and $1 per head for the cattle sold. The terms of sale were also set forth in the authorization, and the real estate, consisting of 2,823.93 acres, sufficiently described by reference to deeds, etc. The record shows that no sale was effected under the authorization to which we have referred, nor during the period of time mentioned in Rankin's letter extending the operation of the agreement for 30 days on and after December 9, 1923. As we have said, time was made the essence of the original agreement. In the extension of the authorization for 30 days mentioned in the letter of Mr. Rankin to the plaintiff, it is specifically set forth that the heirs, which means the persons who executed the authorization, will, if they have the opportunity, sell the property, or that they desire to sell the property. This, of course, is only a statement of a right which the heirs possessed during the entire period of time heretofore mentioned, but constituted a further notice to the plaintiff. No sale of the ranch having been effected, it appears that on or about May 25, 1924, one of the defendants, Mrs. Edna L. Knight, wrote a letter to the plaintiff, which, among other things, contained the following: "In regard to the stock ranch, so far as I know it has never been listed with anyone but yourself and while the heirs would not renew the option, if you consummated a sale, you would be protected in your commission. I think the price would still hold good with the exception of the cattle which of course would be revalued. At present day prices I believe cattle will be worth more money in the near future and then of course we would not sell either ranch or cattle separately. One depends on the other. The only assurance I can give you is that if you sell the property you will be protected in your commission—the price the same as that given you with the exception of the stock as I stated above." In this letter, as shown by the excerpt, it was stated that the heirs would not renew the option; that is, the agreement to which we have referred as having been executed and delivered to the plaintiff on or about the 9th day of November, 1923, authorizing the plaintiff, as agent, to make sale of the property therein mentioned. The letter, however, did state that if the plaintiff consummated a sale, he would be protected in his commission. The information is also imparted in the letter that any sale made by the plaintiff must be of both the ranch and the cattle; that they would not consider separate sales. The record shows that there was no further communication relative to the sale of the property mentioned in the authorization between the plaintiff and any of the defendants. However, on or about the 30th of July, 1924, a little over two months after receipt of the letter to which we have just referred, it appears that the plaintiff had an interview with Richard Deming, Jr., at plaintiff's office in Sonoma county, but did not succeed in effecting a sale. On the 4th day of August thereafter the record shows that Richard Deming, Jr., called on the defendants in relation to buying the real property heretofore referred to, and before any negotiations were had with him by the defendants, they inquired particularly if he had seen the plaintiff, Mr. W. L. Hill, and being informed that he had not, and had had no negotiations with him, the defendants entered into negotiations with Richard Deming, Jr., for the sale of the real estate heretofore referred to and succeeded in selling said property to him for the sum of $32,000. Thereafter, the plaintiff learning of the sale of the real property made demand for payment to him of commissions in the sum of $1,600, and payment being refused, the plaintiff instituted this action.

[1] Upon this appeal it is insisted: First, that the defendant's demurrer to the plaintiff's complaint should have been sustained; second, that the plaintiff had no written contract for the sale of the premises referred to; third, that the court erred in denying the defendants' motion for nonsuit; and, fourth, that the court erred in its instructions to the jury. For the reasons hereinafter mentioned we do not deem it necessary to consider the defendants' demurrer to the plaintiff's complaint, nor do we need to consider the terms and conditions of the alleged contract further than to state that the plaintiff was not authorized to make any separate offer of the property mentioned therein. The letter dated May 25, 1924, which must be the basis of this action if plaintiff had any rights whatever, specifically informed the plaintiff that the real estate and the cattle must be sold together, or to use the language of the letter, "one depends on the other." The letter also informed the plaintiff that the price of the stock included in the sale would be a matter of further consideration. In other words, the letter, if it amounted to an authorization at all, simply authorized the plaintiff to offer the property for sale, accept a bid, and refer the same to the defendants, as the selling price of the cattle was not fixed. None of the other defendants herein signed the letter to which we have referred, but it appears that their attorney, in open court, stated in effect that if the letter of May 25, 1924, bound the defendant Mrs. Edna L. Knight, it bound all of the defendants.

It will be noticed, further, that the only promise made to the plaintiff was in the use of these words in the letter referred to, to wit, "if you consummated a sale, you would be protected in your commission."

Did the plaintiff bring himself within the terms of this letter, or even within the terms of the original authorization, and did the court err in denying defendants' motion for a nonsuit? These questions can be answered more readily after setting forth the testimony of the plaintiff concerning all that he did in the matter. The plaintiff testified that he saw Mr. Deming on what is known as and called the Canfield ranch, near Geyserville; that Mr. Deming was contemplating buying that ranch; that thereafter he wrote a letter to Mr. Deming concerning the property belonging to the defendants, and asked Mr. Deming to come to his office. It appears that the ranch known as the Canfield ranch, and the real property known as the Caldwell property, belonging to the defendants, was some distance apart. That in response to the letter just referred to Deming appeared at the office of the plaintiff, and they talked over the ranch belonging to the defendants; that the plaintiff told him who owned it, and "went through the details regarding it." The plaintiff testified that he told Mr. Deming he could see the president of the Chamber of Commerce at Santa Rosa; also, a Mr. Doyle, president of the bank there; he had a mortgage on the place for $12,000. The witness then testified as follows: "And after Mr. Deming spent some two hours in the office he got up and said, 'Well, now I am not interested in the ranch,' he said, 'I don't care to figure on it, and,' he said, 'must find a cheaper ranch'; and I said, 'Well, now, you haven't seen it; I will take you up there and show it to you.' He says, 'No,' he said, 'I would be losing my time as well as yours.' So I disregarded all my data on it and threw it in the wastebasket, and disregarded him. A few days later I learned that Mr. Deming had bought the ranch, so I immediately wired the Purkitt heirs that my man had bought it and I expected to be protected on my commissions. Then I looked up the deeds. It was July 30th, the time that Deming came into my office, and the ranch deal was made on August 4th." While there is testimony in the record showing what Mr. Deming, and also a man by the name of Mr. Adams, who appears to have been interested with Mr. Deming, did after the interview with the plaintiff on July 30th, there is nothing in the record showing that the plaintiff took any further action in relation to the sale of the property mentioned in the original authorization, or in relation to the sale of the real property known as the Caldwell ranch belonging to the defendants. No effort was made by him to communicate with the defendants and inform them that either Richard Deming or Mr. Adams had been in plaintiff's office, or that he had given them any data or information in relation to the property. The plaintiff appears to have acted in accordance with his own statement, that he disregarded him (referring to Mr. Deming), and threw all his data in the wastebasket. As stated heretofore, the defendants made inquiry of Mr. Deming as to whether he had had any negotiations with the plaintiff Hill, or had seen the plaintiff Hill in relation to the property. We refer to this because it shows that the defendants acted in good faith, and brings them within the language of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts in the case of Smith v. Kimball, 193 Mass. 582, 79 N. E. 800: "The fact that the plaintiff had failed to persuade the purchaser to take the property at one price, is not of itself evidence which would justify a finding that his services were the operating and efficient cause of a subsequent sale at a somewhat lower price which yet was higher than the plaintiff had succeeded in obtaining. Nor is there any question possible as to the defendants' right to terminate the plaintiff's employment. They could have done this, acting in good faith, even if they had known who the plaintiff's customer was, and then had proceeded to deal with him themselves. (Cadigan v. Crabtree, 179 Mass. 474, 61 N. E. 37, 55 L. R. A. 77, 88 Am. St. Rep. 397.) * * * There is no ground on which it can be said that the defendants in throwing over the plaintiff and themselves dealing directly with A. V. Lincoln, acted in bad faith." (Citing a number of authorities.) "They could not have intended to deprive the plaintiff of his commission; for they did not know that Lincoln had been his customer." Disregarding that portion of the quotation relative to knowledge of the plaintiff's customer, the latter portion of the quotation is directly applicable here. The plaintiff took no means and made no effort to inform the defendants that he had a prospective customer or that he had even mentioned to Richard Deming that the ranch was for sale. The mere fact that the plaintiff called the attention of the property to Richard Deming is not sufficient to enable him to prevail in this action. As said in Naylor v. Ashton, 20 Cal. App. 544, 130 P. 181: "It must further appear that the broker performed the duty assumed by him within the time limited in his contract, or within such extension of time as may have been granted by his employer. If he failed to do that, he is not entitled to the commissions, even though he made efforts to sell property, and first called to it the attention of the party who subsequently made the purchase, unless the delay was caused by the negligence, fault or fraud of the owner"—citing Zeimer v. Antisell, 75 Cal. 509, 17 P. 642; Ayres v. Thomas, 116 Cal. 140, 47 P. 1013; Ropes v. John Rosenfeld's Sons, 145 Cal. 671, 79 P. 354; Hicks v. Post, 154 Cal. 22, 96 P. 878; Brown v. Mason, 155 Cal. 155, 99 P. 867, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 328. To the same effect is the case of Cone v. Keil, 18 Cal. App. 675, 124 P. 548, where it is said: "Merely putting a prospective purchaser on the track of property which is on the market will not suffice to entitle the broker to the commission contracted for, and even though a broker opens negotiations for the sale of the property, he will not be entitled to a commission if he finally fails in his efforts, without fault or interference of the owner, to induce a prospective purchaser to buy or make an offer to buy, notwithstanding that the owner may subsequently, either personally or through the instrumentality of other brokers, sell the same property to the same individual at the price and upon the terms for which the property was originally offered for sale." In Stephens v. Anderson, 36 Cal. App. 199, 171 P. 811, a case where the owner made sale to a purchaser to whom an agent had mentioned the property, and also where the agent had failed to communicate with the owner and inform the owner that he had called the attention of the property to the person to whom the owner thereafter sold, the court held the agent not entitled to commissions, and in so doing used the following language, which is according to the facts of this case: "There was no evidence that Stephens communicated to her any offer to purchase the property, and in these particulars we think there was a failure of proof necessary to sustain the plaintiff's case. We think the rule is fundamental and well understood that before an agent may be said to have earned a commission he is required to show that he produced to the vendor a purchaser ready, able, and willing to buy for the price and upon the terms proposed by the vendor in the agency contract. The alleged agency was in nowise an exclusive agency, and, under the conditions shown, Mrs. Anderson had the right to deal independently with anyone who desired to purchase directly from her," etc.

In the case of Brown v. Mason, 155 Cal. 155, 99 P. 867, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 328, a case which we have heretofore cited, the rule is affirmed that an agent, by merely calling the attention of the property to one who subsequently purchases the same, is not entitled to commissions unless there is some fault or fraud on the part of the owner.

In McCoy v. Zahn Corporation, 183 Cal. 191, 191 P. 20, the quotation which we have taken from Cone v. Keil, supra, is set forth and approved.

In the case of Rosenfield v. Wall, 94 Conn. 418, 109 A. 409, 9 A. L. R. 1189, a number of cases are cited affirming the rule which we have set forth, and then, in the annotations to that case, beginning on page 1194 of 9 A. L. R., a number of cases are quoted showing under what circumstances an owner may make sale without being liable to a broker who has performed acts similar to those testified to by the plaintiff in this cause.

The respondent calls our attention to the following language found in 4 California Jurisprudence, 605: "To entitle a broker to his commissions as the procuring cause of a sale, it is not necessary that he should have personally conducted the negotiations between his principal and the purchaser, leading to the sale, nor that he should have been present when the bargain was completed, nor that the principal, at the time, should have known that the purchaser was one found by the broker. It is indispensable, though, that the broker was the procuring cause of the sale, so where it appears that the seller and buyer were for the first time brought together by the broker, duly authorized to act for the seller, and the sale was subsequently consummated by the seller and buyer acting independently of the broker, the broker not having abandoned his agency, and the seller not having revoked the broker's authorization or done any act from which a revocation might be implied, the inference is a reasonable one that the sale, under such circumstances, is effected through the broker's agency as a procuring cause." The respondent relies upon the first sentence of the above quotation, but a reference to the authorities cited in the subjoined note shows that the contracts upon which that statement, or that portion of the quotation is based, were entirely different from the contract under which the plaintiff was acting, assuming that the original authorization was still in full force and effect.

In the case of Justy v. Erro, 16 Cal. App. 519, 117 P. 575, one of the cases cited to support the statement contained in the first sentence which we have quoted from 4 California Jurisprudence, the contract reads as follows: "This contract to remain in force for a period of ninety days from the date hereof and thereafter until written notice is given to cancel, and if sale is made by me or through me during the term of this contract, or after the expiration of the same, to anyone to whom said property has been submitted by said N. P. Justy Company, I agree to pay them 2½ per cent. commission on said sale." Nothing of that kind appears in any of the papers under which the plaintiff in this action purports to have acted.

The next California case cited to support the first sentence of the quotation taken from California Jurisprudence, supra, is that of Briggs v. Hall, 24 Cal. App. 586, 141 P. 1067. The contract, however, in that case reads as follows: "I reserve the right to sell said property myself, or to sell said property through the agency of anyone else, but I hereby agree that in case such sale be made by myself, or through any other agency, in consideration of their services to pay said Lyman & Briggs a commission of 2 per cent on" said sale. Here, again, the facts are entirely different and justify the statement of the law as set forth in California Jurisprudence, supra, upon a state of facts or upon a contract binding the owner to pay under conditions covered by the language found in California Jurisprudence, which contemplates an entirely different state of facts from those disclosed by the record in the case at bar. The last California case cited in support of the theory that the language which we have quoted from California Jurisprudence is applicable here, is that of Levy v. Wolf, 2 Cal. App. 491, 84 P. 313. The court, however, in its opinion recites the following: "In the case at bar, assuming the testimony" of the "plaintiff to be true, the name of the purchaser was given by the broker to the seller, and his offer accepted within the time allowed by the contract, and a sale consummated in accordance with the offer." That case does refer to some cases with reference to which it was said: "It is also urged that plaintiff cannot recover because he neither procured a written agreement from the purchaser, nor introduced him to the seller; and in support of this contention cites Gunn v. Bank of California, 99 Cal. 349 [33 P. 1105], and Mattingly v. Pennie, 105 Cal. 514 [39 P. 200, 45 Am. St. Rep. 87]," and then the opinion adds: "In neither of these cases was a written agreement obtained from the buyer, nor was he introduced to the seller by the broker, nor his name disclosed, nor any sale" in fact made. Then follows the language which we have heretofore quoted. And further on in the same opinion the rule is thus stated: "It is well settled, if the agent introduces or discloses the name of the purchaser, and such introduction or disclosure is the foundation on which negotiations are begun and the sale effected, he will be entitled to commissions, and this too, although in point of fact the sale may be made by the owner. In other words, he cannot avail himself of the services, and, by making a sale through information derived from the agent, deprive the latter of his commissions." Like the other cases, this discloses a state of facts entirely different from those in the case at bar, and renders respondent's statement of the law and citation of authorities inapplicable.

Nor is there anything in the case of Haun v. Rosenmayer, 46 Cal. App. 353, 189 P. 117, which limits the application of the cases which we have heretofore referred to showing that the plaintiff is not entitled to prevail. In the Haun Case we find this statement: "It is not necessary that a broker should personally conduct negotiations between his principal and the purchaser or that he should be present when the bargain is completed; it is sufficient that his efforts are the producing cause of the sale and that through his agency the purchaser is brought into communication with the seller, although the parties then negotiate in person"—citing some of the cases to which we have referred and some of the cases which are based upon contracts providing for the payment of commissions if sale is made to any one to whom the broker has disclosed the property. But the general statement in the case of Haun v. Rosenmayer, while a correct statement of the law, is not all of the law applicable to this case, because in the case at bar the plaintiff, by his own testimony, stopped the negotiations and made no effort to communicate with the defendants the incident of his conference with Richard Deming, Jr., or that Deming might be considered a possible purchaser.

Nor do we find anything in the case of Sessions v. Pacific Imp. Co., a corporation, 57 Cal. App. 1, 206 P. 653, which limits anything stated in the cases which we have referred to showing that mere disclosure of the property is not sufficient upon which to base an action for commissions when the property is thereafter sold by the owner under circumstances such as appear in the case at bar. The Sessions Case is too long to admit of any quotations therefrom.

In view of the fact that the plaintiff's own testimony shows that he did nothing more than has been held insufficient in the case of Cone v. Keil, supra, which case was affirmed in McCoy v. Zahn Corp., supra; that he did not consummate any sale of the property referred to in this action; that he did not have any exclusive agency; that he knew the defendants claimed the right to sell the property themselves; that there was no communication between the plaintiff and the defendants for more than two months after the receipt of the letter under which the plaintiff claimed the right to act; that the plaintiff made no effort to inform the defendants, or any of them, that he had endeavored to interest Richard Deming, Jr., in the purchase of the defendants' property; that the defendants made the sale of the property without any knowledge that the plaintiff had called it to the attention of the purchaser; that the record shows that the defendants acted in entire good faith without any subterfuge, without any attempt to make a sale of the property so as to deprive the plaintiff of commissions; that the record shows no fraud or delay on the part of the defendants; and in further view of the cases which we have cited applicable to the facts involved in this action—we find no escape from the conclusion that the defendants' motion for a nonsuit should have been granted. The fact that the purchaser, after having his attention called to the property belonging to the defendants, may have come to the conclusion that he did not wish to deal with the agent, or that he could drive a better bargain by dealing directly with the owners, does not alter the situation or give the plaintiff any right of action against the defendants.

[2] As to the alleged errors in the instructions, a general statement in relation thereto will suffice. The jury was instructed upon the theory that the plaintiff, by simply calling the attention of the purchaser to the property and explaining the desirability of its purchase, entitled the plaintiff to a judgment; that such action would constitute a proximate cause, irrespective of whether the vendors, the defendants in this action, had any knowledge that the purchaser was one found by the plaintiff, or that the plaintiff had placed the property in question before the purchaser for consideration, and irrespective of the fact that the sale was consummated by the defendants, when the authority, if any, given to the plaintiff, required him to consummate the sale. Under the facts as disclosed by the record in this case and the contract or authorization under which the plaintiff acted, the California cases which we have cited show that merely calling the attention of a prospective purchaser to the property involved and urging upon him the desirability of its purchase is not sufficient basis to support a judgment awarding any commissions. The cases which we have cited based upon an authorization to a broker such as here presented show the correct theory of the law to be adopted in instructing the jury.

The judgment of the trial court is reversed.

GIANNINI et al. v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO. et al. (Civ. 6736.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 4, 1929.

Rehearing Denied May 3, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court June 3, 1929.

1. Railroads ⚷333(1)—Automobilist, driving on crossing in path of approaching train without looking or listening, was guilty of contributory negligence.

Automobilist, who drove automobile on crossing in path of approaching train when, if he had listened, he could have heard bell and noise of locomotive and car, and if he had looked he could have seen approaching train in ample time to avoid accident, was guilty of contributory negligence as matter of law.

2. Railroads ⚷338—Last clear chance doctrine is inapplicable where negligence of automobilist continued to moment of collision with train and contributed to his own injury.

Doctrine of last clear chance cannot be applied to situation where negligence of automobilist in going upon crossing in path of approaching train continued to moment of impact and actively contributed to his own injury.

★Rehearing denied. Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

3. Railroads 🔑338—Last clear chance doctrine held inapplicable to death of automobilist in crossing collision whose negligence continued and was concurrent with negligence, if any, of defendant.

In action for death in crossing collision of automobilist who was concededly contributorily negligent until moment of impact, doctrine of last clear chance held inapplicable under evidence showing that negligence of automobilist, whether killed at instant of impact or not before train had come to a stop, continued and was concurrent with negligence, if any, of defendant.

4. Evidence 🔑571(1)—Opinion of expert engineer as to distance in which train could be stopped, based upon false hypothesis, cannot be given any probative force.

Testimony of expert engineer as to distance in which train could be stopped at speed it was going cannot be given any probative force, where it was based upon false hypothesis that rails and wheels were dry and uncontradicted evidence was that rails were wet and wheels slid distance of 18 feet after they were locked.

5. Evidence 🔑594—Inferences cannot be drawn contrary to uncontradicted testimony and based on speculation or conjecture.

While all reasonable inferences are to be drawn from evidence in favor of conclusion of jury and conflicts are to be resolved in favor of respondents, inferences cannot be drawn contrary to uncontradicted testimony and based upon imagination, speculation, or supposition.

6. Appeal and error 🔑1066—Submitting issue of last clear chance, where not warranted by the evidence, must be held fatally prejudicial.

The giving of instruction submitting an issue on the last clear chance, where there is not sufficient evidence to justify submission of such issue, must be held fatally prejudicial.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Denver S. Church, Judge.

Action by Lena B. Giannini, individually and as guardian ad litem for Leroy Giannini and another, against the Southern Pacific Company and another. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

L. L. Cory, of Fresno, for appellants.

Everts, Ewing, Wild & Everts, Dan F. Conway, and C. M. Ozias, all of Fresno, for respondents.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment entered upon the verdict of the jury awarding plaintiffs $30,000 damages for the death of Pete Giannini, which occurred in a crossing accident on September 15, 1925, near Kingsburg, in Fresno county. The action was brought by Lena Giannini, the surviving wife of Pete Giannini, on her own behalf, and as guardian ad litem of their two children, Leroy Giannini and Eugene Giannini. It is one of those unfortunate occurrences which arise by reason of the failure of automobile drivers to appreciate the danger involved in crossing railway tracks without observing the duty imposed upon them by law to stop, look, and listen before proceeding upon such tracks—which are themselves signs of danger.

The scene of the accident was near the packing house of the Kingsburg Fruit Growers. At this point the state highway runs approximately north and south. To the east and parallel with the state highway is the main line of the Southern Pacific Company through the San Joaquin Valley, connecting San Francisco and Los Angeles. To the west of the state highway is a spur track of the railway company maintained for the purpose of affording railway service to certain packing houses located along its line. A driveway running west from the state highway gives access to two packing houses: One the Kingsburg Fruit Growers, which is west of and adjacent to the spur track and north of the driveway, and the other the Alamo Packing Company, which is west of and adjacent to the spur track and south of the driveway. The north and south distance between these two packing houses is approximately 48 feet, of which 23 feet is taken up by the driveway. This driveway ends at the westerly lines of the two packing houses, and at this end of the driveway there is space within which automobiles may turn around. At the time of the accident the north half of the crossing was graveled and in the south half the ties projected above the roadway. The accident occurred where this driveway crosses the spur track.

The decedent was a fruit grower, packer, and shipper, who owned and operated a packing house in the vicinity and who on numerous occasions had visited for business purposes the packing house of the Kingsburg Fruit Growers and was familiar with the locality and the driveway and the road across the spur track where the accident occurred, which spur track was used in switching cars on an average of twice daily during the season. The deceased was a man about 30 years of age at the time of his death, in full possession of his faculties, and in good health. Immediately preceding the accident and as the decedent was approaching the spur track, driving his automobile slowly, a Southern Pacific locomotive was backing in a southerly direction along the spur track opposite the Kingsburg Fruit Growers packing house, pushing a water car. The engineer and fireman were in their proper positions in the locomotive, the engineer at the right—the opposite side from which decedent approached the track—and the fireman at the left, and on the stirrup at the front or southerly end of the water car was a brakeman watching out for the crossing.

According to the testimony of F. G. Anderson, an eyewitness to the accident, called by plaintiffs, and upon whose testimony plaintiffs rely and who at the time was in his automobile with his two children, the decedent was driving a light six Studebaker touring automobile; that just prior to the time of the collision both his own automobile and the automobile of decedent were parked side by side, both facing westwardly at a point southwesterly from the Kingsburg Fruit Growers packing house, and that both he and the decedent had been inside that packing house discussing business affairs; that after being in this packing house for about 10 or 15 minutes they came out of the building together and they walked over to and entered their respective automobiles; that it was between 5 and 6 o'clock p. m.; that the automobile of the decedent was closest to the Kingsburg Fruit Growers packing house, and that the decedent got into his car, turned it around, and drove east towards the state highway on the graveled driveway along the southerly side of the Kingsburg Fruit Growers packing house, crossed over the weighing scales with the two left wheels of his car; that the automobile did not change its speed nor swerve, but went straight ahead onto the track; that as the decedent approached the track he (the witness) was about to make the turn in his own car in like manner as the decedent had done; that he looked around and saw the car of decedent was just about on the first two rails; that he saw the train was moving towards decedent; it was then about 4 or 5 feet from decedent's automobile; the railroad crossing had been filled in with gravel and was fairly smooth, that is, flush with the ties, and the automobile was just being skidded slowly and gently along until it struck some ties and then it just dumped right over or crushed right over; this threw it over on its side kind of in a slanting position, not right upside down with the wheels in the air or anything like that; that the witness jumped out of his car and was hollering and waving his hands and was over there about the time the train stopped; that when the train was backed a few feet they found Mr. Giannini's body sort of hanging in the top of the open car "at the bow—that is, the top covering or a sort of framework going up"; that some brains were found on the track close to the corner of the Alamo Packing Company's packing house near where the automobile stopped and was righted after being pushed by the train; and that the automobile from the time it was struck by the train until it stopped must have been pushed 35 feet, possibly a little more.

[1] The accident happened between 5 and 6 in the afternoon of a clear day. It was still broad daylight; the engine bell, according to the testimony of the train crew, was ringing, which testimony is corroborated by Ralph Anderson, who was riding in the automobile with his father, F. G. Anderson. As the decedent's automobile, proceeding at the rate of speed of 4 or 5 miles an hour towards the spur track, came into view, and it seemed obvious that he did not see the train approaching—although he had ample opportunity to see it before going onto the tracks, had he looked—and that he was attempting to cross the track ahead of the train, the brakeman gave the emergency stop signal, jumped from the car, and shouted to attract decedent's attention. Despite these warnings, decedent drove his automobile directly upon the spur track in the path of the approaching train. It must be conceded that had he listened, he could have heard the bell and the noise of the locomotive and car, and that had he looked, he could have seen the approaching train in ample time to avoid the accident, and was therefore guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law in driving upon the railway tracks. Green v. Southern Pacific Railway Co., 138 Cal. 1, 70 P. 926; Griffin v. San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Co., 170 Cal. 772, 151 P. 282, L. R. A. 1916A, 842; Murray v. Southern Pacific Co., 177 Cal. 1, 169 P. 675; Young v. Southern Pacific Co., 182 Cal. 369, 190 P. 36; Billig v. Southern Pacific Co., 192 Cal. 357, 219 P. 992; Thompson v. Southern Pacific Co., 31 Cal. App. 567, 161 P. 21; Bissett v. South San Francisco Belt Railway Co., 67 Cal. App. 325, 227 P. 671.

Respondents concede that decedent was guilty of negligence up to the time of the impact of the water car with his automobile; at least, they present no argument to justify his conduct and cite no authorities in their brief on this issue, stating: "We shall not take up any considerable space in discussing the extent and degree that the decedent was guilty of negligence up to the point of time when the water car collided with decedent's automobile. Suffice it to say that his negligence up to that time was not as gross as contended for by opposing counsel," but rely entirely for support of the judgment on the doctrine of the last clear chance, asserting that the engineer was negligent—did not exercise ordinary care—in bringing his train to a standstill after the collision, and that the decedent met his death not at the point of contact, but where the automobile rested when it ceased being pushed over the ties beyond the graveled portion of the crossing, and where the brains were found on the spur track.

[2, 3] It is apparent that since the deceased was driving his automobile very slowly and could have stopped within a few feet and since the approaching train was proceeding at not to exceed 5 miles an hour the negligence of the deceased continued until the exact moment of the impact and that if the deceased met his death at that point plaintiffs could not recover. Further until this negligence of the deceased terminated the doctrine of the last clear chance has no application; that "the rule which permits a recovery notwithstanding some negligence on the part of the plaintiff or person injured is only properly applied in those cases where such negligence was the remote and not the proximate cause of the injury—that is, where the negligent acts of the parties were independent of each other." Holmes v. Southern Pacific Ry. Co., 97 Cal. 161, 169, 31 P. 834, 835. It cannot be applied to a situation where the negligence of the deceased continued to the moment of the impact and actively contributed to his own injury. The deceased being actively and contemporaneously at fault until the moment of the collision, the respondents are barred from the right to recover for any act up to that time. Green v. Los Angeles Railway Co., 143 Cal. 41, 76 P. 719, 101 Am. St. Rep. 68.

Respondents rely in support of their contention of appellant's want of ordinary care after becoming aware of decedent's danger and his inability to extricate himself from his position of peril on the testimony of the witness F. G. Anderson, who testified that the water car must have proceeded 35 feet from the time of the impact until it stopped, and that brains were found near where the automobile was righted, and the testimony of Joseph A. Keefer, a locomotive engineer, who, testifying as an expert, gave it as his opinion that cosidering the type of engine, equipped with Westinghouse brakes and also equipped with emergency brakes, the engine backing up on a dry day and the rails and wheels being dry, the track being level and the engineer in proper position to stop his engine and carrying eighty pounds of air, and the air on the water car being also connected with the air on the engine, and considering that the engine and water car were backing down that spur track at a rate of speed between 3 and 5 miles an hour and the brakes in proper working condition, the train could have been stopped within 10 feet after applying the emergency brakes.

It is the theory of respondents that the deceased did not meet his death at the time of the impact, but at the point where the automobile stopped and the brains were found on the spur track. It appears that while the automobile was crushed, everything in it, for aught the record shows, remained intact until it was straightened up when the train was moved back. Nothing had fallen out, and the body was hanging at the top or bow of the automobile. Respondents, therefore, in attempting to fix the time the deceased received the injuries which resulted in his death as being after the collision, can only rely upon the fact that brains were found at a particular point on the track, there being no direct evidence in the record as to when the deceased received his injuries—no evidence that his head was struck by or against anything from the time of the impact until he was found dead in the automobile. The evidence is just as consistent with the theory that the deceased received his injuries at the exact moment of the impact as it is that he received them at the time the train was brought to a stop. Deceased was sitting on the left-hand side of the automobile, which was the side struck by the water car. His automobile was flush on the tracks at the time of the impact, and therefore the deceased himself was immediately opposite the water car and in close contact with it. From the time of the impact the speed of the train diminished until at the point where the brains were discovered it had stopped. There was not sufficient force when the wheels of the automobile came in contact with the exposed ties to completely overturn it; it was simply rolled over on its side. Much less force was then in operation than at the moment of the impact. The deceased was not found under the automobile, but his body remained in it when it was righted. No blood was found on the rails, according to the witness Anderson. There is no evidence to show that the deceased received his injury at the time the automobile was turned on its side. Blood and brains would as likely have been present where the automobile overturned had the deceased been injured at the moment of the impact, as though he had been injured at that spot. As to when the deceased was injured requires speculation, conjecture, and surmise.

Under the doctrine of last clear chance upon which respondents rely—and necessarily must rely in order to recover upon the record here presented—the burden is upon them to show, if such be important, that the decedent received his injuries at the time the automobile overturned and not at the time of the collision, and "the facts upon which the liability of the defendant rests must be proved by satisfactory evidence; they can not be established by mere conjecture." Reuter v. San Pedro, Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad, 37 Cal. App. 277, 174 P. 927. "'If it appears that the facts and circumstances from which a conclusion is sought to be deduced, although consistent with that theory, are equally consistent with some other theory, they do not support the theory contended for.' Wilbur v. Emergency Hospital Assn., 27 Cal. App. 751, 759, 151 P. 155, 158." Hopkins v. Heller, 59 Cal. App. 447, 454, 210 P. 975, 978. "When the precise cause is left to conjecture and may be as reasonably attributed to a condition for which no liability attaches as to one for which it does, then a verdict should be directed against the plaintiff." Ryan v. Fall River Iron Works, 200 Mass. 188, 86 N. E. 310; Rosenbaum v. Luce (Cal. App.) 273 P. 862. Here, as the decedent's brains were knocked out, it is apparent that his death was instantaneous, and that if he were not struck at the time of the impact, with the train moving at a rate of speed of from 3 to 5 miles an hour and the automobile being skidded slowly along and the deceased made no attempt whatever to place himself out of danger, his negligence continued and was concurrent with the negligence of the defendant, if defendant were negligent. The doctrine of last clear chance has no application to a situation where by mutual carelessness an injury ensues to one of two parties. In other words, the doctrine of last clear chance excludes from the operation of its underlying principle every case wherein it may be said that the negligence of the injured party was contemporaneous, concurrent, continuing, and contributory with the negligence of the party inflicting the injury. Gilbert v. Erie R. Co., 97 F. 747, 752, 38 C. C. A. 408; Louisville, etc., R. R. Co. v. Young, 153 Ala. 232, 45 So. 238, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 301; Green v. Los Angeles Terminal Ry Co., 143 Cal. 31, 76 P. 719, 101 Am. St. Rep. 68; Tobin v. Omnibus Cable Co., 4 Cal. Unrep. Cas. 214, 34 P. 124. "Obviously, if both parties to an accident could, by the exercise of ordinary care, have avoided it, neither can be said to have had the last clear chance." Young v. Southern Pacific Co., 189 Cal. 746, 210 P. 259. In the present case if the deceased were uninjured during the 35 feet in which, according to the testimony of the witness Anderson, the automobile was slowly being pushed along by the train and he made no attempt whatever to extricate himself from his position of peril, such lack of action on his part constituted want of ordinary care.

[4] As to the question of want of care on the part of appellants' employees, it may be said that the testimony of the expert engineer, Joseph A. Keefer, that the train could be stopped in 10 feet at the speed it was going after applying the emergency brakes, is of little or no value, as it is based upon the false hypothesis that the rails and wheels were dry, and the uncontradicted evidence is that the rails were wet and that the wheels slid a distance of 18 feet after they were locked with the brakes. The opinion of an expert upon assumed facts so variant from those shown by the uncontradicted evidence cannot be given any probative force. Estate of Purcell, 164 Cal. 308, 128 P. 932. See, also, Hallawell v. Union Oil Co., 36 Cal. App. 685, 173 P. 177; Graves v. Union Oil Co., 36 Cal. App. 770, 173 P. 618. Respondents call our attention to the fact that it was a clear day and that there was dust at the place of the accident. This statement "that there was dust at the place of the accident" is based on the testimony of the witness Anderson, who testified that he reached the scene of the accident a second or two after the train had come to a stop: "After the dust and things had cleared up then I seen the trainmen on the other side." This testimony that there was dust where the train stopped does not refute the positive testimony that the rails along the packing house were wet and that at pressure under the weight of a train they sunk beneath the level of the water. Furthermore, a photograph presented during the argument in this court shows considerable water on the roadbed near the corner of the Kingsburg Fruit Growers packing house, the ground being almost completely covered with water between the rails, and water standing on the outside of the rails on each side, and in at least two places the water is practically level with the top of the rail, indicating strongly that the wheels of the locomotive and water car must have been wet, and as further evidence and corroboration that the rails and wheels were wet is the undisputed fact that the train skidded 18 feet after the emergency brakes were set, established by undisputed testimony and the marks on the rails. The testimony of the train crew, which is uncontradicted, is to the effect that the engine bell was ringing as the deceased drove his automobile at the rate of 4 or 5 miles an hour towards the spur track; that it seemed obvious that he was attempting to cross the track; that the switchman gave the engineer the emergency stop signal, jumped from the car, and shouted to the deceased to attract his attention; that the engineer immediately applied the emergency brakes and did everything he could to bring the train, which was then proceeding at the rate of about 5 miles an hour, to a stop; that despite these warnings the deceased drove his automobile directly upon the spur track in the path of the approaching train; that the engineer did not see the automobile until its hood had passed over the tracks and protruded beyond the water car; that the automobile was struck by the southerly end of the water car, pushed across the driveway, and as the wheels of the automobile struck the ties on the southerly half of the driveway and beyond the graveled portion, it was partially overturned and was on its side when the train was brought to a stop.

[5] While all reasonable inferences are to be drawn from the evidence in favor of the conclusion of the jury and conflicts are to be resolved in favor of respondents, inferences cannot be drawn contrary to uncontradicted testimony and based upon imagination, speculation, or supposition. The jury cannot shut its ears to the only testimony on the question and set up a standard of its own. Vaca, etc., v. Southern Pacific Co. (Cal. App.) 267 P. 346.

The last clear chance doctrine upon facts somewhat analogous to the situation presented here is discussed at some length in the recent case of Bagwill v. Pacific Electric Railway Co. (Cal. App.) 265 P. 517, in which it is said: "This doctrine presupposes that the plaintiff has been negligent; that as a result thereof he is in a situation of danger from which he cannot escape by the exercise of ordinary care; that the defendant is aware of plaintiff's dangerous situation under such cirsumstances that he realizes or ought to realize his inability to escape therefrom; that the defendant then has a clear chance to avoid injuring the plaintiff by the exercise of ordinary care and fails to avail himself of the opportunity so presented. If all of these elements are present, the rule applies and enables the plaintiff to recover notwithstanding his own negligence; but if any of them be absent the rule does not apply, and the case is governed by the ordinary rules of negligence and contributory negligence (Palmer v. Tschudy, 191 Cal. 696, 700 [218 P. 36]; Chappell v. San Diego & Arizona R. R. [201 Cal. 560, 258 P. 73] 74 Cal. Dec. 91). * * * It would be and is a matter of common knowledge that even if we assume that thought and action were simultaneous on the part of the motorman, it would take a little time for the brakes to take hold after the motorman had operated whatever mechanical devices were employed to effectuate the braking * * * Certainly the doctrine of last clear chance never meant a splitting of seconds when emergencies arise. There seems still to be some misconception of this doctrine of last clear chance. It was not devised as a last resort to fasten liability on defendants. Like the body of the law of negligence, to which the doctrine is appended, the test remains as that of ordinary care under all of the circumstances. The law in many of its workings indicates great charity and solicitude for individual rights. It says to a negligent plaintiff that in spite of his lack of caution he will be protected against wanton, wilful or avoidable harm. But, on the other hand, it penalizes no innocent person. We are not to tear down the facts of a case and rebuild the same so that, by a trimming-down and tight-fitting operation, something can be constructed upon which may be fastened the claim of last clear chance. The words mean exactly as they indicate, namely, last clear chance, not possible chance. The Supreme Court has not left us to speculate on the application of the doctrine (Palmer v. Tschudy, 191 Cal. 696 [218 P. 36]; Young v. Southern Pacific Co., 182 Cal. 369 [190 P. 36]; Wallis v. Southern Pacific Co., 184 Cal. 662 [195 P. 408, 15 A. L. R. 117]; Gainer v. United Railroads, 58 Cal. App. 459 [208 P. 1013]."

[6] Here, upon authority as well as upon reason, the doctrine of last clear chance has no application to the established facts. That decedent was guilty of negligence in driving onto the track in the path of the approaching train is conceded. As to where he received his injuries, whether at the point of impact or where the train stopped, the evidence is silent. If at the point of impact, clearly respondents cannot recover, and if where the train stopped the burden was upon them to establish such fact and decedent's exercise of ordinary care in the interim. This burden they have failed to assume. The place where the injuries were received and the negligence of defendants' servants in stopping the train in time to avert the injuries, if received after the impact, can be determined only by speculation. Upon the evidence the court in our opinion erroneously instructed the jury that the doctrine of last clear chance applied. The giving of an instruction submitting an issue on the last clear chance, where there is not sufficient evidence to justify the submission of such issue, must be held fatally prejudicial. Wallis v. Southern Pacific Co., 184 Cal. 662, 195 P. 408, 15 A. L. R. 117.

The judgment is reversed.

PHILADELPHIA SHOE CO. v. ELBERG.

(Civ. 6685.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 11, 1929.

1. Landlord and tenant ⚷80(3)—Under lease for specified term providing for continuance of lessee's business while lessor conducted business, lessee's right of occupancy continued for term and was not terminable by lessor's discontinuing business.

Where lease to defendant of portion of store building provided for specified term with right to enjoy possession only so long as lessor shall enjoy possession under its lease, and providing for occupation so long as lessor shall conduct in building a boot and shoe business and lessee was able and willing to perform lease, right of lessee to occupy portion of building could not be terminated by lessor on discontinuance by lessor of shoe business in remaining portion of building, but continued for term specified.

2. Landlord and tenant ⚷80(3)—Lessor cannot plead own breach in discharge of obligations to continue rights granted lessee.

Lessor cannot plead his own breach or wrong in discharge of his obligation to continue in full force and effect rights granted to lessee, where lessee has not breached any part of his covenant agreed to be performed.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Dunne, Judge.

Action by the Philadelphia Shoe Company against Abraham Elberg, in which defendant filed a cross-complaint. Judgment for defendant on his cross-complaint, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

LANDIS, Justice pro tem. The plaintiff appeals from a judgment in favor of defendant, in an action for a judgment determining defendant's right of occupancy of a portion of a store building and requiring defendant to vacate and surrender possession. The appeal is on the judgment roll.

In the month of August, 1922, plaintiff's predecessor in interest made and executed a lease with the defendant, Elberg. A brief history of the transactions involved as shown in and admitted by the pleadings, is: For many years prior to August, 1922, B. Katschinski conducted a retail shoe business on Market street in San Francisco, Cal., under the fictitious name of Philadelphia Shoe Company; that in August, 1922, when the lease in question was executed, he was engaged in the construction of a store building on leased ground on Mission street in said city, with the purpose of conducting therein a shoe business under his trade-name of "Philadelphia Shoe Company"; that the Mission street store was completed about March 1, 1923, and about March 19, 1923, he commenced his shoe business therein and continued to conduct said business until it was transferred to the plaintiff corporation; he transferred to the plaintiff corporation all his interest in both stores and the lease in question; that from the date of the transfer until September 26, 1927, plaintiff conducted the retail shoe business in the Mission street store and defendant continued to conduct therein a stocking department, as provided in said lease; that the lease to B. Katschinski of the land upon which the Mission street store was erected is dated June 15, 1922, is from Clark estate, and the term expires July 21, 1932; that about September 26, 1927, plaintiff discontinued the said Mission street store business and sold its entire stock of shoes and leased the store building to Lieberman Rosencrantz Company; that about January 1, 1928, all of the stock of shoes formerly belonging to plaintiff was removed from said premises by said Lieberman Rosencrantz Company and said company was temporarily occupying said premises for the purpose of selling general merchandise, including some shoes; that on September 22, 1927, plaintiff gave notice to defendant that it had sold its stock of shoes and would cease to conduct a boot and shoe business at said Mission street premises on September 26, 1927, and that defendant's lease and right of occupancy would terminate on said date.

This action is the result of defendant's refusal to accede to said demand. Plaintiff seeks a judgment: (1) That the court determine the right of occupancy by defendant after plaintiff has ceased to conduct a boot and shoe business in said Mission street store; (2) that defendant be required to vacate and surrender possession to plaintiff as soon as Lieberman Rosencrantz Company have ceased to occupy said Mission street store.

Defendant urges and under his answer alleges that the said attempted termination of the tenancy of defendant under said lease and agreement is contrary to the express covenants, terms, and conditions of said lease, contrary to law, and is void and without any legal effect, and by way of cross-complaint, briefly stated, prays: (1) That plaintiff be not awarded any relief under the complaint. (2) That by decree of court it be adjudged that defendant has fully performed all the terms and conditions of said lease agreement; that said lease is still in full force and effect; that by reason of such performance he is entitled to the legal possession of the premises for the term of nine years and five months from March 1, 1923; that upon his continuance of such performance of the covenants of said lease on his part to be performed, and while the lease from Clark estate to B. Katschinski remains in force, he be entitled to continue in the full enjoyment of his possession for the remainder of the term of nine years and five months without any interference by plaintiff, its successors or assigns. And in his cross-complaint defendant alleges that, by reason of the acts of plaintiff, he has reason to fear, and does fear, that, unless his legal rights under said agreement are adjudicated by decree of court, he will, during the remainder of the term, be harassed and annoyed by plaintiff and its successors and assigns and will sustain irreparable injury.

The trial court found as true all and each of the allegations of defendant's cross-complaint, and rendered judgment in favor of defendant: (1) That plaintiff be not awarded the relief or any part thereof prayed for in its complaint; (2) that the lease agreement designated "Exhibit A" is still in full force and effect, so far as the rights of possession and occupancy and all other rights therein, conferred upon defendant, are concerned, and costs of suit.

Constituting the material parts of the lease, it is provided:

(1) "The lessor does hereby lease and demise unto the lessee, and the lessee does hereby take and hire from the lessor [here follows a description of the leased property] for the term of nine years and five months from March 1, 1923."

(2) "It is further understood that the lessee shall have the right to enjoy possession of said portion of said premises only so long as the lessor herein shall enjoy possession under and by virtue of the lease aforesaid [that is, the Clark estate lease]."

It then provides, in substance, that the portion of the building leased to lessee is leased "for the purpose of conducting therein a department for the sale of men's, women's and children's stockings" and that "the lessor is to conduct in said building of which the demised premises is a part, a boot and shoe business under the name 'Philadelphia Shoe Company,'" and making a number of specific provisions regulating the manner in which the lessee shall conduct said stocking department, the amount of rental to be paid by lessee, etc., and it is in the paragraph of the sublease which immediately precedes the final paragraph further provided:

(3) "The lessee does hereby covenant and agree to commence the occupation of said space as soon as the same is ready for occupancy, the contemplated date being on or about the first day of March, 1923, and to continue the occupation thereof and in like manner as a first-class stocking department subject to the directions and guidance of the lessor, so long as the lessor, his heirs, executors, administrators or assigns shall conduct in the said building, of which said demised premises constitute a part, a boot and shoe business, not exceeding the term herein limited."

[1] It is this paragraph 3 that plaintiff contends gives it the right to the relief it seeks. In other words, the contention of plaintiff appears to be that the right of defendant to occupy was only so long as the shoe business of the plaintiff should continue at the location in question—that the right to remain does not survive the obligation to remain.

No sound reason is given and no authority whatever cited to sustain the appellant's contention in this regard. It is quite clear that the language of this paragraph, standing alone, does not warrant the interpretation placed thereon by plaintiff and a fortiori may this conclusion be reached when this paragraph is read and considered in connection with other portions of the lease, particularly with paragraph 1, which clearly and expressly demises the premises to lessee for a term definite and certain, subject only to the conditions of the Clark estate lease, and paragraph 2, which clearly provides that the lessee shall have the right to enjoy possession of the premises only so long as lessor herein shall enjoy possession of the Clark estate lease.

The record shows that defendant has performed and is able and willing and has offered to continue to perform each and every covenant and condition of the lease agreement on his part agreed to be performed, and that the plaintiff under and by his assigns is still in possession of the reserved portion of the building, and that his assigns are occupying the premises, temporarily at least, for the purpose of selling general merchandise, including some shoes.

It must be conceded that leases for terms of years quite often confer upon the lessor an option to terminate the lease before the expiration of the term or reserve to the lessee a similar privilege, and although to create such right or privilege, no particular form of words is necessary, yet certain words, namely, "upon condition," "provided," "reserving." "subject to," or their Latin equivalents, are recognized as apt and customary. No such words are found in the lease; neither are there any words indicating or suggesting the right or option of lessor to terminate the lease before the end of the term except the conditions of the Clark estate lease and which are not here in question.

Lessee agreed to occupy and conduct his department as long as lessor conducted his department. This lessee has done. The effect of the contention of plaintiff is that the provisions of the lease not only reserved to plaintiff the right to discontinue his business before the end of the term, and that he did exercise such right, but that such action on his part ipso facto operated as a termination of defendant's lease.

[2] There is no forfeiture or right of reentry clause in the lease and it is undisputed that the lessee has not breached any of the covenants of the lease and to accept the contention of appellant would be to hold that the lessor could himself terminate the lease by a breach of covenant and might thereby obtain a benefit from his own wrong. The lessor cannot plead his own breach or wrong in discharge of his obligation to continue in full force and effect the rights granted to the lessee under the solemn covenants of the contract, where, as here shown, the lessee has not breached any covenants on his part agreed to be performed. Clearly there is no merit in the contention of appellant.

Judgment affirmed.

(Cr. 1756.)

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 9, 1929.

1. Criminal law 🔑742(2)—On undisputed facts and admitted acts of witness, whether he was accomplice is law question for court.

Where the facts are not in dispute and witness' acts and conduct are admitted, it becomes a question of law for the court whether those acts and facts make witness an accomplice.

2. Criminal law 🔑742(2)—Leaving to jury question of witness being accomplice of defendant in embezzlement held error, under evidence, and prejudicial.

Leaving to jury question whether witness was accomplice of defendant in embezzlement of stock owned by corporation of which they were officers, witness with knowledge of all the facts, and at the claimed direction of defendant, having pledged it as security for defendant's personal note indorsed by witness, and it afterwards being sold by pledgee with claimed consent of defendant, held error, and prejudicial.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Homer G. Ames, Judge.

Henry Schumann-Heink was convicted of grand theft, and he appeals. Reversed.

Curtis Hillyer, of San Francisco, and Irve C. Boldman, of San Diego, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and W. Augustine, of San Francisco, for the People.

CONREY, P. J. The Schumann-Heink Company, Inc., a corporation of which the defendant and appellant was the president, was organized for the purpose of carrying on a general stock and bond brokerage business. Its main office was in the city of San Diego, but later an office was opened in the city of Los Angeles. The defendant and appellant devoted most of his time to the management of the latter office, while the active management of the business in San Diego was in the hands of Wilfred M. Clare, who was secretary and treasurer of the corporation.

Prior to the transaction under investigation appellant had executed his personal note to the United States National Bank, at San Diego, for $3,500, which was unsecured. After a time he paid $500 on this note and gave the bank a new demand note for $3,000 to cover the balance. Thereafter, while appellant was in Los Angeles, the bank demanded payment of the note and communicated with Clare, who thereupon endorsed the note and offered to secure the same. His offer was accepted, and Clare brought to the bank a list of personal securities from which the bank selected twelve shares of stock of the Security Commercial and Savings Bank of San Diego, which stock was issued in the name of Clare, but which actually was owned by the Schumann-Heink corporation.

Clare testified that he was instructed by appellant to so deliver this stock as collateral to the bank, while appellant denied that he ever gave such instructions or that he knew anything about the deposit having been made until some time thereafter. There was testimony on the part of officials of the bank to the effect that a considerable time after the stock had been deposited with them they sent for appellant and told him they could sell the stock at $200 per share, and he told them to sell it, which they did, crediting the amount received to appellant's personal indebtedness to the bank.

Defendant and appellant was indicted, charged with grand theft, and the case was tried upon the theory that the theft was of the character described as embezzlement. Clare was also indicted for the same offense.

Appellant relies upon the following points for a reversal of the judgment:

(1) If a crime was committed, Clare was an accomplice.

(2) That the court erred in refusing to give certain instructions requested by appellant.

(3) That the court erred in giving certain instructions requested by the people.

(4) That the district attorney was guilty of misconduct.

[1, 2] The court instructed the jury as follows: "The court instructs the jury that an accomplice is one who knowing that a crime is being committed willfully and with criminal intent intentionally, aids, abets and assists another in the commission of such crime or criminal act, and whether or not one is an accomplice as defined in these instructions is for the jury to determine from all the testimony and circumstances in proof in the case." In thus leaving to the jury the question as to whether Clare was an accomplice, the court assumed that the facts bearing upon the question were in dispute. For the rule is that "where the facts are not in dispute, where the acts and conduct of the witness are admitted, it becomes a question of law for the court to say whether or not those acts and facts make the witness an accomplice." People v. Allison, 200 Cal. 404, 408, 253 P. 318, 319. In the present case the acts constituting the commission of the alleged crime were actually done by Clare at San Diego at a time when the defendant was in Los Angeles. Clare knew that the certificate, although issued in his own name, was the property of the corporation. He knew that the note to the bank was the personal note of the defendant to the bank. He knew that the certificate of stock was the property of the Schumann-Heink corporation. With all of that knowledge, he took the certificate from the office of the corporation and deposited it with the bank as collateral for the note, and thereby secured an extension of time on the note which Clare himself had endorsed. The only additional element necessary to make these acts a crime would consist in the fact that the corporation had not authorized the pledge. We assume, as appears to be the case, that there is sufficient evidence to justify the jury in finding that the corporation had not authorized the making of the pledge. This being so, the embezzlement was accomplished by Clare alone, unless the additional alleged fact be true that these acts were done by Clare pursuant to directions received from the defendant. The assertion by Clare that in pledging the stock as collateral for said note he was acting in the belief that this was for the benefit of the corporation is too flimsy for use as basis for a possible finding that Clare's acts in the transaction were not criminal as to him. In this state of the evidence the defendant was entitled to have the case presented to the jury under an instruction that Clare must be regarded as an accomplice, and that the defendant should not be convicted unless the testimony of Clare was corroborated by other evidence tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime charged. The court did correctly state the rule concerning the corporation required by law in relation to the testimony of an accomplice. The error consisted in leaving it open to the jury to determine that Clare was not an accomplice, and that the defendant, therefore, might be convicted on the testimony of Clare alone. This the jury may have done. They may have believed the testimony of the defendant wherein he denied that at a time subsequent to the making of the pledge he had consented that the bank might sell the stock. If they did so believe, then they must have convicted the defendant in sole reliance upon the testimony of Clare to the effect that he had made the pledge pursuant to instructions of the defendant.

That the error of the court, in the matter above mentioned, was prejudicial to the rights of the defendant, seems clear. It is quite possible, and might easily have been, that if the testimony of the witness Clare had been definitely placed before the jury as the testimony of an accomplice, a different verdict would have been returned.

The judgment and order are reversed.

I concur: YORK, J.

HOUSER, J. I concur. However, in addition thereto, I am of the opinion that prejudicial error was committed by the trial court in its refusal to give to the jury, at the request of defendant, the following instruction: "I instruct you that if you are satisfied from the evidence that the stock of the Security Commercial and Savings Bank which it is claimed was pledged to the United States National Bank, was in fact the property of Schumann-Heink & Company and was pledged by Clare as security for the note of the defendant which he, Clare, had indorsed, that is not sufficient of itself to justify you in finding the defendant guilty, but in addition to that unless you find from the evidence that Clare was acting under instructions and with the knowledge of the defendant, your verdict must be not guilty."

Particular attention is directed to that part of the instruction by which it was proposed to tell the jury that unless from the evidence it found that Clare was acting under instructions and with the knowledge of the defendant in the transaction, the defendant was entitled to an acquittal of the charge against him. No instruction given by the court to the jury covered the point in question or dealt with it in any way. Manifestly, if in pledging the certificate of stock referred to in the instruction, Clare was acting on his own initiative and without any instructions from defendant so to do, defendant would be in no wise criminally liable for the act of Clare. On the other hand, if in pledging the stock Clare was acting under the instructions of defendant, the knowledge of defendant of the commission of the act would be imputed to him. 1 Cal. Jur. 846, and cases cited. As a matter of law, the words "with the knowledge of the defendant" added nothing to the instruction. In order adequately to protect defendant's rights it was therefore necessary that the jury should be instructed that, unless it found "from the evidence that Clare was acting under instructions and with the knowledge of the defendant," its verdict should be "not guilty."

McLACHLAN v. McLACHLAN. (Civ. 3766.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 10, 1929.

1. Appeal and error 🔑161—Party accepting benefits of decree waives right of appeal.

Acceptance of benefits of a decree by a party thereto constitutes a waiver of right to appeal.

2. Divorce 🔑182—Allowance to wife of $300 for counsel fees and costs of appeal held not excessive.

Allowance to wife of $300 for costs and counsel fees in prosecuting appeal from divorce decree held not excessive, where costs of appeal, exclusive of counsel fees, amounted to $131.75.

Allowance of $300 to wife for counsel fees and costs of appeal from divorce judgment held not abuse of discretion, as beyond plaintiff's financial ability to pay, where he earned $6,400 per year.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; L. S. Larew, Judge.

Divorce action by Argyle McLachlan against Pauline Viola McLachlan. From an order requiring plaintiff to pay to defendant costs and counsel fees in the prosecution of her appeal from a judgment of divorce in plaintiff's favor, plaintiff appeals. Order affirmed.

Ault & MacKinnon, of Calexico, for appellant.

M. C. Atchison, of Calexico, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from an order requiring him to pay the defendant the sum of $300 as costs and counsel fees in the prosecution of her appeal from the judgment of divorce in favor of the plaintiff.

It appears from the affidavit of the plaintiff, presented in opposition to the motion for counsel fees and subscribed to May 2, 1927, that the action was commenced February 19, 1926, and tried October 26, 27, and 28, 1926; that an interlocutory decree of divorce was granted November 19, 1926; that the defendant was given the custody of the minor child of the parties, the plaintiff to pay the defendant $75 a month for its support; that the plaintiff was to pay the defendant $2,500 in installments; that she was to have as her separate property the additional sum of $1,000 of community funds then in her hands; and that at the time of the trial she had from $500 to $700 in cash, which was her separate property. All other property was awarded to the plaintiff. In appellant's brief it is said that the property awarded to the plaintiff is of the value of $23,774.15, against which there is an indebtedness of $18,238.49. Plaintiff is in receipt of a salary of $6,400 a year. From the foregoing, it appears that, aside from the property awarded her by the decree, the defendant had only $500 to $700 at the time of the trial.

In the defendant's affidavit in support of her motion for such costs and counsel fees the defendant states that at the time of the trial she had saved "some money that was intended for the education of their son, but * * * she has been required to use said funds for her own existence and also for medical attention and support of their child, as the amount allowed by the court was insufficient; that this defendant has been sick a great deal since the birth of their child and being frail and delicate has not been able to perform any work that will produce an income; * * * that * * * by being very careful as to the actual necessaries she has been able to keep the expenses down to $198 per month on an average; * * * that she paid the sum of $10 as a filing fee in the Supreme Court, and that she has become liable for $61.75 as a printer's fee in printing the transcript on appeal"; and that the cost of printing briefs on appeal will be $60 additional.

[1, 2] It clearly appears from the foregoing facts that this appeal is wholly without merit. Acceptance of the benefits of the decree by the defendant would have constituted a waiver of her right to appeal. Storke v. Storke, 132 Cal. 349, 352, 64 P. 578; McCaleb v. McCaleb, 32 Cal. App. 648, 163 P. 1045. According to the facts stated in her affidavit, the $500 to $700 which the plaintiff states she had at the time of the trial must have been practically exhausted at the time of the hearing herein, May 2, 1927, and she was then without means to prosecute her appeal. It appears from such affidavit that her costs of appeal, exclusive of counsel fees, amounted to the sum of $131.75. The remainder left after deducting that sum from the allowance of $300 cannot be said, as a matter of law, to be an unreasonable attorney fee on appeal.

[3] The appellant contends that "the allowance was beyond the financial ability of the plaintiff to comply with." It would be an extreme case which would justify an appellate court in holding that the trial court abused its discretion in finding that a party in receipt of a salary of $6,400 a year is financially unable to pay the sum of $300, as provided by the order herein, "the sum of $100 within ten days * * * and the balance of $200 payable within thirty days." It is deemed sufficient to say that this is not such a case.

The order is affirmed.

LAMB v. OWEN, Judge. (Civ. 6600.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 2, 1929.

Rehearing Denied May 2, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 29, 1929.

Mandamus ⚷58—Trial judge will be required to enter judgment in conformity with mandate of appellate court.

Where trial judge entered decree at variance with judgment directed to be entered by reviewing court he will be ordered to vacate and set aside judgment signed and entered by him and to enter judgment in conformity with mandate.

Application by Josephine M. Lamb, administratrix of the estate of D. H. McEwen, for writ of mandate prayed to be directed to Hon. Erwin W. Owen, Judge of the Superior Court of Kern County requiring entry of judgment in conformity with the mandate of the District Court of Appeal. Writ granted.

Byron Coleman, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

W. W. Kaye, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

TYLER, P. J. Mandamus to require the superior court of Kern county to enter a judgment in conformity to the mandate of this court. On December 21, 1927, a decision in the cause entitled W. S. Lierly v. David H. McEwen was rendered herein reversing the judgment of the superior court of Kern county, and thereafter a remittitur was issued to such court on the 20th day of February, 1928. The remittitur directed respondent herein to enter judgment in accordance with said decision. 54 Cal. App. Dec. 90.[1] McEwen has since died and petitioner herein is the duly appointed administratrix of his estate. The case involved the proportionate interest which certain locators of oil lands were entitled to under a leasing agreement with the Associated Oil Company and their interest in certain funds paid by the oil company and held by a banking company under a trust agreement. It was there determined by the judgment that defendant McEwen was entitled to $\frac{1}{384}$ of 75 per cent. of all oil realized by said oil company from the lands in question and $\frac{1}{48}$ of all sums of money paid to the banking company by it for the use and benefit of all the locators. As pointed out in our opinion there were 24 locators, one of whom was F. B. Wilson. McEwen acquired ½ of Wilson's share or $\frac{1}{48}$ interest. Under the agreement with the oil company each locator was entitled to $\frac{1}{192}$ of 75 per cent. of the net production of oil produced from the lands in question. McEwen having acquired ½ of Wilson's interest, he was entitled under the agreement to $\frac{1}{384}$ interest of all oil realized by said oil company from the lands, and this court so determined. For like reasons it was also determined that he was further entitled to $\frac{1}{48}$ of all sums paid to the trust company by the oil company for the use and benefit of all the locators mentioned in the agreement with the oil company. It appears from the present proceeding that the respondent court entered a decree at variance with the judgment directed to be entered by this court, under which decree McEwen is given a less amount of the production of oil and a less interest in the fund than that to which he was entitled under the judgment.

---

[1] Superseded by opinion 262 P. 457.

★Rehearing denied. Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

It is therefore ordered that respondent judge vacate and set aside the judgment signed and entered by him in said action of W. S. Lierly v. D. H. McEwen on June 28, 1928, and sign and enter in lieu thereof a judgment awarding McEwen $\frac{1}{384}$ of 75 per cent. of all oil produced by the oil company from the lands in question, and that he also award petitioner $\frac{1}{48}$ part of all sums of money paid by the oil company and held by the trust company for the use and benefit of those entitled thereto.

(Civ. 6558.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2. California. April 8, 1929.

Rehearing Denied May 8, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court June 5, 1929.

1. Municipal corporations 🔑63(1)—Where ordinance purporting to have been enacted to protect public health, morals, or safety has no substantial relation to those objects, court must so adjudge.

Although every intendment and presumption is in favor of validity of ordinance, it is settled principle that if ordinance purporting to have been enacted to protect public health, morals, or safety has no real or substantial relation to those objects, it is duty of courts to so adjudge.

2. Municipal corporations 🔑122(3)—Plaintiff may show by extrinsic evidence that ordinance is unreasonable, oppressive, and void as to him.

In determining whether ordinance has any real or substantial relation to protection of public health, morals, or safety, courts are not limited to consideration of face of ordinance alone, but plaintiff may show by extrinsic evidence that ordinance by reason of particular facts and circumstances is unreasonable, oppressive, and void as to him.

3. Municipal corporations 🔑122(4)—Ordinance will be upheld unless it is shown beyond reasonable doubt that it bears no relation to exercise of police power.

Only slight showing by city is required to uphold ordinance, since ordinance will be upheld unless it is shown beyond reasonable doubt that it bears no relation to exercise of police power, and, if question is debatable, ordinance should be held valid.

4. Municipal corporations 🔑602—Ordinance prohibiting commercial advertising on exterior sides of street cars held invalid.

Ordinance prohibiting commercial advertising on exterior sides of street cars held invalid, since it was not reasonable regulation, but absolute prohibition.

5. Municipal corporations 🔑602—Ordinance prohibiting commercial advertising on exterior sides of street cars cannot be justified by mere possibility of danger which it seeks to avert.

Legislation such as ordinance prohibiting commercial advertising on exterior sides of street cars, which imposes burden of expense on lawful and meritorious business, cannot be justified by mere possibility of danger which it seeks to avert, but must rest upon fact that experience has demonstrated that such danger is one which may reasonably be anticipated.

6. Injunction 🔑65—In suit to restrain enforcement of ordinance prohibiting advertising on street cars, transit company's power, under articles or franchises, to engage in advertising business, should be determined as of time of trial.

In suit to enjoin enforcement of ordinance prohibiting commercial advertising on exterior sides of street cars, transit company held empowered under its articles or franchises to engage in advertising business, though original articles gave no such power where it was given by amendment of articles after commencement of suit, since it is state of things as of time of trial, rather than of commencement of action, which governs.

7. Street railroads 🔑61(4)—Misuser of transit company's franchise by engaging in advertising business can be taken advantage of by government alone.

Rule that misuser of franchise by exceeding corporate powers is cause of forfeiture which can be taken advantage of by government alone held applicable to transit company, as regards its power to engage in advertising business.

8. Street railroads ⚷18—Advertising held within powers granted to street railway by franchises which were silent on such matter.

Advertising held to be within powers granted by franchises to street railroad company in view of common practice of using street railway cars for advertising purposes, since franchise by silence on matter of advertising did not contemplate restriction on common and customary use of similar franchises under similar circumstances.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Stanley Murray, Judge.

Suit by the Pacific Railways Advertising Company and another against the City of Oakland and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Preston Higgins, City Atty., and C. Stanley Wood, Asst. City Atty., both of Oakland, for appellants.

Brobeck, Phleger & Harrison, of San Francisco, for respondent Transit Company.

Chapman, Trefethen & Chapman, of Oakland, for respondent Advertising Company.

GOODELL, Justice pro tem. This appeal was taken from a judgment and decree permanently enjoining the city of Oakland, the members of its council, its chief of police, and its city attorney from enforcing an ordinance prohibiting commercial advertising on the exterior sides of street cars. The decree declared the ordinance to be unconstitutional and void.

The following facts are alleged in the complaint and not denied: The plaintiff Key System Transit Company, a California corporation, operating a street railway system under franchises from the city of Oakland and the county of Alameda, made a contract with its coplaintiff, Pacific Railways Advertising Company, whereby the transit company granted to the advertising company the exclusive right to advertise in, upon, and about all its cars from October 30, 1925, to December 31, 1931, for a consideration of $40,000 a year.

The advertising company, at an expense of more than $8,000, placed upon each side of every car two sheet metal frames approximately 22 inches wide, 28 inches long, and 1/32 inch thick, to hold advertising matter. Thereafter the council enacted ordinance No. 3568 (N. S.), making it unlawful to operate a street car within the city "while there is attached to the exterior sides thereof, * * * any frame or device made of metal, wood or other substance, for the insertion or for the purpose of holding and displaying any reading matter" or with "any bill, poster, notice, or advertisement advertising the business, or goods, wares or merchandise of any merchant, manufacturer or any person other than the owner or lessee of the street railway" on such sides, whether posted, stuck, stamped, painted, or otherwise affixed thereon. None of the frames project from the sides of the cars more than 3/4 inch and the grab rails, steps, rivets, and other such parts of the car itself project beyond the frames. The frames match the cars in color.

Other allegations (hereafter discussed), designed to show wherein the ordinance was unreasonable and void, and, particularly, to show that what the plaintiffs had done constituted no menace to the public safety, comfort, or morals, were denied, and on all the issues thus made the court found in favor of the plaintiffs. The answer also raised an issue as to the transit company's authority "to carry or maintain advertisements for hire on the exterior sides of its cars," on which issue the court also found in favor of the plaintiffs.

The appellants seek a reversal on the grounds: (1) That the ordinance is a valid exercise of the police power, and (2) that the transit company has no power or authority under its articles or franchises to engage in advertising business.

[1, 2] In entering upon the inquiry as to the validity of the ordinance, we are, of course, mindful of the rule, stressed by appellants, that every intendment and presumption is in favor of its validity. But we have in mind, also, the settled principle that if a statute or ordinance "purporting to have been enacted to protect the public health, the public morals, or the public safety has no real or substantial relation to those objects," it is the duty of the courts to so adjudge. Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 661, 8 S. Ct. 273, 31 L. Ed. 205; Ex parte Whitwell, 98 Cal. 73, 79, 32 P. 870, 19 L. R. A. 727, 35 Am. St. Rep. 152. And in pursuing this inquiry the courts are not limited to a consideration of the face of the ordinance alone. It is settled law that a plaintiff may show by extrinsic evidence that an ordinance, by reason of particular facts and circumstances, is unreasonable, oppressive, and void as to him. In re Smith, 143 Cal. 368, 370, 77 P. 180; Ex parte Elam, 6 Cal. App. 233, 238, 91 P. 811; Abbey Land, etc., Co. v. San Mateo, 167 Cal. 434, 437, 139 P. 1068, 52 L. R. A. (N. S.) 408, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 804.

In the Smith Case, supra, the ordinance prohibited gas works, gas tanks, etc., within a defined area. The works had been built before the passage of the ordinance, and the petitioner alleged and proved the physical and geographical surroundings as well as the safeguards provided and the precautions taken respecting the works, all addressed to the question of the reasonableness of the ordinance. The court said: "It being within the powers of the board of supervisors in proper cases to regulate, or even to prohibit, the manufacture of gas within prescribed limits, this ordinance upon its face would appear to be innocuous and valid. It became necessary, therefore, for the pleader in his petition to set forth the matters dehors the ordinance, by virtue of which he contends that the ordinance is unreasonable, oppressive, and void."

Thus, in the case at bar, to establish that the ordinance bears no relation to the police power, and to show that it is unreasonable in its operation and application to them, the plaintiffs alleged that the frames, and the advertisements in them, are of a type generally and customarily used upon street cars in the principal cities of the United States and Canada; that the advertisements are sightly, and always have been those of reputable persons conducting legitimate businesses; that the "frames are so constructed that they cannot possibly endanger the safety or comfort of passersby or of any persons"; that neither the frames nor the advertising have caused, or can cause, or tend to cause, any congestion or obstruction of traffic; further, that none of the provisions of the ordinance are necessary to protect the public health, comfort, morals, safety, or general welfare. The allegation respecting the alleged custom was denied for want of information or belief. The allegations that the frames endangered no one and that the advertisements did not cause, or tend to cause, congestion of traffic were not only specifically denied, but the city affirmatively alleged that the frames constitute a menace to the safety and comfort of pedestrians and motorists, and that they are so placed "as to catch and hold the clothing of passersby and pedestrians and portions of passing vehicles, and particularly to catch the clothing" of traffic officers on the streets and between the cars; also, that the advertisements were designed to, and do, attract the attention of pedestrians and motorists and so cause them "to become careless and disobedient of traffic rules and regulations and neglectful of their own safety." The city also alleged that the colors of the advertisements were "antagonistic to, unharmonious and contrasting with the colors of the street cars"; "gaudy, striking and unpleasing"; "all colors of the rainbow." The answer denied that the provisions of the ordinance were not necessary to protect the public safety, comfort, morals, etc.

To prove the custom of advertising by means of similar frames, photographs were introduced of street cars operating in St. Joseph, Cincinnati, Washington, D. C., and Winnipeg. To establish that the grab rails, steps, and rivets of the transit company's cars project beyond the frames, the plaintiffs introduced oral testimony and photographs. The plaintiffs proved that the frames are securely fastened to the sides of the cars, the edges of the frames being smoothed so that they cannot catch or engage anything. None of this evidence was contradicted.

The appellants introduced a chart showing that the frames project from the sides of the cars, ½ inch, ⅝ inch, and at most ¾ inch (which was conceded by the respondents) and showing the colors of the advertising matter. The trial judge, on stipulation, inspected the cars.

Findings on all these issues were in favor of the plaintiffs, concluding that "none of the provisions of said ordinance are necessary to protect the public health, comfort, morals, safety, or general welfare."

[3] The respondents take the position that these findings define and control the legal questions presented on the appeal, and a careful consideration of the case convinces us that they do. The plaintiffs' proof showed the frames to be safe and the advertisements to be neither immoral nor offensive. The appellants had ample opportunity to show every element and factor going to make the frames dangerous or to render the advertisements offensive to decency or morality, or having even a tendency to do so. The frames had been in use for some months at the time of the trial, and if, in that interval, anything had happened to demonstrate that there was any hazard, proof of such experience certainly would have been admissible. Indeed but a slight showing by the city would have been necessary to overcome the case made by the plaintiffs, for it is well settled that an ordinance or statute will be upheld unless it be shown beyond a reasonable doubt that it bears no relation to the exercise of the police power. If the question be debatable—one on which reasonable minds might differ—the ordinance should be held valid.

[4] We are satisfied that the case at bar falls into that class of cases where a legislative body, in seeking to prevent some real or fancied evil or danger, in a business or activity not in itself wrong or unlawful, has gone about it not by reasonable regulation but by absolute prohibition. What the council was really concerned with was the protection of the public from harm or injury from dangerous or improper signs or advertisements on street cars.

In Ex parte Whitwell, 98 Cal. 73, 32 P. 870, 19 L. R. A. 727, 35 Am. St. Rep. 152, an ordinance of San Mateo county required a license as a prerequisite to the operation of any hospital or asylum for the insane, and prohibited its maintenance at all unless the buildings were not more than two stories high and constructed of brick or stone and iron and surrounded by a brick or stone wall 12 feet high and 18 inches thick, etc. The court found that the class of inmates rendered it wholly unnecessary that their confinement be insured by any such type of construction, and that therefore there was no relation between these provisions and the proper exercise of the police power. It was held that the ordinance imposed upon the petitioner's business "such burdensome, oppressive, and unreasonable conditions as in effect to amount to its prohibition."

In the Smith Case, supra, it was held that the prohibition by the supervisors of gas works in the rural district there described was wholly unnecessary. That ordinance sought not to regulate gas works which might, admittedly, become a menace, but to prohibit all gas works in a given area.

In Abbey Land, etc., Co. v. San Mateo, supra, the supervisors of San Mateo county attempted to prohibit the maintenance of more than one crematory in any one township. The court held that as it prohibited the plaintiffs "from using their property in a lawful business and in an innocent manner, it must be declared void as an unwarranted infringement of the right of acquiring, possessing, and protecting property." It was "conceded, of course, that if a crematory is, or may be, operated in a manner which may cause injury to the public health, comfort, or convenience, the local legislative authority may make reasonable regulations of the manner of conducting it so as to decrease or prevent such injury." The decision emphasizes, very clearly, the difference between outright and absolute prohibition and reasonable and necessary regulation, and its application to the case at bar is obvious.

Another case pointing out this distinction is San Diego Tuberculosis Association v. East San Diego, 186 Cal. 252, 200 P. 393, 17 A. L. R. 513, where it was attempted to prohibit within the city limits any hospital for the treatment of contagious or infectious diseases. "Such prohibition," says the court, "is very different from regulation and can be justified only on the ground that such a hospital, no matter how well conducted, is a menace," etc.

The attempts which have been made in this state and elsewhere to prohibit billboards seem to us to be, in their essentials, not unlike the attempt to prohibit this exterior street car advertising. True, a billboard is a stationary thing on private property, while a street car moves over public streets. But both are subject to regulation when there is any threat of harm to the public safety, comfort or morality. In the case of Varney & Green v. Williams, 155 Cal. 318, 320, 100 P. 867 (21 L. R. A. [N. S.] 741, 132 Am. St. Rep. 88), the ordinance made "no attempt to restrict the operation of the enactment to billboards that may be insecure or otherwise dangerous, or to advertising that may be indecent," but prohibited all billboards, just as this ordinance prohibits all advertising and all frames. In holding the ordinance invalid the Supreme Court said: "The town trustees have undertaken to make criminal the maintenance of any billboard, however securely it may be built, and however unobjectionable may be the advertising matter displayed upon it. Such prohibition, involving a very substantial interference with the rights of property, can be justified, if at all, only to the extent that the subject matter of the legislation is embraced within the police power of the state. Bearing in mind that the ordinance does not purport to have any relation to the protection of passers-by from injury by reason of unsafe structures, to the diminution of hazard of fire, or to the prevention of immoral displays, we find that the one ground upon which the town council may be thought to have acted is that the appearance of billboards is, or may be, offensive to the sight of persons of refined taste. * * * We are not here, however, concerned with the extent to which the legislative power may, in the effort to protect the public safety or morals, regulate the manner of erecting or using billboards. The ordinance in question does not attempt such regulation, but undertakes to absolutely forbid the erection or maintenance of any billboard for advertising purposes. We have no doubt that this sweeping prohibition was beyond the power of the town trustees."

It is manifest from a reading of the ordinance alone that what the council did was to absolutely prohibit all frames and all advertising on the sides of street cars, rather than to regulate dangerous frames, signs, or devices and immoral or otherwise improper displays. And when the provisions of the ordinance are considered in the light of the evidence and findings, it is all the more obvious that when the ordinance was passed no threat of public injury or danger existed (and none has developed since) which would warrant or justify the calling into play of an exercise of the police power in the broad and sweeping form which this ordinance takes.

[5] Appellants contend that "the validity of a statute is not to be determined by what has been done in any particular instance, but what may be done under it," the argument being that if this judgment stands "the respondents might go far beyond what they have so far done." The answer to that is found in the Whitwell Case, 98 Cal. 73, at page 82, 32 P. 870, 873 (19 L. R. A. 727, 35 Am. St. Rep. 152), where it is said: "Legislation of this character, which imposes an onerous burden of expense upon a lawful and highly meritorious business, cannot be justified by the mere possibility of the danger which it ostensibly seeks to avert. It must rest upon the fact that experience has demonstrated that such danger, in the absence of such legislative regulation, is one which may reasonably be anticipated as the probable result of conducting such business, notwithstanding the exercise of ordinary care to prevent it." See, also, in the same connection, Varney & Green v. Williams, supra, and particularly In re Wilshire (C. C.) 103 F. 620.

Within the record in this case is found an illustration of what the city may do, and has done, by way of regulation. In elaborate detail, by Ordinance No. 2794 (New Series), the council has prescribed in various ways for the regulation of billboards and electrical and other advertising signs and devices. It has not prohibited these things on the theory that advertisers, uncurbed, might put up dangerous signs, and that therefore all signs and billboards should be banned, but it has prescribed just where the signs may go, how large they may be, at what distance from the sidewalk, building line, or roof they may be anchored or fixed, and otherwise how they shall conform, all in the interest of the public security, health, morality, etc.

Much reliance is placed by the appellants upon the case of Fifth Avenue Coach Co. v. City of New York, 194 N. Y. 19, 86 N. E. 824, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 744, 16 Ann. Cas. 695, affirmed in 58 Misc. Rep. 401, 111 N. Y. S. 759, and 221 U. S. 467, 31 S. Ct. 709, 55 L. Ed. 815. The ordinance there provides that "no advertising trucks, vans or wagons shall be allowed in the streets of the Borough of Manhattan." The coach company used the sides of its automobile omnibuses for advertising signs, two of which were "13 feet by 2 feet 7 inches; another, 2 by 6½ feet; another, 4 by 2 feet; another, 8 feet by 20 inches; another, 2 feet 4 inches square; and others, 2 feet in length." The advertisements were made up of "painted figures of animals, men in oriental costume, busts of men and women, all made conspicuous by contrasted coloring." It clearly appeared that the signs covered "the whole or a large part of the exterior" of the stages and that the tendency would be to produce congestion upon streets already overburdened with traffic. The court in the Fifth Avenue Coach Case held the stages of the coach company to be within the prohibition of the ordinance respecting "advertising * * * wagons," and it is not difficult to understand this when it is borne in mind that practically the entire exterior of the stages was covered with gaudy signs designed to attract such attention from pedestrians as to block traffic. The findings in the case at bar show that here no such consequence was to be feared, and the admitted facts show the signs to occupy comparatively little space on the sides of the cars. We do not consider this case, or the other cases cited from outside jurisdictions, applicable to the case at bar, particularly in view of the settled law in California enunciated in the cases to which we have referred.

[6, 7] The second ground urged by the appellants is that the transit company has no power under its articles or franchises to engage in advertising business. The respondent transit company virtually conceded that under its original articles no such power was expressly given. Its amended articles, however, contain this power and authority in broad and ample terms. We are satisfied that although the amendment to the articles was made after the commencement of this suit, it is the state of things as of the time of trial, rather than at the commencement of the action, which should govern in a proceeding of this nature. 14 R. C. L. 308; Parker v. P. G. & E. Co., 50 Cal. App. 264, 195 P. 60. But we are satisfied that appellants' contention that the making of an advertising contract is beyond, and not within, the corporate powers of the transit company, cannot be urged by them. The other party to the contract, the advertising company, is not only raising the objection, but is litigating herein on the side of the transit company. We fail to see why the ordinary rule that, "The misuser of a franchise by exceeding the corporate powers is a cause of forfeiture which can be taken advantage of by the government alone" (7 Cal. Jur. p. 63, and cases there cited), does not apply here.

[8] This brings us to the last contention of the appellants, namely, that advertising is not within the powers granted by the franchises which the transit company holds and enjoys. The point is without merit. It appears here that the practice of using street railway cars for advertising purposes is the common and usual practice—one recognized by the very ordinance in question here when it permitted advertising upon the inside portions of street cars and upon the outside front and rear ends. Manifestly the franchise, which was silent on the matter of advertising, did not by mere silence contemplate a restriction upon the common and customary use of similar franchises under similar circumstances.

The judgment is affirmed.

GALLAGHER v. GALLAGHER et al.

(Civ. 3703.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 9, 1929.

1. Husband and wife ⚷250—No understanding of repayment existing when advances to parents were made, property subsequently given married son did not become community estate.

Property given by father and mother to married son, did not become part of son's community estate, contrary to expressed intention at time of conveyance, though son had made advances for parent's support, where there was no understanding of repayment at time advancements were made.

2. Evidence ⚷313—Expressed intention at time of execution and delivery of deed could not be controlled by subsequent statements regarding intention of grantor.

Statements made by grantor in deed after execution and delivery thereof, relating to intention of grantor, could not affect or control expressed intention at time of conveyance.

3. Appeal and error ⚷1011(1)—Findings of court, where evidence is conflicting and there is evidence to support findings, will not be disturbed.

Where evidence is conflicting, and there is evidence to support the findings of the court, such findings should not be disturbed.

4. Husband and wife ⚷270(1)—Wife may maintain action to recover community property conveyed by husband without her consent, and reinstate it in community estate (Civ. Code, § 172a).

Wife's interest in community property, under Civ. Code, § 172a, being tangible and enforceable interest which is not dependent upon what has been defined as her expectancy, she can maintain action to recover property conveyed by husband without her consent, and reinstate it in community estate.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tuolumne County; J. T. B. Warne, Judge.

Action by Edna J. Gallagher against Hugh P. Gallagher and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Horace M. Street, of San Francisco, for appellant.

J. C. Webster, of Sonora, for respondents.

MONCUR, Justice pro tem. This is an action brought by plaintiff Edna J. Gallagher, wife of defendant Hugh P. Gallagher, against her husband and his two sisters to cancel a deed made by plaintiff's said husband to the two sisters of a two-thirds interest in certain real property in Tuolumne county. Hugh P. Gallagher defaulted. The two sisters answered and obtained judgment from which plaintiff appeals. The complaint alleges that the property described in the deed sought to be set aside was the community property of plaintiff and her said husband, and that said deed was without consideration and was made without plaintiff's consent, and was an attempt to make a gift of the said interest in said property to the said sisters. The defendants Rose Rachford and Jane Phillips in their answer to the complaint denied the property was community property, and set up as an affirmative defense the following: That Patrick Gallagher and Eliza Gallagher, the father and mother of Hugh Gallagher, Rose Rachford, Jane Phillips, and also Henry Gallagher, the latter not being a party to this action, on October 13, 1909, by deed, conveyed the property in suit to Hugh P. Gallagher to hold the same in trust; that said Patrick and Eliza Gallagher intended to convey the property to Hugh Gallagher to take and hold a one-fourth interest as his own and to hold in trust a one-fourth interest for his brother Henry and a like interest for each Rose and Jane. Briefly, the facts in the case are as follows: Appellant and Hugh Gallagher married March 18, 1903, and have continued since that time to be husband and wife. All of the property involved belonged to Eliza Gallagher as her separate property, except a 20-acre tract known as the Gallagher placer mine, the latter property being community property of Patrick and Eliza Gallagher. On October 13, 1909, by ordinary form of grant, bargain, and sale deed Patrick and Eliza Gallagher conveyed all of the property to Hugh Gallagher. The deed recites a consideration of $2,500. From 1915 to 1920, appellant and Hugh Gallagher were living together, but in a strained and unhappy relation. From 1920 to February, 1925, they lived separate and apart. In March, 1917, Hugh made the deed attacked to his sisters. It was made without appellant's knowledge or consent. Appellant and Hugh Gallagher became reconciled after a serious illness of appellant in February, 1925. Appellant did not know of the deed sought to be annulled herein until February, 1925; and at the time said deed from Hugh Gallagher to his sisters was made divorce proceedings were in contemplation between said Hugh and his wife. It further appears that prior to Hugh's marriage to appellant he had contributed from time to time amounts for the support of his mother and father and after his marriage he continued to contribute sums from time to time for their support, the total amount of such contribution from Hugh after his marriage to appellant exceeding the sum of $2,200; also the sisters contributed some amounts for the support of their parents. Eliza Gallagher died September 25, 1913, and Patrick Gallagher died November 19, 1917.

[1] The court found that the property was not community property, but was acquired as a gift from the father and mother by said

Hugh. If by the deed of conveyance to Hugh Gallagher a community interest in the property vested in the plaintiff, it must have vested by reason of the advances out of their community funds made by Hugh to his parents subsequent to his marriage to plaintiff. However, the testimony clearly shows that there was no understanding of repayment at the times the advancements were made by Hugh to his parents. Under these circumstances what is said in the case of Crane v. Derrick, 157 Cal. 667, at page 672, 109 P. 31, 33, seems to be particularly applicable: "It has been said may times that the question is one that must be determined on the circumstances of the particular case, the question in each case being whether it can reasonably be inferred that pecuniary compensation was in the view of the parties at the time the services were rendered or the support was furnished. (See 21 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 2d Ed., p. 1061; Murdock v. Murdock, 7 Cal. 513; Friermuth v. Friermuth, 46 Cal. 42, 45.) * * * Our own decisions appear to support the doctrine that to authorize compensation in such cases the circumstances must be such as to warrant the inference that it was the expectation of both parties that compensation should be made. (Murdock v. Murdock, 7 Cal. 513; Friermuth v. Friermuth, 46 Cal. 42.) And it is emphatically declared in Murdock v. Murdock, that it is the expectations of the parties existing while the relation continued that is to control, and that no circumstance occurring afterwards can convert that into an implied contract, that was not so before."

[2] It appears that Hugh was not at home at the time the deed to him was executed by his parents. Mrs. Rachford, Mrs. Phillips, and Henry Gallagher all testified that their parents had discussed the matter of the conveyance with them on the day before the conveyance was made, and had expressed a desire to convey the property to Rose, their daughter, in trust for all of their children, but that Rose declined to accept the deed to her and suggested that it be made to Hugh. This was done, but the deed was not delivered to Hugh until April, 1913, after his return from Alaska. So far as Eliza Gallagher is concerned this is the only occasion where she appears to have participated at all in any of the discussions in relation to a disposal of the property. There is a sharp conflict in the evidence as to what occurred between Patrick Gallagher, Rose, and Hugh in April, 1913, when the deed was actually delivered to Hugh for recording, but in view of the findings of the trial court this conflict becomes immaterial. It may be remarked here, however, that the expressed intention of Patrick Gallagher and Eliza Gallagher at the time of the execution and delivery of the deed in question as to what they intended by the conveyance should be controlling, and any statements made by Patrick Gallagher thereafter to the effect that "he had deeded his property to Hugh to repay him for what he had spent on the place years before" or "I am so sorry I have let Hugh spend so much money on the place; he will never get back all that he has spent on it, although I have deeded everything I own to him" could not affect or control the expressed intention at the time of the conveyance.

[3] There is evidence in the record sufficient to support the finding of the court that the conveyance to Hugh by his parents was intended as a gift, and, as the court also found that by reason of such deed to Hugh the property did not become the community property of plaintiff and Hugh, it is immaterial so far as plaintiff is concerned whether the evidence does in fact establish that the property was conveyed as a gift or in trust to Hugh for all of the children. In either event, the result to plaintiff will be the same. It appears unnecessary to cite any authorities in support of the rule that, where evidence is conflicting and that where there is evidence to support the findings of the court, such findings should not be disturbed.

[4] Respondents urge that plaintiff was not entitled at the time of the commencement of the action to have the deed of the said two-thirds interest set aside, even though the court should determine that the property conveyed thereby was the community property of herself and Hugh. However, we think the question involved herein has been practically set at rest by recent decisions of the courts of this state. It would serve no useful purpose to go at any length into the many decisions of our courts in respect to these matters involved in our community property laws. It seems sufficient in reference to such rights of a wife to quote the following from the case of Spreckels v. Spreckels, 172 Cal. 775, at page 782, 158 P. 537, 539: "If it confers upon her, during the marriage, any right respecting such gifts, it is nothing more than a right to revoke the gift and, if necessary, sue to recover the property, not as her separate estate, but to reinstate it as a part of the community property with the title vested in the husband and subject to sale by him as before."

And to quote also from the case of Bone v. Dwyer, 74 Cal. App. 363, at page 370, 240 P. 796, 798, as follows: "Whatever the wife's interest may be, we hold that under the section it is a tangible, enforceable interest, and is not dependent upon the maturity of what has been defined as her expectancy in community property."

Section 172a of the Civil Code is the section referred to, and, while it is true that said section had not been enacted at the time of the transactions involved herein, nevertheless the effect, so far as the application of the above-quoted language is concerned, must be the same.

It, therefore, appearing that the evidence supports the findings and the judgment and no prejudicial error appearing in the record, it follows that the judgment must be, and it is hereby, affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; THOMPSON, J.

98 Cal. App. 230

NOBLE et al. v. CALIFORNIA PRUNE & APRICOT GROWERS' ASS'N et al.
(Civ. 5571.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. April 12, 1929.

1. Appeal and error 🔑917(2)—Trial court is assumed to have sustained general demurrer, where defendants demurred generally and specially and demurrer was sustained without leave to amend.

Where defendants demurred generally and specially to plaintiffs' petition and demurrer was sustained without leave to amend, it is assumed that trial court sustained general demurrer.

2. Agriculture 🔑6—Attempted amendment, adding withdrawal clause to by-laws of co-operative marketing association adopted by voting board and majority of members and not two-thirds, as required, held ineffective (Civ. Code, § 304).

Where by-laws of co-operative marketing association provided that on written demand or vote of sixteen members of voting board any particular problem of association should be referred to membership, and that voting board should thereupon vote as unit as majority of association's members should determine, resolution so adopted by voting board and by majority of members of association attempting to amend by-laws by adding withdrawal clause was of no force or effect as amendment under provisions of by-laws and Civ. Code, § 304, requiring two-thirds of members of corporation to consent to amendment.

3. Agriculture 🔑6—By-laws to be amended require substantial compliance with provisions of law for amending by-laws (Civ. Code, § 304).

Before by-laws of co-operative marketing association can be amended, there must be substantial compliance with provisions of Civ. Code, § 304, providing for amendment of by-laws.

4. Corporations 🔑56—Mode prescribed by general law or corporation charter for amending by-laws must be adopted, for by-laws to be valid.

When either general law or charter of corporation describes mode in which by-laws may be adopted, by-laws which corporation seeks to amend must be adopted in such mode in order to be valid.

5. Mandamus 🔑137—Incorporation of withdrawal clause in by-laws of association involved discretion, where requiring determination of terms of withdrawal, and could not be enforced by mandamus.

In mandamus to compel co-operative marketing association to incorporate into by-laws withdrawal clause, and to compel association to permit plaintiff members to withdraw, resolution for withdrawal providing for submission to members for their vote, question as to whether or not they want withdrawal clause did not constitute amendment to by-laws, but merely submitted proposal to membership, and duty sought to be enforced was not ministerial but discretionary, since members of board were required to use their discretion in drawing up amendment containing terms of withdrawal, which discretion trial court could not control by mandamus.

6. Mandamus 🔑12—Mandamus lies only to enforce performance of act enjoined by law and not to enforce obligation of contracts (Code Civ. Proc. § 1085).

Mandamus does not lie to enforce obligation of contracts, but lies only to enforce performance of an act which law specially enjoins under Code Civ. Proc. § 1085, except where contracts create relation on which law imposes rights and duties enforceable by mandamus.

7. Mandamus 🔑138—Mandamus held inapplicable to compel co-operative marketing association, having only contractual relation with members, to amend by-laws by adding withdrawal clause adopted by majority of members (Civ. Code, § 304).

Where membership and marketing agreements showed that relation between members of co-operative marketing association and association was purely contractual, and there was no law requiring or permitting corporation to amend its by-laws so as to provide for withdrawal of its members at least without consent of at least two-thirds of its members, as required by Civ. Code, § 304, and no duty was enjoined by law on officers to adopt such amendments to by-laws, and by-laws prohibited withdrawal from membership during term of marketing agreement, association could not be compelled by mandamus to amend by-laws by adding withdrawal clause adopted by majority of members.

8. Agriculture 🔑6—Members of co-operative marketing association, if entitled to withdraw, could set up withdrawal as defense to action by association to enforce contract.

Members of co-operative marketing association, if entitled to withdraw from association under claim that withdrawal clause was approved by majority of members and voting board and should have been made part of by-laws, could set up such withdrawal as defense to any action brought by association to enforce its contract rights.

ers. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Chas. F. Blackstock, of Oxnard, for appellants.

Sapiro & Hayes, of San Francisco, for respondents.

McLUCAS, Justice pro tem. Plaintiffs appeal from a judgment sustaining defendants' and respondents' demurrer to an amended petition for a peremptory writ of mandamus, without leave to amend.

The amended petition, in substance, alleges as follows: That petitioners are residents of the county of Ventura, state of California, and owners of apricot orchards and growers of apricots in said county and and state. That defendant California Prune & Apricot Growers' Association is a nonprofit co-operative association without capital stock, organized under the laws of the state of California, and has its principal place of business at San Jose, Cal. That the articles of incorporation of said defendant provide, among other things, that the number of directors of said defendant corporation shall be fifteen. That a copy of said articles of incorporation is attached to the petition and made a part thereof. That prior to June 29, 1925, each of the plaintiffs became members of said California Prune & Apricot Growers' Association by executing with said association a certain membership agreement. That in said membership agreement it is provided substantially as follows: "The undersigned hereby appoint the Voting Board heretofore selected by the members of California Prune and Apricot Growers Association as his attorney to vote in his name, place and stead, for him and representing his interests and the joint interests of all other growers at all annual, regular or special meetings of the members of the association, or otherwise, where a member may be called on to vote in or for the association with the same powers and rights as the undersigned himself would have if personally present from the date of the execution of this proxy to and including July 31, 1928. The Voting Board shall consist of thirty-nine members as provided in the original membership agreement of the California Prune and Apricot Growers Association and article four of the by-laws thereof, representing the various districts as therein set forth. Said board shall annually select the directors of the association. No person may serve as director and as a member of the Voting Board at the same time. The Voting Board shall determine all questions by majority vote. On written demand or vote of sixteen members of the Voting Board any particular problem or problems of the association shall be referred to the full membership of the association. In such event the proxy and power of attorney shall be temporarily suspended; and the entire membership shall be requested to vote thereon. The voting Board shall thereupon vote as a unit as a majority of the association members so voting shall determine." That a copy of said membership agreement is attached to the petition and made a part thereof. That article 8 of the articles of incorporation of said association is as follows: "The association may provide in its by-laws the terms and conditions upon which membership may be transferred or assigned and conditions upon which, and at the time when, membership may cease, and the mode, manner and effect of the expulsion of a member, and the method, time and manner of withdrawal, and the right of members to vote by proxy or by mail and any other thing in furtherance of, but not in conflict with, these articles." That article 4 of the by-laws of said association is as follows: "(a) The Voting Board, consisting of thirty-nine members, elected by the members of the voting districts, shall be the proxy and attorney of each member of the association, to vote in his name, place and stead, and represent his interests and the joint interest of all other members of the association at all annual, regular or special meetings of the members of the association, or otherwise, where a member of the association may be called upon to act in or for the association, with the same powers and right as the member himself would have if personally present, which said proxy and power of attorney shall remain and continue in force for a full period of seven years from July 31, 1921. The personnel of the Voting Board may change from time to time without affecting or impairing such proxy and power of attorney vested in the Voting Board. The thirty-nine members of the Voting Board shall represent the various districts of the state as follows: (Enumerating districts.) (b) The members of the Voting Board shall be selected by the members in their respective districts. The Voting Board shall have such powers and duties as set forth in the membership agreement and these by-laws. * * * (d) The Voting Board shall determine all questions by majority vote. Twenty members shall constitute a quorum of the Voting Board, but no action except as provided in subdivision (f) of article four of these by-laws, or a vote to adjourn shall be taken by the Voting Board, except by the affirmative vote of at least twenty members. * * * (f) On written demand or vote of sixteen of the Voting Board any particular problem or problems of the association shall be referred to the full membership of the association. In such event, the proxy and power of attorney shall be temporarily suspended; and the entire membership shall be requested to vote thereon. The Voting Board shall thereupon vote as a unit as a majority of the association members so voting shall determine. * * *" That a copy of the by-laws is attached to the petition and made a part thereof. That at a meeting of said voting board, held in San Jose, Cal., on the 29th day of June, 1925, a quorum being present and voting, the following resolution was adopted, more than twenty of the said voting board voting in favor thereof: "Resolved, that we submit to the members for their vote the question as to whether or not they want a withdrawal clause providing for withdrawal in March, 1926, and that the report of the reorganization committee be printed in the 'Sunsweet Standard' with proper comments."

The petition further alleges: "That said resolution was intended to mean and in fact did mean that it was resolved by the said Voting Board that the proposition of withdrawal should be formally submitted and referred to the membership of the association pursuant to and because of the terms of said membership agreement and said by-laws, which said membership should determine by a majority vote of the members so voting whether or not it should incorporate into the membership agreement of the association and the marketing agreement of the association and the by-laws of the association a provision to the effect that any member of the association might withdraw from the association and from said membership agreement and said marketing agreement by giving notice of his withdrawal in the period of March 15th to March 31st, inclusive, of the year 1926. Said marketing agreement is attached hereto marked 'Exhibit D' and is hereby made a part hereof. That said proposition of withdrawal was pursuant to said resolution so adopted by said Voting Board on the 29th day of June, 1925, duly submitted by referendum ballot to the entire membership of said association, and a majority of the members who voted on said proposition voted for and declared in favor of said proposition of withdrawal. That said proposition of withdrawal was referred and submitted to the membership regularly and in the manner provided by the by-laws of said association; and that the votes of the members so voting on said proposition of withdrawal were duly and regularly counted and canvassed in the manner provided by the by-laws of the association. That notwithstanding that a majority of said members so voting for said proposition of withdrawal voted in favor of said proposition, the said Voting Board and the directors of said association and the said association have failed, neglected and refused to abide by the said vote of the majority of said members so voting for said withdrawal proposition, and have refused to act pursuant to the vote of the majority of said members so voting in favor of said withdrawal proposition, and have failed, neglected and refused to incorporate into the membership agreement of the association or into the marketing agreement of the association, or into the by-laws of the association any clause permitting any member of the association to withdraw from the association by giving notice of his withdrawal in the period between the 15th day of March, and the 31st day of March, inclusive, 1926, or at any other time, or in any manner or at all. That the said Voting Board and the directors of said association and said association wholly and absolutely ignored the vote of a majority of the members so voting for said withdrawal proposition and this notwithstanding the fact that a majority of the members so voting voted in favor of said withdrawal proposition as aforesaid. That in the period of March 15th to March 31st, inclusive, of the year 1926, each of the plaintiffs hereinabove named duly and regularly gave notice to said association of his withdrawal from membership in said association and from the membership agreement in said association, but that said defendants have failed, neglected and refused to act upon said notices or any of them, and said association has announced that its Voting Board and its board of directors and the association have refused to adopt in any form any proposition of withdrawal or any proposition which will permit any of its members to withdraw by giving notice in any form or at any time, and the said association, contrary to the vote of a majority of its members so voting upon the said proposition of withdrawal, has refused and still refuses to permit any of its members to withdraw upon notice, or otherwise, or at all, and the said association has threatened to file suit against any member of said association whether such member has given notice of withdrawal or not in accordance with the vote of a majority of the members so voting in favor of said withdrawal proposition, and said association in fact will carry out its threat and will file suit against any member who fails to deliver his fruit to the said association in accordance with the terms of said membership agreement and said marketing agreement of said association, and that said association will file such suit against any member failing to deliver his said fruit in an effort to collect from such member the amount of penalty provided by the membership agreement and/or the said marketing agreement and/or the by-laws of said association, and this whether or not such member has duly and regularly given notice of withdrawal from the association. That at the time each of the plaintiffs herein gave his notice of withdrawal from said association, each of the said plaintiffs was a member in good standing of said association, and that each of the plaintiffs has performed on his part all of the terms, covenants and conditions of said membership agreement and the said marketing agreement on his part to be performed; and that each of the plaintiffs has complied with all of the provisions of the by-laws of the said California Prune and Apricot Growers Association, a corporation, on his part to be complied with. That prior to the filing of this petition demand has been made upon said defendants and each of them that it act pursuant to and in accordance with the vote of the majority of the members so voting on said withdrawal proposition, but notwithstanding said demand the said association has failed, neglected and refused to act in accordance with and pursuant to the vote of a majority of the members so voting on said withdrawal proposition, and has refused to permit any of its members to withdraw from said association upon notice or otherwise, or at all. That said plaintiffs do not have, nor does any of them have any plain, speedy and adequate remedy at law; that if the question as to whether or not the said notice of withdrawal given by each of said plaintiffs is or was effective for the purpose of accomplishing the withdrawal of each of said plaintiffs from said association is not promptly determined, the fact that said question remains open and in doubt will affect the credit of each of said plaintiffs and will hamper him in his business operations and will render it hazardous for any of said plaintiffs to sell his apricots and deliver the same to any independent purchaser, or to anyone at all, other than to said association, and will cause each of said members irreparable loss and injury; and that a determination of the right of each or any of the plaintiffs hereinabove named will avoid and prevent a multiplicity of suits."

The petition prays for a judgment that a peremptory writ of mandamus issue "commanding the said defendant association, its Voting Board and its board of directors to abide by the vote of the majority of the members so voting at said referendum election, and commanding the said association, its Voting Board and its board of directors to incorporate into the by-laws a clause to the effect that any of its members duly and regularly giving notice of withdrawal in the period between March 15th and March 31st, inclusive, 1926, may withdraw from the association and from membership therein; and commanding the said association to permit each of the plaintiffs hereinabove named to withdraw from said association in accordance with the notice of each of said plaintiffs heretofore duly and regularly given to said association; and for such other judgment or order as may be proper."

[1] Defendants and respondents demurred generally and specially to the petition. It is to be assumed that the trial court sustained the general demurrer, since the demurrer was sustained without leave to amend. We therefore proceed to the discussion whether the petition states a cause of action. Article 8 of the articles of incorporation of said association states that the association may provide in its by-laws "the conditions upon which, and the time when, membership may cease," and the mode, time, and manner of withdrawal. The by-laws of the association created a voting board with proxy and power of attorney to represent the interests of all members of the association, which said proxy and power of attorney was to remain in force for the full period of seven years from July 31, 1921. Article 8 of the by-laws provides that "no member shall be permitted to withdraw from membership in the association during the term of any marketing agreement signed by him." The by-laws further require that "each member must agree to market the prunes and apricots grown or owned by him in accordance with the provisions of the standard marketing agreements" referred to therein, and provide for stipulated damages in accordance with said marketing agreements. A copy of the marketing agreement is attached to the by-laws, and is required to be signed by each member of the association. Paragraph 2 of the marketing agreement provides as follows: "The association agrees to buy and the grower agrees to sell and deliver to the association all of the prunes and apricots and apricot pits produced or acquired by or for him in California, during the years 1922, 1923, 1924 and 1925; and, at the option of the association, the years 1926, 1927 and 1928. This option shall be irrevocable; and shall cover the total period of three years. * * *" The marketing agreement further provides that the association shall grade and classify the prunes and apricots, and the grower agrees to accept the gradings and standards established by the association. Sections 6 and 7 of the marketing agreement provide that: "The association agrees to resell such prunes and apricots together with prunes and apricots of like quality, grade and classification, delivered by other growers under similar contracts, at the best prices obtainable by it under market conditions; and to pay over the net amount received therefrom, as payment in full, to the grower and growers named in contracts similar hereto, according to the value of the prunes and apricots delivered by each of them after deducting therefrom, within the discretion of the association, the costs of packing, processing, manufacturing, handling, storing, depreciation, advertising and marketing, and an association charge of not to exceed three per cent. of the gross resale proceeds. * * * The grower agrees that his prunes and apricots shall be so mingled and that the net returns therefrom, less all costs, advances and charges, shall be credited and paid to him on a proportional basis, considering all differentials and adjustments, out of the receipts from the sale of all prunes and apricots of like quality, grade and classification." Section 12 of the marketing agreement reads as follows: "This agreement shall be binding upon the grower as long as he produces or acquires any prunes or apricots directly or indirectly, or has the legal right to exercise control of any prunes or apricots or any interest therein during the term of this contract." Section 15 of the marketing agreement states that: "This agreement is one of a series generally similar in terms, comprising with all such agreements, signed by individual grower, or otherwise, one single contract between the association and the said growers, mutually and individually obligated under all of the terms thereof. The association shall be deemed to be acting, in its own name, for all such growers in any action or legal proceedings on or arising out of this contract." Section 16 of the marketing agreement contains the following provision: "* * * The grower hereby agrees to pay to the association for all prunes and apricots and pits withheld, delivered, sold, consigned or marketed by or for him other than in accordance with the terms hereof the sum of two cents per pound of prunes, and particularly the sum of four cents per pound of prunes running larger than thirty to the pound and the sum of four cents per pound of apricots and one-half cent per pound of apricot pits, as liquidated damages for the breach of this contract, all parties agreeing that this contract is one of a series dependent for its true value upon the adherence of each and all of the growers to each and all of the said contracts."

[2-5] As alleged in the petition, on June 29, 1925, the said voting board adopted the resolution hereinbefore mentioned relating to a proposed right of withdrawal in March, 1926. While the resolution is not in form a proposed amendment of the by-laws, yet the petitioners urge that in effect the by-laws were amended in a manner provided therein, for the reason that the by-laws provide that on written demand or vote of sixteen of the voting board any particular problem of the association shall be referred to the full membership of the association, and that the voting board shall thereupon vote as a unit as a majority of the association members so voting shall determine. It may well be questioned whether the resolution so adopted by the voting board and by a majority of the members of the association constituted an attempted amendment of the by-laws; but, conceding that it was attempted to amend the by-laws in the manner stated, we are of the opinion that such attempted amendment was of no force or effect, for the reason that the provisions of the by-laws and of section 304 of the Civil Code expressly state that the by-laws may be amended by the vote or written consent of two-thirds of the members of the corporation. To permit a majority of the members of the association voting to require the voting board to vote as a unit for the amendment of the by-laws would, in effect, permit an indirect amendment of the by-laws by a minority of the members of the association, when both the Civil Code and the by-laws require the vote or written consent of two-thirds of the members of the association in order to amend the by-laws. There must be a substantial compliance with the provisions of the law before the by-laws can be amended. When either the general law or the charter of the corporation prescribes the mode in which by-laws may be adopted, the by-laws which the corporation seeks to make must be adopted in such mode in order to be valid. Powers v. Marine Engineers' Beneficial Ass'n, 52 Cal. App. 551, 199 P. 353. Further, it should be noted that the duty which appellants are seeking to enforce is not a ministerial duty. The proposition of withdrawal set out in appellants' petition does not constitute an amendment to the by-laws, but merely submits a proposal to the membership "whether or not they want a withdrawal clause providing for withdrawal in March, 1926." If a by-law permitting withdrawal were to be ordered adopted, who is to determine the terms and conditions upon which withdrawal is to be permitted? Certainly the trial court has no authority to control the discretion to be exercised by the respondent members in framing a by-law containing the terms and conditions of withdrawal. As stated in Bassett v. Atwater, 65 Conn. 355, 32 A. 937, 32 L. R. A. 575, one of the requisite conditions for the issuance of the writ of mandamus is that "the party against whom the writ is sought must be under an obligation imposed by law to perform some such duty, that is, a duty in respect to the performance of which he may not exercise any discretion."

[6, 7] It is fundamental and conceded by appellants that mandamus does not lie to enforce the obligation of contracts. It lies only to enforce the performance of an act which the law specially enjoins. Howe v. Southrey, 144 Cal. 767, 769, 78 P. 259; Barber v. Mulford, 117 Cal. 356, 49 P. 206; Moreing v. Shields, 28 Cal. App. 513, 152 P. 964; Code Civ. Proc. § 1085. There is an exception to the foregoing rule where a contract creates a relation upon which the law imposes rights and duties enforceable by mandamus. Appellants contend that they are only asking the court to compel the performance of a duty which the law specially enjoins. We cannot agree with this contention. As appears from the membership and marketing agreements, the relation between the members of the California Prune & Apricot Growers' Association was purely contractual. As stated in California Canning Peach Growers v. Downey, 76 Cal. App. 1, at page 15, 243 P. 679, 684: "Every member of the association must, of course, be held to have knowledge of all of these elements which enter into cooperative marketing agreements. They are not simple agreements entered into with an agent, although a few people may be selected to act in the capacity of officers to manage the business of the association. The agreements are essentially to and with all the other members of the cooperative association and the interests of every member rest upon the same foundation, and no member can be advantaged to the detriment of any other member. Of all this each member must also be held to have full knowledge, as the contract sets forth all of these facts in equalizing burdens and advantages." We know of no statute or law requiring or permitting a corporation to amend its by-laws so as to provide for withdrawal of its members, or at all, without the consent of at least two-thirds of its members. Neither are we cognizant of any duty enjoined by law upon any officer of any corporation requiring them to adopt such amendments to by-laws. Neither do we believe this case comes within the exception to the rule, since we do not find that the contract between the members created any relation upon which the law enjoins rights and duties enforceable by mandamus. In fact, the contract between the members expressly provides that the agreement shall be binding, at the option of the association, for the year 1926, and that this option shall be irrevocable, and the by-laws further prohibit withdrawal from membership during the term of any marketing agreement.

[8] Appellants urge that plaintiffs did not have a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law. If the appellants, as they claim, were entitled to withdraw from respondent association, such a withdrawal could be set up as a defense to any action brought by respondent association to enforce its contract rights for the delivery of apricots.

For the reasons hereinbefore stated, the complaint, in our opinion, does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; and it further appears from the record that it is not possible to amend the complaint so as to state a cause of action in this proceeding.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; YORK, J.

PEOPLE v. VAN CLEAVE. (Cr. 1749.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. April 3, 1929.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court May 3, 1929.

1. Burglary 🔑41(1)—Evidence held to sustain conviction.

Evidence held to sustain conviction of burglary.

2. Judges 🔑21—Trial judge's intemperate public criticism of decision of District Court of Appeal as unreasonable held deserving of censure (Code Civ. Proc. § 282).

Language of trial judge in passing on question of amending information, denouncing decision of District Court of Appeal as unreasonable, held serious breach of ethics, violative of judge's obligation under Code Civ. Proc. § 282, as an attorney at law, and deserving of such censure.

3. Judges 🔑21—Judge is bound by obligation as attorney to maintain respect due courts and judicial officers (Code Civ. Proc. § 282).

Code Civ. Proc. § 282, providing that it is duty of an attorney to maintain the respect due the courts and judicial officers, is applicable and binding on the judges of district court.

4. Criminal law 🔑1035(3)—Intemperate criticism by judge of decision of District Court of Appeal, not objected to, held not prejudicial to accused.

Improper and disrespectful language of trial judge in passing on question of amending information, consisting of adverse criticism of decision of District Court of Appeal as unreasonable, not assigned as misconduct at trial, held not prejudicial to accused charged with burglary.

5. Criminal law 🔑656(1)—Judge's statement in presence of jury as to conduct of witness in violation of admonition not to talk with others held prejudicial misconduct; he not being witness in case.

In burglary prosecution, where court had cautioned witness not to talk with others during recess, and after recess it appeared that she had violated injunction, statements of judge in presence of jury that he saw her talking with defendant's wife and another held misconduct; he not being a witness in the case, and no necessity being apparent why he should be called as a witness.

6. Criminal law 🔑404(1)—Old finger print card in police records consulted in investigation before arresting accused held inadmissible in burglary prosecution.

In burglary prosecution, old finger print card in possession of police before commission of burglary held inadmissible; the fact that it was inspected by finger print expert during investigation preceding arrest of accused not authorizing its introduction for sole purpose of showing that accused had previously been in hands of police.

7. Criminal law 🔑829(15, 18)—Refusal of instructions on circumstantial evidence and reasonable doubt was not erroneous, where subject-matter was adequately covered in court's charge.

Refusal of instructions on circumstantial evidence and reasonable doubt held not erroneous, where the jury were adequately instructed on such matters.

8. Criminal law 🔑1186(4)—Errors in trial of burglary prosecution held not harmless (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Errors in trial of burglary prosecution, particularly introduction of old finger print apparently merely for purpose of showing that accused had previously been in hands of police, held not harmless error, under Const. art. 6, § 4½, in view of the unsatisfactory character of the evidence.

★Hearing granted. 280 P. 983.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Emmet H. Wilson, Judge.

Dallas D. Van Cleave was convicted of burglary, and he appeals. Reversed.

Irvin C. Taplin, Ivan Miller, and Harry M. Hunt, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and John D. Richer, of Los Angeles, for the People.

WORKS, P. J. Defendant was convicted of the crime of burglary. He appeals from the judgment and from an order of the trial court denying his motion for a new trial.

[1] It is first contended by appellant that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict. The complaining witness, a woman, left an apartment in which she resided at about 10 o'clock on a certain evening. Before she departed, she saw in their accustomed places in the apartment certain articles which were ascertained, later in the night, to have been abstracted therefrom. It was because of the disappearance of these articles that the charge was made against appellant upon which he was convicted. When the complaining witness left her apartment, she drove in her automobile to a certain residence, where she met appellant, who theretofore had been her associate and friend, and some other persons, among whom was one Akins. Shortly after she arrived at this place of meeting, the complaining witness discovered that a dog she had brought with her had disappeared. She then gave to appellant a bunch of keys, including those to her car, to the exterior door of the apartment house in which she lived, to her apartment, and to her trunk, and she asked appellant to drive her car about the neighborhood of the residence mentioned, in an endeavor to find the missing dog. This was the purpose of the delivery of the keys. Appellant immediately departed upon the quest, taking Akins with him. The two returned, after an absence of from 25 to 45 minutes, with the dog. After some considerable time spent at the residence, and after having been to a restaurant for supper, together with Akins and a fourth person, appellant and the prosecuting witness drove to the latter's apartment and entered it by means of her keys, which had meanwhile been returned to her. They reached the apartment at about 2:30 in the morning. From certain appearances about the rooms it was apparent to the prosecuting witness that the place had been entered during her absence. She at once unlocked her trunk with a key on the bunch she had earlier intrusted to appellant. She testified that four diamond rings, of the value of $4,000, together with $140 in currency, had been taken from drawers in the trunk.

The evidence tended to show that the burglar had entered the apartment by means of a key, as there was no indication that the place had been broken into, in the ordinary acceptation of that term. The drawers in the trunk, five in number, were held in place by a metal bar which passed across their front and which it was necessary to move before they could be opened. The police found a print of appellant's thumb upon this bar. Other finger prints were upon it also, but none of them could be identified or plainly discerned. All the prints, except that alone of appellant's thumb, were, in the language of an expert upon the witness stand, but "smears." Before the night on which the burglary occurred, appellant was familiar with the "lay" of the apartment of the prosecuting witness. He had visited her there at least as often as every other day for a period of two months. Particularly, according to some of the evidence, he was familiar with the trunk and the mechanism by means of which it was opened, for he had often gone into it to get articles desired by the complaining witness when he was in the apartment with her, or to get articles which he himself desired. Indeed, it is contended by appellant that the sole distinguishable finger print on the metal bar was made by him upon some occasion earlier than the night upon which the burlary occurred. It will be remembered that the owner of the trunk had opened the drawers before she left her apartment at 10 o'clock and had seen the rings and money in their places. She had been compelled, necessarily, to handle the metal bar in order to open the drawers. Under all these circumstances the inference is perhaps possible that appellant's thumb print was impressed on the bar between 10 in the evening and 2:30 in the early morning of the night upon which the burglary was committed, although more will be said on that subject later. There was evidence also that, after appellant's arrest, and while he was in the county jail, he said to a police officer and to the complaining witness: "If you would let me out for twenty-four hours I believe I can get the diamonds back for you." It was testified by the officer that he further said that, if he was unable to produce the diamonds, "he would pay her back in the way of an installment from time to time." Appellant was not allowed to leave the jail, because he was unwilling to go after the diamonds in the company of an officer. We think there was sufficient evidence to support the verdict.

[2, 3] During the hearing of the cause, the trial judge, in the presence of the jury and in the hearing of such persons as may have been in the courtroom, indulged in language of a most unusual character, so unusual and improper that our duty requires that we accord it some notice. In considering the form of the information under which appellant was prosecuted, and in determining to grant leave to the district attorney to amend it, the judge had occasion to refer to an opinion of one of the divisions of the District Court of Appeal rendered less than 40 days before the day upon which the judge spoke. We mention this period of time for the reason that the circumstance shows that the cause in which the opinion was rendered was still pending, as under the law as it then stood the judgment pronounced in it did not become final until 60 days after the filing of the opinion. Indeed, the judge referred to the opinion as one rendered in a case which had been "decided by the District Court of Appeal, but is not yet final." Immediately after this reference, he proceeded: "We don't know what the Supreme Court may do with it if it goes to the Supreme Court, inasmuch as it is not final, and it seems to me to do violence to every process of reasoning, and for that reason I should decline entirely to follow it, if I were put to a place where I had to decide either one thing or another, because I think the reasoning there is absolutely absurd." The judge then proceeded to an elaborate exposition of his view that the opinion was absurd, citing many examples whereby to illustrate his meaning. He characterized the opinion as "just as absurd" as one of the examples he gave. He said also, in referring to the view he had adopted, in opposition to that expressed in the opinion: "I am drawn to that conclusion by using what I think is ordinary common sense." In his strictures upon the opinion the trial judge was guilty of a breach of the ethics which govern the conduct of the judiciary. If he had addressed to the justices of the Supreme Court a letter containing what he said from his bench in an open courtroom, he might have been adjudged guilty of a contempt of that court on two distinct grounds. Friedlander v. Sumner Gold Co., 61 Cal. 116; In re Arnold (Cal. Sup.) 267 P. 316. Irrespective of this particular question, however, the judge's remarks were an offense against ethics, because they showed disrespect for the justices of the District Court of Appeal who had rendered the opinion against which he pronounced his diatribe. Section 282 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that it is the duty of an attorney to "maintain the respect due to the courts * * * and judicial officers," and no lawyer is released from this obligation merely because he has become a judge. If one of the counsel in the present case had used at the trial the same language which the judge uttered from the bench, it would have been the plain duty of the latter to reprimand him for it. Indeed, if the counsel had so far forgotten himself as to speak in similar terms of one of the judges of the superior court, the trial judge could not justly have overlooked the assault upon his associate. We have occasionally found it necessary to rebuke counsel, at the bar of this court, for expressions directed at judges of the superior court, in no stronger terms than the language uttered from the bench by the judge before whom this cause was tried and aimed at the District Court of Appeal. If such offenses are to be noticed when committed by attorneys at the bar, they are deserving of even more severe censure when perpetrated by a judge on the bench. The remarks of the judge who tried this action were reprehensible to a degree. They were calculated to bring the courts and the administration of justice into disrepute. They were a violation of the duty of the judge, both as an attorney at law and as a judicial officer.

[4] The discussion contained in the last preceding paragraph, and the conclusion announced in it, were made necessary, not only by the remarks of the judge there mentioned, but because he continued further to offend. Immediately following the comment we have already noticed, he uttered language which appellant assigns as prejudicial misconduct, thus: "They [the legislature, in adopting certain code amendments in 1927], want to get away from petty technicalities that are raised. Unfortunately, I think there are some judges who try to find the smallest loophole that can be found in order to give the defendant the benefit of every reasonable doubt, which is given by the law anyhow; and the smallest error seems to be sufficient to justify the courts in reversing decisions or in granting new trials. Now, my mind has not run along that line. Maybe I am a little too extreme the other way, but I feel this, that if a defendant is informed by the information in language that can be understood by persons of reasonable and ordinary understanding, then he is enabled to know just what charge he has to meet, and I think that is sufficient. And I think further that in a trial of a case the court is here to get the facts and not to obscure the facts, not to hide them, not to mix up a case so when we get through nobody knows what the case is about. I think all the facts, all the pertinent facts relating to a case should go before a court or a jury, no matter whether it is a civil or a criminal case or whether it is tried by a court or by a jury. Now, I am stating this because of the decision in this case [decided by the District Court of Appeal]. The Supreme Court may take a different view of it if a rehearing is granted; but if a rehearing is not applied for, or, if applied for, it is not granted, then that becomes the law of the state, and I do not believe that it is necessary to take any chances with an information where by amending it in this way it can satisfy the most technical mind that might be called upon to decide this case at any further stage of the proceedings." While the judge showed very bad taste and violated the duties of his position in employing this language, we think there was no misconduct of which appellant may complain. While the remarks besmirched the courts, practically wholesale, we can see nothing in them which was prejudicial to appellant. It is worthy of note that the remarks were not assigned as misconduct at the trial.

[5] Another claim is made that the trial judge was guilty of misconduct. A witness for the defense, a Mrs. Howard, was on the stand when the time for a noon recess arrived. As the recess was about to be taken, and after the judge had given the usual admonition to the jury, counsel on both sides joined in the unusual request that "this witness be instructed not to talk about this trial during the recess." Thereupon the judge said to the witness: "You are instructed not to discuss with any one or allow any one to discuss with you any subject connected with this trial between now and 2:00 o'clock, when you resume the witness stand." Some time after Mrs. Howard had taken the stand following the recess, the district attorney, while conducting his cross-examination, charged in his questions that she had answered interrogations which she had failed to answer before noon, or had answered them differently. The officer then inquired whether she had talked with any one during the recess, the trial judge examined her at some length upon the same subject, and it seemed to appear that she had indulged in some conversation with at least two persons. It was suggested by counsel that the judge ask her the specific question whether she had conversed about the case, and it was stated that she had been admonished not to talk upon that subject. The judge then said: "I think that was made clear. At the request of both counsel the court admonished her to that effect, and I myself saw her talking in the back of the courtroom with Mrs. Van Cleave, the wife of the defendant, after court adjourned and while counsel was making an offer of proof, and also saw her walk into the courtroom with the lady dressed in black sitting in the front row; I don't know who she is, but they came into the courtroom together. Is that the mother of the defendant? It is this statement of the judge which is assigned as misconduct. After making the statement, the judge questioned the witness further, and it developed plainly that she had talked with the two persons named by him, but she denied that her conversations were in relation to the case. It also transpired that the "lady dressed in black" was the mother of appellant. The judge was in error in making the statement to which exception is taken. The matters of fact recited by him, if given a place in the record at all, should have come from the mouth of a witness, and he was no witness. He was neither called as a witness nor was he sworn. He could have become a witness, of course, but a judge should not be put even into such a position except as a matter of final necessity, especially in a criminal case, where there is always a likelihood that the judge who is made a witness will be deemed by the jury to have espoused one side or the other in the controversy being tried before him. The statements of fact made by the judge were intrinsically harmless. He said merely that he had seen the witness talking with the wife and mother of appellant, and she herself admitted that she had talked with them. Notwithstanding this truth, we think the remarks of the court constituted misconduct. Taking the context, as shown by the record, we think the jury must have believed that the judge held the view that the conversation related to the facts of the case. His remarks, therefore, operated to impeach the witness in the estimation of the jury. It is true that his observations were not assigned as misconduct at the trial, but we doubt whether their effect could have been wholly removed by an admonition to disregard them. When a jury believes that a judge has embraced the cause of the prosecution in a criminal case, it is most difficult to remove the impression.

[6] After appellant's arrest, his finger prints were taken by an expert in the police department. The expert testified that the distinguishable thumb print on the metal bar which held in place the drawers in the trunk of the complaining witness was the counterpart of a thumb print taken by himself from appellant, and that it was made by appellant. Some time later the prosecution offered in evidence finger prints upon a card found in the identification bureau of the police department, and bearing the name of appellant. The expert testified, over the objections of appellant, that he had examined this card as a part of the investigation leading up to the arrest of appellant, and that a thumb print upon it was made by the same thumb which made the print on the metal bar and the one taken by him from appellant after his arrest. The finger prints on the card were taken at some time before the burglary was committed with which appellant was charged and for which he was convicted in the present action. The card was admitted in evidence over the objection of appellant. This was error. The exhibit was offered merely because it was inspected by the finger print expert during the investigation which preceded appellant's arrest. It was not admissible for that reason, nor can we conceive of any other ground upon which it was entitled to a place in the record, and it demonstrated to the jury that appellant once before had been in the hands of the police.

[7] Appellant asked the trial judge to give five instructions, each of which, he says, was designed to inform the jury "that conviction on circumstantial evidence must exclude any and every reasonable hypothesis of innocence based on the adduced facts," and each of them was refused. We think the proffered instructions, although they were differently phrased, related only to the question of reasonable doubt, and the judge instructed the jury amply upon that subject. The requested instructions were therefore unnecessary.

[8] In order to determine whether there has probably been a miscarriage of justice because of the errors committed at the trial, and in accordance with the provisions of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution, we have examined the entire cause, including the evidence. It will be observed that, with the exception of the testimony to the effect that appellant, after his arrest, made an offer to return the stolen diamonds if he were released, or to pay for them in installments, the evidence is purely circumstantial. Let us consider this excepted testimony first. Appellant denies that he made the offer. Not only so, but the testimony came from a police officer who said that the offer was made in the presence of the complaining witness, and she did not testify on the subject. The testimony concerning appellant's thumb print on the metal bar of the trunk was not as satisfactory as the prosecution might have desired. The trunk was of the wardrobe variety. It stood on end when it was to be opened. One side of it was arranged to accommodate clothing on hangers. The other side was completely occupied by five drawers, extending from top to bottom of the side. It was from the second of these drawers that the rings and money were taken. The metal bar ran from top to bottom of the trunk and extended, when in place, across one end of the five drawers. It was fastened at the top by a lock. The sole distinguishable finger print, that of appellant's thumb, was found near this lock. The other prints, "smears," as the expert called them, were at various places along the bar, and it is to be noticed that the record fails to show just where any of them was located and especially whether any of them was under the thumb print of appellant. It is particularly worthy of note that the expert declared that he could not determine whether the print of appellant's thumb was impressed upon the bar before or after any other of the prints upon it. Appellant denied strenuously that he committed the burglary, and in the denial he was fully supported by Akins.

One other circumstance of the case deserves mention. Appellant was a married man, but it is evident from the record that the complaining witness was his paramour. The alleged burglary was committed on the night of July 11. Appellant's wife had left him on July 2 or 3. Before the burglary she had caused divorce papers to be served upon him. On the night of the burglary, appellant occupied the apartment of the complaining witness with her, and she drove him to another place in the morning. On this ride, before any charge was made against him and before the record shows that he was suspected of the burglary, appellant says he told the complaining witness that he was to go that morning to the office of his wife's counsel in order to effect, if possible, a reconciliation with her. He says that the complaining witness asked him not to do so. The mother of appellant, with whom the complaining witness was well acquainted, and another witness, testified that the complaining witness said, later in the same day, that things had gone so far between her and appellant that, if he returned to his wife, he would be sorry, that she would see that he never lived with her. Akins testified that on this same occasion the complaining witness said that appellant had been "cheating" on her and that she would "fix him" for it. Appellant and his wife had apparently become reconciled at the time of the trial, as there was testimony that they were then living together.

It will be seen from all these circumstances that the case was a close one. It is quite likely that a miscarriage of justice has resulted from the errors committed at the trial. Appellant must have been harmed materially by the reception in evidence of the old finger print record found in the police archives. It is quite probable that this item of damaging evidence turned the scale against him.

Judgment and order reversed.

TAYLOR v. HOPPER et al. (S. F. 12808.)★

Supreme Court of California. April 23, 1929.

Rehearing Denied May 23, 1929.

1. Cancellation of instruments ⇨37(4)—Complaint held not to state cause of action for rescission of compromise of personal injury action for failure to allege return of consideration (Civ. Code, § 1691).

Complaint alleging that plaintiff was induced to settle and compromise her cause of action for personal injuries for grossly inadequate consideration by defendants' false representations that her injuries were not of permanent character, and by defendants' taking advantage of plaintiff's great financial distress and fact that she was in great bodily pain and much distressed and confused in mind, held not to state a cause of action for rescission of compromise agreement, in absence of allegations of a return of the consideration received, as required by Civ. Code, § 1691, and demurrer thereto was properly sustained.

2. Fraud ⇨28—Action for fraudulently inducing plaintiff to settle her personal injury action for grossly inadequate consideration held not maintainable.

Action to recover difference between amount prayed for in complaint in personal injury action and amount for which action was settled for an alleged grossly inadequate consideration held not maintainable on theory that it was action for damages for fraud, and that plaintiff had right to affirm compromise agreement, retaining money received thereunder, and sue for her damages caused by fraud, since compromise involved a disputed claim, unliquidated in amount, rendering difficulty in determining plaintiff's damages insurmountable.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; F. B. Brown, Judge.

Action by Ida M. Taylor against F. W. Hopper and others. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Ernest Spagnoli and Walter F. Lynch, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Charles W. Haswell, of San Francisco, for respondents.

LANGDON, J. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment against her, entered after a demurrer to her complaint had been sustained without leave to amend. The complaint in substance alleges: That in February, 1926, the plaintiff herein, in the county of Santa Clara, California, commenced an action in the superior court against the defendants herein, praying for damages in the sum of $51,223.80, alleged to have been suffered by plaintiff by reason of personal injuries sustained by her by reason of being run over by defendants' automobile, operated in a careless and negligent manner; that plaintiff suffered severe injuries by reason of such alleged negligent conduct on the part of defendants; that thereafter, on October 5, 1926, plaintiff entered into a compromise agreement with the defendants by which, in consideration of the sum of $5,750, she settled and compromised said cause of action, and authorized and directed the clerk of the said superior court to dismiss of record said action, so that the same would operate as a retraxit of all causes of action arising out of said injuries, and said action was accordingly dismissed on October 5, 1926. It is then alleged that, on numerous occasions between the date of plaintiff's injury and the date of said compromise, the defendants made efforts to compromise plaintiff's said claim for damages, offering varying amounts in settlement thereof, and "defendants and their agents made numerous attempts to falsely convince plaintiff, and did finally convince her, well knowing the falsity thereof, that her injuries were not of a permanent character." It is also alleged that during the negotiations for compromise "plaintiff was in great financial distress, with no resources or credit, and in great bodily pain and much distressed and confused in mind; that defendant induced plaintiff to execute said agreement of settlement and compromise by taking a grossly oppressive and unfair advantage of plaintiff's necessities and distress and her weakened state of mind, and thereby caused said release and compromise to be entered into for a grossly inadequate consideration." It is alleged, also, that plaintiff's injuries are permanent, and that the consideration for the compromise should have been the amount asked for in the complaint filed in the original action. Plaintiff prays for $45,473.80, the difference between said amount prayed in the original action and the amount she received in the compromise.

[1, 2] If the complaint be considered as one for rescission of the compromise agreement, it clearly does not state a cause of action, for there are no allegations of a return of the consideration received, as required by section 1691, Civil Code, of this state. Appellant, appreciating this difficulty, contends that the complaint is not one for the equitable remedy of rescission, but for damages for fraud, and that plaintiff is entitled to affirm the compromise agreement, retaining the money received thereunder, and sue for her damages caused by the fraud. It seems clear upon principle that such a remedy does not exist in a case such as we are considering. The difficulty in determining the amount of damages is insurmountable. If the jury found a fraud had been committed upon plaintiff to induce her to give up her cause of action, how would it determine what amount, if any, she would have received from another jury, had she not compromised her action, but had proceeded to trial? And how could damages in the instant case be assessed without some measure of what would have been accorded to plaintiff in the original action, had she proceeded to trial?

A well-reasoned case (Urtz v. New York Central, etc., Co., 202 N. Y. 170, 95 N. E. 711) has considered this identical problem. The plaintiff therein alleged that upon the death of her husband, caused by the negligence of the defendant, she had been induced by false and fraudulent representations as to the facts to enter into an agreement compromising her right of action for $500, and she sought recovery of damages for the fraud practiced upon her. The action was not to enforce or vacate the compromise, but to recover the actual pecuniary loss alleged to have been suffered by plaintiff by being induced to enter into the compromise. The court said: "The jury were bound, having found the fraud, to determine whether the plaintiff was injured through the fraud, and, if injured, the sum of her damages. In case the right of action had no value, she had gained by the transaction and was not injured. It had no value whatever, if the true state of facts disclosed that it was an invalid and nonexisting claim, or, in other words, that the defendant was not negligent, or, if the defendant was negligent, that the intestate was not free from contributory negligence. If, however, the true state of facts would have established that the defendant was negligent, and the intestate free from contributory negligence, then the plaintiff had a valuable right of action, the acquirement of which through the fraud may have injured her. Until the jury found the real facts, and that they created a valid claim against the defendant, they had not a basis for estimating the damages the plaintiff had sustained. The action is not to enforce or vacate the compromise but to recover the actual pecuniary loss sustained by the plaintiff. An alleged value of the claim, based upon the accident and the death or facts sufficient to warrant the reasonable belief of the plaintiff that she had a just claim, is of a nature too speculative and wagering to be recognized by the law in this action for fraud."

In the case of Garcia v. California Truck Co., 183 Cal. 767, 192 P. 708, a situation similar to the instant case was considered by this court, and it was held that it was necessary for the plaintiff to promptly rescind the agreement alleged to have been entered into by him through the fraud of the defendant, and to restore to the defendant the consideration received thereunder, before action could be brought on the original cause of action. The court quoted from Fox v. Hudson, 150 Ky. 115, 150 S. W. 49, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 832, as follows: "Where the claim is for unliquidated damages, or when the settlement is made to adjust a matter in dispute, or where there is a controversy as to the amount owing, and the parties agree upon a sum that shall be paid in settlement, the amount so paid must be returned, if the party settled with seeks to avoid the settlement on the ground of fraud. Where there is no dispute as to the sum due, and the creditor is induced by fraud to accept a less amount than his whole debt, he may attack the settlement without returning what he has received."

The case of Westerfield v. N. Y. Life Ins. Co., 129 Cal. 68, 58 P. 92, 61 P. 667, relied upon by appellant, is not helpful to her cause, for that case holds that, for the plaintiff to maintain such an action as we are here considering, the compromise sought to be avoided must have been of an undisputed claim. In the decision of the court commissioner, adopted by the court, it was said: "Cases of that nature [where one who seeks to rescind a compromise agreement on the ground of fraud is not required to restore the money he has received] arise when a party has been led by fraudulent contrivance to accept less money than was due him on an undisputed claim, as in Gilson, etc., Co. v. Gilson, 47 Cal. 597." The compromise made in the case before us was of a disputed claim, unliquidated in amount, and there is no practicable measure of damages for the action sought to be maintained. The demurrer, therefore, was properly sustained without leave to amend.

The judgment is affirmed.

In re BARKER'S ESTATE. (L. A. 10967.)★

Supreme Court of California. April 24, 1929.

Rehearing Denied May 23, 1929.

Appeal and error ⚩345(1)—Motion for new trial, filed before findings and conclusion, was premature, and ineffectual to extend time for appeal (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 656, 657, 659).

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 656, 657, 659, motion for new trial, filed after decision reciting informally court's conclusion that petitioner was entitled to decree, but before filing of more extensive findings of fact and conclusion of law that petitioner was entitled to such decree, was premature, and ineffectual to extend time for appeal.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; William D. Dehy, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of James L. Barker, deceased. From an order directing a decree of partial distribution, certain parties appeal. On motion to dismiss the appeal. Motion granted, and appeal dismissed.

John Beardsley, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Heaney, Price & Postel, of Santa Barbara, for respondent.

LANGDON, J. This is a motion to dismiss an appeal upon the ground that it has been filed too late. The only question involved is whether or not a valid motion for a new trial was ever filed. If the purported motion for new trial was properly filed, thus extending the time for appeal, the appeal has been taken in time. This leads to another inquiry as to when the actual decision of the trial court was filed.

The facts are undisputed. On March 14, 1928, a decision of the trial court was filed, reciting informally the conclusion to which the court had come on the facts, and ending with the statement that "the petitioner is entitled to a decree of partial distribution herein." A minute order was entered, directing that "an order be prepared accordingly." Notice of motion for new trial was served and filed March 30, 1928, and called for hearing on July 13, 1928. In the interim, and on April 17, 1928, more extensive findings of fact and the conclusion of law that petitioner is entitled to a decree of partial distribution as prayed for were filed. When the motion for new trial came on for hearing, it was objected by the defendants and respondents here that it was improperly before the court, and should be dismissed, as it had been filed before the decision of April 17, 1928. This objection was overruled, apparently, and the motion for new trial was passed upon and denied.

Respondents now seek to have this court dismiss the appeal upon this same contention. The case of Root v. Daugherty, 201 Cal. 12, 255 P. 181, seems to be directly in point; therein it was said: "We are of the opinion, however, that said notice of intention to move for a new trial was prematurely filed, and therefore ineffectual for any purpose. Chronologically the history of this litigation reveals that the notice of intention to move for a new trial was filed on June 13, 1924. Thereafter, and on June 20, 1924, the findings of fact and conclusions of law were signed and filed. On June 23, 1924, the judgment was duly entered. Subsequently, and on October 23, 1924, the motion for a new trial was denied. The notice of appeal from the judgment was filed on November 21, 1924. It is apparent from the foregoing that the filing of the notice of intention to move for a new trial preceded by seven days the signing and filing of the findings of fact and conclusions of law. * * * We are called upon to determine herein whether proceedings on motion for new trial are prematurely taken, when the notice of intention to move for such relief is filed, not only 'before the entry of judgment,' but prior to the signing and filing of the findings of fact and conclusions of law. Our research has failed to disclose any decision of this court upon this question, in the light of the 1923 amendment to section 659 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In Hughes v. De Mund, 70 Cal. App. 265, 267 [233 P. 93], it is declared, however, that section 659 of the Code of Civil Procedure and those sections preceding and following it having to do with new trials, 'presuppose that the action has been prosecuted to a point where ultimate findings have been made as the basis for a final judgment.' With this reasoning we are in accord. Section 656 of the Code of Civil Procedure defines a new trial as a 're-examination of an issue of fact in the same court after a trial and decision by a jury, court, or referee.' It has repeatedly been held that, where findings of fact are required and are not waived, the decision is not rendered until said findings are signed and filed. Aspegren & Co. v. Sherwood, Swan & Co., 199 Cal. 532 [250 P. 400], and authorities therein cited. Section 657 of the same Code provides that 'the party aggrieved' may apply for a new trial. The opinion in the early case of Dominquez v. Mascotti, supra, declares that 'until the findings are signed and filed there is no decision, and nobody is "aggrieved," within the meaning of section 657 of the Code of Civil Procedure.' We are of the opinion, therefore, that proceedings on motion for a new trial instituted by the filing of a notice of intention prior to the signing and filing of the findings of fact and conclusions of law are premature and ineffectual for any purpose."

In accordance with the rule of the foregoing case, the proceedings on motion for a new trial were premature in the instant case, and they were ineffectual to extend the time for appeal.

The motion to dismiss the appeal is granted, and said appeal is hereby dismissed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. Walter Hanby, Judge.

Action by Winifred D. Strauss against Norbert C. Kroop, executor of the will of Mathew J. Strauss, deceased, wherein defendant filed a cross-complaint. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Joseph Scott and A. G. Ritter, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Caesar A. Roberts and Maynard F. Stiles, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This appeal is from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff and cross-defendant in an action brought to recover judgment upon an alleged creditor's claim against the estate of Mathew J. Strauss, deceased, after the rejection of said claim by the executor of the last will and testament of said deceased. There are certain facts involving the relations between the plaintiff and the decedent, Strauss, which are practically undisputed, and in the course of which the alleged indebtedness which formed the basis of the plaintiff's claim against the estate of the decedent is alleged to have arisen. The record discloses that for a number of years prior to the coming of these two parties to California they had been living together as husband and wife in Buffalo, N. Y., although unmarried, and in fact unmarriageable for the reason that Mathew J. Strauss had during those years a wife living in New York from whom, though actually, he had never been legally separated. Mathew J. Strauss and the plaintiff, who bore throughout her relation with the former the name of Winifred D. Strauss, came to San Diego, Cal., in about the year 1920, where up to a time shortly before the death of Mathew J. Strauss they maintained their former relation. Each of the parties brought with them some money, which they proceeded to invest in several business enterprises in and about San Diego. The plaintiff was apparently a capable business woman and shortly after their arrival fitted up a beauty shop at a cost of $3,000, which she operated successfully for some time and then sold it for the sum of $5,000, most of which, in the form of cash and of a note and mortgage, was turned over to Mathew J. Strauss. The parties then bought an apartment house at Coronado for the sum of $32,000, paid for partly in cash and in the giving of notes and mortgages, signed by both, for the balance, and which apartment house was operated chiefly by the plaintiff, and from which during the first year of its operation a net profit of about $12,000 was derived, which also went into the hands of Mr. Strauss. The apartment house was later sold for $40,000 in cash and mortgages and a portion of the sum derived therefrom was invested in a tract of unimproved land lying about 35 miles from San Diego, the title to which was taken in the name of Strauss.

About this time Strauss, who was in poor health, went east and while in Buffalo, N. Y., made a will devising all of his property to casual acquaintances, except certain small bequests to his sister and brother, and then returned to California, where after spending considerable sums of money in search of health, he died on March 6, 1923. The defendant and appellant, who was named in his will as executor, caused said will to be admitted to probate in the state of New York; and then coming to California he took out ancillary letters testamentary in the superior court of the county of Los Angeles; whereupon the plaintiff, under the name of Winifred D. Strauss, presented her claim against the estate of said decedent to said executor for approval. In her claim she set forth three items of alleged indebtedness, to wit, an item of $2,500 stated to be the balance belonging to her but retained by Strauss upon the sale of the beauty shop; second, the sum of $4,000 which she stated to be her share of the net profit derived from the purchase and sale of the apartment properties at Coronado; third, the sum of $6,000 alleged to be due her as a result of the operation by her of said apartment properties during the period of joint ownership thereof by the parties. The aggregate of these three items was the sum of $12,500. The plaintiff in her affidavit to said claim averred that this sum was justly due her and against which there were no offsets. Her claim was rejected by the executor, whereupon she commenced this action for the recovery thereof.

The defendant executor appeared and denied any indebtedness on the part of said estate, and also set up by way of counterclaim a promissory note alleged to have been executed by the plaintiff and upon which the sum of $2,000 with interest remained due and unpaid to said estate. The defendant also filed a cross-complaint upon said promissory note praying affirmatively for the recovery of the amount alleged to be due thereon. To the answer and complaint thus filed the plaintiff presented demurrers upon the ground that the cause of action upon said promissory note set forth in each was barred by the statute of limitations. These demurrers were sustained by the trial court with leave to the defendant to amend. The defendant filed an amended answer, again denying any indebtedness on the plaintiff's said claim, but omitting any reference to said note, and also omitting to file either a counterclaim or a cross-complaint praying for affirmative relief. The cause first came to trial upon the issues as thus presented before the court sitting without a jury, and upon the trial the plaintiff took the witness stand and undertook to give testimony in support of her claim; whereupon counsel for the defendant objected to the giving of such testimony on the part of the plaintiff as to any matters occurring prior to the death of the decedent, under the inhibition of section 1880, subd. 3, Code of Civil Procedure, which objection the trial court at first overruled; but after the plaintiff had thus fully testified as to all the details of her business relationship with the deceased, the defendant moved to strike out the whole of her testimony upon the ground stated in his aforesaid objection. The trial court, after taking the matter under advisement for some time, granted the motion. Thereafter the plaintiff moved the court to modify its order in the foregoing regard in certain respects, which motion the court denied, but shortly thereafter granted an application on the part of the plaintiff for leave to reopen the case and offer further testimony in support of her claim, and thereafter, the cause again coming to trial, the plaintiff again resumed the witness stand, but only for the purpose of testifying to the extent of identifying her claim and of stating that no portion thereof had been paid. The defendant moved to strike out this testimony, which motion the trial court denied. Thereupon the plaintiff offered the testimony of other witnesses and also considerable documentary evidence in support of her claim and thereupon rested her case. No evidence was presented on the part of the defendant. The cause being submitted for decision, the trial court filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law, wherein it was found and concluded that the estate of Mathew J. Strauss was indebted to the plaintiff upon each of the items of her claim, aggregating the sum of $12,500, which sum was directed to be paid out of the funds of said estate in the due course of administration thereof. The entry of the judgment followed, from which the defendant has taken this appeal.

The record contains a bill of exceptions whereof a large part is made up of the testimony given by the plaintiff upon the first trial of the cause and which was stricken out on the defendant's motion.

[1] The first contention of the appellant is that the trial court, notwithstanding the fact that it had stricken from the record said testimony, based in a large measure its later findings and conclusions thereon. The record affords no support to said contention, but, on the contrary, negatives the same, since the trial court sets forth in its findings the fact that having stricken said testimony from the record, it bases its findings and conclusions in the cause upon testimony other than that of the plaintiff herself.

[2] The respondent has moved to strike from the record the appellant's reply brief commenting upon said stricken testimony; but we prefer to rest our decision upon the merits, and hence deny said motion.

The appellant's next and only further contention is that the evidence other than that offered by the plaintiff and stricken from the record was insufficient to sustain the findings and support the judgment of the trial court. We have examined the evidence as set forth in the bill of exceptions herein. It would serve no useful purpose to review the same in detail. We are fully satisfied from an examination thereof that it is sufficient, in the absence of any counter showing on the part of defendant, to sustain the findings, conclusions of law, and the judgment of the trial court.

[3] In the defendant's specifications appended to his bill of exceptions there is to be found no specification of any error of law committed during the trial of the cause, and this being so, we are satisfied that the judgment should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

PASADENA ICE CO. v. REEDER et al.

Appeal and error ⇨835(2)—Scope of injunction against unfair competition, not having been brought into question on appeal until motion for rehearing, was not considered.

Where scope of injunction against unfair competition by solicitation of business from customers of defendants' former employer was not brought into question on appeal until presentation of petition for rehearing, it was too late and was not considered.

Seawell, J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. Walter Hanby, Judge.

On petition for rehearing. Petition denied. For former opinion, see 275 P. 944.

Haas & Dunnigan and H. E. Forster, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

S. J. Parsons, of Los Angeles, and Raymond G. Thompson, of Pasadena, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The petition for rehearing herein is denied. It sufficiently appears from the record herein that the individual defendants and appellants herein who were all former employees of the plaintiff and respondent herein entered into a combination to do business under the fictitious name of Purity Ice Company, having for its purpose and effect the creation of a competing business to that of their former employer through the combined use of such confidential information and business secrets of their said employer as they had each obtained in the course of their former employment. While not impinging upon the right of an employee to make appropriate use of his knowledge and experience gained in one employment in advancing his interests in entering other employment, we are satisfied that such a combination as that shown to have existed among these several defendants, the direct object and effect of which is to injure or destroy the business of their former employer, comes clearly within the equitable principles relating to unfair competition in conformity with which the injunction here was, we think, properly issued. The scope of such injunction was not brought into question upon this appeal until the presentation of the petition for rehearing, and will not for that reason be given consideration thereof.

SEAWELL, J., voted for a rehearing.

Civ. Code, § 3208, providing that bill of itself does not operate as assignment of funds in hands of drawee available for payment thereof, applies to negotiable bills of exchange.

2. Bills and notes ⇨147—Order to pay sum to party named and charge to drawer's account was not negotiable, since it was not payable to bearer or to order (Civ. Code, § 3082, subd. 4).

Order reading "G. & Co., San Jose, Calif. Gentlemen: Please pay to the A. estate the sum of $1593, and charge same to my account. J. L.," held not negotiable under Civ. Code, § 3082, subd. 4, since it was not payable to bearer or to order.

3. Assignments ⇨49—Order for payment of money in form of negotiable bill, except it was not payable to bearer or to order, did not operate as assignment, where parties did not so intend.

Order for payment of money, which was in form of negotiable bill, except that it was not payable to bearer or to order, did not operate as assignment, where parties did not so intend.

4. Assignments ⇨49—Party asserting assignment must prove it by other evidence than order or bill.

Order for payment of money or bill of exchange does not of itself import an assignment, and burden is on party asserting assignment to prove it by other evidence than order or bill.

5. Appeal and error ⚷1008(1)—Question whether parties intended that order for payment of money should operate as assignment was for trial court in first instance.

Question whether parties intended that order for payment of money should operate as assignment of title to money due or to become due to drawer was question for trial court in first instance.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; F. B. Brown, Judge.

Action of interpleader by Guggenhime & Co. against John Lamantia, Nelson S. Carman, and Louis W. Armstrong and others, doing business under the firm name and style of the Armstrong Estate. From the judgment, the Armstrong Estate appeals. Affirmed.

Owen D. Richardson, of San Jose, for appellants.

Bohnett, Hill & Campbell, of San Jose, for respondent Guggenhime & Co.

Louis Oneal and Maurice J. Rankin, both of San Jose, for respondent Nelson S. Carman.

SEAWELL, J. This is an action of interpleader brought by Guggenhime & Co., a corporation, to determine the rights of defendants Nelson S. Carman and the Armstrong Estate, adverse claimant, to the sum of $744.40, in the possession of plaintiff as the balance remaining unpaid on the price of dried prunes purchased by said Guggenhime & Co. from defendant John Lamantia, of whom the other defendants are creditors. The court below gave judgment in favor of defendant Nelson S. Carman for said sum of $744.40, from which judgment the Armstrong Estate prosecutes this appeal.

Defendant Nelson S. Carman is a judgment creditor of Lamantia. Said Carman garnished all moneys due from Guggenhime & Co. to Lamantia by writ of attachment issued on September 24, 1926, and procured a writ of execution to be levied on said moneys on October 19, 1926, in pursuance of a judgment for $1,000 recovered on October 14, 1926. Defendant Armstrong Estate is the holder of an order for $1,593 drawn by Lamantia upon Guggenhime & Co. in favor of the Armstrong Estate prior to the issuance of said writ of attachment. Said company paid $800 on said order on September 7, before the garnishment of Guggenhime & Co. by defendant and respondent Carman. The order is in the following form:

"San Jose, Calif., Sept. 1, 1926.

"Guggenhime & Company, San Jose, Calif.—Gentlemen: Please pay to the Armstrong Estate the sum of Fifteen Hundred Ninety-three (1593.00) Dollars, and charge same to my account. John Lamantia."

The rights of the Armstrong Estate to the balance remaining unpaid for the prunes purchased by the company from Lamantia are superior to the rights of Carman under his subsequent attachment and execution levies only if the transaction between Lamantia and the Armstrong Estate, in the course of which the above order was issued, involved an assignment pro tanto by Lamantia to the Armstrong Estate of his claim against Guggenhime & Company. Donohoe-Kelly Banking Co. v. Southern Pac. Co., 138 Cal. 183, 71 P. 93, 94 Am. St. Rep. 28.

[1-3] Section 3208, Civil Code, which provides that a "bill of itself does not operate as an assignment of the funds in the hands of the drawee available for the payment thereof," applies to negotiable bills of exchange and is not controlling herein for the reason that the order issued by Lamantia in favor of the Armstrong Estate is not payable to bearer or to order, and hence lacks one of the essentials or negotiability. Section 3082, subd. 4, Civ. Code. However, it was the rule in this state, even before the adoption in 1917 of the Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law, of which section 3208, Civil Code, is a part, that a negotiable check or bill of exchange drawn for a portion of the indebtedness of the drawee to the drawer, before written acceptance, did not of itself operate as an assignment pro tanto in favor of the payee. Cashman v. Harrison, 90 Cal. 297, 27 P. 283; Donohoe-Kelly Banking Co. v. Southern Pac. Co., 138 Cal. 183, 71 P. 93, 94 Am. St. Rep. 28; Pullen v. Placer County Bank, 138 Cal. 169, 66 P. 740, 71 P. 83, 94 Am. St. Rep. 19; John M. C. Marble Co. v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 15 Cal. App. 347, 115 P. 59; Le Breton v. Stanley Contracting Co., 15 Cal. App. 429, 114 P. 1028; Harlan v. Gladding McBean & Co., 7 Cal. App. 49, 93 P. 400. We believe this rule equally applicable in the case of an order for the payment of money which is in the form of a negotiable bill, except that it is not payable to bearer or to order. The negotiable bill constitutes an order or authorization to the drawee named which transfers no title or property in the claim to the payee. Hence it is automatically revoked by the death of the drawer. Sneider v. Bank of Italy, 184 Cal. 595, 194 P. 1021, 12 A. L. R. 993; Pullen v. Placer County Bank, supra. The fund upon which it is drawn may be reached by attachment or execution levied subsequent to the issuance of the bill or order. Donohoe-Kelly Banking Co. v. Southern Pac. Co., supra. A nonnegotiable order in the form of the draft herein lacks those attributes peculiar to the bill of exchange which are embraced within the term "negotiability," but in language and effect it is similar in important particulars to the negotiable bill.

[4, 5] Although neither a negotiable or nonnegotiable bill of itself constitutes an assignment, if it clearly appears from the entire transaction that it was the intention of the drawer and payee to transfer title to a chose in action, an assignment will be held to have taken place, and the nature of the transaction is not changed because the assignor in the course of the transaction may have delivered to the assignee an order upon the debtor. Dunlap v. Commercial Nat. Bank, 50 Cal. App. 476, 195 P. 688; Lawrence Nat. Bank v. Kowalsky, 105 Cal. 41, 38 P. 517; Title Ins. Co. v. Williamson, 18 Cal. App. 324, 123 P. 245, 247. The rule is simply that the order or bill does not of itself import an assignment, but the contrary, and the burden is upon the party asserting an assignment to prove it by other evidence than the check or bill. In the instant case the court found that it was not intended by John Lamantia or the Armstrong Estate to assign title to any moneys or debt or any portion thereof, due or to become due from said Guggenhime & Co. to John Lamantia, and the parties intended it to be a bill of exchange and nothing more. The question of intent was for the trial court in the first instance. From the facts appearing in the agreed statement of facts in the bill of exceptions before us, it cannot be said that the trial court erred in refusing to find that an assignment had taken place.

While there is broad language in certain cases of this court, principally early decisions (Wheatley v. Strobe, 12 Cal. 92, 73 Am. Dec. 522; Pierce v. Robinson, 13 Cal. 116; Pope v. Huth, 14 Cal. 403; Fidelity Savings & Loan Ass'n v. Rodgers, 180 Cal. 683, 182 P. 426; Goldman v. Murray, 164 Cal. 419, 129 P. 462), which may seem to lend support to the claim of the Armstrong Estate, said cases are either distinguishable on the facts as involving situations where there was other evidence of an intent to effect an assignment than the instrument itself, or, in so far as they are in conflict with anything said herein, are disapproved by later cases, particularly Donohoe-Kelly Banking Co. v. Southern Pac. Co., supra, which contains a clear and correct exposition of the law. In Wheatley v. Strobe, supra, the decision is confined to cases where the order is drawn for the full amount of the debt owing by the drawee to the drawer. It is unnecessary here to decide whether it is now the law in this state that an order for the full amount of the debt creates a prima facie case of assignment, as has been intimated, for no claim is here made that the assignment is for the full amount, and it appears from the statement of agreed facts that Lamantia subsequently drew an order on Guggenhime & Co. in favor of respondent Carman for $2,000. This negatives an assignment to the Armstrong Estate of the full amount.

In the more recent decision in Fidelity Savings & Loan Association v. Rodgers, 180 Cal. 683, 182 P. 426, involving an instrument delivered by way of gift and similar in form to the order herein, in that it was not payable to bearer or order, the court stated that, if the instrument had been delivered for a valuable consideration, it would have operated as an equitable assignment. We are of the view that said decision cannot be construed as holding that the order would of itself prove an assignment if it had been given for a valuable consideration, but that under such circumstances parol evidence of the intent to transfer title to a chose in action accompanied by delivery of the order upon the debtor would have been sufficient to effect a transfer. If the written order itself constituted an assignment, it would be sufficient, although given as a gift, for a gift of a chose in action may be accomplished by delivery to the donee of a written instrument transferring title thereto. Burkett v. Doty, 176 Cal. 89, 167 P. 518.

Appellants rely upon statements from 1 Daniel on Negotiable Instruments, § 23, quoted with approval in Goldman v. Murray, 164 Cal. 419, 129 P. 462, as authority for the proposition that a distinction is to be made between negotiable and nonnegotiable orders, the nonnegotiable orders operating as assignments per se. While nonnegotiable orders may be so drawn as to constitute assignments of themselves, we find no warrant on principle or authority in the decisions of this state for making said distinction in the case of such an order as we have before us. The text-writer cited announces the rule of assignment per se as having been applied to nonnegotiable orders drawn for the whole or part of a fund, and admits that he can perceive no sufficient ground for excluding a bill for part of a fund, whether negotiable or nonnegotiable, from the rule that a draft or bill operates as an equitable assignment. But such is not the rule in this state. Furthermore, anything said in Goldman v. Murray, supra, as to a distinction between negotiable and nonnegotiable orders in this particular must be regarded as dictum, since that case did not involve an order or bill, but a promissory note executed by a corporation in favor of one Bowen, to whom it was indebted, and by him indorsed to plaintiff. The note was void as a corporate act, but the court held that Bowen's indorsement thereon transferred and assigned to plaintiff Bowen's claim against the corporation to the extent of the principal sum of the note. The facts are not analogous.

Judgment affirmed.

SAXTON v. BOARD OF EDUCATION OF LOS ANGELES CITY SCHOOL DIST. et al. (L. A. 10919.)★

Supreme Court of California. March 30, 1929.

Rehearing Denied April 29, 1929.

1. Mandamus 🔑174—Court, on mandamus to reinstate permanent teacher, must determine truth of charges, irrespective of evidence heard before board (Pol. Code, § 1609).

The decision of the board of education as to truth of charges preferred against a permanent teacher, and on which she is removed, is not final under Pol. Code, § 1609, but the court, on mandamus to compel reinstatement, must determine the truth of such charges without regard to the evidence heard by the board.

2. Mandamus 🔑79—Mandamus is proper remedy to compel reinstatement of permanent teacher removed after charges filed (Pol. Code, §§ 1609, 1698, 1699).

Under Pol. Code, § 1609, mandamus is the proper remedy to compel reinstatement of permanent teacher removed by school board; the remedy by appeal provided by sections 1698 and 1699 not being exclusive if applicable, and not being such plain, speedy, or adequate remedy at law as precludes mandamus.

3. Mandamus 🔑174—On mandamus to reinstate removed permanent teacher, finding that substantial evidence in support of charges was heard by board does not preclude granting of writ to compel reinstatement.

On mandamus to reinstate permanent teacher, trial court's finding that there was substantial evidence tending to support charges before school board is immaterial, and does not deprive court of power to issue writ to compel reinstatement on finding that charges were untrue.

4. Mandamus 🔑2—Permitting trial de novo on mandamus to compel reinstatement of discharged teacher is not unconstitutional as enlarging scope of writ of mandamus (Pol. Code, § 1609, as amended in 1921).

Pol. Code, § 1609, as amended in 1921, permitting mandamus to compel reinstatement of permanent teacher discharged, and permitting a trial of the charges de novo, does not enlarge scope of the writ of mandamus beyond that which it had at the adoption of the Constitution.

5. Mandamus 🔑2—Legislature cannot enlarge writ of mandamus beyond scope at time of adoption of Constitution.

Legislature cannot enlarge scope of writ of mandamus beyond that which it had at time of adoption of Constitution.

6. Mandamus 🔑174—Statute permitting hearing de novo of charges against teacher on mandamus to compel reinstatement is not invalid as conferring apparent jurisdiction on superior court over decisions of boards or trustees (Pol. Code, § 1609).

Pol. Code, § 1609, permitting trial de novo of charges against school-teacher on mandamus to compel reinstatement is not invalid as conferring appellate jurisdiction on superior court to review proceedings before boards of education or boards of trustees.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; P. E. Keeler, Judge.

Mandamus by Lois S. Saxton against the Board of Education of Los Angeles City School District and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Superseding opinion in 269 P. 764.

Everett W. Mattoon, County Counsel, J. H. O'Connor, Assistant County Counsel, and Pierce Works and C. B. Penn, Deputy County Counsels, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

William A. Alderson, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

George F. Snyder, of San Francisco, and George R. Nichols, amici curiæ.

CURTIS, J. The plaintiff was a teacher in the public schools of the city of Los Angeles, and prior to the commencement of this action had been classified as a permanent teacher in said public schools, and remained such until her alleged wrongful dismissal by the defendant board of education of said school district. She instituted this action for the purpose of having said order of dismissal declared and adjudged null and void; that she be reinstated and permitted to continue to serve in said public schools as a permanent teacher and for the sum of $286, which amount, it was alleged, was due her as salary for the remainder of the school year 1925–1926, the year of her alleged illegal dismissal. The action was commenced September 7, 1926. The board of education, in its answer to plaintiff's complaint, denied that the plaintiff had been wrongfully or illegally dismissed as a teacher in said schools, and then set forth in its said answer the steps taken by said board prior, and leading up, to the order of said board dismissing the plaintiff from further service as a teacher in said schools. Upon the trial, the court found that written charges had been made against plaintiff by the city superintendent of schools of said district, in which plaintiff was charged with unprofessional conduct; that a hearing upon said charges had been held by said board on the 20th day of May, 1926, at which time said board made said order of dismissal; that, prior to said hearing, said board had given plaintiff written notice thereof, as provided by section 1609 of the Political Code; and that in the holding of said hearing said board had complied in all respects with the provisions of said section of the Political Code. The trial court further found "that substantial evidence was introduced at said hearing which tended to support the said charges," but that "no one of said charges is true and that all of said charges are untrue," and that the order of dismissal "was erroneous, in that the charges above mentioned were wholly false and untrue." Following these findings were those to the effect that plaintiff had no plain, speedy, or adequate remedy at law; that she had not appealed from the decision of said board of education, made at said hearing dismissing her from service as a teacher in said public schools, to the county superintendent of schools under the provisions of section 1698 of said Political Code, nor to the superintendent of public instruction, as provided by section 1699 of said Code. As conclusions of law upon the foregoing findings, the court held that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment in her favor as prayed for. Such judgment was accordingly entered in the trial court in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant board of education. From this judgment the board of education has appealed upon the judgment roll alone.

---

Two questions are presented by this appeal. The first is whether the decision of the board of education as to the truth of the charges preferred against the plaintiff after a hearing thereon, of which hearing plaintiff had due and legal notice, and at which she was present with counsel and introduced evidence in her defense, is final and binding upon the plaintiff and upon said board of education. In case it be held that such decision is not final, then a second question is presented, and that is whether under all the facts and circumstances of this case mandamus will lie to compel said board of education to reinstate the plaintiff in her former position as a permanent teacher in said schools. The answers to the questions arising herein are largely controlled by the provisions of the so-called Teachers' Tenure Act as the same is now found in said section 1609 of the Political Code, upon its amendment in 1921. The constitutionality of said act was questioned, and its validity sustained, in a recent decision of this court. Grigsby v. King, 202 Cal. 299, 260 P. 789. This act provides for the classification of public school teachers into three classes, to be known as substitute, probationary, and permanent teachers. As this action involves only the latter class, we will dismiss the other two classes from further consideration. Subdivision fifth (j) of this section provides that permanent teachers, except where the number employed by a school district is decreased by reason of the decrease in the pupils attending the school in such district, or by the discontinuance of a particular kind of teaching service, may be dismissed only after a fair trial and impartial public hearing for certain designated causes particularly mentioned therein. Ten days' notice of said hearing must be given in writing to the teacher against whom charges have been preferred, stating fully the charges and the time and place of such hearing. The accused teacher is given the right to be represented by counsel at said hearing and to call witnesses in his behalf. At the close of said hearing, the board may dismiss said teacher upon proof of any of the charges enumerated in said section and set forth in said written notice to said teacher upon the affirmative vote of a majority of the board. No member of the board shall be qualified to vote who was not present throughout the entire hearing, and such trial shall be concluded, and the decision of the board rendered, within ten days from the beginning of said trial. This subdivision of the section of the Code closes with the following provision: "Nothing in this act shall be construed in such manner as to deprive any teacher of his rights and remedies in a court of competent jurisdiction on a question of fact and law."

The above provisions of section 1609 of the Political Code have been before the District Court of Appeal upon two different occasions, in each of which the question was squarely presented as to the finality and conclusiveness of the decision of the board of trustees dismissing a teacher for cause. In each of said cases it was held that such decision of the board of trustees was not final nor conclusive upon the teacher accused. Alexander v. Manton, etc., School Dist., 73 Cal. App. 252, 238 P. 742; Hooper v. Wickes et al. (Cal. App.) 263 P. 853. In the first of these two cases the appellate court, after reviewing the facts, stated the position of the trial court in said action as follows: "From the whole record it clearly appears that the [trial] court decided the case upon the theory that the trustees had the right to dismiss plaintiff during the term of his employment for cause only, and after notice and a hearing as provided in section 1609 of the Political Code; that the court was without jurisdiction to determine the truth or falsity of the charges. * * *" After discussing a point not involved in the present action, the opinion of the District Court of Appeal continues: "There are cases holding that the dismissa of a teacher for cause, after a trial by the board of trustees on charges preferred against him, is final and conclusive. There are others holding that where the teacher is given the right of appeal to the superintendent of schools in case of his dismissal, such remedy by appeal is exclusive. Section 1698 of the Political Code provides for such an appeal. Section 1609, subdivision 5, as amended in 1921 (Stats. 1921, p. 1664), however, provides: 'Nothing in this act shall be construed in such manner as to deprive any teacher of his rights and remedies in a court of competent jurisdiction on a question of fact and law.' Section 1609 prescribes the grounds and the proceedings for the dismissal of a teacher for cause. It would be difficult to give the provision quoted any meaning other than that, upon the discharge of a teacher for any alleged cause, he is entitled to maintain an action in court to determine the truth or falsity of the charges preferred against him. The reasons which may have actuated the legislature in giving a teacher such right are well illustrated by the facts in this case. The trustees, as the representatives of one party to the contract, preferred the charges against plaintiff. One of the charges was abusive language towards a trustee who sat as a judge in the trial of plaintiff. Another charge constituted offensive and unmanly conduct towards the superintendent of schools, to whom the plaintiff had the right to appeal."

The case of Alexander v. Manton was followed by the case of Hooper v. Wickes et al., supra, decided by the said District Court of Appeal. In this latter case the court discussed the effect of section 1609 of the Political Code, and particularly the following provision: "Nothing in this act shall be construed in such manner as to deprive any teacher of his rights and remedies in a court of competent jurisdiction on a question of fact and law." The conclusion arrived at by the court in that case is stated as follows: "Subdivision 'J' of section 1609 of the Political Code empowers the trustees of a school district to dismiss a principal for one or more of the following causes, after a fair and impartial hearing, to-wit: Immoral or unprofessional conduct; incompetence; evident unfitness for teaching; persistent violation of, or refusal to obey the school laws of California or reasonable rules prescribed for the government of public schools. This subdivision of the section is followed by others relating to procedure not material here for the reason that no question is raised as to the procedure in this cause. We come then to the subdivision pertaining to this action, which reads: 'Nothing in this act shall be construed in such manner as to deprive any teacher of his rights and remedies in a court of competent jurisdiction on a question of fact and law.' This subdivision of section 1609 of the Political Code was under consideration by this court in the case of Alexander v. Manton Joint Union School District, 73 Cal. App. 252, 238 P. 742, and this court, speaking through Mr. Presiding Justice Finch, said: 'It would be difficult to give the provision quoted any meaning other than that, upon the discharge of a teacher for any alleged cause, he is entitled to maintain an action in court to determine the truth or falsity of the charges preferred against him. The reasons which may have actuated the Legislature in giving a teacher such rights are well illustrated by the facts in this case. The trustees, as the representatives of one party to the contract, preferred the charges against plaintiff.' * * * The substance of the holding in the case of Alexander v. Manton, supra, is that upon an action such as is being presented to us upon this appeal, the trial court is vested with authority to hear all pertinent testimony relative to the support of the charges preferred against the plaintiff as principal of the high school district, to show the propriety, correctness and justness of the action of the board of trustees in ordering his dismissal. The holding in the Alexander case, as we read it, is also further to the effect that subdivision 5 of section 1609 of the Political Code lays the whole matter open before the trial court for inquiry and investigation as to the truthfulness of the charges, as though no testimony had been taken before the board of trustees and no action had thereon. The very wording of the subdivision seems to necessitate such holding in providing that 'nothing in this act shall be construed in such manner as to deprive any teacher of his rights and remedies in a court of competent jurisdiction on a question of fact and law.' That is equivalent to saying that none of the provisions contained in section 1609 of the Political Code shall be so construed as to prevent a teacher from bringing an action for a violation of a contract held by him with a board of school trustees which necessitates the further holding, as would be the case in any ordinary action, that all that is necessary for a plaintiff to do is to prove the contract of employment, his readiness to perform and the breach by the opposite party. That is one of the rights included and referred to in subdivision 5 of said section 1609, because it is one of the rights given to a teacher just the same as to any other party to maintain an action for a violation of contract."

[1] The case of Hooper v. Wickes et al. was before this court upon a petition for a hearing herein. After a careful consideration of the opinion therein, we denied said petition. At that time we were of the opinion that the District Court of Appeal had placed a correct construction upon the provisions of section 1609 of the Political Code in its decision of said cause. We have not been shown any reason why we should change the opinion at which we arrived at the time of the consideration by us of said petition. The plain effect of the ruling in each of the above causes is that the decision of the board of education, or board of trustees, as the case might be, is not final, but that, in an action brought under the provisions of section 1609 of the Political Code, the whole matter of the truthfulness of the charge against an accused teacher is laid open in the trial court for inquiry and investigation. If for inquiry and investigation, it must be for determination also. It follows, therefore, in the present action that it was the right of the trial court to determine the truth or falsity of the charges preferred against the plaintiff by the city superintendent of schools and which had been previously passed upon by said board of education. This right on the part of the trial court was in no way restrained or restricted by the fact that the board of education had previously acted upon said charges and had found the same to be true, as the action of said board by the plain terms of the statute is expressly made subject to the right of the teacher to resort to a court of competent jurisdiction and there have determined every "question of fact and law." The foregoing, we think, affords a complete answer to the first question above referred to as presented by the appeal in this action.

[2] The other question, as already stated, involves the right of plaintiff to a writ of mandamus in a proceeding of this nature under the facts as found by the court in this action. It is first contended that a discharged teacher has the right to appeal to the county superintendent of schools under section 1698 of the Political Code, and that, in case the salary of a teacher is withheld by a board of education or board of school trustees, the teacher may appeal to the superintendent of public instruction. These sections of the Code were adopted long prior to the enactment of the Teachers' Tenure Act as the same is found in section 1609 of the Political Code, and it may be seriously doubted whether they have any application to a teacher holding his position under the provisions of said act. This was clearly intimated in Alexander v. Manton, supra. As to section 1698, we think that it is in no way applicable to the plaintiff, nor does it affect her right to maintain this action. It applies only "in case of the dismissal of any teacher before the expiration of any oral or written contract," and has no reference to a permanent teacher acting as such under the provisions of section 1609 of the Political Code. We have already noted the fact that the plaintiff was, at the time of her purported dismissal, a permanent teacher in the public schools of said district. As to section 1699 of the Political Code, by its provisions the right is given to a teacher whose salary is withheld to appeal to the superintendent of public instruction. This section of the Code in no way purports to afford any remedy to a teacher wrongfully dismissed or discharged. Neither of these sections of the Code, therefore, afford plaintiff any plain, speedy, or adequate remedy at law, and they accordingly do not in themselves present any legal obstacle in this action to the issuance of a writ of mandamus. On the other hand, the courts of this state have frequently held that mandamus is the proper remedy to be invoked by a teacher, wrongfully dismissed from his position, and who holds it, not under contract, but by virtue of statutory authority. Kennedy v. Board of Education, 82 Cal. 483, 22 P. 1042; Fairchild v. Board of Education, 107 Cal. 92, 40 P. 26; Barthel v. Board of Education, 153 Cal. 376, 95 P. 892; Blalock v. Ridgway et al. (Cal. App.) 267 P. 713. See, also, Raisch v. Board of Education, 81 Cal. 542, 22 P. 890; Keller v. Hewitt, 109 Cal. 146, 41 P. 871; Davenport v. City of Los Angeles, 146 Cal. 508, 80 P. 684; Sheehan v. Board of Police Comrs., 47 Cal. App. 29, 190 P. 51; Loehr v. Board of Education, 12 Cal. App. 671, 108 P. 325, and Ross v. Board of Education, 18 Cal. App. 222, 122 P. 967.

The case of Kennedy v. Board of Education, supra, contains an apt and comprehensive statement of the law upon the subject, which we think is virtually conclusive of the present action. On page 491 of 82 Cal. (22 P. 1044) the court says:

"The writ of mandamus may issue in this state 'to compel the admission of a party to the use and enjoyment of a right or office to which he is entitled, and from which he is unlawfully precluded.' Code Civ. Proc., § 1085.

"It may be conceded that a right to hold the position of teacher in the public schools would not be a 'right,' within the meaning of this section, if such right depended solely upon a contract with the board of education, and the term for which such position should be held were not fixed by the statute. But such is not the case. As we have seen, the term for which the respondent was entitled to hold her position was not fixed by any contract with the appellant. The duration of her term of service is fixed by the statute; and her removal from it was not merely a violation of a contract, but of an express provision of law forbidding such removal. Although her right to take the position depended upon the act of the appellant, the right to continue in it was preserved to her by the statute; and to take it from her was to deprive her of a right given her by law, and to which she has a right to be restored by mandamus. People v. Van Siclen, 43 Hun, 537.

"The object being to restore her to a right given her by law, mandamus is the proper remedy; and, as her term of service is uncertain, and depends upon the action of the board of education, based upon the causes named in the statute, her damages could not be ascertained with certainty, and an action for such damages would not be an adequate remedy."

[3] The finding of the trial court that there was substantial evidence introduced at the hearing of the charges before the board of education "which tended to support said charges" would not deprive said court of the power to issue its writ of mandamus to compel said board to reinstate the plaintiff. The trial court found that said order of dismissal "was erroneous in that the charges above mentioned were untrue." The trial court further found that "no one of said charges is true and that all of said charges are untrue."

We have already held that under the provisions of section 1609 of the Political Code the power of finally passing upon the truth or falsity of the charges preferred against the plaintiff was in the trial court, and not in the board of education. The purpose of this action, therefore, was to determine whether the plaintiff had been wrongfully dismissed from her position as a permanent teacher, and this would depend upon whether the charges preferred against her were true or false. The evidence taken at the hearing before the defendant board of education could not in any way affect the present action nor the remedy to which the facts herein might disclose the plaintiff to be entitled. This is so for the reason, as held in Hooper v. Wickes, supra, that the whole matter was laid "open before the trial court for inquiry and investigation as to the truthfulness of the charges, as though no testimony had been taken before the board of trustees and no action had thereon." The finding of the court, therefore, as to the character of evidence before the board of education, was upon an issue not material to the controversy before the court. The trial court having found that plaintiff had been wrongfully dismissed from her position, under the authority of Kennedy v. Board of Education and kindred cases, was authorized to compel by writ of mandamus her reinstatement to the position from which she had thus wrongfully been dismissed.

[4-6] There is no merit, we think, in the contention of the defendants that by the amendment of 1921 of section 1609 of the Political Code the Legislature has enlarged the scope of the writ of mandamus beyond that which it had at the time the Constitution was adopted. The law is well settled that the Legislature has no such power. Pacific Telephone, etc., Co. v. Eshleman, 166 Cal. 640, 137 P. 1119, 50 L. R. A. (N. S.) 652, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 822. Section 1609 of the Political Code, since its amendment in 1921, at most gives to a discharged teacher a trial de novo before the superior court, after a hearing before the board of education. By this amendment the board of education has been deprived of the power to pass finally upon the dismissal of a teacher in the public schools. The effect of the amendment, therefore, is not to enlarge the power of the court in matters of mandamus, but to diminish the effectiveness of orders of boards of education and boards of trustees in dismissing teachers. The scope of the writ of mandamus remains the same after such amendment as it was before the adoption thereof. Neither are we able to agree with defendants in their contention that the construction we have given to section 1609 of the Political Code as amended would result in conferring appellate jurisdiction upon superior courts to review proceedings taken before boards of education or boards of trustees. In support of this contention the defendants cite the case of Lemen et al. v. Edmunson, 202 Cal. 760, 262 P. 735. That action involved a provision of the act of the Legislature expressly giving the right of appeal from an order of the real estate commissioner to the superior court to any party aggrieved by such order. No right of appeal is given by section 1609 of the Political Code, either expressly or impliedly, to the dismissed teacher. He, however, is given the right to have the superior court determine the truth of the charges preferred against him without reference to the decision of a board of education as to the merits of said charges. Accordingly, the proceeding before the superior court cannot be considered in any sense as an appeal from the decision of the board of education.

The judgment is affirmed.

HORAN v. VARIAN et al. (L. A. 8700.)

Supreme Court of California. April 8, 1929.

Appeal and error 🔑1218—Motion will be granted to recall remittitur providing that respondents recover cost on appeal, where judgment was silent as to costs (Supreme Court Rule No. 23).

Where judgment as modified and affirmed on appeal was silent as to costs, but through mistake and inadvertence remittitur contained provision that respondents recover costs on appeal, motion will be granted to recall remittitur for purpose of correction as prayed for and order given that correct remittitur be issued in its place nunc pro tunc to comply with requirements of Supreme Court Rule No. 23, that where judgment or order appealed from is reversed or modified without direction as to costs of appeal, clerk will enter upon record and insert in remittitur judgment that appellant recover costs.

by striking out two whole paragraphs thereof and inserting new provisions in their stead. The interlocutory decree, as modified, was affirmed. The judgment was silent as to costs, but, through mistake and inadvertence, and contrary to the provisions of rule 23 of this court, the remittitur, when issued, contained a provision that respondents recover costs on appeal. The appellant has made a motion to recall the remittitur for the purpose of striking therefrom the provision, "the respondents to recover costs on appeal," and inserting therein the provision that the appellant recover the costs of appeal.

Rule 23 of this court provides: "In all cases in which the judgment or order appealed from is reversed or modified, and the order of reversal or modification contains no directions as to the costs of appeal, the clerk will enter upon the record, and insert in the remittitur, a judgment that the appellant recover the costs of appeal. * * *"

The motion is, therefore, granted. The remittitur is recalled for the purpose of correction as prayed for, and it is ordered that a correct remittitur be issued in its place, nunc pro tunc, pursuant to the requirements of rule 23, supra. PEOPLE v. BARRETT. (Cr. 3196.)

Supreme Court of California. April 10, 1929.

Criminal law 🔑1186(4)—Court's examination of panel before drawing jurors and restricting counsel's examination to matters not covered held reversible error, where defendant denied guilt (Const. art. 6, § 4½; Pen. Code, § 1078, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1039).

Judge's action of collectively examining entire jury panel before drawing names and then restricting counsel's examination to matters not covered by him held sufficient to warrant reversal of conviction and order denying new trial under Const. art. 6, § 4½, and as denying right secured to defendant by Pen. Code, § 1078, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1039, requiring trial when facts are denied, and reasonable examination of jurors, where defendant's denial of guilt and statements of wife as state's witness raised conflict.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Charles L. Allison, Judge.

Louis C. Barrett was convicted of permitting his wife to remain in a house of prostitution, and of pimping, and was found to have suffered three prior convictions of felonies, and he appeals. Reversed and remanded for a new trial.

Superseding opinion in 270 P. 1010.

H. Wenzlaff, of San Bernardino, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Warner I. Praul, of Los Angeles, for the People.

PER CURIAM. An information filed against the defendant in the county of San Bernardino charged him with having permitted his wife to remain in a house of prostitution, and with pimping. The jury found him guilty as charged, and also found that he had suffered three prior felony convictions, as specified in the information. He was thereupon adjudged to be an habitual criminal, and sentenced to the penitentiary for "not less than life" for each offense. From the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial, this appeal has been prosecuted.

The principal point urged on the appeal has to do with the trial court's method of conducting the voir dire examination of the talesmen summoned to try the cause, it being contended by the appellant that he was denied the right secured to him by the provisions of section 1078 of the Penal Code, as amended in 1927 (Stats. 1927, p. 1039), of reasonably examining the prospective jurors. In this particular there is presented a situation strikingly similar to the one developed upon the trial of the case of People v. Estorga, 273 P. 575, recently decided by this court. This similarity is attributable to the fact that both causes arose in the same county, and were tried before the same judge. In fairness to the trial judge, however, it must be said that the trial of this cause antedated the filing of our decision in the Estorga Case, supra, wherein we expressed our disapproval of his method of collectively examining the entire panel before the drawing of any names from the jury box, and then restricting counsel's examination to such matters as had not been covered by the court's rather general examination. Primarily because the defendant in the Estorga Case had taken the stand and admitted the commission of the grave offenses with which he stood charged, we hesitated to declare the error so prejudicial, within the meaning of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution, as to require a reversal. We, therefore, affirmed the judgment and order in that case.

In the case now before us the situation differs somewhat in that, while there is ample evidence in the record to support appellant's conviction on each count of the information, his denial on the stand of the commission of the offenses charged against him, together with certain statements of his wife, the prosecution's chief witness, contained in letters written by her prior to the trial of the cause, wherein she declared the appellant to be innocent of wrongdoing, served not only to create a conflict in the evidence, but also tended in some measure to destroy the credibility of the state's leading witness. In the light of these circumstances, it must be held that the error now under consideration is of sufficient gravity to warrant a reversal of the judgment and order, for it cannot now be positively asserted that "the result was just, and that it would have been reached if the error had not been committed. * * *" People v. Estorga, supra, 273 P. 575. The effect of the trial court's procedure in the matter of the examination of jurors on voir dire was to effectively stifle any attempted detailed examination of the talesmen by counsel for the purpose of developing possible grounds for challenge for cause, thus depriving appellant of the constitutionally guaranteed right of a trial by jury, including the right to the selection of a fair and impartial jury. We are not prepared to say that the prejudicial character of the error was in any way lessened or destroyed by defense counsel's rather passive acceptance of, and virtual acquiescence in, the course dictated by the lower court.

The judgment and order are, and each is, reversed, and the cause is remanded to the superior court in and for the county of San Bernardino for a new trial.

OGBURN v. TRAVELERS' INS. CO.

(S. F. 12130.)

Supreme Court of California. April 11, 1929.

1. Contracts 🔑147(1)—Primary object in interpretation of written instrument is to ascertain and carry out intention of parties (Civ. Code, §§ 1636, 1648).

In the interpretation of a written instrument, the primary object is to ascertain and carry out the intention of the parties thereto under Civ. Code, § 1648, providing that contract extends only to those things concerning which it appears parties intended to contract, and section 1636, requiring interpretation that will give effect to intention of parties at time of contract.

2. Contracts 🔑143—Courts are not concerned with advantages or disadvantages which may result in construction of written instrument.

The courts have nothing to do with hardships, advantages, and disadvantages which may result from construction of a written instrument; primary object of which is to ascertain and carry out intention of parties.

3. Contracts 🔑147(2)—Intentions of parties to written instrument must be ascertained from consideration of language and subject-matter of agreement.

The intention of the parties to a written instrument is to be ascertained from a consideration of the language employed by them and the subject-matter of the agreement.

4. Contracts 🔑143—Contract should be construed as entirety giving some effect to every part (Civ. Code, § 1641).

A contract should be construed as an entirety, the intention being gathered from the whole instrument taking it by its four corners, so that every part thereof is given some effect under Civ. Code, § 1641, providing that whole of contract is to be taken together so as to give effect to every part if reasonably practical; each clause helping to interpret the other.

5. Insurance 🔑452—Policy covering injuries sustained while passenger on common carrier's conveyance did not include injuries insured sustained when falling into elevator shaft in hotel.

Travel accident ticket policy, insuring against bodily injuries effected solely by external, violent, and accidental means and sustained while riding as passenger on any public conveyance provided by common carrier which is propelled on land or water by mechanical power, held not to include insurance against injuries which caused death of insured, and which were sustained when insured stepped through open door into elevator shaft in hotel after elevator had risen from floor level.

6. Insurance 🔑146(3)—Uncertainties and ambiguities in policy must be resolved against insurer who is presumed to have selected language employed therein.

All uncertainties and ambiguities in policy of insurance must be resolved against the insurer who is presumed to have selected and incorporated into policy language employed therein.

7. Insurance 🔑146(1)—Court must give effect to contract of insurance as executed by parties, in absence of uncertainties and ambiguities required to be resolved against insurer.

In the absence of uncertainties or ambiguities in policy of insurance required to be resolved against insurer, courts have no alternative but to give effect to contract of insurance as executed by the parties.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by Carl Ogburn, as administrator of the estate of Byron C. Ogburn, deceased, against the Travelers' Insurance Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Superseding opinion in 269 P. 728.

Joseph T. O'Connor, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Burbank & Spence, Daniel W. Burbank, and Homer R. Spence, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

WASTE, C. J. The defendant appeals from a judgment entered in favor of plaintiff as administrator of the estate of Byron

C. Ogburn, deceased, in an action brought upon a policy of accident insurance. The deceased purchased a "Travel Accident Ticket Policy" from the agent of the defendant insurance company at San Antonio, Tex. While in San Francisco he was killed in an accident occurring in the Hotel Flower, which hotel maintained an elevator service used by guests, visitors, employees, tradesmen, and waiters. The evidence discloses that on the day of the accident the deceased, in company with a friend, summoned the elevator to the ground floor for the purpose of being conveyed to the fifth floor. In response to the summons, the elevator was brought to the ground floor by its operator. As the door of the elevator was opened, the deceased's companion stepped into the car, which immediately started upward, without the operator having previously closed the door. Deceased, apparently following close upon the heels of his friend, stepped through the open door into the elevator shaft, and fell to the basement, receiving the injuries which resulted in his death.

The introductory clause or caption of the policy issued to the deceased by the defendant company states that it "Covers Accidents Only While a Passenger on Passenger Conveyances and While in or About Railroad Passenger Stations. Age 18 to 70." In the body of the policy it is declared that: "The Travelers Insurance Company hereby insures * * * against bodily injuries effected solely by external, violent and accidental means, and sustained while riding as a passenger on any public conveyance provided by a common carrier and such conveyance is being propelled on land or water by mechanical power. * * *" In the presentation of the appeal, both sides have devoted considerable portions of their briefs to the following two questions: Whether the introductory clause or caption of an insurance policy is to be read and construed with the provisions appearing in the body of the instrument? And, whether an elevator maintained by a public hotel for the convenience of those having occasion to use the same is a common carrier within the meaning of the particular policy here involved? We need consider only the first.

[1-4] In the interpretation of a written instrument the primary object is to ascertain and carry out the intention of the parties thereto. Burnett v. Piercy, 149 Cal. 178, 189, 86 P. 603; First Nat. Bank v. Bowers, 141 Cal. 253, 262, 74 P. 856. This fundamental rule finds recognition in section 1636 of our Civil Code, wherein it is provided that: "A contract must be so interpreted as to give effect to the mutual intention of the parties as it existed at the time of contracting, so far as the same is ascertainable and lawful." As to the hardships, advantages, or disadvantages which may result from such a construction, the courts have nothing to do. Gazos Creek Mill & Lumber Co. v. Coburn, 8 Cal. App. 150, 156, 96 P. 359. The intention of the parties is, of course, to be ascertained from a consideration of the language employed by them and the subject-matter of the agreement. Los Angeles G. & E. Co. v. Amal. Oil Co., 156 Cal. 776, 779, 106 P. 55. A contract should be construed, however, as an entirety, the intention being gathered from the whole instrument taking it by its four corners. Every part thereof should be given some effect. Section 1641, Civil Code. In other words, "the sense and meaning of the parties to any particular instrument should be collected ex antecedentibus et consequentibus; that is to say, every part of it should be brought into action, in order to collect from the whole one uniform and consistent sense, if that may be done." Balfour v. Fresno C. & I. Co., 109 Cal. 221, 227, 41 P. 876, 878. Section 1648 of the Civil Code declares that: "However broad may be the terms of a contract, it extends only to those things concerning which it appears that the parties intended to contract."

[5] With these fundamental rules of construction before us, we experience little hesitation in concluding that the parties to the policy of insurance here involved could not have intended it to cover an accident of the nature of the one disclosed by the evidence herein. In arriving at this conclusion, we have duly considered and weighed the entire policy, including the introductory clause or caption. On its face, the instrument is definitely characterized as a "Travel Accident Ticket Policy." A person boarding, riding on, or leaving an elevator maintained by a public hotel, in which he happens to be either permanently or transiently residing, cannot, by any stretch of the imagination, be said to be engaged at the time in "travel," as that term is commonly understood and unquestionably employed in the policy here in question. It is interesting to note, also, that the caption of the policy significantly describes it as covering accidents while a passenger on passenger conveyances, "and while in or about railroad passenger stations," thus lending added substantiation to the conclusion that the parties could only have intended to include within the provisions of the policy those accidents incident to "travel," and could not have had in mind, in executing the contract of insurance, protection to the assured against an accident in or about an hotel lobby or elevator.

[6, 7] In the disposition of this appeal, we have not lost sight of the familiar rule requiring all uncertainties and ambiguities in a policy of insurance to be resolved against the insurer, who is presumed to have selected and incorporated into the policy the language employed therein. That rule can only have application when the policy actually presents some uncertainty or ambiguity. In the absence thereof, the courts have no alternative but to give effect to the contract of insurance as executed by the parties. As pertinently declared in First Nat. Bank v. Maryland Cas. Co., 162 Cal. 61, 69, 121 P. 321, 325 (Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1170): "Before one is entitled to recover upon a policy of insurance it is essential that he bring himself within the express provisions of the policy. While in the construction of insurance policies the rule is that doubtful provisions are to be construed in favor of the insured and in aid of his right to recover thereon, the rule is equally well established that where the terms of the policy are plain and explicit the court can indulge in no forced construction of the contract to cast a liability upon the insurance company which it has not assumed."

The judgment is reversed.

PEOPLE v. BEITZEL. (Cr. 3187.)

Supreme Court of California. April 16, 1929.

1. Criminal law 🔑657—Court's action in murder case in adjudging defifendant's counsel guilty of contempt for being tardy held not prejudicial to defendant.

In prosecution for murder, defendant held not prejudiced by action of trial court in adjudging his counsel guilty of contempt, when counsel offered insufficient excuse for tardiness.

2. Criminal law 🔑1169(2)—Refusal to strike testimony in murder case, describing point on photograph as that where victim's body was found, held not prejudicial under other evidence.

In prosecution for murder, refusal to strike officer's testimony, describing point on photograph as point where body of victim was found, held not prejudicial to defendant, in view of other evidence identifying body as that of victim.

3. Criminal law 🔑829(1)—Refusal of instructions covered by instructions given was not erroneous.

In prosecution for murder, refusal of requested instructions on question of motive was not erroneous, where court correctly and adequately covered that subject by other instructions given.

4. Criminal law 🔑627(7)—Failure to serve copy of transcript of testimony before grand jury prior to trial held not prejudicial, in view of waiver of further objection after service of copy (Pen. Code § 925).

Where copy of transcript of testimony taken before grand jury was not served on defendant in murder case prior to trial, as required by Pen. Code, § 925, but was served on formal demand by defendant's counsel on second day of trial, there was no prejudice to defendant, in view of waiver of further objection.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Russell St. Clair Beitzel was convicted of murder in the first degree with a sentence of death, and he appeals. Affirmed.

George E. Stoddard and Joseph L. Fainer, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and James S. Howie, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

SHENK, J. The defendant was convicted of murder of the first degree, and judgment of death was pronounced. He appeals from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

It is not contended on the appeal that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict, and there is no suggestion that the defendant did not commit the crime. The homicide was particularly atrocious, as disclosed by the following facts: In the early part of 1927 the defendant was employed as assistant credit manager of a corporation in Philadelphia. He was a married man, and was then living with his family, consisting of a wife and two children, four and six years of age. Barbara Mauger was a young woman then about 20 years of age, and was employed as a cashier by the same company. In the latter part of April or early in May, 1927, the defendant left his home, took up his residence elsewhere in the city of Philadelphia, and began to pay attention to Barbara Mauger at her home where she resided with her parents, and continued to call upon her without disclosing to her or to her parents that he was a married man. On September 10, 1927, the defendant and Miss Mauger disappeared. Two days later the father of the young woman received a note from her stating that she and the defendant had left for South America. Before they disappeared, a considerable assortment of baby clothes was delivered at the Mauger home in Philadelphia. The defendant explained to the elder Maugers that he had purchased the clothes for his brother's expected child. In the note sent by Barbara to her parents, she advised them that she expected to marry the defendant, and that the baby clothes belonged to her, as she expected to have a baby. The defendant and the young woman went direct to Los Angeles, arriving there on September 17, 1927. They resided at various places in that city, representing themselves to be husband and wife under the names of R. Scott and Barbara Burholme. The last place they resided was at 841 Golden avenue in the city of Los Angeles.

On June 24, 1928, the defendant and Barbara were seen to leave their home in an automobile. The defendant returned to his home alone. On the evening of the same day a neighbor called to see Barbara, and was told by the defendant that Barbara had taken a ride down to Long Beach, and that "she wouldn't be back." On the next day the defendant told the neighborhood groceryman that Barbara had gone away. On the same day he told a neighbor that he had taken Barbara to Long Beach, where she had met her aunt from San Diego, and that she had gone to New York with the aunt. A few days later he stated that he had received a telegram from Barbara from Phœnix, Ariz., and later that he had heard from her in Texas.

On the afternoon of August 2, 1928, two boys en route to Scout Camp were traveling along Mulholland highway which follows the crest of the Santa Monica mountains. When the boys were about five miles northwesterly from Hollywood, their suspicions were aroused by a buzzard flying around a point near the highway. They stopped, entered upon an investigation, were met with an "awful smell," discovered clothing that appeared to have been torn, and saw what they thought were blood stains on the ground. They immediately notified the forest ranger, who returned with them to the spot, and found a dismembered and disintegrating body, which was later positively identified as the body of Barbara Mauger. Near the place they also found the skull of a full-time fetus. It was in evidence that the deceased expected to be confined on or about July 27, 1928, which was about a month after the homicide.

The autopsy disclosed that a bullet had entered the right temple of the deceased near the outer angle of the right eye, had passed through the right orbit to the wall of the nose, passed under the bridge of the nose to an exit from the left orbit. A second bullet had penetrated the base of the skull. Another bullet was found in the body.

The day after the discovery the defendant was arrested. He admitted that the statements made to the neighbors shortly after the disappearance of the deceased were false. He also admitted that on the afternoon of June 24, he had taken a ride into the hills with Barbara. He claimed that he had had a petty quarrel with her while on the ride, and that as a result thereof Barbara had gotten out of the automobile and left him. He also admitted that on the day after the disappearance of Barbara he had wrapped her personal effects and some of the baby clothes in a bundle and mailed them to Phœnix, Ariz., to a Mr. Stone, a fictitious person, as addressee, giving a return address in Seattle, Wash. A revolver equipped for the same caliber of bullets as those found in the body of the deceased was shown to have been in the defendant's possession a few days before the homicide. This gun was found in his possession at the time of the arrest. Because of peculiar "spurs" in the nozzle of the gun and "gouges" on the bullets found in the body of the deceased, a firearms expert testified that these bullets were fired from this particular gun.

[1] As grounds for reversal, the defendant urges prejudicial misconduct on the part of the trial judge in admonishing his counsel from time to time during the first half of the trial and finally in adjudging said counsel guilty of contempt. The trial commenced on September 6, 1928. The defendant was then represented by Messrs. Vernon Hamilton and George E. Stoddard, attorneys of his own choice. The trial proceeded on that day and again on September 7th, when an adjournment was taken to September 11th, on which day Mr. Stoddard, by leave of court, and with the defendant's consent, withdrew from the case. The trial continued on the 11th and 12th with Mr. Hamilton as the defendant's sole counsel. He had repeatedly offended by being tardy at the sessions of the court, and had been admonished by the court that he must be on time. At the opening of court on Thursday the 13th he was not present when court convened. The defendant offered to proceed without his counsel, but was advised by the court that, as long as he had an attorney, his attorney must speak for him and try the case. The defendant then said: "If your Honor please, my attorney knows he is going to be dismissed this morning. That may or may not be the reason he is not here." The defendant then expressed a desire to discharge his attorney, and requested an adjournment until 2 o'clock in the afternoon so that he might return with an attorney to continue the trial. Attorney Hamilton then entered the courtroom, and, after offering an excuse for his tardiness, which was deemed insufficient by the court, and we think properly so, was adjudged guilty of contempt and sentenced to three days in jail. The court then inquired of the defendant whether it was still his desire to discharge his counsel. The defendant gave an affirmative answer, and asked for time to engage other counsel. The court then at length admonished the members of the jury that they should in no wise consider what had taken place with reference to Mr. Hamilton as having anything to do with the case, and a recess was taken until 2 o'clock. At the latter hour the defendant appeared with Joseph L. Fainer as his counsel. At the request of the new attorney, the cause was continued for further trial until Monday, September 17th, to enable him to familiarize himself with the case. At the opening of court on the 17th Mr. Stoddard re-entered the case. By proper order of substitution Mr. Fainer and Mr. Stoddard became counsel for the defendant, and continued to act as such until the close of the trial, which consumed several days.

We find nothing in the incident complained of which is the subject of just criticism. We are unable to conclude that the defendant was prejudiced thereby in any substantial sense. In fact, the impulses of a fair-minded jury might reasonably be said to have reacted in his favor under the circumstances here shown. The trial of the cause was necessarily prolonged by reason of the change in the attorneys for the defendant, but an examination of the record discloses that the defendant was ably represented by counsel, and that he had a fair trial on all of the issues presented.

[2] The next contention is that the court committed error in refusing to strike certain testimony of the officer Sanderson, wherein the witness described a particular point on a photograph as the point "where the body of Barbara Mauger was found." The objection to that portion of the answer was that it assumed that the body found was the body of Barbara Mauger and was a conclusion of the witness. Assuming the objection technically well taken, no possible prejudice resulted from the ruling, for the reason that the body had theretofore been identified as that of Barbara Mauger, and there was and is no evidence in the record to the contrary.

[3] Defendant's counsel offered two instructions on the question of motive. These were refused, but the court correctly and adequately covered that subject by other instructions given.

[4] The last point made for reversal is that a copy of the transcript of the testimony taken before the grand jury was not served on the defendant prior to the trial, as required by section 925 of the Penal Code. The transcript had not been delivered as required by the Code section, and on the second day of the trial the defendant's counsel made formal demand for a copy thereof. The demand was complied with forthwith, whereupon defendant's counsel waived further objection on the point, provided the trial be continued until Tuesday the 11th, which was done. Counsel now make the point that the Code section is mandatory and beyond the power of the defendant to waive. We see no merit in the contention. The purpose of the Code section is to apprise the defendant of the nature of the testimony taken before the grand jury, and it may be assumed that a failure to deliver a copy of the transcript within the time prescribed would, unless the defendant consents otherwise, result in a continuance of the trial on his motion as a matter of right. But where, as here, the defendant waived statutory rights intended for his benefit under circumstances fully affording protection, no harm to him could possibly result.

We find no error in the record, and no doubt of the defendant's guilt may be entertained. The judgment and order are therefore affirmed.

CHAPMAN v. PITCHER et al. (S. F. 12732.)

Supreme Court of California. April 16, 1929.

1. Executors and administrators ⚷111(1)—Contract of attorney's employment and power of attorney held to sustain implied holding that defendants contracting as executors were not bound personally.

Quotations from contract of employment of attorney and power of attorney held to sustain implied holding that parties thereto did not intend to bind defendants personally, but to bind estate of decedent, where such instruments were executed by defendants as executors of will of decedent.

2. Executors and administrators ⚷224—Attorney could not recover from executor for breach of contract of employment binding estate, where no claim against estate had been presented (Code Civ. Proc. § 1619).

Where contract for employment of attorney evidenced intention that defendants executing it as executors were not to be bound personally, but that estate of decedent should be bound, attorney not having made application to probate court for authority to so contract, and not having presented any claim against estate for allowance of fee under Code Civ. Proc. § 1619, or otherwise, held not entitled to recover against executors personally for breach of such contract of employment.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; George H. Buck, Judge.

Action by I. F. Chapman against Thomas B. Pitcher and another for damages for breach of contract. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

William Penn Humphreys, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Franklin Swart, of Redwood City, for respondents.

SEAWELL, J. Appeal from a judgment entered upon plaintiff's refusal to amend his amended complaint after demurrer sustained. The trial court held that said amended complaint did not state facts sufficient to sustain a judgment against defendants in their individual capacity.

The facts set forth in said amended complaint are substantially as herein stated in narrative form. Plaintiff was at all the times mentioned in said amended complaint a duly licensed and practicing attorney at law of this state. He was also, on June 20, 1926, admitted to practice law in the probate court of the county of Shoshone, state of Idaho. On February 22, 1913, Edwin Bray Pitcher, known at the time of his death as Edwin Prichard, died intestate in said county of Shoshone, state of Idaho, leaving surviving him as sole heir at law, John Pitcher, his father, a resident of the county of San Mateo, this state. Probate proceedings were had in the probate court of the county of Shoshone in the matter of the estate of said Edwin Prichard, and no heirs or other person appeared to claim said estate at the time distribution was ordered. The entire net proceeds of said estate, to wit, the sum of $11,605.57, was, by order of the probate court, made January 6, 1920, deposited with the state treasurer of the state of Idaho to be held by said officer as unclaimed moneys, in accordance with the statute of said state.

John Pitcher, the father of said Edwin Bray Pitcher, aforesaid, died testate in the said county of San Mateo on February 24, 1925, and left an estate therein. Thomas B. Pitcher and Louise Josephine Pitcher, children of said John Pitcher, deceased, were on March 27, 1925, duly appointed executor and executrix, respectively, of the last will and testament of said John Pitcher. It is alleged that to the time of his death said John Pitcher did not know of the decease of his son, Edwin Bray, nor did either of the defendants or any heir or legatee of said John Pitcher know of the death of said Edwin Bray Pitcher until some time after letters testamentary had been issued to said Thomas B. Pitcher and Louise Josephine Pitcher. It is alleged "that plaintiff, subsequent to the death of said John Pitcher, had made extensive investigations, and believed from data which he had collected that Edwin Bray Pitcher and Edwin Prichard were one and the same individual"; that plaintiff informed defendants of his belief that Edwin Bray Pitcher had predeceased said John Pitcher and had left a net estate of between $11,000 and $12,000; that plaintiff proposed to undertake to recover for the estate of John Pitcher, deceased, the net proceeds of the estate of Edwin Bray Pitcher and "to pay all expenses in connection therewith, in consideration of receiving for such services, expenses and information, an undivided one-half interest in all the property and assets of Edwin Bray Pitcher, deceased, which should be so recovered by said estate of John Pitcher, deceased, and to receive nothing for said services, expenses and information in the event that he should not be able to make such recovery; that defendants, as executor and executrix of the will of said John Pitcher, deceased, desired to collect and recover said estate of Edwin Bray Pitcher, deceased, and to have the proceeds of said latter estate paid over to them as the legal representatives of the estate of said John Pitcher; that to accomplish the premises, defendants, on or about the 28th day of April 1926, entered into a written contract with plaintiff, etc." (Italics supplied.)

Said contract, which is set out in full, after reciting the facts, declares that the executors as such of the estate of John Pitcher had on even date executed a power of attorney in favor of I. F. Chapman, granting to him certain powers in or about the matter of the estate, property, and assets of Edwin Bray Pitcher, and provides as follows: "It is now therefore distinctly understood and agreed that the said I. F. Chapman shall personally pay any and all expenses incident to the within recited matter without obligation to us therefor, and further that for and in consideration of, and as full compensation for, all services rendered and to be rendered by the said I. F. Chapman and in consideration of the information conveyed to us regarding this estate by him, he, the said I. F. Chapman, shall have and receive and we as such executors, do hereby assign, transfer, convey and set over to the said I. F. Chapman an undivided one-half (½) interest in and to any and all the right, title and interest of the estate of John Pitcher, deceased, in and to the property, assets and estate of said deceased."

While this contract bears the simple signatures "Louise Josephine Pitcher, Thomas B. Pitcher," the opening sentence reads: "We the undersigned executors of the last will and testament of John Pitcher, deceased. * * *" Said power of attorney recites the fact of the death of John Pitcher, a resident of the county of San Mateo, and the order made in said matter appointing defendants executors of the will of said John Pitcher, deceased. It then proceeds to obligate the defendants to the performance of the covenants in the following language: "Now, therefore, we, as the executors of the last will and testament of said John Pitcher, deceased, hereby hire and employ I. F. Chapman, attorney at law of the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, to take any and all proceedings which he may deem necessary in the Superior Court of Shoshone County, Idaho, * * * to recover for us as such executors from the state of Idaho or from the state treasurer of said state, any and all money now on deposit in the state treasury of the state of Idaho to the credit of Edwin Prichard, and in that behalf, we, as such executors, do hereby make, * * * said I. F. Chapman our lawful attorney in fact for us, as such executors, in our name, * * * as such executors, to represent us in all matters and proceedings whatsoever in the above entitled matter and to do and perform under this authority any and all acts and things that our said attorney in fact may deem necessary * * * and particularly to ask, sue for, demand, collect * * * all moneys, * * * inheritances and distributive shares now on deposit in the state treasury of the state of Idaho to the credit of the estate of Edwin Prichard, deceased, or in which said estate of Edwin Prichard may have any interest; * * * and generally to say, do, act and transact, accomplish and determine any and all matters and things whatsoever that we, as such executors, might, could or should do if personally in or about the above recited matter." Said power of attorney is signed, "Louise Josephine Pitcher, Thomas B. Pitcher, executors of the last will and testament of John Pitcher, deceased."

Thereafter plaintiff appeared in the probate court of Shoshone county and by proceedings had obtained an order of court directing the state auditor to draw his warrant in favor of said executors and the state treasurer to pay defendants as executors of the estate of said John Pitcher, deceased, and an order of the probate court of Shoshone county was accordingly made. It appears from the allegations of the amended complaint that said proceedings were defective, and upon plaintiff's motion said order was set aside. New proceedings were instituted by plaintiff by the filing of a petition on August 27, 1926, the hearing of which was noticed for September 8, 1926. It was stipulated between plaintiff and the Attorney General of the state of Idaho, the date not being given, that upon the hearing of the petition last named an order might be made directing the auditor of the state of Idaho to authorize the delivery to defendants, as executor and executrix of said estate of John Pitcher, of said moneys on deposit in said state as above related. Three days after the petition was filed in the second proceeding, without assigning any cause therefor, defendants discharged plaintiff from said case, revoked said power of attorney, and employed another attorney in his place, who proceeded to and did collect said moneys, to wit, $11,607.57, deposited in the treasury of said state of Idaho on account of the estate of Edwin Prichard, deceased.

The defendants herein having refused to pay plaintiff any sum for his services, damages equal to one-half of the value of said estate of Edwin Prichard, deceased, to wit, the sum of $5,802.78, for breach of contract are attempted to be recovered by a personal action against said defendants. No relief is sought on the basis of quantum meruit.

[1, 2] The above quotations from the contract of employment and the power of attorney amply sustain the implied holding of the trial court that it was the intention of the parties thereto not to bind the defendants personally, but to bind the estate of John Pitcher, deceased. Prior to the amendments of sections 1616 and 1619, Code of Civil Procedure (Stats. 1905, p. 776; Stats. 1905, p. 727; Stats. 1909, p. 987), the reasonable allowance for legal services was made by the probate court to the executor or administrator, and could not be made to the attorney. The attorney employed by an executor or administrator to assist him in the execution of his trust had no claim that he could enforce against the estate either by action or in any other way. He was not a person interested in the estate. The amount of compensation fixed by the contract of the executor of an estate with his attorney for legal services to be rendered in settlement thereof was a matter of personal obligation on the part of the executor, or representative, with which the probate court had no concern. Estate of Kruger, 143 Cal. 141, 76 P. 891. Volume 11, California Jurisprudence, pp. 1187, 1188, 1193, 1194, 1195, contains a full discussion of this question with numerous citations of authority directly holding that prior to the amendment of 1905 attorneys could not assert a demand against the estate of a deceased person, but were limited to their personal action against the executor or other representative of the estate who had employed them. This rule was changed by the amendment above noticed prior to the present transaction to the form in which it now exists by providing that attorney fees "shall be allowed out of the estate." Code Civ. Proc. § 1619.

At all times prior to said amendments it was competent for an executor by stipulation to exempt himself personally from the payment of a larger fee than the amount to be fixed by the court as a reasonable allowance to the executor for the services of said attorney. The probate court, however, was not bound by the agreement of executor and attorney as to the amount which they may have deemed reasonable or proper. The many earlier cases of this court cited by appellant, to the effect that an administrator or executor of an estate is personally liable for the payment of attorneys' fees in probate matters, were decided before the change was brought about by the adoption of the amendment and the enactment of statutes which revised the whole system of claims against estates and more particularly placed attorneys in their relation to estates on a basis similar to that of executor or administrator. The contract in the instant case purports to obligate the defendants as executor and executrix to "assign, transfer, convey and set over" to the plaintiff an undivided one-half interest in the property, estate, and assets of the estate of Edwin Bray Pitcher, deceased, property belonging to the estate of John Pitcher, "in consideration of and as full compensation for all services rendered and to be rendered by the said I. F. Chapman and in consideration of the information conveyed to us [as the legal representatives of the estate of John Pitcher, deceased] regarding this estate by him. * * *" No petition or application of any kind or order was made to the probate court for authority to so contract, nor was any claim presented against the estate or application made to the court for the allowance of reasonable attorney's fee for performance of extraordinary services, as provided by section 1619, Code of Civil Procedure, or otherwise. No attempt was made by plaintiff to observe the procedure prescribed by statute, which is necessary to establish a claim or demand against an estate of a deceased person, nor was an action commenced against the estate to establish the demand, here attempted to be enforced by personal action against the defendants.

Respondents, as further defenses to plaintiff's right of recovery, have urged the issue that the contract was revocable, for the reason that the executor had no authority to assign or transfer an interest in the estate of John Pitcher, deceased, except by order of the probate court, and that the contract was not coupled with an interest; further, that the attorney soliciting the contract possessed knowledge concerning facts about which the contract was made of which the defendants were ignorant; and that the concealment of material facts for the purpose of inducing the execution of a contract amounts to the perpetration of a fraud on the party from whom such facts are withheld.

Our construction of the contract makes it unnecessary to give further consideration to the points raised by counsel.

Judgment affirmed.

BAYLESS et ux. v. AMES et ux.
(S. F. 12768.)

Supreme Court of California. April 15, 1929.

Judgment ⚷589(1)—Plaintiffs, having recovered from defendants for breaching contract, could not in second action enforce mortgage given to secure performance of such contract (Code Civ. Proc. § 726).

Where defendants breached agreement under which they guaranteed performance of contract by another, and for faithful performance of their contract they had executed and delivered to plaintiffs conveyance in nature of mortgage, plaintiffs, having recovered damages for breach of such agreement in former action, could not, under Code Civ. Proc. § 726, bring second action to foreclose mortgage.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Denver S. Church, Judge.

Action to foreclose a mortgage by J. R. Bayless and wife against W. E. Ames and wife. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Mark H. Edwards, of Santa Paula, for appellants.

Walter E. Bruns, of Reedley, for respondents.

CURTIS, J. The defendants were on the 12th day of June, 1921, the owners of two lots in the Navelencia Farms tract in the county of Fresno, which on that day they agreed to sell to Joseph Vaughn for the sum of $12,000, "to be paid by the said Joseph Vaughn by applying to the payment of the interest at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, and the excess as a payment on the principal sum, 60 per cent. of the gross proceeds received from the sale of all crops to be grown on the premises to be sold." Thereafter, and on the 20th day of June, 1921, the plaintiffs purchased from said defendants said premises, subject to said agreement of sale entered into by defendants and said Joseph Vaughn. At the time of said purchase, and as a part of the same transaction, the parties herein entered into a written agreement, whereby the defendants agreed that, in case Vaughn failed to comply with the terms of his agreement, "they will at their own cost and expense enter upon said premises in his place and stead, and do and perform all and every act or thing by him to be done or performed, and care for and market the crops growing on said premises and apply the proper portion of said proceeds to the payment of the obligation assumed by the said Joseph Vaughn."

At the same time this agreement was entered into, and for the purpose of securing the faithful performance thereof on the part of the defendants, they executed and delivered to the plaintiffs a conveyance in the nature of a mortgage of certain real property owned by them and situated in the city of Reedley, in said county of Fresno. It is recited therein that "this conveyance is intended as a mortgage to secure the payment of certain sums reserved to be paid to the parties of the second part [the plaintiffs herein] under a certain agreement of warranty bearing date of June 20, 1921, under which the parties of the first part herein [the defendants] are the parties of the first part therein and the parties of the second part herein are the parties of the second part therein." This mortgage was duly recorded in the office of the county recorder of the county of Fresno.

Joseph Vaughn, who entered into the agreement of purchase of said land from the defendants, failed to keep the terms of his said agreement, and evidently abandoned said premises and failed to cultivate the same, or to pay to the plaintiffs any of the proceeds from the sale of crops grown thereon. The plaintiffs called upon the defendants to comply with the terms of their agreement of June 20, 1921, wherein defendants had agreed that, in case Vaughn failed to comply with the terms of his contract of June 12, 1921, they (defendants) would "at their own costs and expense enter upon said premises in his place and stead and do and perform all and every act or thing by him to be done or performed," etc. The defendants refused to comply with said request, and thereby violated their said agreement with the plaintiffs. Thereupon the plaintiffs brought an action in damages against the defendants in this action for breach of said contract of warranty, and upon the trial thereof were awarded a judgment against defendants in the sum of $3,000 damages for breach of contract, $250 attorney's fee as provided in said contract, and costs of suit.

Thereafter the plaintiffs instituted the present action to foreclose said mortgage against real property situated in the city of Reedley and owned by the defendants, claiming that there was due them the amount of the judgment recovered in the damage action, certain sums expended by them in payment of taxes on the mortgaged premises, a further attorney's fee for foreclosure of the mortgage and costs of suit. They asked, in addition to the recovery of these several amounts, the foreclosure of their mortgage and the sale of said real property in the city of Reedley, and for judgment against defendants for any deficiency which might remain after applying the proceeds of said sale to the satisfaction of said judgment.

The defendants in their answer to the complaint in this action set up the contract of June 20, 1921, between the parties hereto, the institution of the action brought thereon to recover judgment for damages for the breach thereof, and the judgment rendered therein in favor of plaintiffs and against defendants, and further claimed and alleged in their said answer that "the plaintiffs herein are now debarred from maintaining this action on the mortgage set out and herein sued on by reason of the provisions of section 726 of the Code of Civil Procedure and the law of the state of California." The trial court found the facts as alleged in the answer of defendants, and held that plaintiffs were barred from maintaining this action by virtue of the provisions of said section 726 of the Code of Civil Procedure. We might add that there is no contention but that the facts are as alleged in defendants' answer and as found by the court, the only claim made by the plaintiffs is that the trial court erred in its conclusion of law as to the effect of said section of the Code upon the facts as found by the court.

The provisions of said section 726, relied upon by the defendants as a bar to plaintiffs' maintaining this action, read as follows: "There can be but one action for the recovery of any debt, or the enforcement of any right secured by mortgage upon real or personal property, which action must be in accordance with the provisions of this chapter." It is admitted that the action brought by the plaintiffs against the defendants in which they recovered damages for the breach of the contract of date June 20, 1921, was a simple action for the recovery of damages for the breach of contract, and no attempt was made to foreclose the mortgage given to secure the performance of said contract. Plaintiffs do not question the general applicability of the rule laid down by said section 726. They concede that a person whose debt or right is secured by a mortgage cannot in an action secure a judgment for the debt or the enforcement of the right and thereafter commence an action for the foreclosure of the mortgage given to secure said debt or right. This doctrine, they admit, was clearly confirmed in the case of Ould v. Stoddard, 54 Cal. 613, and has since been strictly adhered to in the decisions of this court. They contend, however, that there are exceptions to the rule thus announced, and that the facts of the present case bring it within an exception to that rule.

In support of this contention plaintiffs assert that the liability of the defendants in the present action is primary, whereas in the original action, although they were the sole defendants, they were sued in a different capacity and that in the former suit the liability of the defendants was secondary to the liability of Vaughn, whose performance of the contract they merely guaranteed. Whether defendants' liability was a primary or secondary liability, it was but one liability—an agreement to answer to plaintiffs for the default or failure of Vaughn to carry out the terms of his contract. We think a proper statement of the legal effect of the contracts of the parties would be to say that Vaughn's liability to the plaintiffs was a primary liability, and defendants' agreement to answer for Vaughn's default was a secondary liability. Had plaintiffs brought action in the first instance against Vaughn to establish his liability, or, expressed in another way, to fix the extent of damages sustained by plaintiffs by reason of Vaughn's default, the defendants would not have been necessary parties to said action, and the prosecution of said action against Vaughn alone might not have been a bar to a subsequent action brought by plaintiffs against defendants on their agreement to answer for Vaughn's default. This we understand to be the effect of Murphy v. Hellman Commercial Trust & Savings Bank, 43 Cal. App. 579, 185 P. 485, and Nuetzel v. Mackie, 80 Cal. App. 768, 253 P. 166. But this is just the procedure the plaintiffs failed to pursue. In the first action they sued the defendants and the defendants alone on their agreement to answer for Vaughn's default, and obtained judgment for the amount of damages which the court found they had sustained by reason of said default. Vaughn was not even made a party to said action. In the second action they sought to foreclose said mortgage and recover again the damage to which the court in the prior action found they were entitled. It would be difficult to conceive of a clearer or more complete and direct violation of the terms of section 726 of the Code of Civil Procedure than that we have here presented.

The action is not sustained by the above authorities or by any others cited by the appellants or of which we have any knowledge. The case of Martin v. Becker, 169 Cal. 301, 146 P. 665, Ann. Cas. 1916D, 171, cited by plaintiffs, is of no assistance to them. In that case a materialman, who had furnished materials which were actually used in the construction of a building upon the land of the owner, took from the contractor, to whom the materials were furnished, a mortgage upon real property owned by the contractor to secure their payment. He thereafter brought an action against the owner of the premises to foreclose his lien for materials. In that action it was objected that he could not prosecute his action to foreclose said lien, but was relegated solely to an action to foreclose his mortgage. This objection was not sustained by this court, which held "that the law [section 726 of the Code of Civil Procedure] never contemplated that because a man had taken a mortgage he could not take other independent security for his debt, and, if the contract for such security permitted it, enforce such contract without reference to the mortgage debt." In that action, it is true, the mortgagor, who was also the contractor, was made a party to the action to foreclose the lien of the materialman, but as the court observed, he was not a necessary party to such action. Plaintiffs argue from this that the defendants here were not necessary parties to an action, which might have been brought against Vaughn to determine his liability to the plaintiffs. This is true. But plaintiffs brought no such action. The prior action brought by plaintiffs, as we have already stated, was one brought solely against the defendants to recover against them on their contract of warranty. Neither does the case of Schehr v. Berkey, 166 Cal. 157, 135 P. 41, also cited by plaintiffs, help their case. It was there held that, by resorting to an action of unlawful detainer for nonpayment of rent by the tenant and thus securing the eviction of the latter, the lessor or landlord did not lose the right to foreclose, as against the original tenants, a chattel mortgage given by them as security for the payment of damages sustained by the lessor on account of the breach of contract. The court further held in such a case that section 726 of the Code of Civil Procedure was not applicable, as "the liability of the lessees was one thing; the liability of their assignee, a different and distinct thing."

We think that there can be no question but that the present action was brought for the recovery of the same debt to recover which the prior action was instituted and prosecuted to judgment. It was brought against the same parties, the mortgagors named in the mortgage herein sought to be foreclosed, and upon the same contract of guaranty, upon which the prior action was based. The institution and maintenance of this action, therefore, is expressly prohibited by the provisions of section 726 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Ould v. Stoddard, 54 Cal. 613; Western Fuel Co. v. S. G. Lewald Co., 190 Cal. 25, 210 P. 419.

The judgment is affirmed.

which form the basis for the issuance of the tax deed to the two lots involved herein, were substantially the same or similar to those which were held to be invalid in an opinion this day rendered and filed in the case of Gottstein v. Kelly (L. A. No. 8727; Cal. Sup.) 276 P. 347. In one respect the facts in the Gottstein Case differ from those in the present action. In that case, in the notice of sale, the words "Taxes, percentage and costs" were inserted in place of the words "Taxes, penalties and costs," as provided by the statute. No such defect in the notice of sale in the present action was shown to have existed. Therefore, what was said in the Gottstein Case upon that phase of the case would, of course, not be applicable to the present action. The other points, however, considered in that case are precisely the same as those relied upon by the respondent in this action, and were decided adversely to respondent's contentions.

[1] The respondent in the present action, however, makes the additional claim in support of the judgment sustaining his tax deed that the plaintiff's assignor, who was the owner of the lots at the time they were sold for delinquent taxes, waived all right to object to said tax sale. The facts and circumstances under which this claim of waiver is made are briefly these: L. S. Everts was the owner of said lots at the time they were assessed for taxes in 1918, and he continued to be such owner until after said lots were sold for taxes in 1924. Within the statutory time prior to said tax sale, Everts received by registered mail from Herbert S. Croghan, the tax collector of said county, a copy of the printed notice of sale required to be given by the tax collector pursuant to the provisions of section 3771a of the Political Code, and on receipt thereof he mailed to said tax collector a reply written on the reverse side of said notice, as follows: "Mr. Herbert Croghan. Dear Herb: Thanks for the notice. When I charged these lots off my books several years ago I did so because I did not feel that they were worth the extra cost to me for paving, grading, etc., etc., and I still feel the same way about it. Here's hoping that the party who gets them has a rabbit's foot. Sincerely, Leslie Everts." This letter was received by the tax collector on the 9th day of June, 1924. The sale was made on June 30, 1924. The deed from the tax collector to respondent was dated and recorded on July 10, 1924, and on the 17th day of July, 1924, Everts and wife, by quitclaim deed, conveyed said lots to the appellant, which deed constitutes appellant's ground of title. The trial court based its decision sustaining the tax deed largely upon the ground that by his conduct Everts had waived his right to object to any irregularity in the proceedings leading up to the execution of the tax deed. No direct authority was cited by the trial court in support of its ruling holding that Everts had waived his rights to question the legality of the tax proceedings under which his property was sold to respondent. Nor has respondent, in any of his briefs or other argument presented either to the District Court of Appeal or to this court, been able to cite any authority bearing directly upon this question of waiver. We are confident that none can be found, and that the law upon this subject is not as contended for by the respondent. This question is discussed in Blackwell on Tax Title (4th Ed.), p. 513, in the following manner: "It may be laid down as a general rule of law, that where an irregularity—of such a character as to affect the power of the officer to sell—takes place in any part of the proceedings, and the owner of the land, being aware of the fact, is silent, and takes no steps to prevent the sale but permits it to proceed, or even actually consents to waive the irregularity, a sale under such circumstances will not be recognized in a court of law. The officer derives his authority from the law, and not from the owner. He must obey the law, and not the orders of a private individual."

In Cooley on Taxation, we find the following positive declaration upon the subject: "Consent of the owner of land to a defective publication of notice, it has been held, would not bind him, as he cannot, in that manner, confer an authority upon an officer of the law, nor can he pass a title to his freehold by mere waiver." 3 Cooley on Taxation (4th Ed.) § 1412, p. 2798. See, also, upon the same subject, Scales v. Alvis, 12 Ala. 617, 620, 46 Am. Dec. 269; Blackwell on Tax Titles (5th Ed.) § 138, at page 130, and section 451, at page 409.

Upon the authority of the case of Gottstein v. Kelly, supra, the judgment in the present action is hereby reversed.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing, May 16, 1929.

Aliens ⟹6(1)—Noneligible alien's transfer to eligible person of rights under contract to purchase realty before 1920 Alien Land Act became effective held valid (Alien Land Law 1913; Alien Land Law 1920).

Though whatever right or title in residence property Japanese ineligible alien may have acquired by payment in full of purchase price was subject to escheat to state, under Alien Land Law 1913 (St. 1913, p. 206), he nevertheless possessed right to transfer right and interest thus obtained to an eligible person, and his transfer thereof to his minor son, who was a native-born citizen of state, prior to adoption and taking effect of Alien Land Law 1920 (St. 1921, p. lxxxiii), was a legitimate transaction, entitling assignee to compel specific performance of contract as though he had been original and direct beneficiary of agreement for purchase of realty, Act 1920 not being retroactive.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Albert Lee Stephens, Judge.

Action by Mori Saiki, by T. Saiki, his guardian ad litem, against Luke Hammock and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

William A. Alderson, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

H. C. Hopkins, L. E. Dadmun, and J. Marion Wright, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This appeal is from a judgment of the superior court in and for the county of Los Angeles in an action instituted by the plaintiff, through his guardian ad litem, to quiet title as against certain alleged claims of the defendants in and to certain property described in the complaint. An amended complaint was later filed, which included a demand on the part of the plaintiff for specific performance, and the action was tried upon the amended complaint and the answer of the defendants thereto, together with a cross-complaint, wherein the defendants sought to have the title of certain of the defendants quieted to said land. The facts of the case, which were in the main undisputed, are these:

On or about June 9, 1920, one T. Saiki, who is the father and guardian ad litem of the plaintiff, and who is a Japanese alien, entered into a contract for the purchase by and sale to him of the real estate described in the complaint for the price of $4,500; the defendants Luke Hammock and Hannah Hammock being at the time the owners thereof and the other parties to said contract. The sum of $50 was paid by T. Saiki as a deposit and part payment upon account of said contract upon the date thereof, and the sum of $4,450, being the balance of the purchase price, was to be paid within 60 days thereafter. The said balance due upon the contract was within said time paid to and received by said defendants, who thereupon delivered to T. Saiki the possession of said property. Thereafter, and on September 9th, T. Saiki assigned to his minor son, Mori Saiki, the plaintiff herein, all of his right, title, and interest in and to said contract and in and to the property described therein. Immediately thereafter the plaintiff, by his guardian ad litem, demanded of the Hammocks, but was refused, a deed to said real estate; whereupon the present action was instituted against the defendants Luke and Hannah Hammock and certain other defendants who are sued in the original and amended complaint by fictitious names.

The defendant Luke Hammock answered separately, setting forth that in the meantime his wife, Hannah Hammock, had died, and that he had succeeded to her community interest in said property. The answer of said defendant, while admitting the payment to him by plaintiff's assignor of the aforesaid sum of money as the purchase price of the property, denies that the plaintiff or his assignor has or ever had any interest or estate in the property. The said defendant further, for want of information or belief, denies the assignment of said contract by T. Saiki to the plaintiff herein. By way of affirmative defense said defendant alleges that, at the time of the execution of the contract with T. Saiki, the latter was a subject of Japan and an alien ineligible to citizenship under the laws of the United States, and was therefore disqualified from owning, holding, possessing, or transferring any interest in real estate of the character of that described in the complaint herein under the laws of the state of California and the treaty between the United States and Japan. The said defendant denies that either himself or his wife had any knowledge of the fact that T. Saiki was such ineligible at the time that they entered into said contract, and also at the time when they received the entire purchase price of the property as provided by the terms thereof. He further alleges that, upon becoming informed that T. Saiki was an ineligible alien, he offered to return to him the entire purchase price of the property, which, however, the latter refused to receive. He admits that T. Saiki was given possession of the real estate at the time of the payment by him of the purchase price thereof, and that he continued in possession, notwithstanding the fact that the same is residential property, which T. Saiki as an ineligible alien is not entitled to hold or possess. Said defendant then proceeds to allege that prior to the commencement of this action, and for a good and valuable consideration, he had conveyed all of his right, title, and interest in said property to his codefendants, Ygnacio Atanay and Elisa A. Atanay, and that his said codefendants have been and now are the owners of said property, to the exclusion of any right, title, or interest of the plaintiff herein.

The defendants Ygnacio Atanay and Elisa A. Atanay have also appeared and filed their separate answer and cross-complaint herein, wherein in their said answer they repeat practically the averments of the answer and affirmative defenses of the defendants Hammock herein, and which are by reference adopted in their cross-complaint. They allege themselves to be the owners in fee and entitled to the possession of said real estate, and pray that the court, as against the plaintiff, should so decree. To the cross-complaint of said latter defendants the plaintiff filed an answer, denying that the cross-complainants were the owners or entitled to any interest in said real estate.

Upon the submission of the cause the court made its findings of fact and conclusions of law, wherein it found the facts substantially to be as those above stated, and further found that on September 9, 1920, T. Saiki had assigned and transferred to the plaintiff Mori Saiki, his minor son, a native-born citizen of the state of California, all his right, title, and interest in the aforesaid contract for the purchase of said real estate, and that said Mori Saiki had thereby become, and had ever since been, and still was the owner thereof, and of all of the interest, right, and title of T. Saiki in and to the whole of said real estate. The court further found that the purchase price of said real estate, as specified in said contract, was at the time of the execution thereof, and had ever since been, the reasonable market value of the property, and that the contract was in all respects a fair, reasonable, just, and equitable agreement between the parties thereto. The court further found that subsequent to September 9, 1920, defendant Luke Hammock had purported to convey the legal title to said real estate unto his codefendants Atanay, but that whatever title or interest said defendants Atanay took by virtue of said conveyance they took with full notice and knowledge that the defendants Hammock had prior thereto executed to T. Saiki the contract above referred to for the purchase of said property, and had fully received the purchase price thereof, and had thereupon delivered to T. Saiki the possession of said real estate.

As conclusions of law from the foregoing findings of fact, the court found that the plaintiff Mori Saiki was and ever since September 9, 1920, had been the owner in fee simple and entitled to the possession of said real estate, and that neither said defendants nor any of them had any right, title, or interest therein, and that the plaintiff was entitled to have a conveyance of said property executed to him by the defendants herein, and that in the event of their refusal to execute such conveyance a commissioner should be appointed by the court, with full power and authority to execute the same. The judgment, following the findings and conclusions of law, was duly made and entered on November 12, 1925, and it is from such judgment that the defendants have taken and now prosecute this appeal.

The contract between T. Saiki and the defendants Luke and Hannah Hammock was made and entered into on June 9, 1920, and the assignment thereof to his minor son, the plaintiff herein, occurred prior to the adoption and taking effect of the Alien Land Law of California, known as the Alien Land Act of 1920 (St. 1921, p. lxxxiii), and which became effective in December of that year. It is undeniable, therefore, that the law applicable to these transactions is the Alien Land Law enacted by the Legislature of California in the year 1913. This being so, the validity of the contract in question and the assignment thereof by T. Saiki to his minor son, Mori Saiki, a native-born citizen of California on September 9, 1920, is to be governed by the decisions of this court recently rendered bearing upon the validity of such an agreement and also of the assignment thereof to persons eligible to take the title to property of this character under the terms of the act of 1913. It is to be noted that the trial court, while it has found that the original contract for the purchase of said real estate was made and entered into with T. Saiki, a Japanese alien, it has also found that the assignment thereof to his minor son, Mori Saiki, on September 9, 1920, was in all respects regular, and that thereby the entire interest of T. Saiki in and to said agreement and in and to the property described therein was regularly transferred to his said minor son.

It would therefore seem that the cases of Estate of Yano, 188 Cal. 645, 206 P. 995, In re Akado, 188 Cal. 739, 207 P. 245, Mott v. Cline, 200 Cal. 434, 253 P. 718, and Suwa v. Johnson, 54 Cal. App. 119, 203 P. 414, cover every phase of the question presented for our consideration upon this appeal, and that any consideration of authorities from other jurisdictions or of cases decided with relation to alien land laws differing in material respects from the California Alien Land Act of 1913 (St. 1913, p. 206), as interpreted by this court in the foregoing cases, has been rendered unnecessary to the determination of this particular appeal. It would further appear to be undeniable that the Alien Land Act of 1920, and which became effective in December of that year, and which in no respect was made retroactive, can have no effect in the determination of the issues presented upon this appeal. The reasoning and conclusion of the trial court to the effect that, although T. Saiki was an ineligible alien at the time of his entering into the contract in question, and although whatever right or title in or to said property he may have acquired by the payment in full of the purchase price of said property was the subject of escheat to the state under the act of 1913, he nevertheless possessed the right to transfer his right and interest thus obtained therein to an eligible person, and that his transfer thereof to his minor son was, under the findings made by the trial court a legitimate and permissible transaction, is fully sustained by the foregoing authorities.

It follows that the plaintiff became, by virtue of said assignment, as fully entitled to maintain this action and to compel the specific enforcement of the foregoing agreement as though he had been the original and direct beneficiary of the agreement for the purchase of said real estate.

The judgment is affirmed.

Geo. W. ALLEN, Administrator of Estate of John B. Ryan, Sometimes Known as Jack Ryan, Deceased, Plaintiff and Appellant, v. W. C. WACHTER and J. L. Taylor Company (a Corporation), Defendants and Respondents. (L. A. 9388.)

Supreme Court of California. March 26, 1929.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

Jas. W. Glassford, of El Centro, for appellant.

Harry W. Horton, of El Centro, for respondents.

LANGDON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in which it was determined that the defendants were the owners and entitled to the immediate possession of a large wooden structure known as a "cantaloupe shed," located on leased ground at Imperial, Cal. The contest was between the public administrator, as the personal representative of John B. Ryan, deceased, a former owner of the property, and the defendants, who alleged that deceased had transferred the property to them before his death in payment of an indebtedness due to defendants and equal to the value of the shed.

The appeal presents merely one question of fact: Whether or not the evidence sustains the finding that the transfer of the property from decedent to defendants, by duly executed bill of sale, constituted a sale under all the facts and circumstances. We are not disposed to discuss the evidence in detail; it is apparent that it is not convincing. There are conflicting inferences which might be drawn from the record and the trial court has resolved the conflict in favor of the defendants. In view of the fact that the burden rested upon the plaintiff, the defendants being in possession and having a bill of sale, valid on its face, we cannot say this action of the trial court was not justified.

JOERGER v. PACIFIC GAS & ELECTRIC CO. et al.★

SAME v. MT. SHASTA POWER CORPORATION et al.

(Sac. 3865.)

Rehearing Denied May 9, 1929.

1. Action 🔑50(4)—Causes of action, one of which affects all defendants, may be joined, notwithstanding others may affect only some of defendants, where all parties are concerned in main purpose of litigation (Code Civ. Proc. § 427).

Notwithstanding language of Code Civ. Proc. § 427, if one of causes of action affects all of parties, it is no objection that other causes of action affect only some of them, where all the parties are concerned in the main purpose of the litigation, in which case it is not material that they are all affected alike or in the same manner or degree.

2. Appeal and error 🔑1170(4)—Judgment on merits will not be reversed for misjoinder of parties or causes, unless it appears that substantial prejudice has resulted (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

When a case has been tried and judgment rendered on merits, reversal for misjoinder of causes or parties will not be ordered, in view of Const. art. 6, § 4½, unless it appears that some substantial rights of the demurrant have been prejudicially affected.

3. Appeal and error 🔑161—Interrelated corporations represented by same counsel waived objections to misjoinder by appealing only from portions of judgment under which they received no benefits.

Where defendant companies, interrelated and represented by same counsel, received substantial benefits under parts of judgment which have become final, and appeal only from other portions, they will be held to have waived objection of misjoinder of causes and parties.

4. Trial 🔑345—Defendants, not objecting that form of verdict submitted did not segregate damages as to defendants, could not raise objection after verdict.

Objection of failure of verdict to segregate damages as between several defendants was waived, where no suggestion was made, when court announced form of verdict which he would submit, that such form was insufficient or uncertain.

5. Waters and water courses 🔑152(10)—Quantity of water required to irrigate land is question for court, to be determined on evidence of circumstances.

The quantity of water necessary for irrigation of particular lands is one of fact for the court in a given case to determine on evidence presented, depending on many different conditions.

6. Waters and water courses 🔑143—No exact uniform rule for computing duty or reasonable quantity of water for irrigation can be applied in all cases.

There can be no exact uniform rule for computing duty or reasonable quantity of water for irrigation to be applied in all cases alike.

7. Waters and water courses 🔑143—Greatest public duty from public waters in interest of agriculture and other beneficial purposes is required by public policy (Civ. Code, § 1411).

Under Civ. Code, § 1411, public policy requires the highest and greatest public duty from the waters of the state in the interest of agriculture and other useful and beneficial purposes.

8. Waters and water courses 🔑143—Diversion of water in excess of amount reasonably necessary, no matter how long continued, confers no rights to excess (Civ. Code, § 1411).

Acquired right in waters is limited, in view of Civ. Code, § 1411, to amount reasonably necessary for beneficial purpose for which diverted, and no title can be acquired to that part of diversion, no matter how long continued which is in excess of such needs.

9. Waters and water courses 🔑143—Long-continued use of given quantity of water may raise presumption of necessary and beneficial use of that amount.

Long-continued use of given quantity of water by appropriation may raise a presumption of necessary and beneficial use of that amount; it not being reasonable to suppose that appropriator would injure his land by use of excessive amount.

10. Waters and water courses 🔑143—Appropriator is not required to use best methods of irrigation or take extraordinary precautions to prevent waste.

Appropriator is not bound to adopt best method for utilizing water or take extraordinary precautions to prevent waste, but, as long as he makes reasonable use of water according to custom of locality, other users cannot complain that his methods are wasteful.

11. Waters and water courses 🔑143—Appropriator is not required to abandon flood system of irrigation common to that locality because of waste or in order that others may benefit.

Owner of hilly and porous lands, marked by numerous depressions, irrigating by means of the flood system, is not required to abandon such method common to that locality, or is not to be deprived of the quantity of water appropriated and necessary under that method because of waste in order to benefit others.

12. Appeal and error 🔑994(3), 1012(2)—Weight and credibility of witnesses are for trial court, whose conclusion, supported by substantial evidence, will not be disturbed.

Questions of weight and credibility of witnesses are for the trial court, and its conclusion will not be disturbed, where it has the support of substantial evidence.

13. Waters and water courses 🔑152(8)—Conflicting testimony of experts and practical farmers held to support findings of trial court as to quantity of water reasonably necessary for irrigation.

Conflicting evidence of experts and practical farmers as to quantity of water necessary to irrigate plaintiff's lands held to support findings of trial court.

14. Waters and water courses 🔑145—Water right may be enlarged in same manner as new appropriation may be made.

A water right may be enlarged in the same manner as a new appropriation may be made.

15. Waters and water courses 🔑152(8)—Evidence of quantity of water used for prescriptive period held to sustain court's finding, irrespective of amount appropriated by predecessor in title.

Evidence showing amount of water actually used for irrigating plaintiff's lands for more than prescriptive period before commencement of action sufficiently sustained court's findings, irrespective of amount appropriated by plaintiff's predecessor in title.

16. Waters and water courses 🔑77—Evidence of pollution held to support verdict for damages for lower user.

Evidence of pollution of water rendering it unfit for domestic or dairy purposes by upper appropriator and riparian owner held to sustain verdict for damages for lower user.

17. Waters and water courses 🔑65—Upper riparian owner cannot use water for generation of electricity so as to seriously injure property and rights of lower user.

An upper riparian proprietor has no right to use water in the generation of electricity in such manner as to seriously and substantially injure the rights and property of a lower owner and user.

18. Waters and water courses 🔑75—Pollution of stream rendering water unwholesome is nuisance, which equity will enjoin, and for which lower riparian owner is entitled to redress.

Any use of stream which materially fouls and adulterates water, or deposit or discharge therein of filthy or noxious substances impairing value of water for ordinary purposes of life, or anything that renders water less wholesome than when in ordinary state, constitutes nuisance, which equity will enjoin, and for which lower riparian owner, injured thereby, is entitled to redress.

19. Evidence 🔑18—It is common knowledge that pure and wholesome water for domestic and farming use is valuable asset, materially affecting farm values.

It is common knowledge that pure and wholesome water for domestic uses and in farming operations is a valuable asset, and that its presence or absence materially affects value of farm property.

20. Waters and water courses 🔑84, 140—Appropriator at time lands at diversion point were part of public domain acquires rights of continued flow of water in original purity prior to rights of subsequent riparian owner.

One who acquires by appropriation the right to use waters at a time when lands at point of diversion were part of public domain has the right to a continued flow of water in its original purity and amount prior and superior to rights of riparian owners subsequently acquiring lands at point of diversion.

21. Waters and water courses 🔑74—Any use which defiles or corrupts water, impairing usefulness for purpose of prior appropriator, is remediable at law and in equity.

So far as the rights of a prior appropriator are concerned, any use which defiles or corrupts the water so as to essentially impair its priority and usefulness for purpose appropriated by prior appropriator is an invasion of his private rights, for which he is entitled to remedy both at law and in equity.

22. Evidence 🔑542—County health officer and physician, not bacteriologist, held qualified, without chemical analysis, to testify that water supply was unfit for domestic use.

Physician and county health officer held qualified to testify as to fitness for domestic use of plaintiff's water supply as against objection that he was not bacteriologist and had made no analysis of water; it not requiring bacteriologist to determine whether water is muddy, full of algæ and bugs, and therefore unpalatable.

23. Waters and water courses 🔑152(7)—Testimony that all water used on plaintiff's lands were necessary to produce maximum crops held admissible.

Evidence that all waters used by plaintiff for irrigation were necessary to produce maximum crops, based on their experience or judgment, held admissible without reference to amount of water by actual measurement used.

24. Appeal and error 🔑703—On appeal under alternative method, errors in instructions given are not reviewable, where transcript does not contain requested instructions or reveal which instructions were given on court's initiative.

On appeal prepared under alternative method, error predicated on instructions given is not reviewable, where transcript does not contain copies of requested instructions, and does not reveal which instructions were given by court on its own initiative.

25. Pleading 🔑380—Evidence of crop damages subsequent to bringing of water right suit, but due to unlawful acts committed prior to filing amended and supplemental complaint, held admissible (Civ. Code, § 3283).

Under Civ. Code, § 3283, evidence of damage to plaintiff's crops subsequent to commencement of action was properly received, where such damage was in consequence of unlawful acts of defendants committed prior to filing of amended and supplemental complaint.

26. Damages 🔑62(3)—Victim of continuing nuisance need not take expensive measures to prevent further injury and possibly minimize damages.

The rule that plaintiff must minimize damages due to another's negligence does not require one suffering from continuing nuisance to take active measures, involving considerable expense, which may or may not be practical, to prevent further injury in order to possibly minimize damages for which wrongdoer may be liable.

27. Damages 🔑62(3)—Water user held not required to install filter to minimize damages, in absence of evidence of practicability and expense.

Appropriator of water held not required to install filter to minimize damages from defendant's pollution of stream, in absence of showing that such filter could be installed at reasonable expense or would be practicable.

28. Waters and water courses 🔑264—Evidence of cost of concrete flume, and that it was necessary to restore ditch to condition prior to defendants' acts, held admissible, notwithstanding ultimate finding that plaintiff was entitled to less water than claimed.

Where evidence tended to show that defendants had destroyed plaintiff's ditch, evidence that concrete flume was necessary to put diversion system in as good condition as it was prior to defendants' acts, and evidence as to cost of such flume, held admissible, notwithstanding ultimate finding that plaintiff was entitled to less flow than he claimed.

29. Waters and water courses 🔑264—Owner of ditch destroyed by defendants' wrongful acts is entitled to restoration of property destroyed.

Defendant whose ditch was destroyed by defendants' wrongful acts held entitled to damages measured by the cost of restoration of the property destroyed.

30. Waters and water courses 🔑264—Defendants destroying ditch and making impossible reconstruction of earthen ditch cannot exclude evidence of cost of restoration not limited to that of earthen ditch.

Defendants, having destroyed plaintiff's ditch, cannot object that evidence of cost of restoration should have been limited to restoration of ditch of character of the one destroyed, which was rendered impossible by defendants' acts; plaintiff being entitled to restoration in manner that would meet changed conditions.

31. Evidence 🔑450(3)—Deed to land and riparian rights held not ambiguous so as to permit parol evidence of parties' intention.

Deed of "all that portion of the southeast quarter of section 20 lying and being west of a line running along the east bank of Hat creek and following the water's edge," followed by statement of parties' intention to transfer all riparian rights by reason of ownership in said legal subdivision of land particularly described, held not uncertain or ambiguous of description as to what was intended to pass thereunder so as to render admissible parol evidence of parties' intentions.

32. Deeds 🔑111—Deed passes only what is described in grant.

Only that passes by deed to realty which is described in the grant.

33. Evidence 🔑448—Parol evidence is admissible to interpret deed only where intention of parties, through fraud, mistake, or uncertainty, is left in doubt.

Parol evidence is admissible to show intent of parties to deed, where, through fraud or mistake, or because of uncertainty of terms of deed, the intention of the parties is left in doubt.

34. Evidence 🔑385—Meaning not found in instrument cannot be given under guise of construction or explanation (Code Civ. Proc. § 1856).

In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 1856, a meaning cannot be given to an instrument under the guise of construction or explanation which is not to be found in the instrument itself.

35. Waters and water courses 🔑131—Appropriator may acquire prescriptive right to divert and use water on land that he does not own, and user may be by claimant or his lessee or tenant.

An appropriator of water may acquire prescriptive right to divert and use the same from a stream on land that he does not own, and this user may be either by the claimant or by one holding under him as lessee or tenant.

36. Waters and water courses 🔑144—Rental and sale of water is beneficial use, but quantity claimed by appropriator must have been actually applied to beneficial purpose and reasonably necessary.

Rental and sale of water is a beneficial use, but the quantity claimed must not only have been actually used, but must have been reasonably necessary and actually applied to beneficial purpose.

37. Waters and water courses 🔑144—No prescriptive right to appropriate water for use on lands of others can be acquired by user without application to beneficial purpose.

No prescriptive right to appropriate water for use on lands of another can be acquired without beneficial use, regardless of period of time user may have been continued.

38. Waters and water courses 🔑152(8)—Evidence of permissive use of seepage and waste waters from predecessor's ditch held to sustain finding that plaintiff was not entitled to use waters of ditch for irrigation.

Evidence as to permissive use by plaintiff of seepage and waste water from ditch of predecessor in title on lands then owned by plaintiff held to sustain finding that plaintiff was not entitled to use waters of such ditch to irrigate such lands.

39. Waters and water courses 🔑130—Permissive use of waste or seepage water gives user no permanent right to continuance of supply.

Permissive use of seepage and waste waters creates no right in ditch, and lands so irrigated acquired no right appurtenant to ditch, since no permanent right can be acquired to have waste water supply continued either by appropriation or prescription.

40. Appeal and error 🔑1010(1)—Findings of fact in water right suit, sustained by evidence, cannot be disturbed on appeal.

Findings of fact in water right suit, sustained by evidence, cannot be disturbed on appeal.

41. Waters and water courses 🔑152(8)—Finding that appropriator is entitled to stated quantity of water is unwarranted, in absence of evidence showing quantity of water actually used.

In the absence of evidence as to quantity of water actually used, finding of fact that appropriator is entitled to stated quantity of water for use on its lands cannot be sustained.

Appeal from Superior Court, Shasta County; Walter E. Herzinger, Judge.

Action by Louis P. Joerger against the Pacific Gas & Electric Company, the Mt. Shasta Power Corporation, and others. The action was dismissed as to the defendant first named, and, from the judgment rendered, both plaintiff and the remaining defendants have appealed. Reversed in part, and in part remanded.

Jesse W. Carter, of Redding, and Annette Abbott Adams, of San Francisco, for plaintiff.

Thos. J. Straub, of San Francisco, and Chenoweth & Leininger and Carr & Kennedy, all of Redding, for defendants.

TYLER, Justice pro tem. Action to quiet title to certain lands and water rights and for damages for interference therewith. The transcript is voluminous, consisting of many thousands of pages. The questions presented are numerous, the briefs and supplements thereto being made up of over 3,000 pages. A complete recital of the pleadings and the facts would extend our opinion to undue proportions. We will therefore state only those which, in our opinion, are necessary to a full understanding and proper disposition of the questions here presented. The issues are framed upon an amended and supplemental complaint containing four separate counts or causes of action, and an amended answer of defendants Mt. Shasta Power Corporation, hereinafter referred to as the power company, and the Red River Lumber Company, hereinafter referred to as the lumber company.

The first three causes of action are of equitable cognizance, involving the quieting of title to lands and certain water rights owned by the plaintiff, and the fourth relates to damages alleged to have been suffered by reason of numerous torts or trespasses upon, and interference by defendants with, such lands and water rights. The case was tried before the court and a jury. The issues raised by the first three counts were considered equitable, and were decided by the trial judge, and the issue as to damages raised by the fourth count was submitted to, and decided by, the jury. The Joerger ranch is owned by plaintiff, and is a consolidation of what was at one time four different ranches. These ranches were known as the "Tucker Place," the "Grant Place," the "Smith Place" or "Smith-Braden" or "Smith-Schnittger Place," and the "Braden Place," and they were acquired by plaintiff during the years 1917 and 1920, the entire acreage consisting of some 1,680 acres. The lands are situated in Shasta county, and plaintiff has been engaged in farming portions thereof since the year 1917. A stream, known as Hat creek, flows through a portion of plaintiff's land in a northwesterly direction, and Pit river flows along the northeasterly boundary thereof, and the two streams unite a short distance beyond the northwestern boundary of said lands. At the time plaintiff acquired this property, and for many years prior thereto, portions of all of these ranches, approximating some 530 acres, so it is alleged, had been irrigated with water from Hat creek, conveyed onto the land by means of two ditches. One of these ditches diverted water from the west side of Hat creek, and conveyed it in a northerly direction, and was known as the "Tucker-Fitzpatrick Ditch" or "Tucker-Joerger Ditch." The other diverted water from the east side of said creek, and conveyed the same in a like direction, and was known as the "John Smith Ditch." Plaintiff's entire tract is somewhat irregular, and a large portion of the cultivated area consists of hills, knolls, swales, and depressions, which have been cleared and cultivated without any attempt being made to level the land for scientific irrigation, its character rendering this impossible. The system employed by plaintiff and his predecessors in interest to irrigate the cultivated portion is known as the flood system. In the operation of this system, large quantities of water are required in order to cover the irregular surface of the land, which quantities plaintiff claims to have acquired by user. The defendant Mt. Shasta Power Corporation is a subsidiary corporation to the Pacific Gas & Electric Company. These corporations are public utilities, engaged in the manufacture and distribution of electricity for public use. The lumber company is a private corporation, to which the power company transferred its plant upon completion, but continued its operation under some agreement with the lumber company. These companies dispute, in part, plaintiff's claim to the waters.

The first count of the complaint, after alleging ownership in plaintiff and his predecessors in interest of the land in question and of the Tucker-Fitzpatrick ditch for over 30 years, recites that Hat creek is, and from time immemorial has been, a natural stream, and is one of the largest tributaries of Pit river, into which it flows; that plaintiff and his predecessors in interest have by right diverted from Hat creek 1,000 inches of water, measured under a 6-inch pressure, for irrigation, watering stock, and domestic purposes, and that said water is appurtenant to a portion of plaintiff's lands; that the power company threatens to divert all the water of Hat creek. The second cause of action alleges ownership of the John Smith ditch and the right to divert from Hat creek through said ditch 1,600 inches of water, under a 6-inch pressure, for like purposes as stated in the first cause of action; that such right is likewise appurtenant to plaintiff's land, and threatened diversion by defendants is again alleged. The third cause of action alleges ownership in plaintiff of the Joerger ranch, and recites the whole is riparian to Hat creek, and that plaintiff is entitled to 2,600 inches of water as necessary for irrigation, stock, and domestic purposes. It is then further alleged that plaintiff and his predecessors in interest have at great expense cultivated and irrigated large areas of the ranch, and constructed ditches and other works so as to produce hay, feed, pasturage, vegetables, and other crops, and that in doing so they diverted, for more than 20 years under a claim of right, 2,600 inches of water under a six-inch pressure, and that such amount was and still is necessary to irrigate plaintiff's riparian lands, and plaintiff is entitled to such flow. Further allegations in this count recite that, since the commencement of this action, defendants have constructed a power plant on lands owned by one of them, situated on Hat creek, immediately above the boundary line of plaintiff's ranch, and by means of a dam, flume, and pipe line have diverted substantially all of the waters of Hat creek, and run the same through the power house for the generation of electricity; that during the course of construction of the dam, flume, and other works, and since the same were constructed, defendants have caused large quantities of débris, dirt, and other substances to pollute the waters of Hat creek; that they have stored the water and turned the same loose with great violence, washing trees and débris down on plaintiff's lands, and have shut off the water of said creek and thereby destroyed natural barriers between fields, permitting stock to pass back and forth without let or hindrance. The fourth cause of action incorporates by reference certain paragraphs of the third count, and recites the ownership in plaintiff and his predecessors in interest of the Tucker-Fitzpatrick and John Smith ditches, and the acquisition and right of plaintiff to divert 2,600 inches of water through the same; that defendants have caused earth, rock, and débris to fill up the ditches and the intakes, and interrupt the flow of water therein, and have caused dirt and filth to enter the ditches, thereby polluting the waters. Defendants are further charged with having cut the banks of the ditches and diverted the waters, and with having installed a pipe line under one of the ditches, making it impossible for plaintiff to go upon and over the same for the purpose of cleaning and repairing it. It is also charged that defendants have constructed a flume around the mountain side above plaintiff's ditch; that said mountain side is very steep, and, when water is turned into the flume, the seepage therefrom will cause slides, and cover up and destroy plaintiff's ditch, and cut off his water supply. The removal of earth and rock from the hillside on which defendant's power plant is constructed and the dumping of the same on plaintiff's land and in Hat creek is also complained of. Further allegations are to the effect that, since the commencement of the action, and during the years 1921 and 1922, defendants have diverted the water of Hat creek and diminished the flow thereof, in consequence of which plaintiff's crops have been destroyed. And finally it is charged that defendants have caused the waters to become so polluted that they are unfit for watering stock, in consequence of which plaintiff has been compelled to discontinue his dairy and go out of business. Plaintiff prays that his title to the lands and his right to 2,600 inches be quieted, and that an injunction issue restraining defendants from interfering with his vested rights, and that he be awarded $140,000 damages. To this complaint each of the defendants, the Pacific Gas & Electric Company and the power and lumber companies, filed and presented separate demurrers. The gas company was dismissed from the action. The demurrers of the other defendants were directed mainly to the misjoinder of parties and causes of action. The demurrers were overruled.

Defendants thereupon filed separate answers. They deny and allege as follows: As to the first cause of action they deny complete ownership in plaintiff of the Tucker-Fitzpatrick ditch, its capacity, or that plaintiff has irrigated the amount of land he claims; allege its capacity and the right of defendants to a portion of the waters in both ditches to irrigate their lands; deny that plaintiff has diverted 1,600 inches of water through the John Smith ditch, or that he requires such amount; deny that such ditch is appurtenant to the Tucker lands, or that it has the capacity alleged by plaintiff; deny that the Braden place is riparian to Hat creek, and allege the lumber company to be the owner of the bed and banks of said creek as the same flows through certain lands; deny that all the lands described in the second and third causes of action are riparian to said creek, and set forth the portions that are riparian. As to the third cause of action they allege that not more than 230 acres of plaintiff's ranch have been irrigated, and deny that plaintiff has diverted 2,600 inches of water; allege diversion of water by defendants, and set forth the construction of the plant by the power company and its lease to the lumber company; deny the acts of damage complained of. As to the fourth cause of action, they deny the resulting damage or that any will occur in the future; deny that the flow of water is impeded or polluted, and allege that a reasonable riparian use of the same is being made by defendants.

By way of separate defense they allege ownership in the lumber company of certain riparian lands and ownership of all the waters in Hat creek, except the amount to which plaintiff is entitled; allege the diversion of the water onto the riparian land, and that it is conducted through a flume to the power house and returned to Hat creek on the riparian lands; allege that the electricity generated is distributed to the use of the public; allege that 13.4 cubic feet have been permitted to flow in the Tucker ditch and 14.4 in the John Smith ditch; allege the diversion of excessive amounts of water by plaintiff, and that such excessive amounts have deprived defendants of the use thereof, and caused them irreparable injury. As a second defense they set forth ownership of the bed and banks of Hat creek from the northern boundary of plaintiff's land to the confluence of Hat creek with Pit river, and the ownership of certain parts of the bed and banks of Pit river, and they set forth the details of the construction of pit No. 3 power development; allege that all the waters naturally flowing in Pit river and its tributaries, including Hat creek, are reasonably needed for the beneficial purpose of the generation of electricity on said riparian lands involved in pit No. 3. By a third separate defense the power company sets up the plea of the statute of limitations. The prayer asks that the lumber company be decreed to be the owner of the riparian lands in sections 20 and 29. and, as such owner, that it has the right to use all the waters of Hat creek for the generation of electricity, subject to the right of plaintiff to take a reasonable amount, not to exceed 93 inches, during the irrigation season, and 2 miner's inches during the nonirrigation season, and for an injunction against plaintiff.

[1] At the close of the trial, the court made certain findings which, with the conclusions of law, cover many pages of the record. Plaintiff was awarded certain rights in the waters involved and damages in the sum of $40,000. Defendants were awarded an interest in certain of the lands and certain riparian rights. Both plaintiff and defendants have appealed from certain portions of the judgment. In order to avoid repetition, the various assignments of error will be stated where dealt with. The first claim made by defendants is that the trial court committed error in overruling their demurrers to the amended and supplemental complaint, as amended, for the reason that misjoinder of causes of action and of parties defendant appear on the face of that pleading. We have been cited to numerous cases by counsel for both parties upon this subject. We do not consider an extensive review of those authorities to be necessary. One of the objects of the reformed or code procedure is to simplify the pleadings and conduct of actions, and to permit the settlement of all matters of controversy between parties in one action, so far as may be practicable. The principal objection of defendants to the pleading is that some of the causes of action united in the fourth count are against the power company alone, while others are against both defendants jointly. It has been held in this state that, notwithstanding the language of section 427 of the Code of Civil Procedure, if one of the causes of action affects all of the parties, it is no objection that other causes of action affect only some of them, where all the parties are concerned in the main purpose of the litigation. In such case it is not material that they are all affected alike or in the same manner or degree, for the reason the relief awarded, if any, may be properly adjusted between them. Hepler v. Wright, 35 Cal. App. 567, 170 P. 667. Of course, causes of complaint differing in their nature, and having no connection with each other, cannot be united. The object of this exception is to prevent the confusion and embarrassment which would necessarily result from the union of diverse and incongruous matters, but the exception has no application to a case embracing a variety of circumstances, so connected as to form one transaction, even though the parties are not equally affected. If equality or uniformity were required a large part of the reformed or code procedure relating to this subject would be swept away. To permit a joinder where possible makes manifestly for the expeditious disposition of litigation without working hardship to any party defendant, and for this reason statutes relating to joinder should be liberally construed, unless expressly forbidden, to the end that a multiplicity of suits may be prevented. It is well settled that judgment may be given against such of several defendants jointly charged as are shown to be liable and in favor of the others who are not.

[2, 3] It is equally well settled that, when a case has been tried and judgment rendered upon the merits, in order to warrant a reversal for misjoinder, it must appear that some substantial rights of the demurrant have been affected, some prejudicial error suffered by him, or he has no room for complaint. Alexander v. Central, etc., Co., 104 Cal. 537, 38 P. 410; Foerst v. Kelso, 131 Cal. 376, 378, 63 P. 681; Allen v. Globe Grain & Milling Co., 156 Cal. 286, 104 P. 305; 24 Cal. Jur. p. 880; section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution has been applied to such a situation; Trask v. Garza, 51 Cal. App. 739–743, 197 P. 807. See, also, Hirshfelds v. Weill, 121 Cal. 13, 53 P. 402. Then again defendants have not appealed from the entire judgment. They received substantial benefits thereunder, which have become final. A waiver of the objection of misjoinder ought to be applied against them. Defendant companies are closely interrelated in the transaction upon which the action is based. They were represented by the same attorneys below, and are so represented here. Nothing appears from the record which indicates that either defendant has been injured or prejudiced by reason of any misjoinder, even assuming such to exist. Under such circumstances they should not here be heard to complain. Harker v. Southern California Edison Co., 83 Cal. App. 204, 256 P. 848.

[4] The same may be said of the further objection that failure to segregate damages between the defendants constituted error. In this connection it appears from the record that it was agreed between the parties that the questions of damages should not be determined by the trial court, but should be left to the jury. When the form of verdict was considered by the court in the presence of counsel for all parties, some question arose with reference to it, but it was finally agreed that the one adopted by the court should be given to the jury. Had defendants desired a different form, they should have asked for it. Assuming that they did not expressly agree to the form adopted, they could not stand idly by, and, after the rendition of the verdict, then for the first time on appeal claim that, as they were not joint tort-feasors as to certain of the acts complained of, the damages should therefore have been segregated. At the time of the announcement of the form of verdict, defendants might have asked that it be made certain. Not having done so, they are concluded by their omission. Hicks v. Coleman, 25 Cal. 122, 85 Am. Dec. 103; Harker v. Southern California Edison Co., supra; First National Bank of Los Angeles v. Maxwell, 123 Cal. 360, 55 P. 980, 69 Am. St. Rep. 64.

[5, 6] Defendants next complain that the amount of water awarded to plaintiff for the various purposes claimed is excessive, and not supported by the evidence. In this connection it is contended that the allowance of 2½ miner's inches per acre to plaintiff for the irrigation season, and 1¼ miner's inches per acre during the nonirrigating season for the preservation of the ditch and other purposes, is excessive and wasteful as a matter of law, and further that the findings in this particular are not supported by the evidence. It is further claimed that the finding as to the beneficial use made by plaintiff of the waters and the acreage for which he is entitled to take water for irrigation purposes is materially less than that found by the court, and the amount allowed to plaintiff for the generation of power in the operation of his dairy and other purposes is excessive, and the method employed wasteful. In this state there is no statute which definitely regulates the duty or amount of water reasonably necessary for irrigation. This being so, the question becomes one of fact for the court, in a given case, to determine upon the evidence presented to it. The question of what quantum of water is reasonably required for irrigation is necessarily a complicated one, depending, as it does, upon many different conditions. The character of the soil, the area sought to be irrigated, the climatic conditions, the location, quality, and altitude of the lands, the kinds of crops to be raised, and the length of the irrigation season, must all be taken into consideration and weighed, as well with such other conditions as may be peculiar to each particular case. Pabst v. Finmand, 190 Cal. 124, 211 P. 11. Under such circumstances it is apparent there can be no exact uniform rule for computing the duty or reasonable quantity of water for irrigation to be applied in all cases alike. Witherill v. Brehm, 74 Cal. App. 286, 240 P. 529; California Pastoral Co. v. Madera Irr. Co., 167 Cal. 78, 138 P. 718.

[7-10] It is, of course, the policy of the state to require the highest and greatest public duty from the waters of the state in the interest of agriculture and other useful and beneficial purposes. Our Civil Code expressly so provides. Civ. Code, § 1411. There can be no question, therefore, that an acquired right in waters is limited to the amount that is reasonably necessary for the beneficial purpose for which it is diverted, and no title can be acquired to that part of a diversion which is excessive of such needs. In so far as the diversion exceeds such reasonably necessary amount, it is contrary to the policy of the law, and is a taking without right, and confers no title, no matter for how long continued. Big Rock Water Co. v. Valyermo Ranch Co., 78 Cal. App. 266, 248 P. 264. Defendants assert that an examination of all the California cases will reveal the fact that no decree has ever been upheld awarding more than one miner's inch per acre. This may be true, and yet such circumstance is not controlling, for this court cannot fix a limit beyond which a trial court may or may not go, or say, as a matter of law, that the amount allowed is excessive, irrespective of the evidence. As above stated, the amount of water necessary for beneficial use is a question of fact in each particular case. 1 Wiel on Water Rights, 523. The question is not to be determined by rule, but rather by the evidence presented to the court or jury. In passing, it may be said that, in the ascertainment of this fact, long-continued use of a given quantity of water by appropriation may raise a presumption of necessary and beneficial use, for it is not reasonable to suppose that one would destroy or impair the value of his land by the use of an excessive amount. California Pastoral Co. v. Madera Irr. Co., supra; Campbell v. Ingram, 37 Cal. App. 728, 174 P. 366; Stinson Canal Co. v. Lemoore Canal & Irr. Co., 45 Cal. App. 242, 188 P. 77. Nor is there merit in the claim that the method employed by plaintiff in diverting the water is unauthorized. While an appropriator can claim only the amount which is necessary to properly supply his needs, and can permit no water to go to waste, he is not bound, as here claimed, to adopt the best method for utilizing the water or take extraordinary precautions to prevent waste. He is entitled to make a reasonable use of the water according to the custom of the locality, and, as long as he does so, other persons cannot complain of his acts. The amount of water required to irrigate his lands should, therefore, be determined by reference to the system used, although it may result in some waste which might be avoided by the adoption of another or more elaborate and extensive distribution system. Farnham on Waters, § 675; Wiel on Water Rights (3d Ed.) § 481; Barrows v. Fox, 98 Cal. 63, 32 P. 811.

[11-13] The lands of plaintiff, as above pointed out, constitute a contiguous area along the knolls and sloping hillsides adjacent to Hat creek. The ground is hilly and porous, marked by numerous depressions, and is irrigated by turning the water upon the ground and permitting it to run over the slopes. This is the character of system commonly used in the vicinity. There is no authority which requires an appropriator of water to change his system of irrigation so that others may perhaps be benefited thereby, assuming that the method may produce some waste. Barrows v. Fox, supra. The findings of the trial court as to the allowance of water and the beneficial use that plaintiff has made thereof for various purposes, and the area of land irrigated by him, except as hereinafter stated. find full support in the evidence. Many witnesses, both scientific and lay, testified concerning plaintiff's claims in this respect, and their testimony fully supports the findings of the trial court upon these subjects. We do not feel that it is incumbent upon us to go into a detailed analysis of the voluminous evidence in this connection, which consists of many hundred pages. Defendants call our attention to the fact that many of plaintiff's witnesses are farmers, and that their testimony is at variance with that of defendants' experts. Plaintiff, too, produced experts in support of his claims, but the trial court was not bound to accept the testimony of any of these witnesses to the exclusion of the farmers who were familiar with the character of the land and its needs. Their testimony was also entitled to be considered. It has been said that this character of testimony is of a higher quality than the mere opinion of an expert; that it is the difference between practice and theory, between experience and observation or examination. Stinson v. Lemoore, etc., supra. Moreover, questions of the weight of evidence and credibility of witnesses are for the trial court, and its conclusion will not be disturbed, where it has the support of substantial evidence.

[14-17] Equally without merit is the further objection that the allowance of the number of inches in the John Smith ditch exceeds the amount claimed by one of plaintiff's predecessors in her notice of appropriation. There is evidence to show the amount of water actually used for irrigation on plaintiff's lands for more than the prescriptive period, before the commencement of the action. An enlargement of a water right may be made in the same manner as a new appropriation. Defendants next complain that the claim for damages for the pollution of the water is not supported by the evidence. What we have said with reference to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings concerning the quantity and beneficial use of the waters to which plaintiff was entitled applies with equal force to this contention. Various witnesses testified as to the pollution and the resulting damage. It was shown that, by reason of defendants' activities, the water became alive with bugs and had green algæ growing therein, causing stagnation, in consequence of which it became unfit for domestic or dairy purposes, which caused plaintiff's premises to decrease $75,000 in value, and no attempt was made by defendants to contradict the amount of depreciation. Defendants' next contention is that, even assuming the quality of plaintiff's domestic and dairy water supply to have been depreciated by reason of their acts, nevertheless, as they are making a proper riparian use of the waters of Hat creek, and their rights are being exercised in a lawful and reasonable manner, any loss resulting to plaintiff is, under such circumstances, without redress. In other words, they contend that the generation of electricity is a lawful riparian use; that, as their riparian power is being created in a reasonable manner, any slight impairment of the quality of the water supply resulting therefrom must be borne by the lower riparian owners without complaint or redress, it being damnum absque injuria. This doctrine may properly be applied where the injury works slight inconveniences, or occasional annoyances. It has no application where the injury is appreciable. The evidence relied upon by plaintiff shows that the damage suffered by him was not slight, but on the contrary, was real and extensive, greatly exceeding the amount of damages recovered by him.

[18-20] The law is well settled that any use of a stream which materially fouls and adulterates the water, or the deposit or discharge therein of any filthy or noxious substances that so far affect the water as to impair its value for the ordinary purposes of life, or anything that renders the water less wholesome than when in its ordinary state, will constitute a nuisance, which courts of equity will enjoin, and for which a lower riparian owner, injured thereby, is entitled to redress. Trevett v. Prison Ass'n, 98 Va. 332, 36 S. E. 373, 50 L. R. A. 564, 81 Am. St. Rep. 727; Peterson v. City of Santa Rosa, 119 Cal. 387, 51 P. 557. Conceding, therefore, defendants' generation of power to be a riparian use, that fact does not entitle them to pollute the water to the injury of others entitled to it. Farnum on Waters, § 495, p. 1645; Mentone Irr. Co. v. Redlands L. & P. Co., 155 Cal. 323, 100 P. 1082, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 382, 17 Ann. Cas. 1222; 40 Cyc. pp. 593, 594; Fisher v. Feige, 137 Cal. 39, 69 P. 618, 59 L. R. A. 333, 92 Am. St. Rep. 77; Peterson v. City of Santa Rosa, 119 Cal. 387, 51 P. 557. It is a matter of common knowledge that pure and wholesome water for domestic uses, and in farming operations, is a valuable asset, and its presence or absence materially affects the value of farm property, and such rights cannot be destroyed by a riparian owner in a stream to such an extent as to render the water unfit for use. Yolande Coal Co. v. Pierce, 12 Ala. App. 431, 68 So. 563. Then again, plaintiff's rights as an appropriator to the waters in the ditches were acquired when the lands at the point of diversion were part of the public domain. Under these circumstances, plaintiff's right to a continued flow of the water in the ditches in its original purity is prior and superior to the rights of defendants as riparian owners. One of the essential elements of a valid appropriation is that of priority over others. Under this doctrine, he who is first in time is first in right, and, so long as he continues to apply the water to a beneficial use, subsequent appropriators may not deprive him of the rights his appropriation gives him, by diminishing the quantity or deteriorating the quality of the water.

[21] So far as the rights of the prior appropriator are concerned, any use which defiles or corrupts the water so as to essentially impair its priority and usefulness for the purpose for which the water was appropriated by the prior appropriator is an invasion of his private rights, for which he is entitled to a remedy both at law and in equity. 2 Kinney on Irrigation (2d Ed.) pp. 2069, 2070; 1 Wiel on Water Rights, § 524; Arizona Copper Co. v. Gillespie, 230 U. S. 46, 33 S. Ct. 1004, 57 L. Ed. 1384; Butte Canal & Ditch Co. v. Vaughn, 11 Cal. 143, 70 Am. Dec. 769; Phœnix Water Co. v. Fletcher, 23 Cal. 482; Hill v. Smith, 27 Cal. 476; Antioch v. Williams Irr. Dist., 188 Cal. 451, 205 P. 688.

[22, 23] Defendants complain of the admission of the testimony of one Dr. White, a physician and health officer of Shasta county, as to the fitness for domestic use of plaintiff's water supply; it being claimed that he was not a bacteriologist and had made no analysis of the water, for which reasons he was not qualified to testify upon the subject. There is no merit in this objection. As county health officer, he was certainly qualified to testify as to his opinion concerning the condition of the water and its fitness for domestic use. It does not require a bacteriologist to determine this question or that water is muddy, full of algæ and bugs, and that its taste is unpalatable due to such causes. Nor is there any merit in the claim that the court erred in admitting the testimony of certain witnesses for plaintiff to the effect that all the waters in the ditches were used, and that they were necessary for the irrigation of plaintiff's lands. The testimony was confined to the knowledge of the witnesses that all the waters used were necessary to produce maximum crops. They made no attempt to testify concerning the amount of water used by actual measurement. Their testimony was based upon their experience or judgment as to the amount of water necessary to properly irrigate the land, and had nothing to do with, nor did it relate to the amount of water used by actual measurement, that fact being established by other evidence. The testimony was admissible for the purpose for which it was received. Pabst v. Finmand, 190 Cal. 124, 211 P. 11.

[24] Complaint is made of certain instructions given to the jury. Defendants are in no position to avail themselves of alleged errors in this respect. The instructions requested by plaintiff and defendants do not appear in the transcript herein, which contains only the instructions as given by the court. Upon an appeal prepared under the alternative method instructions offered at the trial and refused by the judge, in order to be available to an appellant for use upon appeal, should be included in the reporter's transcript and settled by the judge. Since the transcript contains no copies of requested instructions by the parties, and does not reveal which of the instructions were given by the court on its own initiative, defendants cannot here complain of error in the instructions. Martin v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 195 Cal. 544, 234 P. 321; Shannon v. Calmus, 70 Cal. App. 652, 234 P. 107. For all that appears, they may have been presented by defendants themselves. However, we have examined all the instructions, and find no error contained therein.

[25-27] The ruling of the court in the admission and exclusion of certain evidence is next complained of. In this connection it is first contended that the trial court erred in admitting testimony as to plaintiff's damages to his crops for the years 1923 and 1924, for the reason that such damages were not within the issues; they having occurred subsequent to the filing of the complaint. The evidence was properly admitted. It was offered and received in support of plaintiff's claim that damage to his crops for the period involved was in consequence of the unlawful acts of defendants committed prior to the filing of the amended and supplemental complaint. Under such circumstances plaintiff was entitled to recover for the damage resulting after the commencement of the action. Civ. Code, § 3283; Hicks v. Drew, 117 Cal. 305, 49 P. 189; Bryson v. McCone, 121 Cal. 153, 53 P. 637; Berry v. Bakersfield, 177 Cal. 206, 170 P. 415. Nor did the court err, as claimed, in excluding evidence to the effect that the pollution in the Tucker-Fitzpatrick ditch could be eliminated by the installation of a filter at a reasonable expense. It is no doubt the rule that, where one suffers injury by the carelessness of another, the one so suffering must go to some trouble to avoid or lessen the damage, if a temporary expedient or slight expense will do so. This rule, however, does not compel a person who, as here, is suffering from a continuing nuisance, to take active measures which involve considerable expense, and which may or may not be practical, to prevent further injury in order to possibly minimize the damage for which the wrongdoer may be liable. 20 R. C. L. p. 494; Suffolk Gold M. & M. Co. v. San Miguel, 9 Colo. App. 407, 48 P. 828; Pelham Phosphate Co. v. Daniels, 21 Ga. App. 547, 94 S. E. 847; Worthen, etc., v. White Spring Paper Co., 74 N. J. Eq.

647, 70 A. 468; Johnston v. City of Galva, 316 Ill. 598, 147 N. E. 453, 38 A. L. R. 1384. It appeared from the proffered testimony that the installation of the filter could not be accomplished by a reasonable outlay. Nor was there any attempted showing that it would be practicable, considering the quantity of water claimed by plaintiff. The conditions here existing, including the cost of the filter render the rule invoked by defendants inapplicable. Chambers v. Belmore Land, etc., Co., 33 Cal. App. 78, 164 P. 404.

[28-30] Defendants next complain of the admission of evidence as to the cost of a concrete flume at the head of the John Smith ditch, claimed by plaintiff to be necessary by reason of defendants' acts in obstructing the intake of the ditch. The diversion weir in Hat creek is upstream from the ditch, and prior to the diversion by the power company of the water through its plant, such company constructed a wooden flume from the face of the dam into the ditch, and the water therefrom was carried though this flume after the construction of Hat No. 2 power plant. It appeared in evidence that this flume was leaking, and would soon decay, and it was necessary to replace this wooden flume in order to have the diversion works of the ditch in as good a condition as they were prior to the operations of the power plant. Plaintiff produced an engineer who testified that a permanent flume was necessary, and estimated the cost thereof, of a size sufficient to carry 46 second feet of water, the amount claimed to have been formerly diverted. Defendants' objection to this testimony is that the cost of a structure sufficient to carry the amount of water beneficially used by plaintiff as found by the court constitutes plaintiff's measure of damages, and not the cost of replacement of a ditch of the capacity of the one that existed before its destruction. The testimony was admissible at the time it was offered, for there was evidence to show that plaintiff had enjoyed waters to the full capacity of the former ditch. Defendants having destroyed plaintiff's ditch, he was entitled to have it replaced by one of the capacity destroyed. Nor does the fact that the court ultimately found plaintiff to be entitled to a less flow than he claimed alter or change the situation. It does not lie with defendants to say what use plaintiff might or might not make of a ditch of the capacity of the one destroyed, nor are we in any position, to declare that he had a limited use for the same only. The measure of damages in cases of this character is the cost of restoration of the property destroyed. 8 Cal. Jur. 817. Nor is there any merit in the further claim that evidence of cost of restoration should have been confined and limited to that of the character of the one destroyed. The reconstruction of an earthen ditch was made impossible by defendants' acts, and plaintiff was entitled to one that would meet the changed conditions. Knoche v. Pratt, 187 S. W. 578.[1] Moreover, defendants produced no evidence upon the cost of replacement of a ditch of any dimensions.

Defendants further complain of the admission of evidence regarding cost of raising the sides of the concrete section of the Smith ditch as constructed by defendants, and the necessity for, and the cost of constructing, a concrete section in the Tucker ditch, which would carry the amount of water claimed by plaintiff. What we have said with reference to the Smith ditch disposes of this objection. There was evidence to show that the maintenance of this ditch in its original condition could no longer be maintained by reason of defendants' acts, and that a permanent structure was required to meet the changed conditions in order that plaintiff might be placed in his former condition.

[31] We will now consider the portions of the judgment from which plaintiff has taken an appeal. He first contends that the trial court erred in construing a certain deed, which construction, it is claimed, deprived him of certain rights to which he is entitled. A brief statement of facts is necessary for an understanding of the question involved in this objection. On October 21, 1907, Lincoln Braden was the owner of the east half of the southeast quarter, the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter, and the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 20, township 36 north, range 4 east, M. D. B. & M., situated in Shasta county. Hat creek, in the state of nature, flowed through a portion of this land in a northerly direction. Where Hat creek enters the southern boundary of section 20, the entire stream is in the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter of said section, and it continues in its natural course through the said southeast quarter of this southwest quarter until near the northern boundary of said legal subdivision, when the creek makes an abrupt bend, and a portion of the channel thereof is situated in the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of said section. On the date last mentioned Braden and his wife conveyed to one Jesse E. Frick "all that portion of the southeast quarter of section 20 * * * lying and being west of a line running along the east bank of Hat creek and following the water's edge." The deed further recites that the parties of the first part intend to and do convey all land lying west of the east bank of Hat creek in said legal subdivision of said land hereinabove referred to; the easterly boundary of the land hereby conveyed is intended to be a meandering line following the east bank of Hat creek and following the water's edge at ordinary stages of the water; and the parties of the first part hereby intend to convey and transfer all the riparian rights which they have or possess by reason of ownership in said legal subdivision of land hereinabove particularly described. The power company subsequently acquired this land as conveyed to Frick, and, at the time of the trial of this case, defendant lumber company was the owner thereof. On July 7, 1920, plaintiff herein purchased from Ella P. Braden, the successor in interest of Lincoln Braden, the east half of the southeast quarter, the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter, and all that portion of the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 20, lying east of Hat creek, together with all water rights appurtenant thereto. It was plaintiff's contention at the trial that the deed from Braden to Frick conveyed only all that portion of the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 20, lying west of a line running along the east bank of Hat creek and following the water's edge, together with all the riparian rights pertaining to this subdivision, and that Braden retained the riparian right which was a part of, and attached to, the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 20, by virtue of the fact that Hat creek naturally flowed through, over and across said last subdivision, and plaintiff subsequently acquired this land under his deed from Ella P. Braden. It was defendants' contention, and the trial court found, in construing the deed from Braden and his wife to Frick, that the grantors intended to and did convey a greater estate than that described in the deed. Accordingly it interpreted the instrument in this particular to include all that portion of the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter, and the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 20 to and including the meandering line following the east bank of Hat creek, and following the water's edge of said stream at ordinary stages of the water, together with all riparian rights in Hat creek appertaining to said southeast quarter of the southwest quarter and the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of said section. In reaching this conclusion, the court proceeded upon the assumption that the description in the deed was ambiguous and uncertain, and it permitted the attorney who drew the same to testify, over objection, what was intended to pass thereunder. His testimony was to the effect that it was Braden's intention to convey to Frick all the riparian rights in and to the waters of Hat creek which he possessed in and to the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 20. In so doing the court committed error. There is no uncertainty whatever in the description of the property conveyed under this deed. In plain and unambiguous language the land is described as all that portion of the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 20, lying and being west of a line running along the east bank of Hat creek, and following the water's edge in said legal subdivision. No reference whatsoever is made to any land embraced within the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 20, or to the riparian rights in and to Hat creek which are a part and parcel of said legal subdivision. Nor is there anything contained in the subsequent language employed which enlarges the grant or which in any manner renders the description uncertain, for it is there recited that the lands and riparian rights conveyed relate to the subdivision "herein above particularly described."

[32-34] Under no possible construction of the language employed in the instrument itself could it be held to embrace all of the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 20. Even if it be assumed that the deed was sufficient to convey the land in the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter lying west of a meandering line along the east bank of Hat creek and following the water's edge, it would not thereby convey the riparian rights to the remainder of the lands in the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 20 adjoining the creek. No principle of law is more well established than that nothing passes by deed except what is described in the grant. Where through fraud or mistake, or in the event that the terms of an instrument are sufficiently uncertain to leave the intention of the parties in doubt, parol evidence bearing upon the question is admissible. Here no fraud or mistake is charged, nor, as above stated, is there any ambiguity or uncertainty involved. An attorney under such circumstances who prepared the instrument cannot testify as to what was intended by the parties. 10 Cal. Jur. § 199, p. 930. Whatever his concept of a written agreement may be, it is inadmissible to overthrow plain and unambiguous language. Fleming v. Law, 163 Cal. 227, 124 P. 1018. A meaning cannot be given to an instrument under the guise of construction or explanation which is not to be found in the instrument itself. Payne v. Commercial Nat. Bank, 177 Cal. 68, 169 P. 1007, L. R. A. 1918C, 328. Nor can extrinsic evidence, in the absence of fraud or mistake, be received of the intention of the parties. Nicholson v. Tarpey, 89 Cal. 617, 26 P. 1101. Their rights must be ascertained from its terms. Code Civ. Proc. § 1856. The record shows that plaintiff and his predecessors in interest have been in the exclusive possession of all the land embraced within the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 20, and have paid all the taxes levied and assessed against said land subsequent to the execution of the deed under which defendants claim. No testimony was introduced to show that either Braden or Joerger recognized the right of Frick or his successors in interest to exercise ownership or possession over the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 20 over which Hat creek flows. From what we have said upon this subject it follows that the finding of the trial court that the lumber company is the owner of all riparian rights in and to the waters of Hat creek in the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 20 is not supported by the evidence. Under this finding plaintiff is deprived of the right to use any of the waters of Hat creek where it flowed over and across the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 20, a right that plaintiff or his predecessors have never parted with.

It is next contended that the trial court erred in deciding that the plaintiff is not entitled to divert water through the John Smith ditch to irrigate that portion of the Tucker place lying east of Hat creek. In this connection it is urged that the evidence shows that Smith and Braden diverted a certain flow of water through the John Smith ditch for the purpose of supplying the Tucker land; that a prescriptive right was thereby created as against the lumber company to divert a certain quantity of water for such purpose; and that, when plaintiff succeeded to the rights of Smith, Braden, and Grant, by virtue of his purchase from them of their lands and of all their interest in the said ditch, he had a right to continue to convey a sufficient quantity of water through the ditch for the irrigation of the Tucker lands east of Hat creek. Defendants, on the other hand, contend that the evidence shows that the only water used on such lands was waste and seepage water, to which plaintiff could acquire no right. Plaintiff concedes, that, when his predecessors in interest were irrigating their lands, a certain amount of seepage and waste water drained off the same onto the Tucker lands below, and that this water was used to at least partially irrigate a portion of such lands. He claims, however, that, when his predecessors in interest were not irrigating their lands, a sufficient amount was diverted from the ditch onto the Tucker lands to properly irrigate the same under an arrangement with the owner of such lands that he would suffer the seepage and waste water from the ditch to flow at all times over and upon his lands without complaint, a situation he had been attempting to prevent; that, when plaintiff purchased the ditch, this arrangement was continued for such a period that it ripened into a title by prescription against the lands of the power company across which the water was conveyed.

[35-40] There can be no question that an appropriator of water may acquire a prescriptive right to divert and use the same from a stream on land that he does not own, and this user may be either by the claimant or by one holding under him, as a lessee or tenant. Rental and sale of water is a beneficial use. 25 Cal. Jur. p. 1159, § 173. The quantity claimed, however, must not only have been actually used, but must have been reasonably necessary and actually applied to a beneficial purpose. Without such beneficial use, no prescriptive right can be acquired, regardless of the period of time such user may have been continued. Turner v. East Side Canal & Irr. Co., 169 Cal. 652, 147 P. 579; 25 Cal. Jur. p. 1160, § 174. Upon the question as to whether or not the Tucker lands were supplied in part directly from the ditch, or whether the same were wholly irrigated by the seepage or waste waters flowing therefrom, the record is voluminous and the evidence conflicting. There is testimony, however, to show that no water was used on the land east of Hat creek except seepage and waste water prior to the time of plaintiff's purchase. There is also testimony which indicates that there was never any intent on the part of the owners to make any additional diversion of water to irrigate the lands in question or that they required irrigation, considering the seepage from the ditch. The permissive use of the seepage and waste waters, of course, created no right in the ditch to the owner of the Tucker lands, and such lands acquired no right appurtenant to the ditch, as no permanent right can be acquired to have a waste water supply continued, either by appropriation or prescription. Hunceker v. Lutz, 65 Cal. App. 649, 224 P. 1001; Kinney on Waters (2d Ed.) 661; Weil on Water Rights, § 57. There being evidence in the record to sustain the finding of the trial court upon this subject, we have no power to disturb it.

[41] And, finally, plaintiff contends that the court erred in awarding the power company 360 miner's inches of water through the Tucker-Fitzpatrick ditch for the use of its lands, as there is no evidence in the record to show the quantity of water so actually used. Counsel for defendants concede that plaintiff is correct in this contention.

From what we have said it follows that the portion of the judgment in favor of plaintiff is affirmed, as is also the portion which denies to plaintiff any water for the use of the Tucker lands lying east of Hat creek. The portion declaring defendant lumber company to be the owner of all riparian rights in any of the waters of Hat creek in the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 20, township 36 north, range 4 east, M. D. B. & M., is reversed, as is also the portion declaring the power company to be entitled to 360 miner's inches of water measured under a 6-inch pressure through the Tucker-Fitzpatrick ditch.

PRESTON, J., being disqualified, does not participate in the foregoing.

On Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. Rehearing denied. Defendants and certain amici curiæ, in support of their petitions for a rehearing, have asserted that the allowance of 2½ miners' inches per acre duty of water for irrigation is incredible and palpably improbable. There is no merit in the claim. The lands in question, as pointed out in the opinion, are hilly and porous, and present a very unusual and extreme condition from a water requirement standpoint. All of the witnesses who were engaged in farming the lands in question testified as to the amount of water required to properly mature the crops, and their testimony fully supports the finding upon this subject, as does also the irrigation engineering experts produced by plaintiff. The testimony of one of the experts shows that from 3½ to 4 miners' inches per acre are reasonably necessary to obtain best results. In addition thereto, it appears in evidence that the division of water rights of this state approved a net duty of water of 2 inches to the acre to some 3,000 acres of land on upper Hat creek as a net duty of water for irrigation of lands in that locality, and there is evidence to show that this allowance is insufficient to properly irrigate these lands. These lands are located in the immediate vicinity of the Joerger lands, and they require a less amount of water than the Joerger lands, owing to the fact that the latter are hilly and more porous, in consequence of which frequent applications of water are required to maintain proper moisture for the crops. The amount of water here allowed is exactly the same as that allowed by the division of water rights to the lands in upper Hat creek; the additional one-half inch being added by the court to cover the loss in transportation which the evidence shows occurs. Under all these circumstances we cannot say as a matter of law that the amount allowed in this particular case is excessive.

PEOPLE v. MONTGOMERY. (Cr. 1774.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. April 22, 1929.

1. Homicide 🔑250—Evidence held insufficient to sustain conviction of manslaughter.

Evidence, in prosecution for murder, held insufficient to sustain conviction of manslaughter.

2. Criminal law 🔑560—State's theory opposed to positive testimony of innocence is insufficient when so unsubstantial and nebulous as not to raise honest question.

Where theory advanced by state opposed to direct and positive testimony of innocence is so unsubstantial and nebulous as not to raise in fair and reasonable mind an honest question, it must be held insufficient to sustain conviction, since state is just as intensely interested in protecting innocent men as it is in convicting guilty.

3. Criminal law 🔑475—Objection to hypothetical question asked physician, as to whether bullet would be deflected from its course at point of entering body, held erroneously overruled.

Objection to hypothetical question asked physician, as to whether bullet striking body under certain conditions would be deflected from its course at point of entrance, held erroneously overruled, in that proof of such facts should have been made of actual course by those performing autopsy.

Appeal from Superior Court, Orange County; E. J. Marks, Judge.

J. W. Montgomery was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Reversed.

L. A. West and B. Z. McKinney, both of Santa Ana, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Waldemar Augustine, of San Francisco, for the People.

IRA F. THOMPSON, J. The defendant was indicted by the grand jury of Orange county. The indictment contained two counts, the first charging him with the murder of John D. Callicott and the second with the murder of Orlie R. Mahon. The jury acquitted defendant of the first count, but found him guilty of manslaughter under the second charge. The appeal is from the judgment and from an order denying a motion for a new trial.

[1] The appellant on November 15, 1928, was employed by the California Gun Club as keeper and caretaker of its grounds, ponds, and hunting blinds, and for the purpose of spreading grain in the ponds to attract aquatic game birds. It was also his duty to warn trespassers off the property, advising them that it was private, and not open to the public for hunting, and presumably to make this work the easier for him, the land was inclosed by fences except across a slough where tidewater ebbed and flowed, and it was surrounded by an embankment from ½ to 2½ feet in length. Between 1 and 2 o'clock p. m. on the day in question the appellant heard a commotion in the pond, which investigation disclosed was caused by a dog, unaccompanied, so far as appellant could see, by its owner, chasing and frightening the birds away. The appellant drove down the road in his automobile near to the place where the dog was creating the disturbance. His shouts to the animal proving unsuccessful, the appellant fired two shots from a 32-caliber rifle into the water from 10 to 15 feet behind the dog for the purpose of frightening him. Upon firing the second shot, the appellant saw two men rise up from behind an embankment about 150 yards distant from him. These men, who were the victims of the affair, began to shout at the appellant and to approach him. When about 75 yards away appellant says that he for the first time could hear and understand their language. He says they were cursing and abusing him, using foul, abusive, and offensive epithets. Each of the decedents was carrying a 12-gauge pump shotgun. The appellant further testified that after the decedents approached him a bit closer he said to them: "Gentlemen, let's reason this thing There is no use of us getting into trouble." Probably no more concise statement can be made than that of the witness to the succeeding events. He said: "Well, when they got about I guess thirty or forty steps from me they turned west to get up on the dike and the big fellow (Callicott) got up on the dike and he says 'You G—— D—— cowardly s—— of ———, I am going to shoot you just like you shot my dog' and he whirled and shot at me and I jumped to the left and it missed and I fired at him and hit him. I didn't have time to take sight, and I threw a shell out and the other man was facing west with his gun down like this and when this biggest fellow dropped why he whirled around and as he whirled around why I shot and he shot. and you couldn't hardly tell the difference. I don't know whether he had shot or not." Mahon was hit and fell to the ground as Callicott had done. The appellant also testifies that Mahon did not succeed in getting the butt of his gun to his shoulder nor did the witness when he fired. After the shooting the appellant says that without disturbing the bodies he went to his home two or three miles distant, called up the sheriff's office, gave information of the tragedy, and said that he would be waiting for some one to come for him. Two officers proceeded to the scene accompanied by the appellant. There they found, according to one of the officers, the tracks of the decedents approaching the fatal spots as described in the testimony of appellant, the two bodies, and the two shotguns. There was an empty shell in each gun and there were no tracks approaching the bodies from the place where the appellant said he was standing.

It should be noted at this point that appellant was the only witness to this fatal affair. Concerning the shots he is corroborated by the testimony of three witnesses. A Mrs. Brokoff testified that she lived about half a mile from the California Gun Club; that she was experienced in the use of firearms, having used them for 15 or 16 years in Texas; that on the day in question and between the hours of 1 and 2 o'clock p. m. she heard from the direction of the mentioned club two rifle shots, "then in a period of a few minutes a shotgun shot and another rifle shot, and then the last two shots was a rifle shot and a shotgun shot which were right together, almost." Mr. and Mr. Spies, also residing about half a mile distant, testified. Mrs. Spies said that at the time mentioned she heard "four rapid shots, almost simultaneously." Mr. Spies said he heard from the direction of the club some shooting and then for "about five to ten minutes * * * everything was quiet, then I heard two rifle shots, they came, oh, maybe, two minutes apart, then after that there was a shotgun shot and a rifle shot close together, and right after that two more shots, but I couldn't say which was first or last, they came so close together, just like one shot, but I could distinguish the rifle shot from the shotgun shot." We also add that several character witnesses testified on behalf of the appellant.

We have recited the testimony in considerable detail because the appellant insists that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict. It will be observed that all of the testimony so far set down indicates very forcefully that the appellant shot both of the decedents in self-defense—and such could have been the only theory by which the jury absolved the appellant of guilt as respects Callicott. The respondent urges that there is substantial testimony supporting the verdict. Counsel directs our attention to the testimony of Dr. Alice L. Thompson, who performed the autopsy. She says that the bullet which killed Mahon "passed in between the first and second ribs, shattered the second rib, then through the anterior border of the right lung, then through the left lung, at the root of the lung, piercing the pulmonary blood vessels, thence passed to the border of the left fifth rib and was deflected upward and hit the point of the left scapula and passed out of the body." To this statement of the witness should be added her answer to the effect that the point of entrance was on the right of the mid line of the body in front, and her statement on cross-examination that possibly the second rib would deflect the bullet. The Attorney General argues that this testimony, in connection with the fact that Mahon was right-handed in the handling of firearms, is sufficient to justify the jury in doubting the veracity of the appellant, and in adopting the theory that when the appellant had shot Callicott he turned and aimed at Mahon, who, fearing for his life, shot in self-defense. He also asserts that it is strange that two hunters would fail to hit the appellant when firing at him from a distance of 80 feet with 12-gauge shotguns. These are the only things which respondent urges to overcome the direct and positive testimony of the appellant and all that we can find in a perusal of the transcript, with the exception of the responses by the witness Dr. Wagner to the following questions:

"Q. Assuming then that a bullet is fired from a distance of 27 paces from a 32-caliber Winchester rifle, Remington rifle, with a bullet of the kind contained in People's Exhibit No. 2; that that bullet strikes a person at that distance of 27 paces between the first and second ribs about an inch and a half below the clavicle at the right of the front midline of the body striking the upper edge of the second rib and shattering the rib and passes entirely through the body striking a rib at the back side on the left side and then passes out of the body, would you be able to say whether that bullet in your opinion was deflected from its course at the point of entrance upon striking the bone at the second rib? A. I can express an opinion, yes, sir.

"Q. Assuming the state of facts just described to you, in your opinion was that bullet deflected from its course? A. It was not."

[2] Assuming for the moment that the objection interposed by the defense was properly overruled by the court, what do we make out of the testimony? The question ignores the position of the person shot. It fails to take into account either his horizontal or his perpendicular position. It ignores the comparative levels of the two men. It fails to disclose to the witness how much of the second rib was struck or how badly it was fractured, and yet the angle of flight upon the curve of the rib might have considerably altered the situation. It takes it for granted that the ribs or bones of all men are comparable in their power of resistance, although it is a matter of common knowledge that they vary materially. It assumes that all 32-caliber bullets have behind them the same powder load. It overlooks the velocity and direction of the wind, if any there was. There are so many elements lacking in the question that it could hardly have been intelligently answered except from one factor only, to wit, the actual course of the bullet through the body. If it be said that the testimony of the witness is of value from this standpoint, we must remember that he did not perform the autopsy, and as he answered upon the hypothetical question only he was giving a valueless opinion, and one which merely attempted to fortify the argument of the prosecution that the deceased must have been in a certain posture when he was shot, by the opinion of one whom the jury may well have believed to be more skilled than they in such matters. Again assuming that there was no deflection of the bullet upon striking the second rib and that it did in its natural and direct course pass through the body from right to left, there is still no necessary inconsistency between this fact and the testimony of appellant. It must be remembered that, from the fact that Callicott and Mahon were companions and had been apparently acting in concert, appellant was justified, after having killed Callicott under circumstances which impelled the jury to find that he shot in self-defense, in interpreting the slightest hostile move by Mahon as indicative of the latter's intention to exact the life of appellant. The appellant testified that when he shot Callicott, Mahon, who had been facing Callicott swung around with his gun to shoot, but did not get it above his waist line when he (the appellant) "guessed at the biggest part" and fired. He does say, however, that Mahon raised his gun first. It is apparent therefore that although decedent was right-handed he did not take formal aim before shooting and may, at the time, have been exposing more of his right than his left side. That Mahon did not take aim before he fired probably explains why he did not hit the appellant. Everything which is said to support the verdict is speculative and conjectural. If, as respondent says, the jury adopted the hypothesis that Mahon fired in self-defense, we are compelled to reply that while as a hypothesis or supposition it may well serve as a drill ground for mental gymnastics, yet when it rests upon the basis of imagination and is unsupported by substantial testimony it is not sufficient to convict a person of manslaughter. The state is just as intensely interested in protecting the innocent man as it is in convicting the guilty, and when the theory opposed to direct and positive testimony of innocence is so unsubstantial and nebulous as not to raise in a fair and reasonable mind an honest question, it must be said to be insufficient.

[3] We now pass to the claim of appellant that the court erred in overruling the objection to the hypothetical question asked of Dr. Wagner, which we have already quoted. The argument is made that the question did not cover the subject of expert testimony and that the proper foundation was not laid. In addition to what has already been said concerning this question, it should be noted that had the question been reversed and the witness asked to state the position of the decedent from the course of the bullet, it would have been held improper on the authority of People v. Durrant, 116 Cal. 217, 48 P. 85; People v. Milner, 122 Cal. 181, 54 P. 833; People v. Farley, 124 Cal. 594, 57 P. 571; and People v. Overacker, 15 Cal. App. 620, 115 P. 756. Here the effort is made to prove the position by proving an undeflected course. We do not see that the question is objectionable for the same reason as that assigned in the cases cited. But we think that proof of the fact should have been made of the actual course by the person or persons who performed the autopsy. Dr. Wagner stated in his effort to qualify himself as a witness that his experience had been gained in examining "many cases of gunshot wounds of a similar nature passing through bones, passing through ribs," and that it was a part of his "business to determine the course and whether deflected or whether they passed in straight lines." In other words, his experience had been gathered in the actual examination of the wounded bodies and not in computing velocity, density and resistance. The court was in error in overruling the objection.

Assignments of error are also predicated upon the giving and the refusing of instructions, but we think comment thereon is unnecessary. From all that appears, the jury was fully and fairly instructed.

Judgment and order reversed.

98 Cal. App. 338

McCLINTICK et ux. v. FRAME et al.
(Civ. 6749.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 17, 1929.

As Modified May 9, 1929.

1. Vendor and purchaser 🔑59—Wife, signing agreement to purchase land, was party thereto, regardless of whether contract used masculine and singular terms (Code Civ. Proc. § 17).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 17, the masculine as used in an agreement includes the feminine, and the singular the plural; hence wife, having signed agreement for purchase of land, was a party thereto, regardless of terms used therein.

2. Mortgages 🔑281—Wife, joining with husband in agreement to purchase land, was bound by implied obligation to assume incumbrances forming part of consideration.

Wife, having joined with her husband in agreement to purchase land, was bound by implied obligation to assume incumbrances forming part of consideration, even though agreement contained no express assumption of such indebtedness.

3. Mortgages 🔑282(1)—Either husband or wife, signing agreement to purchase land, could be compelled to pay indebtedness impliedly assumed (Civ. Code, §§ 1431, 1659, 1660).

Under Civ. Code, §§ 1431, 1659, 1660, relating to presumption that promise made in the singular, but executed by several persons, is joint and several, either wife or husband, both of whom signed agreement for purchase of land, with implied assumption of indebtedness, can be compelled to pay the indebtedness.

4. Novation 🔑7—Subsequent agreement to purchase land, not joined in by vendor's wife signing the original agreement, had no binding effect on her (Civ. Code, §§ 1530, 1532, 1698).

Subsequent agreement for purchase of land, which was not joined in by wife of vendor executing original agreement, had no binding effect on her, since the claim that the original contract was modified amounted to a claim of novation, within Civ. Code, § 1530, so as to require, under section 1532, a consideration and substitution by another agreement in writing, or by an executed oral agreement in accordance with section 1698, joined in by all parties to original agreement.

5. Novation 🔑11—Novation must be pleaded to claim benefits by reason thereof.

In order to claim benefits by reason of a novation, it is necessary that novation be pleaded.

6. Pleading 🔑312—Extent and character of modifications alleged and admitted in pleadings are limited by terms of instruments attached as exhibits.

Where allegations of complaint relating to modification of agreement to purchase land merely pleaded a modification according to the effect of instruments themselves, by attaching them as exhibits to the complaint, the extent and character of modifications alleged and admitted in pleadings are therefore limited by terms of instruments themselves.

7. Mortgages 🔑292(8)—Finding that purchaser's wife executed agreement to purchase land required conclusion that she was liable with husband for payment of indebtedness.

Finding that wife of purchaser executed original agreement to purchase land with the implied assumption of indebtedness required a conclusion that she was liable with her husband for payment of indebtedness, in view of fact that subsequent agreement relating thereto did not release her from her obligation.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Denver S. Church, Judge.

Action by G. W. McClintick and wife against W. P. Frame and others. From the judgment, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed and remanded with directions.

Siemon & Garber, of Bakersfield, for appellants.

Gallaher & Jertberg, of Fresno, for respondents.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal on the judgment roll, the appeal being based upon the ground that the court drew an erroneous conclusion from the findings in respect to one particular part of the judgment; appellants asserting that the court erred in failing to hold Theodosia Frame primarily obligated, together with W. P. Frame and Herman F. Nicolai, for the payment of a certain indebtedness. Defendant Nicolai has not appealed, and the judgment is final as to him. The suit was brought to secure declaratory relief; plaintiffs seeking to have the obligations of the respective parties in reference to a certain indebtedness fixed and declared by judgment of the court.

Plaintiffs owned a tract of land upon which they executed a deed of trust to secure the payment of an indebtedness to the Hellman Commercial Trust & Savings Bank and a mortgage to secure another indebtedness to defendant Nicolai; the mortgage being subordinate to the deed of trust. Plaintiffs entered into an agreement to sell the land to defendants W. P. Frame and Theodosia Frame, his wife. The first paragraph of the agreement is as follows: "This agreement, made this 1st day of February, 1923, between G. W. McClintick and Catherine McClintick, his wife, the parties of the first part, and W. P. Frame and Theodosia Frame, his wife, parties of the second part"—and was signed by both W. P. Frame and Theodosia Frame. The body of the agreement, however, uniformly designates the McClinticks as "parties," while it uniformly designates the vendee as "second party," or "the party of the second part." Respondents argue that wherever a verb in the contract is the predicate of the first parties the verb is plural; wherever a verb is the predicate of the second party the verb is singular; wherever in the contract appears a pronoun the antecedent of which is the first parties, the pronoun is common gender and plural; wherever in the contract appears a pronoun whose antecedent is the second party, that pronoun is masculine and singular; and therefore it may be properly inferred that Theodosia Frame was not considered as an actual party to the contract.

[1, 2] While the agreement uses the singular and masculine form of expression in subsequent clauses, the masculine includes the feminine and the singular includes the plural (Code Civ. Proc. § 17), and, Theodosia Frame having signed the agreement, this made her a party thereto, regardless of the terms used. In Eldridge v. Mowry, 24 Cal. App. 183, 188, 140 P. 978, 981, the court says: "But a party is presumed to have assented to all the terms of a written contract, when he signs it; and the place of the signature is immaterial, except in cases where an instrument is required by law to be subscribed." Furthermore, it is alleged in the complaint that "the defendants Frame made and entered into that certain agreement [February 1, 1923, agreement] in writing," which allegation is admitted in the answer of defendants W. P. Frame and Theodosia Frame, and the court so found. Theodosia Frame, having joined in the agreement with her husband, W. P. Frame, by the terms of which the assumption of the incumbrances formed a part of the consideration, and being one of the purchasers, was bound to pay the purchase price, as well as her husband, and such obligation is implied, on her executing the agreement, even though the agreement had contained no express assumption of such indebtedness. Brosseau v. Lowy, 209 Ill. 405, 70 N. E. 901; White v. Schader, 185 Cal. 606, 611, 198 P. 19, 21 A. L. R. 499.

In the agreement of February 1st the plaintiffs agree to sell the land in the agreement described to the second party for $28,000, and agree to accept two parcels of property at fixed prices as part payment on the purchase price. The agreement further provides that the second party shall assume a certain mortgage of $8,000 in favor of the Hellman Commercial Trust & Savings Bank; that the second party is to harvest all crops produced on the property and deliver same to first parties, who shall receive 60 per cent. of the gross proceeds from such crops; that said 60 per cent. shall be applied first in payment of interest on the $8,000 mortgage, second in payment on the unpaid balance due first parties, and the balance on the principal; that the first parties reserve the right at any time during the term of the contract to obtain a loan not to exceed $10,000; and that, if the loan can be obtained, the second party is to sign with first parties, which loan, if obtained, the second party agrees to assume and pay according to the terms of such loan, with the understanding that the amount obtained over and above the present mortgage shall be applied as a credit and payment on the unpaid balance due the first parties. While the vendees are, excepting in the first paragraph of the agreement, referred to in the singular number as second party, the complaint alleges, the answer admits, and the court found the agreement and foregoing conditions thereof to have been made and agreed to by both W. P. and Theodosia Frame.

The subsequent agreement of April 1, 1924, is in the form of a letter written by G. W. McClintick to First National Bank of Delano, with the acceptance and approval of W. P. Frame appended thereto, and recites that the deed to the property is to be executed to W. P. Frame and Theodosia Frame, his wife, as joint tenants, and is in settlement of McClintick's agreement with W. P. Frame. The obvious purpose of the arrangement was to complete the sale provided for under the February agreement, by providing for the payment of the unpaid balance of the purchase price in a somewhat different way. All that appears is that W. P. Frame and G. W. McClintick agreed to wipe out the balance of the unpaid purchase price, by Frame assuming and agreeing to pay and receive credit for the Nicolai indebtedness of $2,500; by Frame giving McClintick two notes aggregating $852, and by Frame assuming and agreeing to pay two bills aggregating $570; or, in other words, Frame agreeing to pay McClintick indirectly $3,922 in full satisfaction of the unpaid balance of the purchase price, and McClintick agreeing to pay the current interest, amounting to $350, on the Hellman bank indebtedness, and Frame to assume payment of the first mortgage of $10,000 and the second mortgage of $2,500.

The terms of the April agreement are all in the nature of modifications of the February agreement. Another feature of the April agreement is that it is made in settlement of McClintick's contract with W. P. Frame, and McClintick agrees to convey the land to W. P. and Theodosia Frame as joint tenants, subject to the incumbrance of $10,000 and $2,500, and Frame must assume payment of both of these mortgages. The McClinticks were husband and wife, as were also the Frames; the property dealt with in each case was community property, and neither Mrs. McClintick nor Mrs. Frame, who signed the February agreement, were parties to or signed this latter agreement of April 1st. As Mrs. Frame was obligated under the February agreement to pay the obligation to the Hellman Commercial Trust & Savings Bank, does the April agreement release her from such obligation? The court in effect answered this question in the affirmative, with the result that Nicolai and W. P. Frame are held primarily responsible to the McClinticks for the payment of the Hellman Commercial Trust & Savings Bank indebtedness, but Mrs. Frame is not.

[3] Under the February agreement the obligations of W. P. and Theodosia Frame are joint and several (Civ. Code, §§ 1659, 1660), and either or both of them could have been compelled to pay the indebtedness. The obligation was for the benefit and was made in favor of Catherine McClintick, as well as of her husband, and she did not join in the April agreement. Theodosia Frame was one of the purchasers under the former agreement, and under its terms assumed with her husband, in the absence of express limitation, the payment of the incumbrances which formed a part of the consideration of the conveyance. White v. Schader, supra. "A promise, made in the singular, but executed by several persons, is presumed to be joint and several." Civ. Code, § 1660. "An obligation imposed upon several persons, or a right created in favor of several persons, is presumed to be joint, and not several. * * * This presumption, in the case of a right, can be overcome only by express words to the contrary." Civ. Code, § 1431.

[4, 5] Respondents urge that the original contract was modified by the subsequent April agreement, and that new terms in the April agreement take the place of the terms in the February agreement, and therefore the old contract stands, with substitution of the new terms for the old terms that were by the new contract modified. Such claim amounts to a substitution of the individual obligation of W. P. Frame for the joint and several obligations of W. P. and Theodosia Frame, and amounts to a claim of novation. Civ. Code, § 1530. A novation contract is subject to all the rules concerning contracts in general. Civ. Code, § 1532. It would require a consideration from Theodosia Frame to support it, and, as the February agreement is in writing, a substitution could only be made by another agreement in writing or by an executed oral agreement. Civ. Code, § 1698. It would have to be joined in by all the parties to the original agreement. Cal. Canning Peach Growers v. Downey, 76 Cal. App. 1, 243 P. 679. The April agreement, not being joined in by Catherine McClintick, can have no binding effect upon her. Furthermore, it may be said that a novation has not been pleaded, which it must be if benefits by reason thereof are claimed. McGinn v. Wiley, 24 Cal. App. 303, 312, 141 P. 49.

[6] It is further urged by respondents that Catherine McClintick, by joining in the allegation of the complaint that "on or about April 1, 1924, the plaintiff G. W. McClintick and the defendant W. P. Frame made and entered into that certain written modification of the above-mentioned agreement referred to as Exhibit A, a copy of which modification is hereto annexed and marked Exhibit B," and defendant Theodosia Frame, by joining in the admission in the answer, adopted and ratified the action of G. W. McClintick and W. P. Frame in thus modifying the agreement, and that the admission of the allegation of the complaint pleading performance of the April agreement was another confirmation of the act of the two husbands in modifying the original agreement. The allegations which it is claimed are admitted, however, merely plead a modification according to the effect of the instruments themselves by attaching them as exhibits to the complaint. The extent and character of the modifications alleged and admitted in the pleadings are therefore limited by the terms of the instruments. Nowhere in the April agreement is the provision of the February agreement requiring Theodosia Frame to pay the indebtedness to the Hellman Commercial Trust & Savings Bank in any manner modified, changed, or even mentioned. If we should concede respondents' argument to be sound, and that the two contracts merged and are to be read together, and that the conditions in the new contract, where inconsistent with the conditions in the old contract, replace the old conditions, we have a joint and several obligation of W. P. and Theodosia Frame to assume and pay the Hellman Commercial Trust & Savings Bank indebtedness, as well as a supplementary agreement of W. P. Frame individually to pay it.

The court found in accordance with the allegation that W. P. Frame and Theodosia Frame executed the February agreement, but made no finding as to whether she was released or discharged from her obligations thereunder—this evidently for the reason that such release or discharge is not pleaded as is required in order to claim release or discharge thereby. McGinn v. Wiley, supra. The court simply omits the name Theodosia Frame from its conclusions of law, when declaring that W. P. Frame and Herman Nicolai are primarily obligated for the payment of the Hellman Commercial Trust & Savings Bank indebtedness, and from the provisions of the judgment which make W. P. Frame and Herman Nicolai primarily responsible.

[7] The court having found that Theodosia Frame executed the February agreement, and, the subsequent April agreement not having released her from her obligation, the conclusion of law from such finding must follow that she is liable with her husband, W.

P. Frame, and Herman Nicolai, for the payment of the Hellman Commercial Trust & Savings Bank indebtedness.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded with directions to the trial court to enter judgment in accordance herewith.

ROBINSON v. SOUTHLAND PRODUCE CO. et al. (Civ. 6504.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. April 18, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ⚷113(4)—Order vacating previous order of dismissal is appealable (Code Civ. Proc. § 963, subd. 2).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 963, subd. 2, an order vacating a previous order dismissing action is appealable; being a special order after judgment.

2. Appeal and error ⚷103—Order granting leave to amend complaint is not appealable.

An order granting leave to amend complaint is not an appealable order.

Action by Mrs. Pearl E. Robinson against the Southland Produce Company and Nick Estrin and Phillip Garbus, doing business under the firm name and style of Liberty Produce Company, and another. From orders setting aside a previous order of dismissal, and granting a motion for leave to file an amended complaint, the last two named defendants appeal. On motion to dismiss appeal. Motion to dismiss granted in part, and in part denied.

Wm. J. Claassen, of Los Angeles, and H. C. Miller, of Birmingham, Ala., for appellants.

M. O. Graves, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. Respondent originally commenced an action for damages against the defendants Southland Produce Company, a corporation, and Liberty Produce Company, a corporation. Answer was filed by Nick Estrin and Phillip Garbus, doing business under the name of "Liberty Produce Company, a copartnership," and denied that that company was a corporation. The Southland Produce Company did not appear. Upon the day of trial, counsel for the plaintiff announced that he had received information that the truck which she alleged had caused her personal injuries had been transferred by the Southland Produce Company to the Liberty Produce Company, and that the latter was a copartnership composed of the two individuals above named. The plaintiff thereupon moved to dismiss the action as to the Southland Company, which was granted, and she then moved for leave to file an amended complaint in accordance with the facts. This latter motion was denied, and, on motion of the remaining defendant, the case was dismissed; the trial court entering an order which recited: "Defendants move to dismiss the case, which motion is by the court granted." Thereafter the plaintiff moved to set aside the order of dismissal, assigning as grounds therefor that it was made through inadvertence; that it showed no grounds for dismissal; that the defendants were estopped by the pleadings from moving to dismiss; and that said order was without and in excess of the jurisdiction of the court. At the time this motion was presented, the plaintiff also moved for leave to file an amended complaint. Each of these latter motions was granted, and an amended complaint was filed and served in open court, naming all of the parties as defendants, including the Southland Produce Company, a corporation, and appellants individually as doing business under the fictitious name of Liberty Produce Company, a copartnership. Notice of appeal was served upon counsel for the plaintiff, and filed, entitled, "Mrs. Pearl E. Robinson, Plaintiff, vs. Southland Produce Company, a Corp., and Liberty Produce Company, a Copartnership," reciting that: "The defendants, Nick Estrin and Phillip Garbus, hereby appeal * * * from that certain order made and entered on the 12th day of December, 1928, wherein the above captioned court vacated its previous order of dismissal in said cause and from the order of the court * * * wherein plaintiff was granted permission to file its amended complaint making appellants parties defendants."

[1, 2] Respondent moves this court to dismiss the appeal, and assigns as grounds therefor that neither of said orders is appealable. The order vacating the order dismissing the action is an appealable order. Code Civ. Proc., § 963, subd. 2; James v. Center, 53 Cal. 31. It is a special order made after judgment.

The order granting leave to amend is not appealable, and the motion to dismiss the appeal therefrom is granted. The motion to dismiss the appeal from the order vacating the dismissal is denied.

LEPPER et al. v. RATTERREE.

CLARK v. SAME.

(Civ. 3749, 3750.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 12, 1929.

1. Vendor and purchaser 🔑31—Action to rescind land purchase contract may be based on mistake of plaintiff only (Civ. Code, § 1577).

Under Civ. Code, § 1577, it is not necessary, in an action to rescind contract for purchase of real estate on the grounds of mistake, that the mistake must be mutual, since such action may be based on mistake only on part of party prosecuting action.

2. Vendor and purchaser 🔑97, 100, 116, 119—Rescission of contract cannot be ordered, unless plaintiff has been diligent and is capable of restoring defendant's status quo.

Rescission of contract for purchase of realty cannot be had, in view of Civ. Code, § 3407, unless party rescinding has been diligent, and is capable of making restitution, so that opposite party is restored substantially to same position as though contract had not been made.

3. Vendor and purchaser 🔑44—Evidence of purchaser's mistake must be clear and convincing to warrant relief.

In order to relieve purchaser of real estate from mistake, evidence must be clear and convincing, showing mistake to entire satisfaction of court.

4. Vendor and purchaser 🔑31—Purchaser under written contract is charged with knowledge of its provisions of which he neglected to inform himself.

Purchaser of realty under contract in writing, who signs it, is charged with knowledge of all of its provisions, where he had means of such knowledge and carelessly and negligently omitted to inform himself.

5. Vendor and purchaser 🔑44—Evidence that purchaser continued payments without discovering alleged mistake in designation of lots by plat numbers held to warrant decree against rescission.

Evidence that purchaser of realty continued making payments for year, without looking at copies of contract, held to sustain finding that he was not entitled to rescind contract for mistake in designation of lots by numbers on plat.

Appeals from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William C. Doran, Judge.

Separate actions, consolidated for trial, by L. E. Lepper and another, and by Lera Clark, against Ira C. Ratterree, doing business under the the fictitious name of the Ratterree Investment Company, in which defendant filed a cross-complaint in each action. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Judgments affirmed.

Hoye & Boehler, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Frank G. Falloon, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. The above cases relate to the entering into contracts for the purchase of two lots, situate in Ratterree's Washington Boulevard tract No. 6256, city of Los Angeles. The cases were consolidated for trial, were tried upon the same testimony, and are presented to us for consideration upon one transcript. The facts relating to each case are identical. The defendant filed a cross-complaint in both actions, and in both actions had judgment. The plaintiffs in each case appeal.

The record shows: That on and prior to October 15, 1923, the defendant was and had been engaged in the business of selling lots in different parts of Los Angeles county, and for that purpose had agents and salesmen engaged in interesting and finding prospective purchasers for such lots. That on or about said date the plaintiff Emily Lepper and the plaintiff Lera Clark went upon the said Ratterree tract and viewed two lots, which the plaintiffs testified were lots 235 and 236 of said tract. The premises were a part of what is known as Washington Boulevard tract, lying along and on the north side of Washington boulevard in the city of Los Angeles. That the said plaintiffs, at the time of viewing the lots in question, were accompanied by a salesman of the defendant company. That at the time of the inspection of said lots a small plat of said tract was handed to one of the plaintiffs, but was not examined by them. That at the time of the inspection of said lots no mention was made of the number of said lots, nor was any particular attention paid to the small plat thereof which was handed to one of the plaintiffs by the defendant's salesman. The original plat handed to one of the plaintiffs was introduced in evidence, and is made a part of the record in this case. An inspection of the plat shows that the numbers of the lots thereon are in very small figures and not very easily read, though by turning the plat to one side it does appear that the word "sold" is written or printed on the lots numbered 235 and 236.

A few days after the personal inspection of the lots, a contract of purchase was entered into by L. E. Lepper and Emily Lepper for the purchase of one of the lots, and by Lera Clark for the purchase of the other of said lots. The contract entered into by the plaintiffs L. E. Lepper and Emily Lepper described the lot as No. 235 in said tract, and the contract entered into by Lera Clark described the lot as No. 226 of said tract. The lots described in the respective contracts were situate in a different block, and were lots different from those inspected by the respective plaintiffs, according to their testimony. The contracts in both cases called for the payment of a purchase price of $1,800 per lot. About one year later, according to the record and the allegations of the complaints, the discovery was made that by mistake the plaintiffs in this action had contracted to purchase lots 225 and 226, instead of lots 235 and 236. Upon such discovery the plaintiffs sought to have the alleged mistake corrected, and, upon the refusal of the defendant to make any adjustment, this action was begun.

The complaint, after what is called a preliminary statement therein, relative to the inspection of lots 235 and 236, the execution of the contract under mistake, and that at the time the contract was signed the agent of the defendant represented and stated to the plaintiffs that the contracts covered the two lots that had been viewed by the plaintiffs, sets forth two causes of action. The first cause of action alleges that the plaintiffs relied upon the representation of the agent to the effect that the description in the contract was correct, and described the lots which plaintiffs had viewed and inspected and agreed to buy, and that upon such acts and conduct the plaintiffs were induced to sign the respective contracts, and without which said contracts would not have been signed. It is further alleged that the agent and representative of the defendant knew that such statements were false and fraudulent, and were made with the intent to deceive and defraud the plaintiffs.

The second cause of action alleges that the plaintiffs, relying upon the acts, conduct, and statement made by the agent of the defendant, to the effect that the contracts they were signing covered and properly described the lot they had viewed and inspected, and had intended and agreed to buy, signed the contract; that plaintiffs are informed and believe that defendant well knew plaintiffs were signing said contract under a mistake and misunderstanding as to the property described. The complaint also alleges that defendant knew, at the time of signing said contract, that plaintiffs were so mistaken, or that defendant was likewise mistaken in that regard, and that as a result of the foregoing, and because of said mistake and misunderstanding, plaintiffs paid to the defendant the sums of money set forth in the complaint. The complaints in both actions set forth what was done toward securing a rescission of the contracts, asks for a rescission of the contracts and for the return of the money paid on account of the contracts herein referred to. The complaints in both actions are practically identical, save as to the number of the lot described, and we have set forth the pleadings as though but one complaint were involved.

The answer of the defendant in both complaints denies any fraudulent misrepresentations; denies any false representations; also denies that the defendant knew that the plaintiffs were acting under any mistake; denies that the plaintiffs relied upon the representations of any agent of the defendant; denies that the plaintiffs would not have executed the contracts, if they had not been acting under mistake or misrepresentations on the part of the defendant. The answer of the defendant, in paragraph V, in answer to paragraph VIII of the plaintiffs' complaint, which contains, in substance, a statement of the facts covering the transaction, denies as follows:

"Referring to paragraph VIII, denies that through want or lack of diligence or care on the part of plaintiffs that they did not discover the alleged facts set forth in said complaint, prior to December 1, 1924, and denies that they did not know their rights prior to March 26, 1925, and alleges that plaintiffs have had full knowledge and notice of all facts and all their rights in the premises, and of all those things which they allege they have no knowledge or notice of, on, after and ever since October 15, 1923."

The answer of the defendant further denies that the plaintiffs believed or supposed the description contained in said contracts was a description of other property, or any property which plaintiffs had intended or agreed to buy, different from that described in said contracts. The answer of the defendant denies that the defendant knew plaintiffs signed said contract under any mistake or misunderstanding as to the context thereof. For a third defense, the defendant, in its answer, alleges that the plaintiffs have been guilty of laches and unreasonable delay in bringing this action, and that, if plaintiffs ever did have any cause of action, they have lost their cause by sleeping on their rights for so long a time as to bar any relief in equity.

The court found that on or about the 15th of October, 1923, the plaintiffs, of their own free will, went upon a tract of land described as tract No. 6256, etc., also known as Ratterree Washington Boulevard tract, and there viewed and inspected said tract; that, at the time the plaintiffs went upon said tract, defendant, by one of its agents and salesmen, handed to plaintiffs a circular, on the front page of which was correctly reproduced a map showing said tract in its entirety; that said map clearly and plainly showed each and every lot of said tract, by its correct number, and clearly and plainly showed the dimensions of every lot in said tract, and the dimensions of every road, street and alley of said tract; that the said pamphlet, at the time the same was handed to the plaintiffs, not only showed all the said lots and numbers and all said dimensions, but also had clearly printed on a number of the lots so shown, in large, bold letters, the word "sold"; that the word "sold" appeared upon lots 235 and 236.

We may here repeat what we have heretofore said about the word "sold" and the numbers of the lots. An inspection of the miniature plat contained in the transcript shows that the numbers are very small, and that the word "sold" is so printed that it is necessary to turn the plat to one side before it can be read. The court further found that no relation of trust and confidence existed between the plaintiffs and the defendants, and then found that "plaintiffs had no right to rely upon any representation made by defendant or any of its agents or salesmen at that time, with reference to the description of any lot viewed or inspected by plaintiffs; that there was then and there open to plaintiffs the means of full knowledge and information as to the description and location of lots 235 and 236, and also of lots 225 and 226"; that, if plaintiffs failed to fully inform themselves as to the location and description of said lots, said failure was due to their own negligence and carelessness; that plaintiffs, both of whom viewed said lots and saw said pamphlet prior to signing of any documents in connection therewith, are highly educated and intelligent, etc.

The court further found "that plaintiffs had no right to rely upon any representations of said defendant, or any of its agents or salesmen, to the effect that the description in the contract signed by plaintiffs was a correct description, and that plaintiffs were not induced to sign the contracts by any false and fraudulent, or false or fraudulent representations of the defendant, or any of its agents or salesmen." The court further found that the defendant did not know that the plaintiffs were acting under any mistake.

The court nowhere found that the allegations of the complaints—that the plaintiffs were acting under mistake, that they went upon lots 235 and 236 of the tract in question, and that the plaintiffs thought they were buying the lots inspected by them—were true. It may be here stated that the complaints and the answers contained allegations and denials as to the selling price of the respective lots, but, as the value of the lots are not material, no further mention need be made thereof. The pleadings are also absolutely silent as to any changed conditions of the respective parties, and no facts are set forth or pleaded in relation thereto which would show that either of the parties would be disadvantaged by reason of the equitable interposition of the court herein, in adjudging and decreeing rescission of the contracts and the return of the money paid on account thereof.

While no portion of the testimony is printed as an appendix to appellants' brief in this action, the following summary set forth by appellants in their argument is a fair statement of the evidence relied upon in this cause:

Mrs. Lera Clark testified in substance as follows: The printed circular, showing a plat of real estate, was handed to her by one of defendant's salesmen while she and Mrs. Lepper were viewing the lots. This witness and Mrs. Lepper had gone to the tract to look at the lots, and there met one of defendant's salesmen. They were shown two lots. The lots were about the fifth and sixth lots back of the first alleyway, which was back of the first lots facing on Washington boulevard; told the agent she would not be interested in anything very far from Washington boulevard. The plat marked Plaintiffs' Exhibit I was the only plat shown the witness. The witness did not know the number of the lot. The agent said there were only two lots left in the tract. This salesman, accompanied by another salesman, came to the house to talk with Mr. Clark, who said that, if the lots were right off Washington, they would be satisfactory. "I think they had referred to this map they had given me." They talked about the lot being so near Washington, so near the business section, but far enough away, so that it would be a good lot on which to build a flat. They said that Washington boulevard would soon be finished. They didn't talk much about the plat; just about the lot. It is the same lot, the lot we were shown. It is the fifth lot from the corner. A year later the mistake was discovered, when a Mr. Franklin came to talk about the lot, and on investigation learned the real location of the lot described in the contract. This lot was in the same relative location in the block farther away.

On cross-examination the witness testified that she did not look at the map at all; that she looked at the property; that they were not bothering with the map, because they were on the land; it was the location of the lot in which they were interested, and not in the plat; that the salesman did not point to the map; "the salesman told me to show that to my husband. The lot was not more than a city block from Washington." The witness thought that the streets were laid out at the time. The witness further testified that the salesman had a big roll in his hand, but did not open it; that she never thought of the number of the lot once when she signed the contract; that she did not notice the word "sold" on lots 235 and 236 until called to her attention in court by the presiding judge, and then, by turning the plat to one side, she could read the word "sold." The witness further testified concerning the contract as follows: "I don't know that I read that contract over particularly; it was the lot that I wanted, and I was perfectly willing to buy it."

Mrs. Lepper testified that she was with Mrs. Clark on the first trip to the tract and examined the lots; looked at the lots; "that the lots were a good city block from Washington boulevard." The witness could not indicate the location of the lots on the plat, because she did not understand enough about directions, and could not point out the numbers of the lots on the plat; did not know whether the alley back of Washington was named Cologne street or not; that the lots were one city block from Washington; that the agent said to her, "Do you want to see the map?" to which the witness replied, "No; I just want to see my lot."

On cross-examination the witness further testified: "I don't understand the map very well; that is what I told the salesman." The agent took me a good city block off Washington boulevard and said, "You are so near Washington you will be able to have a resale of these in a very short time." The witness, after looking at the plat, testified: "I should say here is Washington; then, as I remember, is the alley; then, our lots; then, another street; I don't know the name of it." On redirect examination the witness guessed that the lots were 50 or 60 feet from the alley.

L. R. Clark, a witness called by the plaintiffs, testified that the two salesmen came to his house; said they had two good lots left in the tract, and they were such a short distance from Washington boulevard it would be a good investment. "I thought it was a good investment because they were just starting to widen Washington boulevard. They had this little plat, and marked the two lots we were to get." An examination of the plat shows the marking to be on lot No. 236. "The salesman said they had only two lots to sell." This witness did not sign the contract and never saw it.

Dr. L. E. Lepper, one of the plaintiffs, testified as follows: After Mrs. Clark and Mrs. Lepper had seen the tract, he and the two salesmen drove out to the tract. The witness told the salesman he wanted to see the lots the ladies had been shown. The salesman took him to the tract and said: "This is the lot Mrs. Clark wants, and this is the one, right next to Mrs. Clark, that Mrs. Lepper wants; you are standing on the lot that Mrs. Lepper wants." The witness then testified that the lots were about the distance of an ordinary city block from Washington boulevard; that he did not know what the numbers were; that the agent said nothing about the numbers; that the agents had another plat with them; that it was a larger plat; the agent stated that the lots marked in red were all sold, but the two lots pointed out as the ones upon which they were standing and wanted to buy were not colored red; that at the time of the closing of the contract, later in the day, the witness said: "Well, I hope that these numbers that I am signing for represent the lots I have seen this morning." To which the salesman replied: "A reputable concern like Ratterree could not afford to misrepresent things."

On cross-examination the witness further testified: The map (Plaintiffs' Exhibit 1) was not shown to or seen by the witness for more than a year afterwards; that the only map he saw was the chart shown out at the tract the day he first went out there; that he recollected no lot numbers, only colors; that he was not interested in the chart, but in the property; that he did not read the contract before he signed it. On redirect examination this witness testified that he did not read the contract, because the salesman told him it was the ordinary conventional type of contracts used in sales on the tract, and he assumed it would be all right, inasmuch as he was dealing with a concern like the Ratterree Investment.

This summary is taken from appellants' brief, and, therefore, may be assumed to be as favorable a presentation of the plaintiffs' cause of action as warranted by the facts. No testimony was introduced by the defendant, save expert testimony, as to the value of the lots.

In connection with the foregoing summary of the testimony, we may state that we have read the complete transcript of the evidence, and do not find a single word therein to the effect that the salesman ever mentioned the number of the lots to the plaintiffs, or that any representation was made in relation thereto, save and except the words, "a reputable concern like Ratterree could not afford to misrepresent things," in reply to a question by Dr. Lepper. The testimony shows that Mrs. Clark read the contract, but did not pay any particular attention to it. The testimony does not show whether Mrs. Lepper did or did not read the contract which she signed, but there is not a word of testimony to show that either one of them relied upon a single statement made by any of the defendant's salesmen, nor is there anything in the record to show that Dr. Lepper relied upon anything that had been said to him by any of the defendant's salesmen.

An inspection of the plat, which was handed to the prospective purchasers when they first visited the tract, and which was introduced as an exhibit in this cause, discloses the following: The tract is bounded on the south by Washington boulevard. This boulevard, however, does not run directly east and west, but runs along the tract in a northeasterly and southwesterly course, so as to necessitate a diagonal location of the lots along the boulevard. The first tier of blocks between Washington boulevard and the alley immediately to the north, as shown by the plat, are in depth only the length of one lot. This alley is unnamed. The first street to the north of Washington boulevard is Cologne street. Lots 225 and 226, in the block north of Cologne street, are in the center of the block facing Olga avenue. Lots 235 and 236 are in the center of the block south of Cologne street, and likewise face on Olga avenue. The relative position of all four of the lots is the same, save and except that two lots are north of Cologne street and two lots are south of Cologne street.

The summary of the testimony shows that some of the witnesses testified the lots were a good block from Washington boulevard. Upon this testimony the court might very well conclude that the two lots were in the block north of Cologne street. The witness Mrs. Lepper knew nothing about the plat, nor did she know much about directions. The testimony shows that none of the witnesses paid much attention to the plat. Other testimony, which we have not set out herein, was to the effect that the tract was unimproved, save that the streets were marked out; that there were no buildings upon the property, and work had just been begun, widening Washington boulevard. Under such circumstances we think the trial court might very well conclude that the contracts which the parties signed spoke the truth. The alleged mistake in the numbers of the lots inserted in the contracts was not discovered until a year after the lots had been purchased.

[1, 2] While what are called findings of fact, set forth in the transcript, are mostly conclusions of law, and do not correctly state the law in all instances, and are deficient, in that there is no finding on the question of whether appellants did or did not sign the contracts under the mistaken idea that they were buying lots 235 and 236, instead of lots 225 and 226, we do not very well see how any other judgments could be rendered in these actions. We agree with the appellants that it was not necessary, in an action to rescind on the grounds of mistake, that the mistake must be mutual. While some jurisdictions hold that the mistake must be mutual, section 1577 of the Civil Code and the numerous decisions of the courts of this state show that an action to rescind may be based upon the mistake only of the party prosecuting the action. See National Bank of California v. Miner, 167 Cal. 532, 140 P. 27; Dunham v. McDonald, 34 Cal. App. 744–747, 168 P. 1063; Los Angeles Co. v. New Liverpool Co., 150 Cal. 21–27, 87 P. 1029. Rescission, of course, cannot be had, unless the party rescinding has been diligent and is capable of making restitution, so that the opposite party is restored substantially to the same position as though the contract had not been made. Goodrich v. Lathrop, 94 Cal. 56, 29 P. 329, 28 Am. St. Rep. 91. Section 3407 of the Civil Code specifies that "rescission cannot be adjudged for mere mistake, unless the party against whom it is adjudged can be restored to substantially the same position as if the contract had not been made." Upon this question the record is entirely silent.

[3-5] As we have said, the record shows no fraud, no misrepresentation, and therefore the cases cited upon the subject of fraud need not be considered. We think the following statement of the law, found in 6 Cal. Juris. 84, is applicable to the present case: In order to relieve a party from mistake "the evidence must be clear and convincing, showing the mistake to the entire satisfaction of the court, and not loose, equivocal, or contradictory, leaving the mistake open to doubt. If the evidence is sufficient to satisfy the court that the instrument does not express the intention of the parties, and that the plaintiff had been mistaken in supposing that it did, the fact of his having read the instrument will not prevent the court from finding that it was made under a mistake." And, further: "If a person enters into a contract with another, between whom and himself no relation of a special trust or confidence exists, and it is reduced to writing by such other person, and the means of knowledge of the terms of the writing are equally open to both, and he signs it without reading, he cannot avoid a liability created by the writing, even if its terms differ from the terms of the contract as agreed upon verbally. A person accepting a contract is charged with knowledge of all of its provisions, where he had the means of such knowledge, and of which he carelessly and negligently deprived himself. The fact that he is illiterate does not change the rule. The care of a prudent man in the transaction of his business demands an examination of the instrument before signing, either by himself or by some one for him in whom he had a right to place confidence."

While a number of cases have been cited by appellant where rescission has been granted on the grounds of a mistake as to the subject-matter of the purchase, such as relating to the acreage of real estate, the boundaries of land, and whether certain springs or water sources were not upon the land actually purchased, but were shown to the purchaser as being upon the land, the question goes back to whether the evidence clearly establishes the allegations of the mistake. The explanation given by the appellants as to their failure to discover the alleged mistake was a matter of fact to be passed upon by the trial court. During the year intervening between the purchase of the lots and the discovery of the alleged mistake, the respective parties had been making payments monthly. It is possible that the parties never looked at their contracts during that period of time. The evidence shows that they had copies in their possession, but the evidence in this respect shows an absolute want of diligence, care, and attention, similar to that relating to the execution of the contracts in the first instance.

In view of the lack of the important elements in the testimony which we have heretofore pointed out, we do not very well see how any trial court could find that the mistakes in these cases were established by clear and satisfactory proof. This is especially true, in view of the fact that written instruments are not to be lightly set aside or disregarded.

It is therefore ordered that the judgments in both cases be and the same are hereby affirmed.

KENDALL et al. v. SAN PEDRO LUMBER COMPANY. (Civ. 3752.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 12, 1929.

1. Evidence 🔑215(1), 265(3)—Declaration of trust and assignment, setting out list of creditors and amount due, constituted admission of indebtedness, and was sufficient to establish prima facie case.

Declaration of trust and assignment, setting out in schedule as a part of assignment a list of creditors with the amount due each creditor, constituted admission of indebtedness due respective creditors named therein, and was sufficient to establish a prima facie case.

2. Evidence 🔑251(1)—Debtor's admission of indebtedness is prima facie binding on trustees authorized to take charge of assets.

Admission of debtor by virtue of declaration of trust and assignment, setting out list of creditors and amount due each one, was prima facie binding on trustees authorized to take charge of all assets and distribute residue after payment of expenses and preferred claims among unpreferred creditors.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Stanley Murray, Judge.

Action by Charles E. Kendall and another, trustees of the business, assets, and effects of the Terminal Ways & Machinery Company, against the San Pedro Lumber Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

A. P. Michael Narlian, Joseph N. Beardsley, A. E. Moore, and H. K. Lockwood, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Ernest B. Coil, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. The appellants instituted this action to obtain a declaratory judgment relative to the validity of a claim in the sum of $45,129.35, owned and possessed by the defendant against the Terminal Ways & Machinery Company, the assignor of the plaintiffs. The defendant had judgment, and from this judgment the plaintiffs appeal.

The record shows that the Terminal Ways & Machinery Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the state of California, had become heavily involved financially and unable to meet its obligations, and on or about the 10th day of July, 1924, executed an assignment and declaration of trust in favor of the plaintiffs, wherein and whereby the plaintiffs were authorized to take charge of all the assets and property then and theretofore belonging to the Terminal Ways & Machinery Company, collect all moneys due the company, reduce the assets to cash and discharge all the expenses of executing the trust, pay all preferred claims, and then distribute the residue, pro rata, among the unpreferred creditors of said company. The declaration of trust and assignment sets out in Schedule D, as a part of said assignment, a list of the creditors of the said Terminal Ways & Machinery Company, and the amount due each creditor, the language of the instruments to which we have referred being as follows: "And it is further agreed by and between the trustor and each of said beneficiaries, respectively, that the sum specified in said Schedule D as due any beneficiary from the trustor represents the total indebtedness of the trustor to such beneficiary, as of the date of this instrument." In Schedule D, to which we have referred, it is set forth that the amount due one A. M. Goodhue is the sum of $45,129.35. This is the amount claimed by the respondent in this action as the assignee of A. M. Goodhue. The declaration of trust in relation to this item, among other things, contains the following language: "Provided, further, that the San Pedro Lumber Company, a corporation, hereby waives and releases all claims or obligations which it may have or hereafter acquire against the stockholders of said Terminal Ways & Machinery Company, by reason of an assignment of a certain purported claim of one A. M. Goodhue, or otherwise, and it is hereby expressly agreed that it will not seek to recover or hold said stockholders on a stockholder's liability, or otherwise, by reason of said claim of A. M. Goodhue, or any other claims which it may now have against said corporation."

The declaration of trust further provides "that the trustees may pass upon all claims of all beneficiaries subscribing hereto, and may disallow any claim, in whole or in part. Such disallowance shall be without prejudice to the right of claimant to a judicial determination of the validity of such claim," etc. The answer to the appellants' complaint sets out at length the declaration of trust and the assignment made by the Terminal Ways & Machinery Company, containing the statement which we have quoted as to the amount due the respective creditors listed in Schedule D, and the amount due each creditor, and also the assignment to which we have just made reference. Upon the trial of the action the plaintiffs introduced no testimony whatever. The defendant introduced the declaration of trust and the assignment, and then rested its case. The court found that the declaration of trust and assignment had been fully executed by the trustees, save and except as to the distribution of the assets; that Schedule D has been in no way changed or modified since the execution and delivery of the declaration of trust and assignment; that the amount shown in Schedule D opposite the names of the respective creditors as shown by the books of the trustor, exhibited the amounts due the respective claimants. The court also further found that the San Pedro Lumber Company, as the assignee of A. M. Goodhue, was entitled to the amount of its pro rata of the assets based upon a claim in the sum of $45,129.35. The court also further found that the assignment, declaration of trust, and Schedule D constituted a stated account of the amount due the respective creditors.

[1, 2] Upon this appeal it is strenuously argued that the instruments to which we have referred do not constitute a stated account, and therefore the judgment of the trial court should be reversed. For the purposes of this opinion it may be conceded that the appellants' contention is well taken that the court was in error in finding that the instruments to which we have referred constituted a stated account, but it does not follow that the judgment should be reversed. The instruments to which we have referred and from which we have taken excerpts constituted admissions of the Terminal Ways & Machinery Company, of the indebtedness due its respective creditors named in said instruments, and as to the respondent, of the assignment to it of the amount due A. M. Goodhue. This constitutes sufficient proof to establish a prima facie case. The admission of the debtor is prima facie binding upon the plaintiffs in this case, who, as to such admission, stand in the shoes of their assignor. If they had any proofs that the admission was incorrect, that there was any attempt to give a preference to the respondent in this case, that the records did not show the truth by reason of some collusion or other wrongful act, it was their duty to introduce evidence thereof. The appellants in this case introduced no testimony whatever relative to the correctness of the respondent's claim. As we read the record, both parties submitted the cause upon the declaration of trust and assignment, including Schedule D. This was sufficient proof, as we have said, to make a case in favor of the respondent, and, there being no contradictory testimony, the judgment in favor of the respondent that the records show a correct statement of the amount due the respondent must be upheld, even though it is granted that the court was in error in denominating Schedule D a stated account.

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

PUGH-MILLER DRILLING CO. v. MAIN OIL CO. et al. (Civ. 3759.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 15, 1929.

1. Bills and notes 🔑104—Contracts 🔑95(1)—Third parties' notes and agreement to pay rent to prevent repossession by seller under conditional sale contract held not executed under "duress."

Where seller under conditional sale contract had right to remove oil well drilling machinery, and third parties for whom buyers were drilling well executed notes and agreed to pay rent for account of buyers to prevent repossession of machinery by seller, notes and agreement were not made under duress, since standing upon one's legal rights for protection thereof is not duress.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Duress.]

2. Parties 🔑6(2)—Conditional seller, with whom third parties made agreement to pay bona fide indebtedness of conditional buyer, was real party in interest.

Where third parties agreed to make payments to seller in satisfaction of bona fide indebtedness of buyer under conditional sale contract, seller was real party in interest and entitled to bring action against third parties.

3. Bailment 🔑31(1)—Failure to make repairs after reasonable notice to letter must be shown as prerequisite to hirer's right to recover (Civ. Code, §§ 1955–1957).

Under Civ. Code, §§ 1955–1957, governing rights of hirer and letter in regard to repairs on bailed property, before hirer can recover from letter the amount expended for repairs, it must be shown that letter has failed to make such repairs after having been given reasonable notice to do so.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter Guerin, Judge.

Action by the Pugh-Miller Drilling Company against the Main Oil Company of California and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Leslie H. Kranz, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Burke, Camarillo & Herron, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. The plaintiff was given judgment against all the defendants for the amount of two promissory notes for $1,500 and $750, respectively, executed by the Main Oil Company, and indorsed by the members of its board of directors, and also against the Main Oil Company alone for the further sum of $1,250 for the hire of an oil well drilling machine, being at the rate of $50 a day from March 27 to April 21, 1925. The defendants Main Oil Company, Leonards, Minor, and Allen have appealed from the judgment.

There is no conflict in the evidence relating to the execution and indorsement of the promissory notes or the use by the Main Oil Company of the drilling machine at the alleged rate per day. The defendants resisted payment of the plaintiff's demands on three grounds: (1) That the promissory notes were obtained by duress; (2) that H. L. Ball and C. C. Boatright, and not the plaintiff, were the real parties in interest; (3) that the corporation defendant was entitled to a credit of $3,983.51 for the cost of replacements made by it on the drilling machine.

The machinery in question was sold by the plaintiff to Ball and Boatright on a conditional sale or lease contract. Thereafter the purchasers entered into a contract to drill a well for the corporation defendant. They entered upon the work, and, after it had been in progress for some time, the plaintiff made demand upon Ball and Boatright for payments which had become due, and stated, in the presence of one of defendants, a director of the Main Oil Company, that, if payment was not made, the plaintiff would take possession of the machinery under the terms of the sale contract and remove it. In order to prevent the removal of the machinery, the defendants paid the plaintiff $1,000 "on the instruction of Ball and Boatright," gave the promissory notes in suit, and agreed to pay the plaintiff "a rental of $50 a day" for subsequent use of the machinery "for the account of Ball and Boatright."

[1] Appellants contend that the plaintiff demanded that the defendants agree to make payments for Ball and Boatright, under their contract to purchase, with the alternative of the removal of the machinery; that "a cessation of the work at that juncture would have been disastrous"; and that such conduct on the part of the plaintiff "amounted to duress." Mr. Pugh testified that he made a demand for payment on Ball and Boatright, but not on the defendants. Plaintiff had the right, under its contract with Ball and Boatright, to take possession of the machinery in the event of their default. "It is not legal duress to threaten or actually to take advantage of the usual remedy by suit for the enforcement of a debt or obligation. * * * Standing upon one's legal rights for the protection thereof cannot be recognized as coercion, intimidation or undue influence of any other person." 6 Cal. Jur. 67.

[2] There is no evidence whatever to support the appellants' second contention that the plaintiff is not the real party in interest. The uncontradicted evidence shows that the plaintiff agreed to sell the machinery to Ball and Boatright on the terms herein set forth, and that the payments which the defendants made and agreed to make to the plaintiff were in satisfaction of a bona fide indebtedness of Ball and Boatright to the plaintiff.

[3] The defendants introduced evidence to the effect that the plaintiff impliedly agreed to credit the Main Oil Company with its expenditures for necessary replacement of parts of the machinery. The plaintiff's witnesses testified to the contrary. The defendants also produced evidence tending to show that it is the custom in the oil fields for the owner of the machinery in such a case to pay for replacements. Pugh testified that the custom is that "the man who hires the rig always keeps it up." Leaving out of consideration the fact that the plaintiff did not lease the machinery to the Main Oil Company, but to Ball and Boatright, and they to the defendant company, and treating the whole arrangement as a hiring of the machinery by the oil company from the plaintiff, the following sections of the Civil Code are controlling:

"1955. One who lets personal property must deliver it to the hirer, secure his quiet enjoyment thereof against all lawful claimants, put it into a condition fit for the purpose for which he lets it, and repair all deteriorations thereof not occasioned by the fault of the hirer and not the natural result of its use.

"1956. A hirer of personal property must bear all such expenses concerning it as might naturally be foreseen to attend it during its use by him. All other expenses must be borne by the letter.

"1957. If a letter failed to fulfill his obligations, as prescribed by section nineteen hundred and fifty-five, the hirer, after giving him notice to do so, if such notice can conveniently be given, may expend any reasonable amount necessary to make good the letter's default, and may recover such amount from him."

Under the provisions of these sections, before the hirer can recover from the letter the amount expended for repairs, it must be shown that the letter had failed to make such repairs, after having been given reasonable notice to do so. McFayden v. Town of Calistoga, 74 Cal. App. 378, 384, 240 P. 523. No such showing was made in this case.

The judgment is affirmed.

CHRISTIE v. SHEAFER et al.

(Civ. 3732.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 8, 1929.

1. Adoption 🔑3—Statutes relating to adoption must be strictly construed.

Statutes relating to adoption are in derogation of the common law, and must be strictly construed.

2. Adoption 🔑3—Courts construe every intendment of statutes relating to adoption in favor of claim of natural parent.

Courts will construe every intendment of statutes relating to adoption in favor of claim of natural parent, and strictly construe them when purpose or effect thereof is to deprive natural parent of possession of child; all doubts being resolved in parent's favor in an endeavor to preserve integrity of the family and to protect rights of the parents.

3. Adoption 🔑12—Where final decree of divorce was vacated at time of hearing motion to set aside decree of adoption, notice of adoption to father of child was required (Civ. Code, § 224).

Where final decree of divorce had been vacated at the time of hearing of motion to set aside decree of adoption of child of parties to divorce action, parties were left by virtue of vacation of final decree as if no final decree had been issued and stood before court as husband and wife directly within express purview of Civ. Code, § 224, providing that a legitimate child cannot be adopted without consent of its parents if living, though the wife possessed an interlocutory decree declaring her entitled to a final decree, so that husband was entitled to notice of adoption proceedings; his consent thereto being required.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Harry R. Archbald, Judge.

Motion by Richard H. Christie in the matter of the adoption of Richard H. Christie, Jr., a minor, to set aside a decree of adoption against H. H. Sheafer and others. Motion denied, and petitioner appeals. Reversed.

See, also, 277 P. 872.

Lucian J. Clarke and Clarke & Wilson, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Lyle W. Rucker, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

McDANIEL, Justice pro tem. This appeal is from an order of the superior court of Los Angeles county, in department No. 27, denying a motion to set aside a decree of adoption. The motion was made under the provisions of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The facts may be summarized as follows, to wit: Richard H. Christie, Jr., is the son of appellant, Richard H. Christie, and his wife, Ruth A. Christie. He was born October 8, 1922. The petition for adoption of said minor child was filed by H. H. Sheafer and Clara Sheafer, his wife, who were the maternal grandparents. The petition shows that Ruth A. Christie, the mother of said child, secured an interlocutory judgment of divorce from her husband, Richard H. Christie, upon the grounds of extreme cruelty, on the 8th day of March, 1926, in department 7 of the superior court, in and for Los Angeles county. It is alleged that on March 9, 1927, a final judgment of divorce was entered in this matter in favor of Ruth A. Christie and against Richard H. Christie, and that the mother of said child consented in writing to the adoption of the said child by the petitioners. The remaining averments in the petition for adoption are apparently in due form. It was filed on the 10th day of March, 1927, the next day after the issuance of the said final decree of divorce. Thereafter, on said day, the matter was heard by the court, and all the proceedings seem to have been in due form, except it affirmatively appears from the record that the father of the minor was not given any notice of the hearing of said proceedings for adoption, was not present at the hearing, and did not in any manner, nor at all, give his consent thereto. The adoption proceedings were heard in department No. 27 of said court.

On the 23d day of March, 1927, the appellant, Richard H. Christie, filed a notice of motion to set aside and vacate the decree of adoption in said matter. He sets forth as grounds of motion that said decree was made against the said Richard H. Christie, through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, and excusable neglect; that the court is and was without jurisdiction to act upon the petition for adoption, or to enter the decree therein; that the decree is contrary to, and in violation of, article I, § 13, of the Constitution of the state of California, in that it deprives said Richard H. Christie of his property without due process of law; that fraud and deceit were practiced upon the court to procure the said decree of adoption, in that, at said time, to wit, March 10, 1927, the above-entitled court, in department 29 thereof, had theretofore acquired and had jurisdiction over the awarding of the care, custody, and control of said minor child, and on the 28th day of February, 1927, had made its order so awarding the child to both parents in the divorce action between Ruth A. Christie and Richard H. Christie, the mother and father of said minor child, and this court (i. e., department 27 of said above-entitled court) was not informed of the effect or circumstances of said order of the judge of said department 29; that at the time of the said decree of adoption, to wit, March 10, 1927, there was no valid final decree or judgment of said divorce between the parties to said action; that the mother and father of said minor child were not divorced. Supporting the petition was the affidavit of Richard H. Christie, a copy of which was attached to the notice of motion, and reference was made, also, to the papers and records on file in said divorce action, same being No. D43768, superior court of Los Angeles county files. The petition also cited authorities relied upon. The affidavit of appellant shows all of the matters set forth in this petition, with a few added facts, namely, that, after the interlocutory decree was entered on the 8th day of March, 1926, on the 10th day of March, 1926, an amended interlocutory judgment in said action was entered in the records of said court, wherein the care, custody, and control of the minor son of the parties was awarded to the plaintiff in the divorce action, namely, Ruth A. Christie, but permitting the defendant, the affiant, to take the minor son from the home of the plaintiff, between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m. and 5 o'clock p. m. on Wednesday of each week, until the further order of the court; that thereafter, on or about the 21st day of December, 1926, the parties to said action entered into an agreement in writing, which agreement is filed in said divorce action, and of which a certified copy has been filed herein and made a part of the record on this appeal. The said agreement provides that, on the ex parte application of the affiant, or his attorney, at any time after the date of said agreement, the said interlocutory order may be modified so as to provide that the care, custody, and control of said minor child shall be equally divided between the plaintiff and affiant; that, pursuant to said agreement, on the 19th day of January, 1927, an amended interlocutory judgment was docketed and entered in said action, providing that the care, custody, and control of said minor child be equally divided between the parties, and that affiant and his father, Haldane H. Christie, be permitted to take the minor son from the home of plaintiff or from such other place as said minor child might be living, and keep the custody and control of him, not to exceed in the aggregate, six months in any one calendar year; that on the 20th day of January, 1927, an order was issued by the presiding judge of said court requiring the parties to appear in department 29, on the 28th day of February, 1927, at 10 o'clock a. m., to show cause, if any they had, why the minor son of plaintiff and affiant should not be placed in the hands of Mrs. H. H. Sheafer, plaintiff's mother, and she be given the ultimate custody and control of him, pending the further order of the court, and further, to show cause why the defendant (this affiant) should not be restrained from taking the child from the home of plaintiff's mother.

It is recited that in said department 29, on February 28, 1927, pursuant to said order, affiant and his father, plaintiff Ruth A. Christie, and her mother, Mrs. H. H. Sheafer, appeared and testified concerning matters then before the court, and that at the conclusion of the hearing the court directed affiant's attorney, Lucian J. Clarke, Esq., to prepare an amended interlocutory judgment of divorce and order, and submit it to Lyle W. Rucker, Esq., attorney for plaintiff, before submitting it to the judge of department 29 for his approval and signature. The affidavit further alleges that on March 18, 1927, another amended interlocutory judgment of divorce and order was entered in the records of the court; then it sets forth the steps taken in the adoption proceedings in department 27; states that affiant has examined the papers and documents and file of said adoption proceeding, and no mention was therein made of the pendency in said superior court, or in department 29 thereof, of any matter, question, or action, or order or judgment, relative to the care, custody, or control of affiant's minor son; and alleges that affiant had no knowledge nor notice, either written or oral, of the pendency of said adoption proceeding, or of the intention of plaintiff in said divorce action, or her mother or her husband, to petition this, or any court for the adoption of the child; further alleges that affiant has stated all the facts herein related, to his attorney, and is by him informed and verily believes that this court is and was without jurisdiction to hear and determine the matters contained in the petition for adoption, and make or enter said decree of adoption therein; states that, had affiant known of the filing of the petition, he would have appeared in said court at said time and objected and resisted the same to the utmost of his ability; that he has never consented nor agreed to the adoption, by any person, of said minor child, and asks that the decree of adoption be set aside. The foregoing facts either were not controverted or were established beyond question by the record.

Respondents contend that the trial court had plenary jurisdiction; that the proceedings were regular in all respects; that the decree of adoption was valid, and the judgment denying appellant's motion should be affirmed.

Matters of testimony not certified to this court nor shown in the record were argued, but cannot be given consideration because not properly presented by this appeal.

On the 12th day of April, 1927, in department 27 of said superior court, the motion to vacate and set aside the decree of adoption was denied. In the argument it is conceded that, at the time of the hearing on the motion, it was shown to the court that on March 19, 1927, upon application by appellant, heard in department 15 thereof, the final decree of divorce of March 9, 1927, was vacated and set aside by order duly entered, and thereafter the plaintiff Ruth A. Christie took an appeal now pending therefrom.

[1, 2] Statutes relating to adoption are in derogation of the common law, and must be strictly construed. In re Newman (Cal. App.) 262 P. 1112. That case also holds that, since the statutes relating to adoption are in derogation of the common law, the rule of strict construction applies, especially when the purpose or effect thereof is to deprive a natural parent of the possession of his child, and the courts, being solicitous in preserving the integrity of the family and zealous to protect the rights of the parents, will construe every intendment thereof in favor of the claim of the natural parent, all doubts being resolved in his favor; and, if the statute is open to interpretation, it should be construed in favor of the natural parent (citing authorities).

[3] It affirmatively appears from the record herein and in the above-entitled divorce action, while the so-called final decree of divorce of March 9, 1927, was silent as to the matter of the care and custody of the minor child, there was actually in force a subsisting and valid order dated January 19, 1927, made ex parte, it is true, but continued in force expressly, February 28, 1927, after hearing in open court in the presence of all parties, which was made in accordance with the provisions of section 138 of the Civil Code of this state, during the pendency of the divorce proceedings. This court, when discussing In re De Leon, 70 Cal. App. 1, on page 14, 232 P. 738, 743, says: "While section 224 [Civil Code], provides generally that consent shall not be necessary to the adoption of children of the marriage from the parent against whom the decree is granted on the ground of cruelty, the section stops there. It does not assume to interfere with the orders of the court in divorce proceedings as to the custody of children." The preceding sentence is the court's quotation, in part, from the Matter of Cozza, 163 Cal. 514, 126 P. 161, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 214. The court then proceeds: "After further discussion of the case, the Supreme Court held that, even though the divorce had been granted to the husband on account of the extreme cruelty of the wife, the child having been awarded to her, notice of the proceeding to adopt the child in question was absolutely necessary, and the proceeding having been had without the giving of such notice and without her consent, the order of the trial court was reversed." The view shown in these excerpts is applicable to the instant case. If there are any doubts, however, that the trial court herein committed error in making the adoption award without requiring notice to be served upon the father, the appellant herein, and if it be deemed that at the time of the decree of adoption the court prima facie had jurisdiction to render judgment—it became apparent on the hearing of the motion to set aside the decree, without contradiction, that the final decree of divorce of March 8, 1927, had been vacated and annulled. We deem that the situation then shown left the parties, by virtue of that vacation of the final decree, as if no final decree had ever issued, and the parties stood before the court as husband and wife, and directly within the express purview of section 224 of the Civil Code. They were not divorced, although the wife possessed the interlocutory decree declaring her entitled to a final decree. The husband was entitled to notice, and his consent to the adoption was requisite and necessary. This view makes any analysis or discussion of other points argued by respective counsel needless. We regard the cases of Miller v. Higgins, 14 Cal. App. at page 156, 111 P. 403, In re De Leon, 70 Cal. App. 1, 232 P. 738, and In re Newman (Cal. App.) 262 P. 1112, in their reasoning and application of the principles of law which pertain to adoption, as decisive of the question of the necessity of notice upon appellant at the hearing for adoption in the trial court and all the material issues herein.

The order is reversed.

OLD RIVER FARMS CO. v. ROSCOE HAEGELIN CO. et al. (Civ. 6366.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 16, 1929.

Rehearing Denied May 16, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court June 13, 1929.

1. Associations 🔑16—Individual members of voluntary unincorporated association were liable as general partners for debt of association (Const. art. 12, §§ 1, 3, 4).

Individual members of voluntary unincorporated association were liable as general partners for claim against association, regardless of limitation of personal liability under Const. art. 12, § 3, as to stockholder of corporation or joint-stock association, since provision limiting liability when construed in connection with sections 1 and 4 refers only to stockholders of corporation or joint-stock association formed under the general laws.

2. Associations 🔑16—Members of voluntary unincorporated association were not relieved from liability on lease because president added words, "no personal liability," to signature thereto.

Fact that president of voluntary unincorporated association after signing lease added words, "no personal liability," did not have effect of relieving members of association from personal liability for rent accruing thereunder.

others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Hearing denied by Supreme Court; SEAWELL and LANGDON, JJ., voting for a transfer.

Harry G. McKannay, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Randolph V. Whiting, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PARKER, Justice pro tem. This is an action to recover unpaid rent. The making of the lease and the nonpayment of the last installment of the rent thereunder are admitted. The lease was between plaintiff, a corporation, and Roscoe Haegelin Company, which is described in the lease as "a Trust Association organized and existing under the laws of the State of California." Plaintiff brought this action against Roscoe Haegelin Company as an unincorporated association and certain of the members thereof, whose association and membership in the said company is not denied. Judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff and against all of the named defendants, and all of said defendants have appealed.

There is no contention made here that the judgment as to the defendant Roscoe Haegelin Company is in any particular erroneous. The individual defendants against whom judgment was rendered, present this appeal on the claim that whatever may have been the liability of the defendant Roscoe Haegelin Company there was no liability on the members of said company individually. It is conceded that on the record before us the judgment against Roscoe Haegelin Company must be affirmed. We will then consider the appeal of the remaining defendants.

The complaint alleged that the Roscoe Haegelin Company was and now is a voluntary unincorporated association consisting of the defendants named and others unknown to plaintiff. The defendants herein by way of answer allege: "That Roscoe Haegelin Company is a voluntary unincorporated association doing business as a joint stock company under and by virtue of a written agreement of trust." Further the defendants, by way of additional answer, alleged: "That in and by said written agreement of lease plaintiff agreed in writing that said written agreement of lease created no personal liability as against the trustees of the said voluntary unincorporated association in favor of said lessor, the plaintiff herein." The trial court found: "That defendant Roscoe Haegelin Company now is and at all times mentioned herein was a voluntary unincorporated association, consisting of various individuals associated in business and transacting business under said common name." The court further found—and the finding is not disputed here—that at the time the indebtedness was incurred each of the individual defendants was a member of the said association, owning shares therein. In this connection it may be noted that the finding of the court discloses that some of the individual defendants were trustees of the association, while other defendants were not. The main argument advanced is as follows: "The defendant Roscoe Haegelin Company is a corporation as such term is defined in section 4 of article 12 of the Constitution of the state of California."

[1] Section 4 of article 12 of the Constitution of this state is as follows: "The term corporations, as used in this article, shall be construed to include all associations and joint-stock companies having any of the powers or privileges of corporations not possessed by individuals or partnerships."

Appellants then contend that the form of organization of Roscoe Haegelin Company is that of a joint-stock company. Putting their argument into formula, it is thus stated: Joint-stock companies under the Constitution are corporations; Roscoe Haegelin Company is a joint-stock company; therefore Roscoe Haegelin Company under the Constitution is a corporation. From this point the argument continues that, being a corporation, the liability of its members or shareholders is governed by the provisions of section 3 of article 12 of the Constitution, as follows: "Each stockholder of a corporation, or joint-stock association, shall be individually and personally liable for such proposition of all its debts and liabilities contracted or incurred, during the time he was a stockholder, as the amount of stock or shares owned by him bears to the whole of the subscribed capital stock, or shares of the corporation or association." However, there is another section of the Constitution which has been apparently cast aside in building up this entire argument. Section 1 of article 12 reads: "Corporations shall be formed under general laws, but shall not be created by special act." Should we accept, then, appellants' construction of section 4, we would then read section 1 as follows: "Sec. 1. Corporations, including joint stock associations, may be formed under the general law and not otherwise."

Approaching section 3 of article 12 with this construction in mind, the conclusion compelled is that the reference to stockholders of a corporation or joint-stock association is intended to mean stockholders of a corporation or joint-stock association formed under the general law. When the framers of the Constitution in section 4 of article 12 used this language: "The term corporations, as used in this article, shall be construed to include all associations and joint-stock companies having any of the powers or privileges of corporations," it seems clear that they meant thereby to create but one class of organization to be known as a corporation, and to embrace within that class joint-stock companies; in other words, that there could exist no joint-stock company having any of the privileges of a corporation unless said joint-stock company became a corporation by compliance with general laws as provided by section 1 of article 12.

In the case at bar it is conceded that the Roscoe Haegelin Company is not a corporation organized and existing under the general laws.

The case of Goodlett v. St. Elmo Investment Co., 94 Cal. 301, 29 P. 505, has many features in common with the instant case. In that case the points here discussed were not raised, for the reason that it seemed conceded by the court and all parties that there was an individual liability upon the shareholders if proper pleadings sought to enforce it.

We do not feel called upon to detail the articles of agreement under which the Roscoe Haegelin Company was organized, or under which it operated. Plaintiff characterizes the company as "an unincorporated association," and defendants call the company "a voluntary unincorporated association doing business as a joint stock company." From what we have already stated, it is a distinction without a difference.

In Stitzinger v. Truitt, 81 Cal. App. 505, 253 P. 972, it is said: "At common law joint-stock companies were regarded as commercial partnerships, and in the absence of express provisions, statutory or otherwise, the rights and liabilities of their members are to be determined by substantially the same rules. * * * Except in so far as such liability may be limited by statute, or by special agreement with those dealing with the association, the stockholders of a joint-stock company are personally liable for the debts and obligations of the company, precisely as general partners are liable for the debts of the firm, and liability to creditors is not changed by the fact that the form of the association was intended to give the association the attributes of a corporation"—citing 33 Cor. Jur. 889. "There is no claim or pretense here that the syndicate complied with any statute providing for a joint-stock company or for any kind of a special partnership. For this reason, then, the appellants would be liable as general copartners under the general rule. Also their liability is of the same nature whether they be regarded as general copartners or merely as members of an association doing business under an associate name."

See, also, Bullard v. Kinney, 10 Cal. 60; Goodlett v. St. Elmo Co., 94 Cal. 297, 29 P. 505; Webster v. San Joaquin, etc., Co., 32 Cal. App. 264, 162 P. 654; Leake v. City of Venice, 50 Cal. App. 462, 195 P. 440.

In the case at bar there is nothing to indicate compliance with the statute governing limited or special partnerships, and no claim is made that the Roscoe Haegelin Company is such a partnership.

From what has been said it follows, in the absence of any special agreement to the contrary, that the individual members of Roscoe Haegelin Company are liable as general partners in as far as the claim of plaintiff is concerned.

[2] As to appellants' further claim that plaintiff agreed in writing that the lease created no personal liability as against the trustees or members of said association in favor of plaintiff, this raises an issue of fact. The finding of the court is adverse to appellants on this issue, and there is nothing in the record before us to warrant this finding being disturbed. The contention of the appellants on this phase of the case is based upon the lease and its execution. In the body of the lease the Roscoe Haegelin Company is described as "a trust association organized and existing under the laws of the state of California." After the lease was prepared and executed by plaintiff it was sent to the president of the association, and his execution is as follows: Roscoe Haegelin Company. No personal liability. By Roscoe Haegelin, Pres."

It is claimed that the words "No personal liability" determined the matter there and then. This would not be controlling standing alone. In fact, appellants in their main contention admit that, if their claims regarding a joint-stock company were sound, there would still remain a proportionate personal liability. We do not feel that the claim merits further discussion. The trial court went fully into the circumstances surrounding the execution of the lease, and found that there was no waiver of personal liability, and, as indicated herein, we do not think that there is any peculiar magic in the phrase as inserted. The words are too general to have the effect claimed, and would not overcome the facts themselves and the law applicable thereto.

It must be noted that at no time did the Roscoe Haegelin Company or its members or the individuals comprising said association ever claim to be anything but a voluntary unincorporated association, working under a trust agreement. Even in the pleadings the company was so designated up to and after the actual trial when, by permission of court, the words, "as a joint stock company," were inserted to describe the company as "a voluntary unincorporated association doing business as a joint stock company under and by virtue of a written agreement of trust." In the articles of agreement we find no mention of or characterization of the company as a joint-stock company. There was filed in the office of the county clerk a "Notice of Individuals transacting business under the name of Roscoe Haegelin Company," wherein notice was given that certain individuals were transacting business as trustees under an agreement and declaration of trust under the firm name and style of Roscoe Haegelin Company. Application was made to the commissioner of corporations for a permit to issue and sell shares of stock, wherein the concern was described as "Roscoe Haegelin Company, an unincorporated association doing business under an agreement of declaration of trust." In no place nor at any time did appellants represent the company as a joint-stock company.

The law has anticipated that individuals may desire to embark in business ventures without risking their entire capital, and has provided for just such cases by ample statutory enactments and by direct constitutional provisions. Appellants, however, attempt to disregard all of these wise and salutary laws, and ask us to hold them as naught. This we decline to do.

Judgment affirmed.

GILINSKY FRUIT CO. v. DAVIS, Presidential Agent. (Civ. 6475.) ★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. April 16, 1929.

Rehearing Denied May 16, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court June 13, 1929.

Railroads ⟹5½(25)—Presidential Agent, by filing demurrer and interposing answer to complaint, made general appearance, precluding directed verdict because of defective service (Transportation Act 1920; 49 USCA § 71 et seq).

Presidential Agent, having filed demurrer in action under the Transportation Act 1920 (49 USCA § 71 et seq.), and subsequently interposed an answer specifically denying material allegations of complaint, made general appearance sufficient to preclude a directed verdict on ground that summons was not served on any one as statutory agent for railroads over which shipment claimed to have been damaged was carried.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Charles R. Barnard, Judge.

Action by the Gilinsky Fruit Company against James C. Davis, as Presidential Agent. Judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded for a new trial.

Harris & Hayhurst and Rue C. Gibson, all of Fresno, for appellant.

L. L. Cory and W. H. Stammer, both of Fresno, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action against the defendant to recover damages to some shipments of green fruit. The defendant answered, and a trial was had before the trial court sitting with a jury. The plaintiff introduced its proof and rested. Thereafter the defendant introduced his proof and rested. Later the plaintiff introduced proof in rebuttal, and then it rested. Thereupon the defendant made a motion that the jury be directed to bring in a verdict in favor of the defendant. The motion was granted, and a judgment based on that verdict was entered. In due time the plaintiff made a motion for a new trial, the motion was denied, and the plaintiff appealed from the judgment.

The motion for a directed verdict was based on the ground that summons was served on E. A. Van Wynen, statutory agent for the Southern Pacific Company, and was not served on any one as statutory agent for Modesto & Empire Traction Company, Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railroad Company, or Missouri Pacific Railroad Company, the roads over which the plaintiff alleged in its complaint the shipment was carried. In its brief, the plaintiff quotes many parts of the record showing that the defendant did many different acts, each of which constituted a general appearance, and that the defendant's objections were dilatory and should have been so treated, and that the facts proved by the plaintiff made out a prima facie case, every element being supported by substantial evidence, and therefore no directed verdict should have been ordered. The defendant filed a brief in which he does not controvert any of the foregoing contentions. However, he asserts most earnestly that "under the Transportation Act of 1920 [49 USCA § 71 et seq.] the presidential agent can be sued only in connection with a cause of action against a particular railroad arising out of federal control, and service of summons upon him can only be made through the agent of that particular carrier which caused the alleged liability to arise." He then proceeds to quote the record showing that no summons was served on any one of the railroads specified in the complaint, and contends that the verdict was properly directed in his behalf. The general contention so made by the respondent is admitted by the plaintiff; but it replies that service or nonservice of summons had ceased to be a material factor in the case. It points to the record showing that the second amended complaint was filed June 29, 1923; that on July 10, 1923, the defendant, without limiting his capacity in any respect, filed a demurrer which was overruled; that on May 22, 1925, in the same manner he interposed an answer specifically denying the material allegations of the plaintiff's complaint; and that at no time and in no manner, by a special appearance therefor, or otherwise, did the defendant attempt to quash the service or claim nonservice of summons except as we will now state.

On September 16, 1926, the defendant filed an amendment as "of course" to his answer, and therein alleged that the summons was served on the Southern Pacific Company but not on any one of the roads mentioned in the complaint. On December 1, 1926, the defendant, with leave of the court, filed an amended answer which combined the original answer and the amendment thereto. Plaintiff asserts that, by these acts, the defendant waived any defect in the service of summons, and, conceding the full force and effect of the general rule contended for by the defendant, nevertheless, when a sovereign comes into court, the rules of practice are the same as those applicable to the humblest citizen. In reply, the defendant claims "the presidential agent has no power or authority to waive any of the terms of the Transportation Act of 1920." In this behalf he cites and relies on Stanley v. Schwalby, 162 U. S. 255, 16 S. Ct. 754, 40 L. Ed. 960; Tutsch v. Director General of Railroads, 52 Cal. App. 650, 654, 199 P. 861; Jenness v. Payne, 81 N. H. 308, 125 A. 679; Vassau v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 69 Mont. 305, 221 P. 1069; Davis v. Donovan, 265 U. S. 257, 44 S. Ct. 513, 68 L. Ed. 1008. In its reply brief, the appellant examined and distinguished each one of those cases, and showed that no one of them supported the claim made by the defendant. On the oral argument, the defendant made no attempt to show that the criticism of the authorities so made by the plaintiff was unsound. We have examined those authorities and do not find them applicable.

The rule applicable to the ordinary suitor is against the claim made by this defendant. 4 C. J. 1350; 3 Cal. Jur. 15. In the litigation entitled The Ulrik Holm (C. C. A.) 298 F. 849, the following facts were involved: The Ulrik Holm, a vessel owned by a Danish corporation, and the tug Calawissa, owned by the Redding Company, collided in the Boston Harbor. A libel was brought by the Redding Company and a cross-libel by the Danish corporation. Later, Walker D. Hines, Director General of Railroads of the United States, appeared as claimant of the Catawissa, and on his request was made a party respondent. On the trial, the District Court ruled against the Redding Company and in favor of the Danish corporation. Appeals were taken to the Circuit Court of Appeals. The Director General complained that the decree of the District Court was in effect a decree in persona, but the court replied that, even though it was, he had appeared in person, and, on his request, he had been made a party respondent in the cross-libel, and that the District Court had jurisdiction to enter a personal judgment against him as Director General. An application for a writ of certiorari was denied. Reading Co. v. Marius Nielson & Son, Inc., 266 U. S. 615, 45 S. Ct. 96, 69 L. Ed. 469. In the case of New Jersey Shipbuilding & Dredging Co. v. Davis (D. C.) 291 F. 617, the plaintiff was complaining of the acts of two different railroads which were under administration of the defendant. The defendant had retained an attorney, one for each of his agencies, and each attorney appeared for him generally. Process had not been served on the agent of either of the railroads. The defendant claimed that therefore the court had no jurisdiction of him. The court ruled against him, saying no suggestion can be found in the books of any such limitation upon a general appearance. In the case of Rosenzweig v. Hines (D. C.) 285 F. 622, the process was served on the Director General. At that time he was not acting and the service was unauthorized. The court said: "Although the director general was irregularly served with a summons and complaint, I think the designated agent had the right afterwards to waive any irregularity of that nature, and submit himself to the jurisdiction of the court by his general appearance, and answer to the merits, or by his consent to be substituted in the place of the director general. Having done so by his attorney, he could not in fairness at the trial take the position that he had not been properly served with process in his representative capacity, and thus oust the plaintiffs." The decision was affirmed by the Circuit Court of Appeals, 285 F. 1021. World Pub. Co. v. Davis (D. C.) 16 F.(2d) 130, involved the trial of several consolidated cases. Motions to quash service of summons were made and denied. Thereupon the defendant filed other pleadings in the cases. A trial was had, and one of the points made by the defendant was that he was not properly before the court. The court said: "I am clearly of the opinion that the defendant has made general appearances in each of the cases, and that this final contention is without merit."

Conceding freely, as the defendant contends, that the government is not liable to suit unless it consents thereto, and its liability to suit cannot be extended beyond the plain language of the statute authorizing it, we think that the facts of this case do not bring anything that we have said in conflict with that rule. True it is that under the Transportation Act the federal government consented to be sued. True it is that each one of the railroads, while under the operation of the federal government, was an agency of the federal government, but there are and have been, from time to time, analogous situations. A federal reserve bank is an agency of the federal government, but a general appearance by one of those banks is a waiver of jurisdiction of its person. Brookings State Bank v. Federal Reserve Bank (D. C.) 291 F. 659. National banks organized under the National Bank Act (12 USCA § 1 et seq.) are instruments designed to be used in aid of the government. However, in suits to which a national bank is a party one of those banks confers jurisdiction of its person by entering a general appearance. First National Bank of Charlotte v. Morgan, 132 U. S. 141, 10 S. Ct. 37, 33 L. Ed. 282. Moreover there are other statutes under which the federal government has consented to be sued. In actions brought under the Tucker Act (24 Stat. 505), it has been held that jurisdiction of the person is conferred by a general appearance. Everett Ry. Light & Power Co. v. United States (D. C.) 236 F. 806. We think it is clear that the general rule above cited, 3 Cal. Jur. 15, is applicable, and that at the time the motion for a directed verdict was made the plaintiff had made out a prima facie case, and, as the defendant had made a general appearance, the question of service of process had ceased to be of importance, and therefore the case should have been submitted to the jury. See generally 52 A. L. R. 327, note.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded for a new trial.

David C. Dutton and Dutton & Gilkey, all of Oakland, for appellant.

P. O. Solon and Wm. H. Hollander, both of Oakland, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued for damages, alleging malpractice on the part of defendant in his capacity as a physician and surgeon. The cause was tried with a jury, which rendered a verdict for plaintiff in the sum of $1,000. Plaintiff moved for a new trial on the issue of damages alone. His motion was granted, and the defendant appeals. Defendant moved for a new trial generally. His motion was denied. He takes a separate appeal from the judgment which was entered upon the verdict. Both appeals are taken upon typewritten transcripts.

In August, 1921, plaintiff incurred an injury somewhere near the left kidney from which he suffered for nearly three years. He consulted the defendant in June, 1924. On July 22d of that year the defendant operated upon the plaintiff. At the time he found that the left kidney was "a dead or functionless pus kidney." He removed practically all the interior of this kidney and a large amount of matter and pus. He also found that the left ureter failed to drain this kidney, as it was completely blocked. The physical condition of the plaintiff was such on the operating table that the defendant was unable to make any further examination. He drained a large amount of pus from the kidney, inserted a rubber tube to provide further drainage and closed the incision. The patient recovered quickly. His physical condition continued to improve for several months and until March, 1925, when he consulted an urologist for an examination. This urologist found that the left ureter was permanently stopped up, and that no urine was being discharged from the left kidney. He also found that the left kidney was dead and permanently functionless, but that there was an abscess in the lower portion of the ureter, and he advised the plaintiff to have the ureter removed. On April 14, 1925, defendant again operated on the plaintiff, this time removing about five inches of the left ureter. The plaintiff made a rapid recovery from this operation, gaining in weight and physical vigor. About two months thereafter he again suffered pain in the region of his left kidney, and another surgeon operated on him, removing the kidney capsule or shell.

The operation of April 14, 1925, is the basis of the action, the plaintiff claiming that defendant was negligent in removing the portion of the ureter and allowing a portion of the kidney to remain. To this charge of negligence the defendant makes answer that the ureter was the sole cause of plaintiff's ailment at the time, that he used all customary care and skill in the operation, that there was no negligence in not removing the kidney shell because it was functionless, and that plaintiff's subsequent ailments were due to his initial injury or to congenital deformities which could not have been anticipated at the time of the operation.

[1-4] Upon the completion of plaintiff's case the defendant moved for a nonsuit on the grounds that there was no evidence to show that he had done anything he should not have done, or that he had failed to do anything he should have done; that there was no evidence that anything done or undone by him was the proximate or any cause of any injury or damage to plaintiff; and that no medical testimony was produced to prove any negligence on his part. This motion was denied. It should have been granted. Appellant has assigned a number of errors occurring during the trial, but, as our examination of the evidence satisfies us that it is insufficient to support the judgment, it is unnecessary to consider these points other than the one relating to certain hypothetical questions.

"In an ordinary action for malpractice the physician or surgeon is not to be held as a warrantor of cures or of consequences other than those arising from a breach of his duty to skillfully perform the operation." Hall v. Steele, 193 Cal. 602, 605, 226 P. 854, 855. The degree of care or skill required of a physician or surgeon is that "ordinarily possessed and used by physicians and surgeons in good standing practicing in the same locality." Markart v. Zeimer, 67 Cal. App. 363, 364, 227 P. 683, 684, citing Perkins v. Trueblood, 180 Cal. 437, 181 P. 642, and other authorities. With these principles in mind we will review the evidence in the light most favorable to respondent.

Testimony relating to the first operation performed by the appellant was offered for the purpose of showing his knowledge of the physical condition of the respondent, but no claim of negligence was predicated upon that operation because barred by the statute of limitations. The uncontradicted evidence discloses that at the time of the first operation the appellant found that the respondent had a dead or functionless pus kidney, in which there was no substance other than matter and pus, which he removed, but that he did not remove the kidney capsule or shell; that in 99 per cent. of cases of that character, where the pus is drained out of a kidney capsule, the capsule closes up and depletes; that, at the time of that operation the appellant discovered that the left ureter was blocked, and that there was no drainage through it from the diseased kidney, but, because of the low physical condition of the patient, he was unable to operate on the ureter at that time. Prior to the second operation, which is the basis of the complaint, respondent visited Dr. Meads, a specialist in urology, for purposes of examination. After a thorough examination this doctor reported to appellant that the respondent's left kidney was functionless and dead, that there was pus coming from the left ureter, but not from the kidney, that there was an abscess in the lower portion of the left ureter, and that this ureter should be removed. The testimony of the appellant, who was called for the respondent under section 2055, Code of Civil Procedure, and the testimony of Dr. Meads, who was also called by respondent, tended unmistakably to prove that the operation complained of was performed with all due care and skill, and that they both believed at the time that the left kidney was dead and functionless; that, because of this fact, there could be no drainage from the kidney to the ureter; and that the removal of the latter was the proper and scientific method of treatment under the circumstances. This testimony was corroborated to some extent by Dr. Taylor, who was also called by respondent, and who testified that the two operations performed by appellant had greatly benefited the respondent.

[5] The only other witness who testified upon any material circumstance on the issue of negligence in respondent's case was

Dr. Beard. This witness, in answer to a hypothetical question which assumed that respondent's left ureter was open at the time of the second operation, and that the pus was draining from the left kidney to the bladder through this ureter, testified that it was bad medical practice to remove the ureter at that time. Appellant vigorously protested the propounding of this question to the witness upon the ground that it assumed facts not in evidence—the condition of the ureter at the time of the operation. His objection was overruled upon the assurance of respondent's counsel that they would establish those facts. This was not done, and appellant's motion to strike the answer should have been granted. On cross-examination the same witness testified that if the fact was that, at the time of the operation and prior thereto, this ureter was totally sealed and blocked up, it was good surgery to remove the portion of it as was done by the appellant. That such was the fact was proved by undisputed evidence which was that on the 9th of March, 1925, and at the time of the second operation in April following, this ureter was completely blocked up; that there was no kidney tissue in the left kidney; that there was no drainage from this kidney through the ureter; and that the stoppage of the ureter and the lack of function of the left kidney were both permanent. Other physicians called by the appellant were asked similar hypothetical questions upon cross-examination by the respondent. Their answers were to the same effect that, if the ureter were open and draining, it would be bad medical practice to remove it as was done by the appellant, the answers which would seem obvious to laymen as well. Two of these witnesses testified on cross-examination that before a surgeon should remove the ureter he should ascertain the condition of the kidney, and that it would be bad medical practice to remove the ureter without having done so. There was, however, no testimony that the appellant in this case did not employ the requisite care and skill in ascertaining this condition before he performed the second operation. His testimony was that he removed the cells of the kidney in the first operation, and the medical testimony is all in accord that, if this is done, the ureter could be safely removed without fear of trouble from the kidney. Before appellant performed the operation complained of, the respondent of his own accord consulted an expert urologist who was known as a specialist in that branch of medical practice. After a thorough examination of the patient this physician reported that the left kidney was dead and functionless; that the ureter was not draining from the kidney; that it was permanently functionless and he recommended its removal. If reputable surgeons are to be charged with malpractice and required to respond in damages for performing operations under circumstances of this character, then the law requires of them the exercise of more than ordinary professional care and skill, and makes them guarantors of the consequences of any operation which they may be called upon to perform in the course of the practice of their profession. To so hold would be an invitation to irresponsible quackery with its false promises of sure cures, and it would impose an unreasonable demand upon the reputable members of a most useful profession.

[6-8] A hypothetical question should be based upon facts which are in evidence. Snow v. Harris, 41 Cal. App. 34, 37, 181 P. 676. It may assume any facts within the limits of the evidence, but must not be unfair or misleading. Treadwell v. Nickel, 194 Cal. 243, 264, 228 P. 25. Where the question assumes facts directly in conflict with the undisputed facts in the case, it is wholly valueless as a hypothetical question, and an answer based upon such false assumption wholly fails to meet the demands of competent evidence. Estate of Gould, 188 Cal. 353, 356, 205 P. 457. In a case such as this, where the matter in issue is one within the knowledge of experts only, and is not within the common knowledge of laymen, the expert evidence is conclusive. Wm. Simpson Const. Co. v. I. A. C., 74 Cal. App. 239, 243, 240 P. 58.

Here the only competent evidence was that the left kidney was dead and functionless; that the ureter was permanently closed and had ceased functioning as a drain for the kidney; and that, because of these conditions, the operation performed by the appellant was in accord with good medical practice, and had no possible relation to the unfortunate condition which afterwards arose in respondent, a condition which could not reasonably have been foreseen by appellant at the time of the operation.

Under these circumstances the prejudice of these hypothetical questions, which assumed facts directly contrary to the facts in evidence, is apparent, and this error would require a reversal of the judgment. Such course must necessarily carry with it an order reversing the limited order granting plaintiff a new trial on the issue of damages alone.

Judgment and order reversed.

PUTNAM v. PICKWICK STAGES, NORTHERN DIVISION, Inc. (Civ. 6697.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 13, 1929.

Rehearing Denied May 13, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court June 10, 1929.

1. Automobiles 🔑245(15, 81)—Negligence and contributory negligence in collision of bus with automobile held for jury under conflicting evidence.

In action for injuries on defendant's bus running into rear of plaintiff's automobile, negligence of bus driver and contributory negligence of plaintiff held for jury under conflicting evidence.

2. Automobiles 🔑246(26)—Requested instruction that automobilist was guilty of contributory negligence if she suddenly slackened speed or stopped, knowing bus was immediately behind her, held properly refused.

In action for injuries on bus running into rear of plaintiff's automobile, requested instruction that, if plaintiff knew bus was immediately behind her automobile and so close that if she stopped or materially slackened her speed it would likely result in injury, and, knowing such facts, plaintiff suddenly slackened speed or stopped, she was guilty of contributory negligence, held properly refused.

3. Trial 🔑251(8) — Requested instruction in collision action on duty of transportation company to passengers held properly refused as not involved in case.

In action for injuries on bus running into rear of plaintiff's automobile, requested instruction undertaking to state degree of care required of transportation companies to its passengers was properly refused as not being involved in case.

4. Appeal and error 🔑216(2)—Trial 🔑296(3) —Defendant cannot complain of failure to instruct on corresponding duty of plaintiff automobilist, where no such instruction was requested and matter was covered by other instructions.

In action for injuries on bus running into plaintiff's automobile from rear, defendant cannot complain that in giving instruction on duty of bus driver to keep vigilant lookout for vehicles ahead none was given as to corresponding duty of plaintiff, where defendant did not ask for instruction on plaintiff's duty and matter was covered by court in other instructions.

5. Appeal and error 🔑216(1)—Defendant failing to request instruction defining preponderance of evidence cannot complain of its omission.

Defendant failing to request court to give instruction defining term "preponderance of evidence" as used in several instructions is in no position to complain of court's failure to so instruct.

6. New trial 🔑102(1)—One seeking new trial for newly discovered evidence must show due diligence.

To justify granting of motion for new trial on ground of newly discovered evidence, the moving party must make a strong case and show due diligence to discover and produce evidence on former trial and that his failure to do so was not result of his own laches.

7. Appeal and error 🔑981—Granting or refusing new trial for newly discovered evidence will not be disturbed except on clear showing of abuse of discretion.

Action of court in granting or refusing new trial on ground of newly discovered evidence will not be disturbed except on clear showing of abuse of discretion.

8. New trial 🔑102(8)—Defendant knowing of importance of testimony of witnesses unavailable at time of trial, but not asking continuance, held not entitled to new trial for newly discovered evidence.

Defendant knowing of importance of testimony of certain witnesses who were not available at time trial was set, and failing to move for continuance or postponement of trial, must be held to have entered on trial at its peril and is not entitled to new trial for newly discovered evidence based on testimony of such witnesses.

9. Damages 🔑132(3)—$7,500 for dislocated vertebra causing permanent partial disability and for severe bruises causing pneumonia held not excessive.

Award of $7,500 for partial dislocation of vertebra resulting in considerable amount of disability and requiring plaintiff to continuously wear a surgical appliance and for severe bruises causing pneumonia held not excessive.

10. Appeal and error 🔑612(4)—Transcript certified by official reporter and trial judge as true, correct, and settled, allowed and made part of record, held sufficient.

Transcript on appeal certified by official reporter to be full, true, and correct transcript and certified by trial judge as true, correct, and settled, allowed and made part of record, held to meet requirements of law.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edwin F. Hahn, Judge.

Action by Dorothy C. Putnam against the Pickwick Stages, Northern Division, Inc., for personal injuries. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

B. P. Gibbs and Warren E. Libby, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

E. B. Drake, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LANDIS, Justice pro tem. This action is one for damages resulting from an automobile accident. The cause was tried by jury and verdict for $7,500 returned in favor of the plaintiff. Judgment was thereupon entered in favor of the plaintiff for the damages so assessed by the jury. The appeals of the defendant are from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial.

★Rehearing denied. Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

Appellant bases its appeals upon the following five grounds:

1. The evidence does not justify the verdict. (a) The proof discloses no negligence on the part of defendant. (b) Defendant was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law.
2. The verdict is against law.
3. The court erred in its instructions to the jury.
4. Defendant's motion for a new trial should have been granted on the ground of newly discovered evidence.
5. The amount of the judgment awarded is excessive.

Briefly stated, plaintiff alleges: "That on August 30, 1925, while she was operating an automobile on Ventura boulevard, in Los Angeles county, California, and when slowing down on account of congested traffic when near the intersection of said boulevard and Laurel Canyon drive, the defendant, by its agent, so negligently operated one of its auto busses headed in the same direction that it ran into and struck the rear of her said automobile; that in said accident, caused alone by the negligence of defendant, plaintiff was hurt, in her health, strength and activity; received a profound shock to her nervous system, and bruises upon the head, body, and person; was made sick, sore and lame thereby and particularly receiving a straining and spraining of the muscles and ligaments of the neck, back, spine and hips, and a bruising and contusing of the lungs which resulted in traumatic pneumonia; that said injuries are permanent; that from said injuries plaintiff has suffered great physical pain and mental anguish, and will continue to suffer, all to plaintiff's damage in the sum of $15,000." Plaintiff also claims the following damages: $66 for services of physician and surgeon; $150 for nurse; $16.84 for medicines; $12 for massage treatments; $252 for loss of time during which she was unable to follow her employment as an instructress and in a clerical position in a school; and the sum of $89.40 damages to her said automobile; in all aggregating the sum of $15,586.24.

Appellant answered, specifically denying each of the material allegations of the complaint except that it admitted the agency of the driver of the autobus and that he was working within the scope of his authority, and, in addition thereto, alleged affirmatively that respondent was guilty of negligence, directly and proximately contributing to the happening of the accident in that she did not exercise ordinary care, or any care, for her own safety, but so managed and operated her said automobile as to cause and contribute to the happening of the accident.

[1] Plaintiff and the driver of defendant's autobus were the only witnesses to the accident who testified. With respect to the accident the material portion of plaintiff's testimony is as follows: She was driving a Cadillac touring car at 20 or 25 miles an hour and in line of other traffic on a very busy afternoon about 7 o'clock p. m.; that both headlights and tail-light were burning, and by reason of the slowing up of the line of traffic, particularly the automobile just ahead of her, her red "Stop" light at the rear of her car went on; she then put her hand out to the left and down, as required in such cases, and put on her brakes; before coming in contact with the automobile ahead of her, the defendant's stage which was being driven, according to her version within 3 feet of her car, struck her car, knocked her car into the car ahead of her, her car rebounded and was again struck by the stage; that she was driving her car 15 feet back of the car in front of her.

The material conflict between the testimony of plaintiff and the testimony of the driver of the stage with respect to the accident results from the testimony of the driver of the stage, which briefly stated is as follows: "When the car that Miss Putnam was driving seemed to hit something and bounce back, come to a sudden stop; at that time the stage was approximately 20 or 25 feet from plaintiff's car; I seen everything had stopped real sudden. I could not go to the left on account of traffic coming toward me. I was driving a right-hand drive car, and I was over a little bit to the left of her, to watch the signals and other cars coming toward me, and when I started to go to the right to miss her, I did not have room, and for fear of turning her over, I squared the car up and gave her a bump. I was almost stopped when I hit her." The stage driver also testified that he applied both his foot and emergency brakes, the condition of which was good; that he was traveling about 20 or 25 miles per hour; that the weight of his stage was approximately five tons; that after the accident, both he and plaintiff got out of their cars and gave to each other their respective names and numbers of their cars. The principal contention of defendant is that the car ahead of plaintiff suddenly slowed down, causing her to bump into it, she being too close or otherwise operating her car in such a manner as to be unable to prevent the collision; that the impact of plaintiff's car with the car ahead was the proximate cause of the accident and this was brought about by the negligence of the plaintiff or the driver ahead of her; and that such negligence precludes recovery from defendant, even though it, too, may have been negligent.

The testimony of plaintiff that she was 15 feet behind the car ahead of her, that when the traffic slowed down she gave a stop signal with her hand and also with the rear red "Stop" signal, that the light from the red "Stop" signal showed on the rear of her car, and that she applied her brakes, standing as it does, uncontradicted, is sufficient to warrant the conclusion that she employed the degree of care and prudence required of auto drivers using the public highway, and, considered in connection with her statements that were contradicted by defendant's driver, very clearly placed the evidence with the province of the jury to decide the question.

It is sufficient to say that the evidence was conflicting and that the jury were the judges of the credibility of the witnesses. If they believed the testimony favorable to the plaintiff, they could not have properly returned a different verdict.

Error is claimed by reason of the court's refusal to give the following three instructions:

1. An instruction directing the jury to return a verdict in favor of defendant and against the plaintiff. From what we have already said it is obvious that error was not committed in refusing this instruction.

[2] 2. This instruction reads as follows: "If you find from the evidence in this case that the plaintiff knew the defendant's stage was immediately behind her automobile and so close that if she stopped or materially slackened her speed it would likely result in injury and damage to plaintiff, and knowing said facts, the plaintiff did suddenly slack the speed, or stop, her automobile, such negligence proximately contributed to the accident then plaintiff cannot recover in this case and your verdict will be for the defendant." This instruction was properly refused.

[3] 3. This instruction in effect undertakes to state the degree of care required of transportation companies to its passengers, etc., a question not involved in this case, and was also properly refused.

[4] It is then contended by appellant that the court erred in giving the following instruction: "You are instructed that it was the duty of the defendant, through its driver in charge of the auto stage on the occasion in controversy, to have kept a vigilant lookout for vehicles ahead for the purpose of preventing driving against or striking same, and a failure, if any, on his part to have done so was negligence," and particularly as follows: That it was prejudicial to defendant, for the reason that it specifically imposes upon defendant's driver a duty which it does not with equal particularity impose on plaintiff; that it suggested to and left with the jury the impression that a higher degree of care in that respect was required of defendant than of plaintiff; and also suggested the thought that defendant's driver had in fact failed to keep a proper lookout for vehicles ahead. Although we agree with the contention of defendant to the effect that, while the instruction in itself is not improper, and while the defendant's driver was in duty bound to keep a vigilant lookout for vehicles ahead to avoid striking them, there was a corresponding duty so to do on the part of plaintiff, in view of the fact that the rule as thus declared was in effect given to the jury by the court in other instructions, coupled with the further fact that defendant did not ask for an instruction that such duty also applied to plaintiff, defendant cannot complain that none was given.

[5] Complaint is also urged that the court failed to define the term "preponderance of evidence," used in several of its instructions. Defendant, having failed to request the court to give such an instruction is in no position to complain. Wirthman v. Isenstein, 182 Cal. 108-111, 187 P. 12; Weaver v. Carter, 28 Cal. App. 241, 152 P. 325; Townsend v. Butterfield, 168 Cal. 564, 143 P. 760; O'Connor v. United Railroads, 168 Cal. 43, 141 P. 809; Hardy v. Schirmer, 163 Cal. 272, 124 P. 993. The jury was very fully and fairly instructed.

Appellant also complains and urges that its motion for a new trial should have been granted and relies particularly upon the ground of newly discovered evidence which could not with reasonable diligence have been produced at the time of the trial.

[6, 7] To justify the granting of the motion on the ground of newly discovered evidence, the moving party must make a strong case and must show due diligence to discover and produce the evidence on a former trial, and that his failure to do so was not the result of his own laches, and the action of the trial court will not be disturbed except upon a clear showing of an abuse of discretion. Baker v. Joseph, 16 Cal. 173-180; Arnold v. Skaggs, 35 Cal. 684-688; Stoakes v. Monroe, 36 Cal. 383; Rockwell v. Italian-Swiss Colony, 10 Cal. App. 633, 103 P. 162; Foster v. National Ice Cream Co., 29 Cal. App. 484, 156 P. 985; Fresno Estate Co. v. Fiske, 172 Cal. 583, 157 P. 1127.

[8] With respect to the contention of appellant that the newly discovered evidence could not with reasonable diligence have been produced at the time of the trial, from the affidavits presented in support thereof it is shown that the newly discovered evidence consists of the testimony of G. C. Bourquin and P. S. Titus, both of whom were passengers on the stage at the time of the accident; that their whereabouts were discovered by advertising in newspapers, and, although the said discovery occurred after the trial, the showing clearly indicates that the advertisements also occurred after the trial. The accident happened August 30, 1925. Complaint was filed October 19, 1925, and answer filed October 30, 1925. The affidavit of B. P. Gibbs, one of the attorneys for defendant, and who it appears was conducting the investigation in connection with locating the whereabouts of the driver and the passengers, shows that affiant learned from Mr. F. E. Burdette, superintendent of the defendant, as early as January, 1926, that there were passengers on the stage. It appears that the whereabouts of the witnesses were very readily ascertained. Affiant undertakes to justify his failure to advertise sooner for the reason that he first wanted to confer with Harris, the driver. He admits that he located Harris on January 4, 1927, but did not confer with him until January 25, 1927, about three weeks later and even then he neither employed the method available for locating the passengers that later proved to be effective, nor did he ask for a continuance or postponement of the trial which was set for a week later, but chose to go to trial without them and then did actually locate them within a very few days after the trial. Knowing, as it is admitted it did, of the importance of the testimony, defendant should have moved for a continuance, and, failing to do so, it must be held that it entered upon the trial at its peril. Berry v. Metzler, 7 Cal. 418; Klockenbaum v. Pierson, 22 Cal. 160; Scanlan v. San Francisco, etc., Ry. Co., 128 Cal. 586, 61 P. 271.

[9] The last question for consideration is whether or not the verdict is as a matter of law excessive. In the case of Kelley v. Hodge Transportation System, 197 Cal. 598–610, 242 P. 76, 81, the following rule is laid down, to wit: "Unless we are able to say that the award of damages made by the jury and sustained by the trial court was so grossly disproportionate to any compensation reasonably warranted by the facts as presented to us on appeal as to shock the sense of justice and raise at once a presumption that it was the result of passion, prejudice, or corruption, rather than an honest and sober judgment, this court may not exercise the power of revision."

This rule is approved in the late case of Chappell v. San Diego & Arizona Railway Co., 201 Cal. 560, 258 P. 73. The following is a short résumé of plaintiff's testimony concerning her injury: I was struck from the rear; it was a perfect jolt from the rear, which gave me a veritable snap of my neck and back at the time of the accident. I had terrific pain up and down my spine and in the back of my neck; I was in bed four weeks. I was given treatments by Dr. Spiers. The doctor prescribed and I have continuously worn a surgical appliance from the middle of the body down to below the hips. I have pain in my back most of the time.

Briefly stated, the testimony of Dr. Ora I. Tower is as follows: I saw plaintiff on September 2, 1925; she was then in bed; she had quite a severe bruise over the left side to the left of the heart covering the third fourth, and fifth ribs; diagnosis of pneumonia was made, caused from an injury to the lungs. I think the pneumonia was due to her injury. I saw her at intervals of a week, ten days, or two weeks for several months. At the time of the injury I simply thought the back was sprained, but in March, 1926, X-rays showed that there was actually a shoving forward of one of the vertebræ, the fifth or lumbar vertebra. I referred her to Dr. Spiers, who is a specialist in orthopedic surgery.

D. Owen R. Stafford, who was a graduate physician and had practiced 26 years, testified: "I specialize in X-ray work; took an X-ray of plaintiff on March 18, 1926; it showed a partial dislocation of the fifth vertebra on the sacrum, the fifth lumbar vertebra; it would limit motion and cause probably a change of posture."

Dr. Homer W. Spiers, graduate physician and surgeon of Columbia College of New York City testified as follows: The X-rays show in the lateral view what is known as spondylolisthesis, or a forward dislocation of the fifth lumbar vertebra of the sacrum; described the treatment given; stated he did not believe that anatomically the condition of plaintiff could be changed; that cannot be replaced; it is a permanent partial disability.

The expert opinions above stated were quite materially contradicted by a Dr. Ledyard, called by the defendant.

Dr. Harold B. Barnard, an orthopedic surgeon, was called as an expert on behalf of the court, and testified: That he was connected with the Orthopedic Hospital as acting chief surgeon, and that he had examined the plaintiff at his office; that he made a physical examination of her, taking the usual history, and examined X-rays that the patient brought to him. He was asked and stated: "An examination of the patient and examination of further X-rays which I had taken at the conclusion of my physical examination, disclosed an injury to the low back region, characterized by a forward displacement of the last lumbar vertebra on the sacrum. The condition may be spoken of as spondylolisthesis, and is characterized by an alteration in the normal arrangement of this joint. The physical examination and history further disclosed that a considerable amount of disability has resulted from this accident, and there were further signs and symptoms which indicated without a doubt in my mind that she was not entirely recovered from this accident even on this date."

It is obvious that under the showing made, and guided by the rules of law announced, we are unable to say that the award of damages made by the jury and sustained by the trial court are excessive.

[10] With respect to plaintiff's motion for an order striking from the reporter's transcript on appeal certain portion of said transcript on the grounds that said matters are not authenticated as required by law and are not legally a part of the record on appeal in this action, the transcript as certified by the official reporter to be a full, true, and correct transcript and by the trial judge certified as true and correct, and settled, allowed, and made a part of the record, meets the requirements of the law, and is therefore denied.

Judgment and order denying motion for new trial affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; CASHIN, J.

Ex parte GRIGORIS. (Cr. 1541.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 16, 1929.

Divorce ⚷269(2)—Court could order relator's arrest for not obeying order to show cause why he should not be punished for not paying alimony.

Court had authority to make order of arrest for failure of relator to obey an order duly served on him, requiring that he appear and show cause why he should not be punished for failure to obey a previous order with reference to payment of alimony.

Petition by Peter Grigoris, also known as Peter Gregory, for a writ of habeas corpus to be directed to the Sheriff of the City and County of San Francisco to secure the release of petitioner from custody under an order of arrest for failure to pay alimony. Writ denied.

Joseph A. Brown, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. Petition for writ of habeas corpus. It appears from the record that petitioner is held by the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco under an order of arrest issued out of the superior court for failure to obey an order duly served upon him requiring that he appear and show cause why he should not be punished for failure to obey a previous order with reference to the payment of alimony. The court had full authority to make the order in question.

The petition is denied.

WALL ESTATE CO. v. CHAMBERLIN METAL WEATHER STRIP CO. (Civ. 6615.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. April 17, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ⚷932(1)—Appellate court will assume that trial court allowed reasonable amount, in absence of allegation that appellant was compelled to pay amount claimed.

Where complaint in action for breach of contract alleged that plaintiff was compelled to employ other mechanics to perform work, but not that it was compelled to pay them amount alleged to have been paid, court was not obliged, by finding such allegations true, to find that plaintiff sustained damage in full amount paid, and appellate court will assume that court allowed as much as was reasonable under evidence, where plaintiff appeals on judgment roll alone.

2. Appeal and error ⚷1071(1)—Appellant cannot complain of finding for part of sum claimed, in absence of allegation that it was compelled to pay whole sum.

Allegations of complaint, in action for breach of contract, that plaintiff was compelled to employ other mechanics to perform work and paid them certain sum, being insufficient to authorize recovery of any part of such sum, in absence of allegation that plaintiff was compelled to pay it, findings that such allegations were true were also insufficient, and plaintiff, appealing on judgment roll alone, cannot complain of finding that it sustained damages in lesser sum, including part of such amount.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Edmund P. Mogan, Judge.

Action by the Wall Estate Company against the Chamberlin Metal Weather Strip Company. From a judgment for plaintiff in an unsatisfactory amount, it appeals. Affirmed.

Gillogley, Crofton & Payne, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Hugh F. Keon, Jr., of San Francisco, for respondent.

KOFORD, P. J. Plaintiff commenced this action for $1,565.42 damages for breach of contract. The court awarded it only $683.32. Plaintiff appeals upon the judgment roll alone, claiming that the findings are such that the full amount of damages should be awarded by the judgment.

The findings show the following facts: Defendant agreed to waterproof two walls of plaintiff's apartment house for $230 and to calk between the window frames and the masonry for $155, and promised that the work would be done in such a proper and workmanlike manner as to prevent water from leaking through the walls. Defendant finished the work and received the agreed payment, but did not perform the work well, and, as a result, water leaked through the walls and damaged the interior decoration of the apartment house. The court found all of the allegations of the complaint to be true except paragraph IX. That paragraph read: "That by reason of the foregoing facts plaintiff has sustained damages in the sum of $1,565.42." The court found with respect to this allegation that plaintiff sustained damages in the sum of $683.32 only.

[1] Paragraph VII of the complaint claimed the items of $125 and $148.32 for damages to the interior of the building and paragraph VIII of the complaint declared upon the balance of the damages claimed by the plaintiff. It is assumed by plaintiff and appellant that the items in paragraph VII were allowed, but that, owing to an error of the court in determining the proper measure of damages, only a part of the claim set forth in paragraph VIII was allowed. That paragraph reads as follows: "That thereafter plaintiff was compelled to employ other mechanics to perform the work which the said defendant agreed to perform according to its contract hereinbefore referred to, and that said mechanics were obliged to remove the defective material placed on said walls by said defendant. That plaintiff paid to said mechanics the sum of $1,292.10 for removing the said inferior materials used by defendant, and for performing and completing in a workmanlike manner the said work which the defendant agreed to do and perform by its said contract hereinbefore referred to."

It will be seen that, while this paragraph alleges that plaintiff was compelled to employ mechanics to perform work, it is not alleged that plaintiff was compelled to pay said mechanics the sum of $1,292.10 for the work, but only that plaintiff did in fact pay that amount. There is no finding, therefore, to the effect that all of said sum was necessary or reasonable for the purpose alleged. For this reason the court was not obliged, by finding paragraph VIII true, to conclude or find, in response to paragraph IX of the complaint, that the plaintiff had sustained damage in the full amount paid to the said mechanics. Subtracting the two items of interior damage alleged in allegation VII from the $683.32 allowed by the court, it would appear that $410 was allowed by the court in response to the allegation in paragraph VIII "That plaintiff paid to said mechanics the sum of $1,292.10, etc." Presumably the court allowed as much as was reasonable under the evidence. The evidence not being before us, we assume that this decision was in accord with the testimony, and hence the findings are not inconsistent with the judgment.

[2] After oral argument appellant filed a closing brief urging two new points attacking finding No. II, which reads: "That with respect to the allegations of allegation IX of said complaint, the court finds and concludes from the foregoing facts that the plaintiff sustained damages in the sum of $683.32."

It is claimed that this is only a conclusion of law; that if it is a finding of fact it is an ultimate fact assuming to summarize probative facts previously found upon; that, therefore, in either case the said finding No. II must be ignored in favor of the preceding probative facts. These contentions, considered as an abstract point of law, have considerable merit. It is evident that appellant feels that, if that finding or conclusion is ignored, then all the damages claimed in paragraph VIII of the complaint would go into the judgment by force of the findings which declare said paragraph VIII true. But as we have pointed out, the allegations of that paragraph of the complaint are too deficient to have that effect.

The allegations of paragraph VIII being insufficient to state a proper case for damage to the extent of any part of the $1,292.10 paid to mechanics, it follows that the findings which declare paragraph VIII true are for the same reason insufficient in the same respect. Now, if finding No. II be such a conclusion of law or such a finding of ultimate fact as must be totally disregarded, then the real conclusion of law which appears later in the court's decision and which states that plaintiff is entitled to judgment for $683.32 damages for breach of contract would not be supported by any finding of fact on the question of damages except that which finds true the two items of paragraph VII. This would necessarily have the effect of cutting down the judgment by the sum of $410, the amount which the court evidently allowed under allegation VIII. In other words, if appellant's attack upon the court's finding of $683.32 damages be sustained, the fact that the findings found allegation No. VIII of the complaint to be true would not result in an increase in the amount of the judgment. If the defendant had appealed and urged this point, it might result in a reduction of the judgment or a new trial; but he has not appealed. The evidence is not before us and we are not in a position to determine that a new trial would be just. Without considering the evidence, we cannot say that the court should have found whether the full sum of $1,292.10 was reasonable and necessary. The legal points presented upon this appeal do not require a new trial. No error has been pointed out harmful to the appellant.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

HOFFMAN v. DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS, DIVISION OF INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENTS AND SAFETY, et al. (Civ. 6608.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. April 17, 1929.

Rehearing Denied May 17, 1929. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court June 13, 1929.

1. Master and servant ⟹387—Employer could not be held guilty of serious and willful misconduct for violating orders of Department of Industrial Relations, where there was no evidence he knew of orders (Workmen's Compensation Act, § 6).

Building contractor, whose employee was injured, could not be held guilty of serious and willful misconduct, making him liable for penalty under Workmen's Compensation Act, § 6 (St. 1917, p. 836, as amended by St. 1919, p. 912 and by St. 1923, p. 375), for violating certain safety orders issued by Department of Industrial Relations, where there was no evidence that he ever saw or heard of such orders.

2. Master and servant ⚷115(3)—Where two stories of building are erected, statute requiring temporary floors to protect workmen requires that temporary floors be laid (St. 1921, p. 452).

Where two stories of building have been erected, it then becomes necessary, under St. 1921, p. 452, requiring temporary floors to protect workmen, to lay temporary floors.

3. Master and servant ⚷115(3)—Space which need not be covered with temporary floors to protect workmen constructing building is space for elevator shaft or similar space; "except such space as may reasonably be required for the proper construction of such building" (St. 1921, p. 452, § 1(b).

Phrase "except such space as may reasonably be required for the proper construction of such building," in St. 1921, p. 452, § 1 (b), requiring temporary floors to protect workmen constructing building applies to elevator shaft or similar space which is ordinarily kept clear and used from basement to roof as passageway for hoisting and lowering of materials.

4. Master and servant ⚷115(3)—Building contractor could not justify his violation of statute requiring temporary floors to protect workmen by showing ignorance of law (St. 1921, p. 452).

Building contractor could not justify his violation of St. 1921, p. 452, requiring temporary floors to protect workmen, by showing that he did not know existence of law.

5. Evidence ⚷65—Employer was presumed to know law requiring temporary floors to protect workmen constructing building (St. 1921, p. 452).

Employer was presumed to know law under St. 1921, p. 452, requiring temporary floors to protect workmen constructing building.

6. Master and servant ⚷405(6)—Evidence justified finding building contractor's acts violating statute requiring temporary floors to protect workmen constituted serious and willful misconduct, making him liable for penalty (St. 1921, p. 452, § 1(b); Workmen's Compensation Act, §§ 6, 31(b).

Evidence justified finding of Department of Industrial Relations that acts of building contractor, whose employee was injured when floor on which he was standing gave way, which floor violated St. 1921, p. 452, § 1 (b), requiring temporary floors to protect workmen, by covering span exceeding thirteen feet with boards two inches thick not supported by intermediate brace and not laid tightly together, constituted serious and willful misconduct, making him liable for penalty under Workmen's Compensation Act, § 6, St. 1917, p. 834, as amended by St. 1919, p. 912, and by St. 1923, p. 375, and section 31(b) (St. 1917, p. 860).

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Paul Broschinsky, claimant, for injuries, opposed by Leo Hoffman, employer. The Department of Industrial Relations, Division of Industrial Accidents and Safety, awarded compensation, and the employer applies for certiorari to review the award. Affirmed.

George D. Collins, Jr., of San Francisco, for petitioner.

G. C. Faulkner, Frank J. Burke, and F. W. Sawyer, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, J. This is a proceeding brought to review an award heretofore made by the respondents in a proceeding brought before the respondents by Paul Broschinsky in an endeavor to obtain the compensation payable to him as an employee because of injuries sustained by him in an accident which befell him when, in the course of his employment, the floor on which he was standing gave way and he fell to the ground below. Through an abundance of precaution, he named as defendants Leo Hoffman and his insurance carrier, the Metropolitan Casualty Company, and he also named Charles S. Hoffman and Ludwig W. Fleigner, doing business as Golden Gate Iron Works, and their insurance carrier, the State Compensation Insurance Fund. This multiplicity of defendants arose because of the debatable question whether Leo Hoffman was but the agent of Golden Gate Iron Works and the latter was, in truth and in fact, applicant's employer, or whether Leo Hoffman was an independent contractor and the applicant was his employee. The respondents adopted the latter theory, and dismissed all defendants except Leo Hoffman and his carrier.

The case then proceeded against the remaining defendants. That Leo Hoffman, as employer, and Metropolitan Casualty Company, as his carrier, were liable to the applicant, was not disputed. But the respondents held that the employer was guilty of "serious and wilful misconduct," and that the compensation payable should be increased 50 per cent. It also held that the employer's carrier was liable for the sums based on section 9 of the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 836, as amended by St. 1919, p. 913, and St. 1925, p. 640), but that the penalty of 50 per cent. added under section 6 of said act (St. 1917, p. 834, as amended St. 1919, p. 912, and St. 1923, p. 375) should be borne solely by the employer. They made this segregation of liability in conformity with the statute. Sections 6 and 31b (St. 1917, p. 860). The employer has filed in this court his petition praying to have annulled that portion of the award so made against him, claiming that he was not guilty of "serious and wilful misconduct," and, as he carried insurance, the burden should rest on his carrier and that he should have been dismissed. The accident occurred while the applicant was acting as helper in the erection of a steel-frame apartment house at Palo Alto, Cal. The Golden Gate Iron Works had the contract to furnish the material and erect the frame. Leo Hoffman had the contract to do the erecting for the Golden Gate Iron Works. The building being erected was one consisting of five stories and a roof. It had no excavation under it, but commenced at the ground level. Immediately before the accident happened the work had progressed to a point where the first and second stories had been erected, a temporary plank floor had been laid over the beams, and columns for the third story had been assembled on the temporary floor and the workmen were engaged in distributing those columns in piles for the purpose of putting the columns in place. In some places the span between the beams was over 13 feet. At the particular place where the accident occurred, the span from center to center was 15 feet 2 inches. Through a mutual arrangement between Leo Hoffman and the general contractor, the wooden floor joists, consisting of pine boards 16 feet long, 12 inches wide and 2 inches thick, were delivered on the job by trucks, and Leo Hoffman had the privilege of hoisting the planks and distributing them on any floor and using them as temporary flooring. In accordance with this arrangement, his employees had, the day before the accident, hoisted and distributed the planking, and in this manner had constructed the temporary floor. Neither at the span where the accident occurred nor in any other span, so far as the record discloses, was an intermediate beam or other device used to support the temporary flooring. The employer testified that to insert an intermediate beam of wood might necessitate the use of a saw, but that there was no saw on the job, and he had never seen a saw on an erecting job. As to whether the planks were laid close together there was much dispute. In this regard the evidence is clear to the effect that the columns projected somewhat above the beams of the floor, and bolts projected from the columns and beams in places. Because of these two facts, no floor was laid from one column to the opposite column on any given string of columns, and the planking alongside of the columns was distant, according to the evidence, from 1½ inches to 3 inches, thus leaving a space of possibly 16 inches instead of 12 inches in the event that a plank should break.

Paul Broschinsky went to work on the day of the accident. During that day the men were engaged in distributing the columns for the third story. At about 3 o'clock in the afternoon, while so engaged, Paul Broschinsky and another fellow laborer, J. Jensen, both happened to step on the same plank at the same time. As they did so the plank broke. Jensen succeeded in catching hold of a support and did not fall to the ground. However, Paul Broschinsky was not so fortunate, and he fell to the ground, suffering the injuries which are the subject-matter of this claim. An examination of the broken plank disclosed that it was a piece of timber sawed from immediately adjacent to a knot, and the board so produced was apparently clear on one side, but it had the rings of a knot on the other side. This board had been placed on the temporary floor knot side down. Evidence was introduced that from time to time the respondents had issued certain safety orders, and that those orders had been posted on some of the buildings which were being erected by Golden Gate Iron Works. There is no evidence that this petitioner, Leo Hoffman, was engaged on any one of said buildings, nor that he ever saw or heard of the orders or the contents thereof. There is no claim that any one of the orders was posted on the building on which this accident arose. There was evidence that on a date three or four months prior to the accident, while erecting another building, one of the agents of the respondents had occasion to bring to the attention of Leo Hoffman that he was violating chapter 334 of the Statutes of 1921, p. 452; that is, the particular statute other provisions of which are involved in this application.

[1] The petitioner claims that it may not be said that he was guilty of "serious and wilful misconduct" because he violated certain safety orders issued by the respondents. That claim, we think, is well founded. As we have shown above, there is no evidence that he ever saw or heard of such orders. He did not willfully violate an order which, so far as the record shows, he had never seen nor heard of.

[2, 3] As to chapter 334, Statutes 1921, p. 452, the petitioner claims he did not violate any of its provisions. This claim is based on the fact that no column of the third story had been erected at the time of the accident, and therefore the duty to lay temporary floors had not arisen. This point involves a construction of the statute. It is not necessary to quote the entire statute. It is not claimed that the statute applies to a building of one or two stories. It is not claimed that the statute applies to a higher building at any instant of time before the second story has been erected. But after that instant it then becomes necessary to lay a temporary floor. This is so for two reasons: The clear purport of the statute is to create a device, not for the absolute prevention of accidents, but for lessening the injury to the human body that may fall, and lessening the effect of falling missles which may fall and hit a human body. The statute by its terms seeks to limit those falls to two stories. Two stories having been erected, it then becomes necessary to lay temporary floors. The floors having been laid, the next act is to assemble on that floor the columns to be incorporated into the next story. Although no one of those columns has been erected, the matter of arranging for the erection of them and for the assembling of them creates a potential danger which the statute is aimed to protect against just as effectively as against acts done in the actual erection of one or more of them. There is only one exception as to the zone which need be covered with a temporary floor—"except such space as may reasonably be required for the proper construction of such building." Section 1, subd. (b), c. 334, Stats. 1921, p. 452. That expression, we understand, applies to the elevator shaft or similar space which is ordinarily kept clear and used, from the basement to the roof, as a passageway for hoisting and lowering of materials. But such space, so excepted, is not involved in this case.

From the facts which we have hereinabove enumerated, we think it is clear that there was evidence that the building on which the accident occurred, and the stage to which the erection had progressed, came within the provisions of chapter 334, Statutes 1921, p. 452; and we also think it is clear that there was evidence that this petitioner had violated the provisions of said act by covering a span exceeding 13 feet with boards which were only 2 inches thick, and which were not supported by an intermediate brace, and which were not laid tightly together. Chapter 334, Stats. 1921, § 1, subd. (b).

[4] In the next place, he claims that he was not guilty of "serious and wilful misconduct" even though he violated the provisions of chapter 334 of the Statutes of 1921, p. 452. He rests that claim on several different contentions. He claims that he did not know of the contents, and that nobody called the contents of said statute to his attention. However, as we have shown, the contents of the statute were called to his attention. Furthermore, "in neither a criminal nor civil cause, in any circumstances, can one justify his act by the naked showing that he did not know of the existence of the law." 10 Cal. Jur. 760, § 72.

[5, 6] He then asserts that, even though he violated the statute, that mere violation of the statute is not "serious and wilful misconduct." He quotes from Helme v. Great Western Milling Co., 43 Cal. App. 416, page 421, 185 P. 510, 512, as follows: "'Wilful misconduct' means something different from and more than negligence, however gross. The term 'serious and wilful misconduct' is described by the supreme court of Massachusetts as being something 'much more than mere negligence, or even gross or culpable negligence,' and as involving 'conduct of a quasi criminal nature, the intentional doing of something either with the knowledge that it is likely to result in serious injury, or with a wanton and reckless disregard of its possible consequences.' (In re Burns, 218 Mass. 8 [Ann. Cas. 1916A, 787, 105 N. E. 601].) The mere failure to perform a statutory duty is not, alone, wilful misconduct. It amounts only to simple negligence. To constitute 'wilful misconduct' there must be actual knowledge, or that which in the law is esteemed to be the equivalent of actual knowledge, of the peril to be apprehended from the failure to act, coupled with a conscious failure to act to the end of averting injury." He also cites and quotes from E. Clemens Horst Co. v. Industrial Acc. Com., 184 Cal. 180, 188, 189, 193 P. 105, 108 (16 A. L. R. 611) as follows: "'Serious misconduct' of an employer must, therefore, be taken to mean conduct which the employer either knew, or ought to have known, if he had turned his mind to the matter, to be conduct likely to jeopardize the safety of his employees. * * * Next, as to whether such serious misconduct was 'wilful.' It has frequently been said that wilful misconduct involves the knowledge of the person that the thing which he is doing is wrong. [Citing cases.] Conceding that knowledge is required, it seems to us that in order to prove the requisite knowledge, it is not necessary for the evidence to show positively that the person was notified of the unsafe condition of his premises, but that it is sufficient if it appears that the circumstances surrounding the act of commission or omission are such as 'evince a reckless disregard for the safety of others and a willingness to inflict the injury complained of.'"

With the rule of law as stated by the petitioner, we fully agree. However, we think that the facts of this case bring it within, rather than exclude it from, the rule quoted. It will be conceded that the violation of one statute may be far more serious than the violation of another statute, and that the violation of the same statute under one set of facts may not be serious, whereas under a different set of facts it will be quite serious indeed. When, as here, men are at work at high elevations standing on narrow beams or temporary floors, if an accident happens, the possibilities of danger are many, and the probability is strong that, if injury occurs, it will be deplorable. It is therefore plain that the violation of the provisions of chapter 334, Statutes 1921, under the facts of this case, could be said to be "serious misconduct." The employer was presumed to know the law. 10 Cal. Jur. 760. Moreover, there was some evidence that he actually did know it. There was evidence that some of the spans were more than 13 feet, and over which the law required that the temporary floors be laid; that under those long spans it was necessary to insert an intermediate brace; that, to lay the boards tightly together between the columns as well as over the rest of the floor, the planks must be cut to set in between columns; and that they must be supported from below so as to fill the gaps and avoid the protruding nuts and bolts; and that to do these things the employer knew that the crew needed, but that it did not have and never had had, a saw. As the crew had no saw, the employer knew that it could not lay the temporary floors in compliance with the law, and that any failure to do so was fraught with danger to the life and limb of every member of the crew. These facts the petitioner did not attempt to deny, but he attempted to justify his noncompliance with the terms of the statute by making a showing as to what others did and a showing of the inconvenience of a full compliance. In view of these facts, we have no hesitancy in saying that there was evidence before the respondents from which they had the right to say that, in the instant case, there was on the part of the petitioner "the intentional doing of something either with the knowledge that it is likely to result in serious injury or with a wanton and reckless disregard of its probable consequences." In re Burns' Case, 218 Mass. 8, 105 N. E. 601, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 787. It follows that the finding that the acts of the employer constituted "serious and wilful misconduct" was not in excess of jurisdiction.

The award is affirmed.

PACIFIC FINANCE CORPORATION v. ROFFALLI et al. (Civ. 3747.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 10, 1929.

1. Pleading 🔑243—Permission to amend complaint should have been granted, where error was merely clerical mistake.

In action upon a conditional sale agreement for motortruck, permission to amend complaint, by substituting one date for date given as defendant's default in making payment as provided by contract, should have been granted, where it was clear that error sought to be corrected was merely clerical mistake, because no installment became due on date of contract mentioned in complaint which was that of contract.

2. Sales 🔑479(7)—Complaint alleging that none of installments falling due subsequent to date of conditional sale agreement had been paid held sufficient allegation that particular installment was unpaid.

In action upon conditional sale agreement for motortruck, complaint alleging that none of installments falling due subsequent to date of contract had been paid held sufficient allegation that particular installment which became due had not been paid.

3. Corporations 🔑433(1)—Authority to execute assignment of conditional sale agreement was sufficiently shown, though corporate seal was not attached, where one who executed it testified he was secretary and general manager of assignor.

In action upon conditional sale agreement for motortruck, authority to execute assignment of conditional sale agreement to plaintiff was sufficiently shown, though corporate seal was not attached nor affixed to assignment, where one who executed assignment in name of seller testified that he was secretary and general manager of seller.

4. Trial 🔑163—Motion for nonsuit held insufficient as not showing wherein plaintiff failed to prove case.

In action upon conditional sale agreement for motortruck, motion for order nonsuiting plaintiff, upon ground that evidence did not show any right of recovery, held insufficient, in that it did not show wherein plaintiff had failed to prove its case.

5. Sales 🔑479(8)—Nonsuit held error, where plaintiff proved sufficient case to support judgment in its favor, in absence of evidence to contrary.

Where plaintiff in action upon conditional sale agreement for motortruck proved sufficient case to support judgment in its favor, in the absence of evidence to contrary, judgment of nonsuit held error.

6. Dismissal and nonsuit 🔑58(4)—Insufficiency of complaint is not ground for granting nonsuit (Code Civ. Proc. § 581, subd. 5).

Insufficiency of a complaint is not a ground for granting a nonsuit under Code Civ. Proc. § 581, subd. 5, providing that an action may be dismissed or judgment of nonsuit entered by court upon motion of defendant, when upon trial plaintiff fails to prove sufficient case for jury.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Charles L. Allison, Judge.

Action by the Pacific Finance Corporation against Accardo Roffalli and another. Judgment adverse to plaintiff, and it appeals. Reversed.

Overton, Lyman & Plumb, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

A. S. Maloney and Charles Bagg, both of San Bernardino, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. The complaint alleges that on February 27, 1925, Robert Barr, Inc., being the owner of a truck, sold and delivered it to defendant Accardo Roffalli, who will be referred to as the defendant, on a conditional sale contract for $895.03, of which the sum of $230 was paid in cash, the balance to be paid as follows: $52.80 on the 27th of each of the months of March, April, and May, 1925, and $33.71 on the 27th of every month thereafter until the whole amount of the contract price was paid; that Robert Barr, Inc., on the day the contract was executed, assigned and transferred to the plaintiff, the contract and the seller's interest in the truck; "that there is now due and unpaid the sum of $33.71 on the payment, which by the terms of the said contract became due and payable on the 27th day of February, 1925, nor have any of the instalments subsequently becoming due been paid." The other allegations of the complaint are such as are appropriate in an action for the recovery of personal property. The prayer is for the recovery of the truck or its value, if delivery thereof cannot be had. The complaint was filed April 13, 1926.

[1, 2] During the trial the plaintiff asked permission to amend the complaint by substituting March 27, 1926, for February 27, 1925, as the date of the defendant's default in making payment as provided in the contract. The court denied the request. Leave to amend should have been granted. It is clear that the error sought to be corrected was merely a clerical mistake, because no installment became due on February 27, 1925, the date of the contract. The complaint was sufficient, however, without the proposed amendment. The allegation that none of the installments falling due subsequent to February 27, 1925, had been paid is a sufficient allegation that the installment which became due March 27, 1926, had not been paid. The evidence shows that the defendant made all payments up to and including the one which became due February 27, 1926, but that he failed to pay the one which fell due March 27, 1926.

[3] Respondent contends that the evidence fails to show that the assignment of the contract to the plaintiff is valid, because "no corporate seal was attached or affixed nor was there anything to show that Robert Barr seller was an officer of the corporation authorized to execute such an instrument." Robert Barr, who executed the assignment in the name of the assignor, testified that he was the secretary and general manager of Robert Barr, Inc., and that the corporation had a seal, but "we never put the seal on the contracts." The contract and the assignment thereof were admitted in evidence. Authority to execute the assignment was sufficiently shown. 6 Cal. Jur. 1109. An officer of the plaintiff corporation testified that the plaintiff purchased the contract "from Robert Barr, Incorporated, and has had possession of it continuously since that time."

Respondent further contends that he "was not in default in his payment on February 27, 1925," and that "there was no right of possession based on such default." Plaintiff's right of possession, however, as already stated, was shown by the allegation and proof that the payment falling due March 27, 1926, had not been paid.

[4-6] Counsel for defendant, at the close of the evidence offered by plaintiff, made the following motion: "We move the court for an order nonsuiting the plaintiff in this case upon the ground that the evidence does not show any right of recovery."

In response to the motion the court said: "I don't think the complaint has ever stated a cause of action. According to the allegations of the complaint there was nothing due on the 27th, therefore there could be no forfeiture on that date. The motion will be granted."

Judgment of nonsuit was entered accordingly, and the plaintiff has appealed. The motion for a nonsuit was insufficient, in that it did not show wherein the plaintiff had failed to prove its case. 9 Cal. Jur. 548; Masero v. Bessolo (Cal. App.) 262 P. 61; Henley v. Bursell, 61 Cal. App. 511, 215 P. 114. Further, as stated, the plaintiff proved a sufficient case to support a judgment in its favor, in the absence of evidence to the contrary. Insufficiency of a complaint is not a ground for granting a nonsuit. Code Civ. Proc. § 581, subd. 5; Scott v. Sciaroni, 66 Cal. App. 577, 581, 226 P. 827. Besides, as already indicated, the complaint is sufficient.

The judgment is reversed.

WILLIAMS v. LEON T. SHETTLER CO. et al.
(Civ. 5638.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. April 15, 1929.

Infants ⚷56—Minor's false representation of age does not prevent disaffirmance of contract (Civ. Code, § 35).

Civ. Code, § 35, does not prevent disaffirmance of contract, made by minor over 18 years old, because of his false representation that he was over 21.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Stephen G. Long, Judge.

Action by Sydney M. Williams by J. Jacobson, guardian ad litem, against the Leon T. Shettler Company, a corporation, and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed in part, and otherwise affirmed.

Frank D. McClure and Wm. M. Aydelotte, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Nadia Williams, of Glendale, for respondent.

HOUSER, J. On an installment contract, plaintiff, who was a minor, purchased an automobile from the defendant Shettler Company for the sum of $1,530.24. In partial payment of the purchase price of said automobile plaintiff transferred to said defendant another automobile valued at $450, together with the sum of $150 in cash. Twelve days thereafter, because of alleged fraud of said defendant in the transaction, and because plaintiff was a minor, plaintiff disaffirmed the agreement entered into between the parties, restored to the said defendant the automobile which plaintiff had purchased from it, and demanded the return to him of the automobile and the $150 in cash, which he had delivered to said defendant at the time the agreement was executed. The said defendant Shettler Company having refused to comply with any part of such demand, action was brought by plaintiff through his guardian ad litem, not only against the said defendant, but as well against the defendant Pacific Finance Corporation, to which last-named company the installment contract for the purchase of the automobile by plaintiff was alleged to have been sold and assigned. From a judgment rendered by the court in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $500 against each of the defendants, this appeal is prosecuted.

No complaint is made by appellants as to any of the findings of fact made by the trial court, other than as to two specified findings, that the evidence was insufficient to support them. Without here setting forth the evidence upon which the findings to which objection is made are based, it may suffice to state that it was ample to sustain the conclusions reached thereon by the trial court.

Appellants also contend that, in view of the fact that, at the time the agreement was entered into, plaintiff falsely represented to the defendant Shettler Company that he was 22 years of age, he should not have been permitted thereafter to disaffirm the contract. Neither section 35 of the Civil Code, which is authority for the disaffirmance of a contract made by a minor over the age of 18 years, nor any other statutory provision to which attention has been directed, contains any intimation that fraud of the nature of that practiced by plaintiff will have the effect of preventing the minor from disaffirming the contract. The following authorities are to the contrary: Lee v. Hibernia Savings & Loan Society, 177 Cal. 656, 171 P. 677; Maier v. Harbor Center L. Co., 41 Cal. App. 79, 81, 182 P. 345; Flittner v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc., 30 Cal. App. 209, 216, 157 P. 630.

The final specification of error by appellants is to the effect that the record contained no evidence upon which to base the judgment against the defendant Pacific Finance Corporation, which contention on the part of appellants is in no way controverted by respondent; nor do the findings of fact disclose any foundation for such a judgment. It follows that as to said Pacific Finance Corporation the judgment should be, and it is, reversed; otherwise the judgment should be, and it is, affirmed.

AMERICAN-LAFRANCE FIRE ENGINE CO. OF CALIFORNIA v. BAGGE et al.

(Civ. 3755.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 15, 1929.

1. Sales ⚿479(1)—Where conditional sale contract limited seller's remedy upon default to repossession of trucks, he could not declare balance due and sue therefor.

Under conditional sale contract providing that in case of default in payment of installments seller might repossess trucks sold, seller's remedy was limited to that specified, and he could not upon default declare remaining installments due and bring action for balance.

2. Sales ⚿353(1)—Complaint under common counts for goods, wares, and merchandise sold within two years last past sufficiently states cause of action as against general demurrer.

A complaint in common-law form of a count in indebitatus assumpsit for goods, wares, and merchandise sold, alleging that defendant is indebted to plaintiff in a sum specified for goods, wares, and merchandise sold within two years last past, sufficiently states a cause of action as against a general demurrer.

3. Pleading ⚿53(2)—Complaint by way of common counts may set forth inconsistent causes of action.

Complaint by way of common counts may set forth different inconsistent causes of action.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ruben S. Schmidt, Judge.

Action by the American-Lafrance Fire Engine Company of California against Ernest Bagge and another, doing business as Bagge Bros. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed in part with directions, and affirmed in part.

Walter M. Campbell, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Henry Hay and Victor H. Kendrick, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. This cause is before us upon an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment rendered in favor of the defendants, after demurrer to the plaintiff's complaint had been sustained without leave to amend.

The complaint is in two counts. The first is, to recover the sum of $60,712, with interest, on a conditional sales contract covering 15 trucks alleged to have been sold by the plaintiff to the defendants. The second cause of action is set forth by way of common counts, for goods, wares, and merchandise sold and delivered to the defendants. The demurrer of the defendants was based upon the objection that neither the first nor the second cause of action set forth sufficient facts to enable the plaintiff to maintain the suit. The demurrer was also directed against the first cause of action on the further ground that it was ambiguous, uncertain, etc. The court sustained the demurrer to both counts without leave to amend.

The conditional contract upon which the first cause of action set out in the plaintiff's complaint is set forth as an exhibit and is made a part of the first cause of action. This conditional contract, as it appears in the transcript, sets forth the price at which the property is to be sold; that the title shall not pass to the purchaser; that the purchaser shall keep the property free of all taxes, liens, and incumbrances; that payment shall be made at certain dates, beginning on or before 120 days after the date of the contract; and further provided that in the event of a failure to pay any of the installments at the time they became due, then and in that case the seller might at his election declare the whole amount remaining unpaid, due, and payable. This portion of the contract appears to have been signed by the respective parties, and then there was added thereto the following: "The total price of said trucks is $70,601.32, including insurance, no part of which has been paid; in lieu of the cash payment of fifteen thousand four hundred forty-three and 8/100 ($15443.08) dollars thereon the seller has agreed to deliver possession of said trucks to the purchaser without payment, upon condition that said purchaser shall keep said trucks in use for compensation and shall turn over to the seller, as received by him, all earnings thereof, after deducting only the drivers' wages of not exceeding an average of $8.00 per day and the expenses for oil and gas; out of the amounts so received the seller shall retain interest, insurance expense and any necessary repair bills, and shall credit the balance thereon on the first payment mentioned in the above schedule until twelve thousand four hundred forty-three and 8/100 ($12443.08) dollars shall have been so credited, at which time the purchaser shall pay out of his own funds an additional sum of three thousand ($3000.00) dollars; the balance of fifty-five thousand one hundred fifty-eight and 17/100 ($55,158.17) dollars shall then become due and payable in eighteen (18) monthly payments—one (1) for three thousand one hundred fifty and 17/100 ($3150.17) dollars; sixteen (16) for three thousand one hundred fifty ($3150.00) dollars and one (1) for one thousand six hundred eight ($1608.00) dollars, with interest from date of the completion of payment of $15,443.08 first above mentioned, and the seller shall have the right to date the notes described by inserting in each the date upon which the seller shall have received the balance of the $15,443.08, provided, however, if the same shall not have been received within 120 days from the date hereof the seller may, at its option, terminate this contract and repossess such trucks. It is further understood that the purchaser shall submit to the seller monthly for audit the statements made by his employers and his statement of wages of drivers and expenses of oil and gas above mentioned. Supplement entered into contemporaneously with the execution of the above contract.

[1] The allegations of the first cause of action, based upon what we have just set forth, are as follows: "That said defendants have not paid the installment of $17,325.78, or any part thereof, except the sum of $9889.31, leaving a balance of said first installment amounting to $7436.47 unpaid, and said defendants have not paid the remaining eighteen installments, or any part or portion thereof, or any interest thereon. That the plaintiff, on account of the default of said defendants in not paying the whole of the said first installment with interest thereon, on or before 120 days after April 12, 1926, has elected to declare, and has declared all of said installments to be due and payable, and that there is now due, and owing and unpaid from said defendants to the plaintiff, under said contract, and upon the promissory notes aforesaid, the sum of $60,712.01 with interest thereon from the 10th day of August, 1926, at the rate of 8 per cent per annum."

The principal case relied upon by the appellant for a reversal herein as to the first cause of action is that of Johnson v. Kaeser, 196 Cal. 686, 239 P. 324, and cases there cited. An examination of the case above mentioned discloses that the contract sued upon is worded entirely different from the one involved in this action. In that case the seller was given an election as to whether he would repossess himself of the property or declare the entire purchase price due and institute suit for the unpaid portion thereof. By the addition or supplement or rider to the conditional contract of sale in this case, or by whatever name it may be designated, the seller explicitly limited its right, in the event of a failure to receive payment in a certain amount during 120 days after the sale, to repossess itself of the property mentioned in the contract, and having set forth these facts in its complaint in the first cause of action therein, it proceeded to do exactly what the trial court stated—"pleaded itself out of court." It had but one remedy under the conditional contract of sale, and its pleadings show that the plaintiff has mistaken its remedy so far as the first cause of action is concerned. The second cause of action is in the following words and figures:

"For a second and separate cause of action plaintiff alleges as follows:

"I. That the plaintiff is a corporation duly organized, existing and doing business under the laws of the State of California, with an office and place of business in the city of Los Angeles, county of Los Angeles, in said state.

"II. That the defendants Ernest Bagge and Walter Bagge at all the times hereinafter mentioned were and are now copartners doing business under the firm name and style of Bagge Bros.

"III. That within two years last past the defendants became indebted to the plaintiff for goods, wares and merchandise sold by the plaintiff to the defendants at their special instance and request in the sum of $73,439.45, no part of which has been paid except the sum of $9889.31.

"IV. That said defendants have not, nor has either of them, paid to the plaintiff the said sum of $73,439.45, nor any part thereof except the sum of $9889.31, and that there is now due, owing and unpaid from the defendants to the plaintiff the sum of $63,550.14, as follows: $60,712.01, with interest thereon from the 10th day of August, 1926, and $2838.13, with interest thereon from February 17, 1927, at the rate of eight (8%) per cent per annum, and that demand has been made upon said defendants for the payment of said sum, but that they have failed, neglected and refused to pay the same, or any part thereof.

"Wherefore, plaintiff demands judgment against said defendants for the sum of $60,712.01, with interest thereon from the 10th day of August, 1926, at the rate of eight (8%) per cent per annum, and for the sum of $2838.13, with interest thereon from the 17th day of February, 1927, and for attorney's fees in the sum of $1500.00, and for its costs in this behalf expended, and for such other and further relief as to the court may seem just in the premises.

"Walter M. Campbell,
"Attorney for Plaintiff."

[2, 3] The demurrer to this cause of action, as stated, is general only, and if a cause of action is set forth by way of common counts, it is sufficient, and the demurrer should have been overruled. An inspection of the second cause of action we think shows without controversy that it sets forth sufficient facts to render it immune against a general demurrer. That a party may plead his cause of action by way of common counts is no longer an open question in this state. In the case of Miller v. Abrahamson, 9 Cal. App. 396, 99 P. 534, the rule is thus stated: "A complaint in the common-law form of a count in indebitatus assumpsit for money had and received, alleging 'that defendant is indebted to plaintiff' in a sum specified in the complaint 'for money had and received by defendant to the use of the plaintiff' and another person, 'within two years last past,' sufficiently states a cause of action." In the case at bar, instead of "money had and received," the complaint reads, "goods, wares and merchandise sold." Nor does it matter, in the use of common counts, if the complaint sets forth different causes of actions, that the causes of actions so set forth are inconsistent. Tanforan v. Tanforan, 173 Cal. 270, 159 P. 709. Other cases might be cited, but the cases referred to in the opinions of the cases here mentioned are sufficient to show that a pleading by way of common counts is admissible in this state, and that the plaintiff in this action, in setting forth its second cause of action by way of common counts, has pleaded sufficient facts to render it immune against a general demurrer. It therefore follows that the court erred in sustaining the defendants' demurrer to the plaintiff's second cause of action. The mere fact that the trial court may have been of the opinion that the plaintiff, in pleading its first cause of action upon a contract, had set out sufficient facts to justify the conclusion that the plaintiff could not prove its second cause of action, furnished no grounds upon which to sustain the defendants' demurrer to the second cause of action.

It is therefore ordered that the judgment of the trial court, in so far as it is based upon the order sustaining the demurrer to the second cause of action set out in the plaintiff's complaint, be, and the same is, hereby reversed, and the trial court is directed to overrule the defendants' demurrer as to said second cause of action, and permit the defendants to answer thereto, if so advised, within such time as may be fixed by the trial court according to law.

It is further ordered that the judgment of the trial court based upon its order sustaining the defendants' demurrer to the first cause of action set out in plaintiff's complaint, be, and the same is, hereby affirmed.

It is further ordered that neither party to this action recover costs on appeal.

COZAD (STEVICK, Assignee) v. RAISCH IMPROVEMENT CO. (Civ. 3159.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 10, 1929.

Rehearing Denied May 10, 1929. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court June 6, 1929.

Judgment 🔑576(1)—Judgment held conclusive as to all matters presentable on motion to quash execution, regardless of error.

Where there was no showing of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect at hearing of motion to set aside order quashing execution on those grounds, and at hearing of motion to quash question of plaintiff's right to an execution was clearly before court on its merits, conceding that court may have committed error in considering certain grounds of objection to original order of execution which would have called for reversal on appeal, it had jurisdiction to act, and judgment having become final without appeal or other direct attack, it is conclusive, whether matter was rightly or wrongly decided as to all matters presented or which could have been presented at hearing.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Thomas C. Denny, Judge.

Action by D. W. Cozad against the Raisch Improvement Company. Judgment for plaintiff was affirmed by the Superior Court. The judgment was assigned to Guy Le Roy Stevick. Execution was issued, but was subsequently recalled and quashed. A motion of the assignee to set aside the order quashing the execution was granted, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

A. B. Weiler and Herbert Choynski, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Edwin H. Williams, of San Leandro, and Alfred C. Skaife, of San Francisco, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. It may be gathered from the evidence in this case that the Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland "executed a policy of employer's liability insurance on behalf of" the defendant, such liability not to exceed $5,000 for injury to "any one person on any one accident." The plaintiff recovered judgment against the defendant for damages in the sum of $5,898.95 resulting from such an injury. The defendant appealed from the judgment, and the Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland executed an undertaking to stay execution. The judgment was affirmed on appeal, and in due time judgment was entered against the surety for the amount of the judgment against the defendant. The surety paid the judgment against it and caused the judgment against the defendant, to the extent of $898.95, to be assigned to Guy Le Roy Stevick, one of the respondents herein. Execution on the judgment against the defendant was thereupon issued in the sum of $898.95. On notice duly given the defendant moved the court "to satisfy said judgment of record and to recall and quash said execution." The Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland contested said motion and introduced evidence in opposition thereto. Thereafter the court made and entered the following order:

"This cause having been heretofore submitted on motion to recall and quash execution comes now the court and orders, that said motion be, and the same is hereby granted."

Thereafter Stevick, on due notice, moved the court for an order setting aside the order quashing the execution on the ground, among others, "that said order was made through mistake, inadvertence, surprise and excusable neglect." The other grounds of the motion went to the merits of the original motion to quash the execution. The court granted the motion to set aside the order quashing the execution, and the defendant has appealed therefrom. At the hearing of the motion there was no showing of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect; but evidence was introduced tending to show that the court committed error in quashing the execution. No evidence was presented which was not or might not have been introduced at the hearing of the motion to quash. At that hearing, "the question of plaintiff's right to an execution was clearly before the court on its merits, and, conceding that the court may have committed error * * * in considering certain grounds of objection to the original order, which would have called for reversal on appeal, it had jurisdiction to act in the premises, and the judgment having become final, without appeal or other direct attack, it is conclusive, whether the matter was rightly or wrongly decided, as to all matters presented or which should have been presented on the hearing." Creditors' Adjustment Co. v. Newman, 185 Cal. 509, 513, 197 P. 334, 338. The case cited is conclusive against respondents, and it is deemed unnecessary to pursue the subject further.

The order is reversed.

RADDATZ v. MYERS et al. (Civ. 6655.)†

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2. California. April 17, 1929.

Rehearing Denied May 17, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court June 13, 1929.

1. Executors and administrators 🔑85(9)—Administratrix of husband's estate cannot recover from widow's executors household furniture not identified as that left by husband.

Administratrix of husband's estate held not entitled to recover from executors of surviving wife's estate household furniture in her possession at time of her death, in absence of evidence identifying it as furniture left by husband.

★Rehearing denied. Hearing granted 281 P. 1017.

† Rehearing denied. Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

2. Executors and administrators ⚿85(9)—Administratrix of husband's estate cannot recover jewelry from widow's executors, in absence of evidence rebutting presumption of her ownership thereof (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963).

Administratrix of husband's estate held not entitled to recover jewelry from surviving wife's executors, where only evidence tending to rebut presumption, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, that person exercising acts of ownership or commonly reputed to be owner is owner of property, and that husband gave jewelry to wife before his death, was inference that three articles listed in inventory and appraisement of his estate might have been articles in wife's possession at time of her death.

3. Limitation of actions ⚿103(1)—Administratrix's action to recover jewelry from executors of intestate's widow, dying 12 years after husband, held barred though trust was claimed, where trust was repudiated sufficient length of time before suit.

Action by administratrix of husband's estate to recover possession of jewelry, household furniture, etc., from executors of surviving wife, who died 12 years after husband, held barred by statute of limitations, whether action sounded in replevin or was founded on trust resulting from wife's relation as joint executrix of husband's estate.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by Helen C. Raddatz, special administratrix of the estate of George W. Patterson, deceased, against R. Holtby Myers and another, executors of the last will of Jean Patterson, deceased. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

E. J. Talbott, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Milton Marks, of San Francisco, for respondents.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued in replevin as special administratrix of the estate of George W. H. Patterson, deceased, to recover possession of certain personal property consisting of jewerly, cash, and household furniture, which she alleged was in the possession of the defendants as executors of the estate of Jean Patterson, the deceased wife of George W. H. Patterson. Plaintiff also asked for a decree quieting her title, as such administratrix, in and to the property. The trial court gave judgment for the defendants, and the plaintiff has appealed on a typewritten transcript.

[1, 2] The judgment is affirmed for the following reasons: George W. H. Patterson died testate in April, 1913; his wife, Jean Patterson, survived him 12 years. Upon his death, Jean Patterson and another immediately qualified as joint executrices of his estate. Long prior to the death of George W. H. Patterson, and until her death in 1925, Jean Patterson had in her possession the jewelry in suit, openly wearing it and displaying it as her own. After the death of George W. H. Patterson, Jean Patterson continued to live in the house occupied by them at the time of his death and continued to use the household furniture left in the home. Some furniture was shown to have been in the possession of Jean Patterson at the time of her death, but no effort was made to identify it as the same furniture which had been left by her husband.

Hence, as to the furniture, there is a total failure of proof on plaintiff's part; as to the cash item, the claim was apparently abandoned as no proof was offered; as to the jewelry, the trial court invoked the presumption "that a person is the owner of property from exercising acts of ownership over it, or from common reputation of his ownership" Code Civ. Proc., § 1963, and that, as the jewelry consisted mainly of articles of female adornment, it might be presumed that the husband gave them to his wife prior to his death. There is no evidence tending to rebut the presumption invoked except the inference that three articles of jewelry listed in the inventory and appraisement in the estate of George W. H. Patterson might have been the same articles which were in Jean Patterson's possession at the time of her death in 1925.

[3] But, aside from the merits of the controversy, the trial court found that plaintiff's cause of action was barred by the statute of limitations. Though the action sounds in replevin, the appellant now argues that it is founded on the trust resulting from Jean Patterson's relation as point executrix of the estate of her husband. But upon this theory there was a repudiation of the trust as to the only property which was identified in this proceeding, and this occurred from 12 to 15 years before this action was commenced. Upon either theory the lapse of time was far beyond any period of limitation applicable.

Judgment affirmed.

BOGUE v. ROETH et al. (WALKER, Intervener). (Civ. 3708.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 12, 1929.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing May 11, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court June 10, 1929.

1. Animals 🔑26(1)—Parties pasturing cattle had lien for amount due while cattle remained in their lawful possession (Civ. Code, § 3051; 1 Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 4344).

Under Civ. Code, § 3051; St. 1869–70, p. 723; 1 Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 4344, parties to whom cattle were delivered for pasturage were entitled to lien thereon to secure payment of amount due under contract while cattle remained in their lawful possession.

2. Animals 🔑26(4)—Valid tender of full amount due for pasturage discharged lien and entitled owner to prompt delivery of stock (Civ. Code, § 3051; 1 Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 4344).

Valid tender of full amount due for pasturage of cattle discharged lien therefor under Civ. Code, § 3051; St. 1869–70, p. 723; 1 Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 4344, and entitled owner to prompt delivery of stock.

3. Animals 🔑26(4)—Noncompliance with demand for delivery of cattle on valid tender of full amount due for pasturage created liability for all damages accruing therefrom.

Failure of parties pasturing cattle to comply with owner's demand for delivery thereof on valid tender of full amount due rendered them liable for all damages accruing therefrom.

4. Tender 🔑22—Denial of plaintiff's alleged right to possession of cattle was not sufficient denial of specifically alleged tender of amount due for pasturage (Civ. Code, § 3051; 1 Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 4344).

Mere denial of plaintiff's alleged right to possession of cattle, which defendants claimed right to retain only to secure their lien for pasturage under Civ. Code, § 3051; St. 1869–70, p. 723; 1 Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 4344, did not amount to sufficient denial of specifically alleged tender of amount due for pasturage.

5. Tender 🔑22—Sufficiency of plea of alleged tender must be raised by demurrer or answer.

The sufficiency of a plea of tender must be raised by either a demurrer or an answer.

6. Pleading 🔑129(2)—Plea of tender will be deemed admitted, unless expressly denied.

A plea of tender must be expressly denied, or will be deemed to have been admitted.

7. Tender 🔑24—Allegation in answer and defendant's trial of case on theory that much larger sum than amount tendered was due warranted assumption that tender was futile, so as to obvioate necessity of paying amount into court.

Affirmative allegation in answer that sum, greatly exceeding amount tendered and found by jury to be due, was due defendants for pasturage of plaintiff's cattle, and trial of case by defendants on theory that they were entitled to such sum, held to warrant assumption that tender was futile, so that it was unnecessary for plaintiff to pay amount into court to keep tender good.

8. Tender 🔑18—Ordinarily, tender which apparently will not be accepted need not be kept good.

Ordinarily, a tender need not be kept good, when it appears that it will not be accepted.

9. Tender 🔑15(3)—Mere objection to amount of tender will be deemed waiver of other alleged defects.

A mere objection to amount of claim tendered will be deemed a waiver of all other alleged defects of tender, such as inability to pay, character of money offered, or invalidity of check.

10. Pleading 🔑129(2)—Defendants not denying tender could not first question during trial plaintiff's ability to pay or failure to keep tender good by cross-examining witnesses on subject.

Defendants, having tacitly admitted plaintiff's tender of amount claimed to be due for pasturage by failure to deny it, were precluded from first questioning during trial plaintiff's ability to pay money offered or failure to keep tender good, and hence could not cross-examine witnesses on subject.

11. Pleading 🔑245(3)—Refusal to permit amendment of answer to deny alleged tender of amount due, on motion first made during trial, held not abuse of discretion.

Trial court did not abuse his discretion in refusing to permit defendants to amend their answer, so as to deny plaintiff's alleged tender of amount due, on motion first made during trial.

12. Replevin 🔑52—Holder of valid contract to purchase personalty involved in replevin suit has interest entitling him to intervene (Code Civ. Proc. § 387).

One holding a valid contract to purchase personal property involved in replevin suit has an interest in the matter in litigation, entitling him to intervene as a party to action under Code Civ. Proc. § 387.

13. Replevin 🔑52—Interest of any kind or magnitude in subject-matter is sufficient to authorize intervention, though intervener may protect interest in some other way (Code Civ. Proc. § 387).

Any interest in subject-matter, of whatever kind or magnitude, is sufficient to give right to intervene under Code Civ. Proc. § 387, whether or not intervener may protect his interest in some other way.

14. Replevin 🔑52—Holder of valid contract to purchase cattle, sought to be replevined, from plaintiff, had interest entitling him to intervene (Code Civ. Proc. § 387).

One holding valid contract to purchase cattle, sought to be replevined by vendor from one claiming lien for pasturage under Civ. Code, § 3051; St. 1869–70, p. 723; 1 Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 4344, had such an interest in delivery and possession thereof, so that he might market them at a profit, as entitled him to intervene under Code Civ. Proc. § 387, though he might have maintained separate action for damages against vendor for failure to deliver them pursuant to contract.

15. Replevin ⚷52 — Interest authorizing purchaser's intervention in seller's replevin suit held not altered or terminated by delivery of cattle to seller (Code Civ. Proc. § 387).

The interest authorizing purchaser of cattle to intervene, under Code Civ. Proc. § 387, in replevin action by seller against one claiming pasturage lien, was not altered or terminated by delivery of cattle to plaintiff, pursuant to cash deposit in bank, accompanied by conditional trust agreement reserving lien, to secure payment of pasturage account.

16. Appeal and error ⚷719(7)—Appellants cannot question form of instructions not specified as error in bill of exceptions (Code Civ. Proc. § 648).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 648, appellants, specifying no other instructions than those offered by them and refused as error in bill of exceptions, are precluded from questioning form of any other instructions.

17. Appeal and error ⚷1033(5)—Instruction that plaintiff tendered amount due for pasturage on later date than that shown by complaint and evidence in replevin held not prejudicial to defendants.

Where complaint in replevin alleged that plaintiff tendered amount claimed to be due for pasturage of cattle "about May 9," and evidence showed that both plaintiff and intervener demanded delivery thereof and offered to pay such amount on May 10, defendants were not prejudiced by instruction that it was admitted that tender occurred on May 25th, though contrary to instruction to award plaintiff damages for loss in weight of cattle since May 10 following such tender, as defendants profited if jury estimated damages from later date.

18. Trial ⚷194(10)—Instruction to find for intervener, if plaintiff and defendants in replevin wrongfully failed to deliver cattle to intervener "when" he had right to possession thereof, held not erroneous as charge that he had absolute right of possession.

Instruction to find for intervener against both plaintiff and defendants in replevin, if they wrongfully failed to deliver cattle to intervener "when" he had right to possession thereof, held not erroneous as positive charge that he had absolute right to possession; intent being that word "when" should be construed as meaning "if" or "in the event."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, When.]

19. Trial ⚷285 — Instructions should receive reasonable construction upholding judgment.

Instructions should receive such reasonable construction as will uphold, rather than defeat, a judgment.

20. Appeal and error ⚷750(8)—Excessiveness of verdicts cannot be raised on appeal, where specifications of error fail to designate insufficiency of evidence to support amount of damages found (Code Civ. Proc. § 648).

Question whether verdicts for plaintiff and intervener in replevin are excessive cannot be raised on appeal, where specifications of error fail to designate insufficiency of evidence to support amount of damages found, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 648.

21. Appeal and error ⚷1068(4)—Failure of instruction in replevin to define market value held immaterial, where bill of exceptions failed to specify insufficiency of evidence to support amount of damages found (Code Civ. Proc. § 648; Civ. Code, § 3353).

That intervener's instruction in replevin suit failed to state, in language of Civ. Code, § 3353, that "market value" meant value of property to seller, which he could have obtained in market nearest place at which it should have been accepted by buyer, held immaterial, where bill of exceptions failed to specify insufficiency of evidence to support amount of damages found, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 648.

Appeal from Superior Court, Glenn County; Claude F. Purkitt, Judge.

Replevin by C. B. Bogue against George Roeth and others, individually and as copartners doing business under the firm name and style of Roeth, King & Roeth, in which L. E. Walker intervened. From judgments for plaintiff and intervener, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

George R. Freeman, of Willows, for appellants.

W. T. Belieu, of Willows, for intervener respondent.

THOMPSON, J. This is an appeal from separate verdicts and a judgment for damages in favor of the plaintiff and also in favor of the intervener in an action to replevin 1,150 head of cattle which were held by the defendants upon a claim of lien to secure the payment of an account for pasturage.

The defendants held a lease on 7,500 acres of pasture land in Glenn county. The plaintiff was the owner of more than 1,100 Hereford cattle, for the grazing of which he contracted to pay the defendants not to exceed $8,250 computed at the rate of $2.50 apiece per month for 1,000 cows for a period of three months, and $2 apiece per month during the same period for all stock in excess of that number, estimated at about 125 additional cows. Pursuant to this agreement plaintiff's cattle were delivered to the defendants for pasturage in December, 1924, and a large proportion of them were retained until the latter part of May, 1925. 395 cows were redelivered May 10, 1925. The remaining stock was held by the defendants under a claim of lien to secure the unpaid charge for pasturage. April 5, 1925, the plaintiff contracted to sell to the intervener, L. E. Walker, 1,050 head of cattle at a specified price, agreeing to deliver the stock prior to May 10, 1925. Upon this last-mentioned date the plaintiff tendered defendants the sum of $8,250 in full payment of what was claimed to be the agreed maximum cost of pasturage, and thereupon demanded delivery of his cattle, which was refused by the defendants upon the ground that they were entitled to approximately $15,000 for accrued cost of pasturage. Thereupon this suit was instituted. On June 16, 1925, by agreement, $16,000 was deposited in escrow with a Willows bank to secure the payment of the pasturage account, and the cattle were then released. In the meantime the market value of beef cattle declined materially, and both the plaintiff and the intervener thereby sustained a substantial loss.

Upon the trial three separate verdicts were rendered, one in favor of the plaintiff for damages in the sum of $1,134; one in favor of the defendants for pasturage in the sum of $8,250; and the third in favor of the intervener for damages in the sum of $3,454.89. A judgment in accordance with these verdicts was then entered, from which this appeal was perfected.

The record discloses the fact that on April 5, 1925, the intervener, Walker, contracted to purchase 1,050 head of these cattle from the plaintiff to be delivered by May 20th; that 674 head of cattle were not so delivered for the reason that defendants held them upon a claim of lien for pasturage; that "the plaintiff C. B. Bogue and the intervener L. E. Walker in turn demanded of the defendant Roeth, King & Roeth the delivery of said cattle consisting of 674 head on May 10, 1925, and (then) offered to pay defendants the pasturage on said cattle up to that time amounting to $8,250," which tender by both the plaintiff and the intervener was refused on the sole ground that defendants claimed they were entitled to a greater sum of money for pasturage; that the cattle were then fat beef cows fit for market; and that the price of beef cattle for the season was then at its peak, but that the value and condition of the cattle rapidly depreciated thereafter, so that when they were actually delivered to the plaintiff between June 13 and 18, 1925, they had become what was termed "feeder cattle" only; that upon resale of the stock a substantial loss was sustained by both the plaintiff and the intervener. The amount of damages thus suffered by the plaintiff was fixed by the jury at $1,134, which loss is supported by the record, together with damages which were awarded to the intervener in the additional sum of $3,454.89.

The proceedings of this trial are presented by means of a bill of exceptions. The appellants contend that the record discloses no interest of the intervener in the litigation authorizing an intervention pursuant to section 387 of the Code of Civil Procedure; that the evidence fails to show a tender of the money found to be due for pasturage, sufficient upon which to warrant a judgment for damages; that the trial court erred in refusing to permit an examination of witnesses on the subject of a tender, and in refusing to permit an amendment of their answer during the trial to specifically deny the alleged tender; and that the court erred in giving to the jury and refusing certain instructions.

[1-3] While the cattle remained in the lawful possession of the defendants, they were entitled to a lien upon the stock to secure the payment of the amount for pasturage which was actually due under the terms of their contract. Section 3051, Civ. Code; Stats. of Cal. 1869–70, p. 723, 1 Deering's Gen. Laws of 1923, p. 1626, Act 4344. A valid tender of the full amount due to the defendants had the effect of discharging the lien and entitling the plaintiff to prompt delivery of the stock. 26 R. C. L. 654, § 39. A failure to comply with this demand for delivery under such circumstances created a liability against the defendants for all damages which accrued therefrom. Loughborough v. McNevin, 74 Cal. 250, 257, 14 P. 369, 15 P. 773, 5 Am. St. Rep. 435.

[4-9] The complaint admitted that $8,250 was due to the defendants, and alleged a tender of that amount. The answer failed to deny the alleged tender. It specifically disclaimed that "only the sum of $8,250 was due for pasturage," and upon the contrary asserted that $14,833.85 was due the defendants. The mere denial of plaintiff's alleged right to the possession of his cattle did not amount to a sufficient denial of the tender of money which was specifically alleged. The defendants' only claim of right to retain the custody of the stock was to secure their lien for pasturage. In the absence of a special demurrer, the tender was adequately pleaded. The sufficiency of a plea of tender must be raised by either a demurrer or an answer. A plea of tender must be expressly denied, or it will be deemed to have been admitted. 38 Cyc. 170; 24 Standard Enc. of Proc. 771. The affirmative allegation contained in the answer that a sum was due the defendants which was greatly in excess of the amount tendered and found by the jury to have been due, together with the fact that the case was tried on the part of the defendants upon the theory that they were entitled to this larger sum of money, furnishes sufficient basis upon which to assume that plaintiff's tender of $8,250 was futile, and it was therefore unnecessary for him to pay that amount into court to keep the tender good. Ordinarily a tender need not be kept good when it appears that it will not be accepted. 26 R. C. L. 624, § 3, p. 643, § 24. Moreover, a mere objection to the amount of a claim tendered will be deemed to be a waiver of all other alleged defects of the tender, such as inability to pay or the character of money offered or the invalidity of a check. 26 R. C. L. 628, § 7.

[10,11] Aside from the question of damages resulting from defendants' refusal to deliver the stock to plaintiff, the sole issue upon which the pleadings were drawn and upon which the case was tried was the amount due to the defendants for grazing the cattle. Having tacitly admitted the tender by their failure to deny it, the defendants were precluded from questioning, for the first time during the process of the trial, the plaintiff's ability to pay the money offered, or his failure to keep the tender good. The court, therefore, correctly sustained objections on the part of the plaintiff to defendants' cross-examination of witnesses upon this subject. Nor was there an abuse of discretion on the part of the court in refusing to permit defendants to amend their answer so as to deny the alleged tender, which motion to amend was first made during the process of the trial.

[12-14] There is no merit in the defendants' contention that L. E. Walker, who held a valid contract for the purchase of 1,050 head of the cattle sought to be replevined in this suit, possessed no such interest in the subject of this litigation as would entitle him to intervene under section 387 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides in part: "At any time before trial, any person, who has an interest in the matter in litigation, or in the success of either of the parties, or an interest against both, may intervene in the action or proceeding." One who holds a valid contract to purchase personal property which is involved in a suit of replevin has an interest in the matter in litigation entitling him to intervene as a party to the action. Loughborough v. McNevin, supra; Gaines v. Clark, 51 App. D. C. 71, 275 F. 1017, 1019; 20 Cal. Jur. 520, § 25. "The code does not attempt to specify what or how great that interest shall be, in order to give a right to intervene. Any interest is sufficient. The fact that the intervenor may or may not protect that interest in some other way is not material." Coffey v. Greenfield, 55 Cal. 382; Dennis v. Kolm, 131 Cal. 91, 63 P. 141. In the present case the matter in litigation consisted primarily of the right to the possession of the cattle, incident to which there was also involved the question of damages for unlawfully detaining them from the owner. Certainly the purchaser of the cattle was interested in the delivery and possession of the stock so that he might market them at a profit. This interest entitled him to intervene, even though he might have maintained a separate action for damages against the vendor of the cattle for failure to deliver them pursuant to contract.

[15] The interest in the outcome of the replevin action authorizing the intervention of the respondent under section 387 of the Code of Civil Procedure, was not altered or terminated by the delivery of the cattle to the plaintiff pursuant to the deposit of cash accompanied by the conditional contract which was equivalent to a surety bond. The conditional trust deposit and agreement specifically reserved the appellants' lien.

In lieu of a surety bond, $16,000 in cash was deposited in trust with the Glenn County Bank at Willows accompanied with a written agreement, by the terms of which the appellants' lien on the cattle for pasturage was specifically reserved. It authorized delivery of the stock pending the litigation "without waiving any of the aforesaid liens." This escrow agreement and cash deposit constituted a mere undertaking to obtain possession of the cattle without releasing the lien. The determination of the priority of liens was an important issue preserved by the terms of the escrow transaction. The delivery of the cattle was therefore conditional, and did not affect the merits of the cause. The damages sought to be recovered by the intervener accrued prior to the release of the cattle. In 5 Cal. Jur. 178, § 15, it is said: "The effect of delivery upon undertaking is simply to give the party the possession of the property pending the litigation, and not to divest either the title or the lien of the other party. * * * The title does not vest * * * until the judgment. * * * Accordingly, he cannot sell it so as to convey good title even to an innocent purchaser. * * * The property remains in the custody of the law and all parties must take notice." Hunt v. Robinson, 11 Cal. 262; Bailey v. Security Trust Co., 34 Cal. App. 348, 167 P. 409; Riverside Portland Cement Co. v. Taft, 192 Cal. 643, 221 P. 357. The separate verdict in favor of the intervener is, therefore, supported by both the law and the record in this case.

[16] We find no prejudicial error in the instructions given or refused. On this appeal the appellants are precluded from questioning the form of any instructions, except those which were offered by the defendants and refused as appears in paragraph 12 of the bill of exceptions, for the reason that no other instructions are specified therein as error. Section 648, Code Civ. Proc. These challenged instructions, as well as the specifications of error, are confined entirely to the defendants' theory of the insufficiency of the alleged tender; the failure of plaintiff to have paid the money into court or to perform acts to keep the tender good; the legal right of the respondent, Walker, to intervene and his right to the possession of the cattle.

[17] It is true that plaintiff's instructions A and B conflict as to the actual date of the tender of the amount for pasturage which was found to be due. The complaint alleged that the tender was made on May 9th. Plaintiff's instruction A declares that: "* * * If you find * * * that the plaintiff had contracted * * * to sell his cattle * * * and that said cattle shrunk in weight between May 10th and June 13th, 1925, and you * * * also find that the plaintiff is entitled to the possession of said cattle * * * on May 10, 1925, following the tender of the plaintiff to the defendants of the sum of $8,250 which tender is admitted by the defendants * * *," under such circumstances plaintiff would be entitled to damages against the defendants for such sum as would compensate him for the loss in the weight of the cattle. Plaintiff's instruction B directly instructed the jury that it was an admitted fact that the tender occurred on May 25th. The record shows that both the plaintiff and the intervener demanded the delivery of the cattle, "on May 10, 1925, and (then) offered to pay defendants the pasturage on said cattle up to that time amounting to $8,250.00." Both the pleadings and the evidence support the conclusion that the tender actually occurred "about May 9th," or specifically on May 10th. This last-mentioned date is, therefore, the time upon which the plaintiff was entitled to possession of the cattle, and from which time damages for loss of the weight of the cattle should be computed. If the jury estimated such damages from the later date of May 25th the defendants profited thereby, and may, therefore, not complain. Plaintiff's instruction B is not prejudicial, and hence should be disregarded.

[18-21] It is contended that the intervener's instruction H was a positive charge that he had an absolute right to the possession of the cattle. We are of the opinion this instruction may reasonably be construed otherwise. It read: "If you should find from the evidence in this case that both plaintiff and defendants wrongfully failed to deliver said cattle to Intervener when he had a right to their possession then your verdict should be in favor of Intervener and against both plaintiff and defendants." It seems apparent that the meaning which was intended to be conveyed by this instruction is that the italicized word "when" should be construed to mean "if" or "in the event." At least it is reasonable to conclude the court, by means of this instruction, directed the jury that, if they should find that both plaintiff and defendants failed to deliver the cattle to the intervener in the event "he had a right to their possession, then your verdict should be in favor of Intervener. * * *" Instructions should receive such reasonable construction as will uphold, rather than defeat, a judgment. After examining all of the challenged instructions, we are of the opinion that the jury was not misled thereby. While several of them are open to the construction placed upon them by the appellants, there appears to be no prejudicial error. With respect to the period of time during which the jury were permitted to compute damages, it was plainly informed in intervener's instruction K that: "You are only to consider the condition of the market price of cattle between May 10, 1925, when intervener claims he demanded the same, and the date he received them." Neither the amount of damages which was awarded to the plaintiff, nor the amount which was assessed in favor of the intervener, is questioned. It is not claimed that the amount of either of these verdicts is excessive. This question may not be raised on this appeal, for the reason that the specifications of error fail to designate the insufficiency of evidence to support the amount of damages found to have accrued. Section 648 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that a bill of exceptions "must specify the particulars in which such evidence is alleged to be insufficient." Mills v. Brady, 185 Cal. 317, 196 P. 776; Clarkson v. Moir, 53 Cal. App. 775, 201 P. 474. It is, therefore, immaterial that intervener's instruction M omitted to state in the language of section 3353 of the Civil Code that the term "market value" meant "the value of property to a seller thereof * * * which he could have obtained therefor in the market nearest to the place at which it should have been accepted by the buyer. * * *"

Upon the principles of law heretofore announced with respect to a tender of money acknowledged to be due, the adequate pleading thereof, the failure of the defendants to specifically deny the alleged tender and the right of the owner to the possession of the stock, together with defendants' liability for damages for detaining the cattle, the court properly refused to give to the jury defendants' instructions which are contained in paragraph 12 of the bill of exceptions. These are the only instructions adequately challenged by the record.

The judgment is, therefore, affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; PLUMMER, J.

RECLAMATION DIST. NO. 833 et al. v. AMERICAN FARMS CO. (Civ. 3706.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 12, 1929.

Rehearing Denied May 11, 1929. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court June 10, 1929.

1. Waters and water courses 🔑101—Water developed for rice culture by deep pumps is not natural water or riparian to owner's lands.

Water developed by owner of rice lands by means of deep pumps is not natural water or water riparian to owner's lands.

2. Waters and water courses 🔑162—Rice grower, not within drainage districts, has no right to flow water developed by pump into drainage district works.

Rice grower, not within drainage districts, who develops water by deep pumps for irrigating lands, has no right to flow such water down to and into works of drainage districts.

3. Waters and water courses 🔑179(4)—Evidence held to warrant injunction restraining user of water developed by deep pumps from draining water through drainage district works.

Evidence that water, developed by owner of rice lands by means of pumps, eventually reached works of drainage district through natural channels, held to warrant injunction restraining defendant from draining his lands through plaintiff's works.

Appeal from Superior Court, Colusa County; Ernest Weyand, Judge.

Action by Reclamation District No. 833 and others against the American Farms Company, a corporation. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs, other than the one first named, appeal. Reversed, with directions.

George F. Jones, of Oroville, and Jerome D. Peters, of Chico (W. H. Spaulding, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellants.

George E. Crothers, C. A. S. Frost, and Treadwell, Van Fleet & Laughlin, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

MONCUR, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment of the superior court of Colusa county in an action brought by plaintiffs to restrain the respondent herein from draining waters used by said respondent for irrigating rice grown on its property, down to and into the drainage works of appellants. The appellants herein, drainage district No. 100 and Butte Creek drainage district are drainage districts located in Butte county containing approximately 20,000 and 35,000 acres, respectively. Reclamation district No. 833 is a reclamation district containing approximately 38,000 acres, also located in Butte county. Reclamation district No. 833, however, is not a party to this appeal; it having withdrawn from the case immediately prior to the trial in the superior court. Appellant districts were organized for the purpose of draining water, after its use for the irrigation of rice on land in Butte county, so as to convey it into the Sacramento river without causing damage to land lying below the districts.

It appears from the evidence that, for many years prior to the growing of rice in Butte county, the water of Butte creek, each year during the summer and fall months, spread over thousands of acres of land in Colusa county known as the Butte basin, and had no natural outlet into the Sacramento river until such time as the winter water flowing down Butte creek raised this water level of the Butte basin and caused it to flow over the rim thereof into Butte slough, and thence into the Sacramento river. However, after the commencement of rice culture in Butte county, the summer and fall flow of water from the drainage of these rice lands increased to such an extent that the level of water in Butte basin was raised in the months of September and October to an elevation which caused lands around the rim of the basin to be flooded, thereby damaging the crops of the owners of these lands. This situation resulted, in the year 1919, in the granting of an injunction, by judgment of the superior court of Colusa county, against the individuals owning lands in appellant districts, who were then growing rice. These rice growers were enjoined from continuing the flow of water into Butte basin, to the damage of individuals and corporations owning land therein. A large number of landowners in reclamation district No. 833 were also parties defendant to this action and made subject to the injunction. Respondent American Farms Company was not, at the time of the commencement of said action in 1919, engaged in the business of raising rice. As a result of this injunction, appellant districts were organized for the purpose of constructing works necessary to convey this drainage water a distance of approximately 20 miles, first, through Butte creek, to which it was brought by smaller natural channels and artificial cuts, thence into the Butte sink or basin, and from the Butte sink through an artificial cut, locally known as Moulton cut, into Butte slough, and thence into the Sacramento river. In the organization of these districts, the acquisition of flowage rights, and the construction of drainage works, a large amount of money was expended. Respondent owns about 2,200 acres of land in Butte county, which is not in any drainage district. Through this land are several waterways, one of which is known as Cottonwood creek. No water naturally flows in these channels during the months of September and October of each year. All of them converge into the Cherokee canal, at a point a short distance below the south boundary line of respondent's land, and the Cherokee canal in turn empties its waters into Butte creek, and thence into Butte basin. The drainage works of appellants are located approximately 16 miles in a southerly direction from the southern boundary of respondent's property. Respondent had devoted about 75 acres to the growing of rice in 1915, and some 140 acres in 1917 but it was not until 1921 that it engaged in the rice-growing business upon a large scale, some 300 acres being planted in that year, and thereafter, until 1926, it had grown from 350 to 675 acres each year. For the purpose of irrigating its rice land, the respondent drilled eight deep wells from which, by pumping, it developed a flow of water varying from 1,600 gallons to 1,900 gallons per minute per well. After using this water for irrigation, the surplus was drained into Cottonwood creek, from which it flowed into the Cherokee canal.

It is the contention of appellant that said water, after flowing into Cherokee canal, finds its way down through the various waterways until it reaches the canals and works of appellant districts, and that respondent is seeking to enjoy the benefits of the large expenditures made by appellant districts and by reclamation district No. 833, in the way of cuts, levees, flowage rights, ditches, etc., without joining in and bearing its fair share of the costs thereof, and that the flowing of this drainage water from the land of respondent through the canals and works of appellant districts constitutes a continuing nuisance, which the appellant districts are entitled to enjoin. Respondent contends that it has the right to flow its drainage waters into natural channels in the ordinary course of rice farming, and that, if such natural channels carry said water through the works of the drainage districts, it is not the legal right of the districts to enjoin it from so doing. In other words, that it has the inherent right to flow this water into any natural waterway existing on its land, no matter where it flows thereafter.

The court found that appellant districts were the owners of certain rights of way and easements in what is known as the Butte sink, consisting of flowage rights, canals, and levees as follows: An artificial canal and waterway known as Moulton cut, which diverts the water of Butte slough out of and away from Butte slough and through Butte basin; a certain drain known as Butte drain at the lower end of Butte basin, together with certain weirs and levees by which the water in Butte creek basin may be raised or lowered; that respondent farms a portion of its lands to rice, and during all the times mentioned in the complaint continuously had been irrigating, with water pumped from beneath the surface of the land, the land above described, by means of several deep well pumps; that the water so pumped is part of the percolating waters of the watershed upon which said respondent's land is situated; that the waters thereof so brought to the surface, and which are not consumed in such irrigation, are drained upon defendant's said land into natural and ancient water courses, only to the extent necessary in the proper, reasonable, and careful irrigation of said land, and without flowage or seepage upon any property of plaintiffs, and without seepage or flowage out of the natural channels of said natural water courses; and all of said land of the defendant is within the watershed of certain natural water courses which naturally drain into Butte slough, and all of the water drained from said land drains through said water courses into the said Butte slough, but there is no evidence showing that any thereof ever reached any of the canals, works, or easements of the plaintiffs, and the same could only reach the same by being artificially diverted by the plaintiffs, from the said Butte slough through the said Moulton cut; that said respondent intends to continue to drain said water from its rice lands into the said natural water courses, but does not threaten to drain the same into any canals, ditches, or easements of plaintiff districts, and there is no evidence showing that the said water has ever in any way damaged the said rights of way or easements of plaintiffs, or that the same will in any wise damage or injure the same, and it is untrue that, if the same should continue, it will ripen into any easement or right against the plaintiffs.

We will first consider the contention of respondent that it has the right to flow its drainage water into natural channels on said land in the ordinary course of rice farming, and that, if such natural channels carry said water through the works of the drainage districts, it has the right so to do, irrespective of where the water flows after leaving the natural channels on its own land. In support of its contention, respondent cites many cases, but it is our opinion that none of the California cases cited apply to the facts shown by the record in this case; the rule in such matters in this state being different than the rule as found by the courts of a number of the other states. Rather does it seem to us that the rule applicable herein is that stated in the case of Learned v. Castle, 78 Cal. 454, 18 P. 872, 21 P. 11, from which decision we will quote later on in this opinion. It seems to us that from the evidence in this case it clearly appears that, at the time of the commencement of the action in 1919, had respondent been growing rice and discharging the surplus waters into the said natural waterways, it would have been a proper party to the action, and would have been subject to the same injunctive process as were the other rice growers.

We quote the following testimony of Mr. Polk, a witness for plaintiffs, as follows:

"Q. Now, Mr. Polk, you have shown these drainage districts, and I will ask, for what purpose were these districts organized? A.

Primarily, for the purpose of taking care of the drainage waters caused by the irrigation of rice.

"Q. And what was the necessity of taking care of that? A. The necessity was caused by injunction suits having been brought by certain lands in the lower end of the Butte Basin known as the Moulton lands; and injunction suits were brought by them against the districts and other parties preventing the drainage of rice water on account of damage to bean crops and other crops.

"Q. Now, Mr. Polk, what is the watershed of this territory embraced within the districts, also embracing the lands of the defendants—the watershed; which way does the water flow; where is its natural outlet? A. Its natural outlet is in the Butte Basin; down Butte Creek and tributaries thereof and into the Butte Basin.

"Q. Now, originally, where did that water go; say around 1910 or 1915? A. Originally went into the Butte Basin, which is in the nature of a swamp, a basin, and collected all the water from Butte Creek and didn't really have any outlet excepting in flood times. * * *

"Q. Now, then, what if anything was done to perfect an outlet for the waters placed within the Butte Basin? A. Prior—about the time the rice water began flowing into that territory the people owning what is known as the Moulton lands, dug a certain cut or canal from that into Butte Slough, through the rim on the edge of the basin.

"Q. And the purpose of that Moulton Cut was what? A. To lower the water table in the basin caused by the drainage waters coming in. * * *

"Q. What physical effect did the digging of the Moulton Cut have on that locality? A. Tend to lower the surface of the water in the basin, which was spreading out over the cultivated lands adjacent to the basin. * * *

"Mr. Peters: I will ask you the hypothetical question: From your experience and knowledge as an engineer would you say whether or not water drained from 300 acres of rice in section, say 7, township 19 north, range 3 east, and into the Cherokee Canal, would find its way down Butte Creek into Butte Basin and through the easements and rights of way of the plaintiff districts? A. I believe some of it would."

On cross-examination the witness testified as follows:

"Q. Now, what injury would happen to this Cut, Butte Creek Drain, from May to October, if any, by having, say two or three second feet of water come through more than would otherwise come? A. Just two second feet additional?

"Q. Yes. A. And only two?

"Q. Yes. A. Pretty hard to answer that; might have been full enough so two second feet would run it over the edge the same as putting another drop in the bucket.

"Q. Have you any reason to believe that it was so in 1926? A. Oh, no, it being an accumulation of that particular two feet of other water and two feet continuously from other sources would do the damage."

We also quote from the testimony of Harry F. Cauthard, a witness for plaintiffs, as follows:

"Q. From your experience as an engineer would you say whether or not water from 300 acres of rice, drained off the same, say, section 1, township 19 north, range 2 east, whether or not the water so drained would find its way into Butte Creek and thence on down into Butte Sink through the rights of way and easements of the District and into the Sacramento River? A. It would."

The following testimony of Frank S. Robinson, a witness for defendants, is quoted.

"Q. Well, now, using these methods, can you state in an approximate way the amount of that run-off from the American Farms property? * * * A. My measurements didn't start until some time the early part of September.

"The Court: 1926? A. 1926.

"Mr. Treadwell: And continued until about what time? A. The early part of October, I believe; I haven't the dates exactly.

"Q. From your knowledge of rice culture would that period be the period of high run-off or low run-off? A. Probably the highest run-off occurred during that period or shortly succeeding.

"Q. Well, then, give it for that period the best you can? A. You refer to the run-off from the property itself or —.

"Q. (Int.) Yes. A. My figures show that when I started there was an approximate run-off of two second feet, which increased to approximately ten second feet and dropped again—I beg pardon, I am misstating there—the run-off from the American Farms Company property itself varied from approximately two second feet to four second feet."

Nowhere does it appear in the record that there is any contradiction of the testimony of Mr. Polk that, if there were no interference with the drainage of irrigation waters from respondent's land, they would not naturally commingle with the other waters discharged into the various waterways by the rice growers and eventually find their way down into the natural drainage areas referred to in the evidence. It appears without contradiction, therefore, that respondent's irrigating waters, amounting to from two to four second feet, are discharged into the said natural waterways on its lands; that said waters are mingled with other surplus irrigating waters from rice lands, and all of such mingled waters ultimately find their way down to, into, and through the works of appellants. Therefore, even if some of the said waters are taken out of said waterways below respondent's property, and used for irrigating rice, yet it cannot be said that thereby appellants' works are not subjected to the use by respondent of carrying the latter's surplus irrigating waters.

What is said in the case of Learned v. Castle, supra, seems to be particularly applicable, therefore, to the evidence in this case: "It is true that when the damage was done at that time, the water from the canal was mingled with water from other sources, which (it may be admitted) was of a larger volume than that of the water brought there by defendants; and it may have been difficult to separate the mingled elements of mischief, and calculate with any great" extent of "exactness the proportionate amount of damage done by each. But surely there was no warrant for finding that all the damage was done by the other water, and none (practically) by the water poured onto plaintiffs' land by the canal. A wrongdoer who contributes to a damage cannot escape entirely because his proportional contribution to the result cannot be accurately measured. (In a case like the one at bar, it would be at least as near justice to hold him for all the damages as to hold him for none.) And we think the evidence did not warrant the finding that the damage caused by the acts of defendants was to the extent only of one dollar. But the amount of the damage, estimated in money, was immaterial. That finding was only as to the damage done in 1878, when there was water on the land from other sources. The findings show that the waters diverted by the canal 'flow' upon plaintiffs' land, which would not flow there if allowed to take their natural course; and that the embankments erected by defendants 'cause' such artificial flowing. And to thus wrongfully cause water to flow upon another's land which would not flow there naturally is to create a nuisance per se. It is an injury to the right, and it cannot be continued because other persons (whether jurors or not) might have a low estimate of the damage which it causes. And especially is this so when the continuance of the wrongful act might ripen into a right in the nature of an easement or servitude. (Richards v. Dower, 64 Cal. 64 [28 P. 113], and cases there cited; [Tootle] v. Clifton, 22 Ohio St. 247, 10 Am. Rep. 732; Casebeer v. Mowry, 55 Pa. 419, 93 Am. Dec. 766; Wood on Nuisances, 2d Ed., p. 639.) The right to an injunction, therefore, in such a case does not depend upon the extent of the damage measured by a money standard; the maximum, de minimis, etc., does not apply. the main object of the action is to declare a nuisance, and to prevent the continuance by a mandatory injunction."

In Galbreath v. Hopkins, 159 Cal. 297, at page 301, 113 P. 174, 176, the court said: "It is, of course, clear under the law that unless the defendants have acquired a right by prescription to discharge the water from the pond by artificial means upon the land of plaintiff, they have no right to do so at all. While the owner of upper land has the right to have the waters from his land flow in their natural course down upon the lands below, he has no right, by the construction of ditches or other artificial means, to turn waters which have naturally accumulated in ponds or depressions on his land upon the land of his neighbor lower down (Ogburn v. Connor, 46 Cal. 347, 13 Am. Rep. 213; Gray v. McWilliams, 98 Cal. 157, 35 Am. St. Rep. 163, 21 L. R. A. 593, 32 P. 976), and where water is thereby caused to flow upon the land of another which would not naturally flow thereon, this is an invasion and injury to his right of property and a nuisance per se, the continuance or maintenance of which he has the right to have enjoined. (Learned v. Castle, 78 Cal. 454, 18 P. 872, 21 P. 11; Wood v. Moulton, 146 Cal. 317, 80 P. [92].)"

[1-3] The water which respondent develops on its land by means of pumps is not natural water or water riparian to the land of said company. Mayberry v. Alhambra Addition Water Co., 125 Cal. 444, 54 P. 530, 58 P. 68; Butte Canal Co. v. Vaughn, 11 Cal. 143, 70 Am. Dec. 769; Paige v. Rocky Canal Co., 83 Cal. 84, 21 P. 1102, 23 P. 875. Under the rule as stated in Learned v. Castle, supra, and cases therein cited, respondent would have no right to so flow such surface irrigating waters that they would flow down to and into respondent's works. We are satisfied, therefore, that the finding of the court hereinbefore referred to not only failed to find upon the material issues involved in this action, but also that, where there is an attempt to so find, such findings are contrary to the evidence.

Finding No. IX is hereby amended to read as follows: "That the defendant, American Farms Company, in the enjoyment and occupation of the real property above described, is now farming the same, to wit, a portion thereof consisting of 434½ acres or thereabouts to rice; and it is now and during all the times mentioned in said complaint continuously has been irrigating, with water pumped from beneath the surface of the land, the land above described by means of several deep-well pumps; that said wells consist of eight wells varying in depth from 520 to 575 feet; that the water thereof is part of the percolating waters of the watershed upon which said defendant's land is situated; that the waters thereof are brought to the surface by means of pumps and used in irrigating defendant's said lands, and the portion of said water which is not consumed in such irrigation is drained upon defendant's said land into natural and ancient water-courses only, and that said waters do flow or seep down to, upon and through the property of plaintiffs."

Finding No. X is hereby amended to read as follows: "All of said land of the defendant is within the watershed of certain natural water-courses which naturally drain into Butte Slough, and all of the water drained from said land drains through said water-course into the said Butte Slough; that said water so drained from defendant's land commingles with other waters drained from other rice lands within the boundaries of appellant districts, and flow down to, into and through the canals, works and easements of said plaintiffs."

Finding No. XI is hereby amended to read as follows: "That said defendant American Farms Company intends to continue to drain said irrigation water from its rice lands into the said natural water-courses, and does threaten to drain the same into the canals, ditches and easements of the plaintiff districts, and will continue so to drain said irrigation water from its said lands unless restrained by this court, and that if permitted to continue to drain said irrigation water, as aforesaid the same will damage and injure the plaintiffs and will ripen into an easement or right against said plaintiffs."

Also, the further finding is hereby added: "That said action is not barred by the provisions of sections 1006 and 1007 of the Civil Code of the State of California, or by either of said sections, and/or by the provisions of sections 318 and 319 of the Code of Civil Procedure of this State."

It is further ordered that the conclusions of law be amended to read as follows: "From the foregoing facts the court finds and decides that defendant American Farms Company be enjoined and restrained from draining or permitting to flow, or permitting to seep from its land water pumped from wells upon the property of said defendant, into, over, across or through the canals, drainage ditches and easements of plaintiff drainage districts, or either of them. That plaintiff drainage districts recover their costs of suit."

The judgment is reversed, and the trial court is directed to enter judgment for plaintiffs in accordance with the findings as hereinbefore amended.

R. S. SMITH, Petitioner, v. SUPERIOR COURT OF ALAMEDA COUNTY and Warren V. Tryon, Judge Presiding, Respondents. (Civ. 6850.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 4, 1929.

Certiorari to Superior Court, Alameda County; Warren V. Tryon, Judge.

C. Brooks, of Oakland, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. Petition for certiorari. It appears therefrom that the petitioner, as plaintiff in an action in claim and delivery commenced in the justices' court, sought the immediate possession of certain personal property described in the complaint. After judgment in that action an appeal was taken to the superior court. The cause came on for hearing, and the sole issue presented was whether or not plaintiff was entitled to the possession of the property involved. It is petitioner's contention herein that the superior court in rendering judgment went outside the issue and found defendants to be the owners free and clear of any right, title, or interest of plaintiff, and that this finding is contrary to the evidence and not involved within the issues of the case.

It seems clear to us that the findings and judgment when read together show that the trial court was merely dealing with the question of the right of possession of the property and not with any question involving the ownership of the same.

The application is denied.

AWBREY v. DE ROSE. (Civ. 6748.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 12, 1929.

Rehearing Denied May 11, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court June 10, 1929.

1. Trial ⚷339(3)—Under statute providing that informal or insufficient verdict may be corrected under court's advice, or jury be again sent out, court must remand jury to render proper verdict (Code Civ. Proc. § 619).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 619, providing that when verdict is announced, if it is informal or insufficient, in not covering the issue submitted, it may be corrected by jury under advice of court, or jury may be again sent out, it is the duty of court to remand jury to render a verdict in proper form and in conformity with issues submitted.

2. Trial ⚷339(1)—Court held warranted in declining to receive insufficient and informal verdict and in permitting amendment by jury (Code Civ. Proc. § 619).

In action to recover secret profits made by real estate agent in sale or exchange of property, where verdict first agreed upon by jury was both insufficient and informal and had not been recorded, court was warranted in declining to receive it and in permitting jury to make amendment under Code Civ. Proc. § 619, providing that, when verdict is announced, if it is informal or insufficient, in not covering issue submitted, it may be corrected by jury under advice of court, or jury may again be sent out.

Action by Mary Awbrey against J. N. De Rose. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Owen D. Richardson, of San Jose, and Donald B. Richardson, of San Francisco, for appellant.

★Rehearing denied. Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

John W. Sullivan, of San Jose, for respondent.

TYLER, P. J. [1, 2] Action to recover secret profits made by a real estate agent in the sale or exchange of certain properties. The complaint is in three counts. The first pleads, in substance, that plaintiff was the owner of a ranch in Santa Clara county, and defendant agreed to act for her as agent in the sale or exchange of the same, and to obtain the best possible price therefor. It is then alleged that while defendant was so employed he entered into a secret arrangement with one Thomas to exchange plaintiff's property for property owned by Thomas, and in order to carry out the transaction he procured plaintiff to deed to him her ranch for a certain sum, and thereafter made the exchange from which he derived secret profits in the sum of $3,400. The second count is for money had and received, and the third for an alleged conversion of such sum. Trial was had by jury, and a verdict was rendered in favor of plaintiff in the sum of $2,000. As grounds for reversal appellant claims that the verdict was rendered in an irregular manner, and the evidence is insufficient to justify the conclusion that he was the agent of respondent in the exchange of the properties. The prayer of the complaint was for money damages, and one of the forms of verdict handed to the jury required a verdict in dollars and cents. Instead of following this form, the jury, after inserting therein an award of damages in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $400, also found in her favor for an assignment of a certain deed of trust involved in the exchange on the theory that such security had been received by appellant while acting as respondent's agent. After reaching this conclusion the jury came into court, and, in response to the court's inquiry as to whether it had reached a verdict, the foreman stated that it had. The verdict was passed to the clerk, who read it. Thereupon the court expressed the opinion that it was not in harmony with the pleadings or the form of verdict given to the jury. Defendant moved that the verdict be received and recorded. The court refused the motion and sent the jury back, with instructions to pass upon the issues as submitted to it. Thereafter the jury returned its verdict in favor of plaintiff for the amount hereinabove stated. It is appellant's contention that the first verdict rendered was complete, as it awarded to respondent damages in the sum of $400; that the balance of the verdict was surplusage and the court had no power to send the jury out again. Section 619 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that, when a verdict is announced, if it is informal or insufficient, in not covering the issue submitted, it may be corrected by the jury under the advice of the court, or the jury may be again sent out. Under this section it is the duty of the court to remand the jury to render a verdict in proper form and in conformity with the issues submitted. Garlick v. Bower, 62 Cal. 65. Here manifestly the verdict first agreed upon was both insufficient and informal, and, inasmuch as it had not been recorded, the court was warranted in declining to receive it and in permitting the jury to make the amendment. Redo y Cia v. First Nat. Bank, 200 Cal. 161, 252 P. 587. Nor is there any merit in the contention that the evidence is insufficient to justify the conclusion that appellant was the agent of respondent. The record contains abundant evidence upon the subject.

The judgment is affirmed.

Where it is understood expressly or by reasonable implication that compensation for services rendered a deceased person is to be paid at termination of rendition of services, it is a continuing one for which compensation may be recovered when services terminate, and presumption under Civ. Code, § 2011, that hiring is by the month, does not apply.

2. Limitation of actions ⟹50(2)—Evidence showing deceased's relatives from 1915 until 1924 performed services at deceased's request and that deceased assured them they would be compensated supported finding claims were not barred by statute.

Evidence showing that claimants, who were, respectively, first and second cousins of deceased, performed personal services for deceased from July, 1915, until her death in 1924 at her special request, and that deceased had from time to time assured them they would be compensated and rewarded if they would perform duties she required, and that no definite time was fixed for payment and no exact amount fixed, held to sustain finding that claims for services were not barred by statute of limitations as being for hiring from month to month.

Appeals from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Actions for services by Alice E. Robinson and by Susan E. Robinson against I. F. Chapman, as administrator of the estate of Alice J. Mills, deceased. The cases were consolidated. From the judgments against defendant, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

I. F. Chapman, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Dozier & Kimball, of San Francisco, for respondent.

TYLER, P. J. Actions to recover the reasonable value of services. The trial court rendered two judgments against defendant, appellant herein, as administrator of the estate of Alice J. Mills, deceased. The actions upon which the judgments were rendered were consolidated and tried together, and by stipulation both appeals are presented on a single record. The complaints alleged the rendition of services to the said deceased covering a period of some nine years. Judgment was in favor of Alice E. Robinson for $3,412 and in favor of Susan E. Robinson for $3,217. This is an appeal from both judgments. Appellant relies upon two contentions for reversal. He first claims that the causes of action are barred by the statute of limitations and, second, that the services sued for were gratuitously rendered and without expectation of compensation. The facts show that Alice J. Mills died December 1, 1924, leaving estate consisting of real and personal property of the value of $45,000. On March 2, 1925, appellant I. F. Chapman was appointed and qualified as administrator of the estate. On November 16, 1925, each plaintiff filed her respective claim against said estate and each was rejected by said administrator. Suit was thereupon instituted by the claimants.

[1, 2] It appeared at the trial that decedent was a first cousin of Susan E. Robinson and a second cousin of Alice E. Robinson. Each of these relatives of the deceased had, from July, 1915, until the death of Alice J. Mills on December 21, 1924, performed services for Mrs. Mills at her special request. The services were of a constant and continuous nature. Plaintiff acted as her nurse and companion, dressed and undressed her, waited on her, prepared and served her with meals, administered medicines and performed unpleasant but necessary duties. Alice J. Mills was a very large woman and she had suffered a paralytic stroke about 1916, and was in consequence more or less helpless and hard to manage by reason of her condition. A guardian had been appointed for her and during the last year of her illness such guardian had requested Mrs. Robinson and her daughter to assist in relieving the regular nurse of Mrs. Mills. There was no controversy concerning the nature and character of the services rendered by plaintiffs or of their value or duration. During the long period of the performance of the services deceased had, from time to time, assured the plaintiffs they would be compensated and rewarded if they would perform the duties she required. There was no direct evidence to show that any definite time was fixed for payment of the services, nor was there any evidence to show the exact amount that was to be paid, and appellant claims that the situation is therefore controlled by the case of Corato v. Estate of Corato, 201 Cal. 155, 255 P. 825. It is there held that in an action upon a claim against the estate of a deceased person for personal services, where the evidence does not show any agreement, either expressly or by implication, for the terms of service, time of payment, or rate or value of the services, and no custom on the subject is alleged or proved, the presumption, under section 2011 of the Civil Code, is that the hiring was by the month, and the statute of limitations forecloses a recovery for any period except during the two years immediately preceding the death of the decedent. It is further pointed out in the decision, however, where it is understood expressly or by reasonable implication that the compensation is to be paid at the termination of the rendition of the services, it is a continuing one for which compensation may be recovered when the services terminate and the presumption that the hiring is by the month does not apply, citing Mayborne v. Citizens' T. & S. Bank, 46 Cal. App. 178, 188 P. 1034. Here the court expressly found that the claims were not barred and the only reasonable inference to be drawn from the evidence sustains this finding. Deceased was possessed of a substantial fortune and no reason appears why the services rendered should have been rendered gratuitously; on the contrary, the evidence expressly shows that the deceased throughout the period of her sickness assured plaintiffs that they would be compensated. Nor is there any circumstance which in any manner dispels the reasonable presumption to be drawn from the evidence that the services were to be compensated, or paid for, when the employment terminated. The fact that no payments were made during the lifetime of the deceased, though constant assurances were expressly given by her throughout the entire period of her illness that payment would be made, is a circumstance going to support the finding. Cases of this character depend more or less upon the facts of the particular case; the inquiry in each case being whether it can be reasonably inferred that the services were or were not to be paid for at the termination of the employment. The fact that the parties are more or less remotely related is also a circumstance to be considered, for while a relation might be satisfied with such an arrangement concerning payment a stranger would not. Mayborne v. Citizens' T. & S. Bank, supra. We are of the opinion that the evidence supports the findings upon this subject.

[3, 4] Defendant presents the further argument that, the claims being outlawed on their face, he, as administrator, was justified in rejecting them and his act in so doing concludes plaintiffs. The purpose of presenting a demand to the administrator is to advise him of its nature and there is no requirement that it should state the facts with all the detail necessary in a complaint, nor is its sufficiency to be tested by the rules of pleading. It was proper for the trial court to determine, after the conclusion of the administrator, whether or not the bar of the statute prevented enforcement of the claims. Cavanaugh v. Cavanaugh (Cal. App.) 271 P. 109.

The judgments are affirmed.

FAVOT v. KINGSBURY, Surveyor General, etc. (Civ. 3671.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. April 15, 1929.

1. Mines and minerals 🔑4—Surveyor general, satisfied that land contained valuable mineral deposits, should have withheld it from sale until judicial determination of its character (St. 1897, p. 438, § 2).

Under St. 1897, p. 438, § 2, it was duty of surveyor general to withhold school land, claimed to contain valuable mineral deposits, from sale until its character had been judicially determined, where satisfied from claimant's affidavit that it contained such deposits, as shown by his statement, in reply to claimant's communication that latter's mining locations were all right.

2. Mines and minerals 🔑4—Act requiring surveyor general to withhold from sale school lands claimed to contain valuable mineral deposits held not repealed as to rights acquired thereunder (St. 1897, p. 438, § 2; St. 1915, p. 605).

St. 1897, p. 438, was not repealed as to rights acquired thereunder by St. 1915, p. 605, which merely changed method of selling school lands which surveyor general was authorized to sell, and hence does not apply to lands which it is his duty to withhold from sale under section 2 of former act until judicial determination of question whether they contain valuable mineral deposits.

3. Constitutional law 🔑93(1)—One entering school lands to explore for minerals and expending considerable sums therein, with knowledge of surveyor general and subsequent purchasers, acquired vested right to continue such occupation and exploration (St. 1897, p. 438, § 3; St. 1915, p. 605).

One entering on school lands to explore for minerals, under sanction of St. 1897, p. 438, § 3, fully complying with all requirements of such act, and expending considerable sums in developing claims and placing improvements thereon, with knowledge of surveyor general and subsequent purchasers of land under St. 1915, p. 605, acquired vested right to continue occupation and exploration as long as he complied with such requirements.

4. Constitutional law 🔑92—State cannot divest or impair vested rights, whether by statute, ordinance, or constitutional amendment.

The state has no power to divest or impair vested rights, whether by legislative enactment, municipal ordinance, or change in Constitution.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tuolumne County; J. T. B. Warne, Judge.

Suit by Hyppolite Favot against W. S. Kingsbury, as Surveyor General of the State of California and ex officio Register of the State Land Office, and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant Kingsbury appeals. Affirmed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and H. H. Linney, Deputy Atty. Gen., for appellant.

Rowan Hardin, of Sonora, for respondent.

JAMISON, Justice pro tem. This appeal is by W. S. Kingsbury alone, is brought up on the judgment roll, and the facts found by the trial court are admitted to be true.

That court found that on June 14, 1880, the plat of survey of section 16 in township 1 south, range 15 east, Tuolumne county, California, containing the premises in controversy, was accepted by the Department of the Interior, and that at that date no mining claims were shown to be in said section, and that same was not returned by the United States deputy mineral surveyor as being mineral in character, and that on said date title to said section and all mineral contained therein vested in the state of California by virtue of a school land grant contained in the Act of March 3, 1853, 10 U. S. Stat. 244–246; that on April 1, 1897, an act of the Legislature of the state of California was approved, said act being entitled "An act to repeal an act entitled 'An act regulating the sale of mineral lands belonging to the state,' approved March 28, 1874, and the acts amendatory thereof, and to provide for the sale of mineral lands under United States laws," the same being chapter 270, p. 438, Statutes of 1897. Sections 2 and 3 of said act read as follows:

"Sec. 2. When it shall be shown by affidavits or otherwise, to the satisfaction of the surveyor general, that any portion of a sixteenth or thirty-sixth section belonging to the state is valuable for its mineral deposits, the surveyor general shall not approve any application to purchase the same, nor shall the register of the state land office issue a certificate of purchase therefor, until the question of the character of the land has been referred, for determination, to a court of competent jurisdiction, in the manner provided by section thirty-four hundred and fourteen of the Political Code, and adjudged not to be valuable as mining land.

"Sec. 3. The sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections belonging to the state, in which there may be found valuable mineral deposits, are hereby declared to be free and open to exploration, occupation, and purchase of the United States, under the laws, rules, and regulations passed and prescribed by the United States for the sale of mineral lands."

In the year 1900 respondent, a citizen of the United States, located the Feliciana quartz mine, including portions of lots 1, 2, 7, and 8 in said section 16, amending same in December, 1900, same being duly recorded; that since that date respondent has continuously held, worked, and operated said mine, sinking shafts, running drifts, and performing general work thereon, and performing the annual assessment work of $100 per annum and has expended work and labor and placed improvements thereon to the amount of $10,000; that said mining claim contains a vein of gold-bearing quartz from 12 to 40 feet in width, assaying from $5 to $7 per ton; that on March 30, 1903, respondent duly located the Diablo quartz mining claim adjoining the said Feliciana mining claim, and situated in said section 16, and on this claim he has expended work and labor and placed improvements to the amount of $5,000 and has done the annual assessment work thereon. There are several veins of quartz on the claim averaging from $2.50 to $3 per ton.

In the year 1901 respondent filed in the office of appellant his affidavit showing the land embraced in the said Feliciana mining claim to be valuable for mineral deposits, and at said time filed with said affidavit a plat and survey showing the said location as it existed on the ground, which affidavit and plat was received by the surveyor general and filed in his office. On January 24, 1918, respondent communicated with appellant and at that time appellant wrote him that if the aforesaid lots in said section 16 contained valuable mineral deposits, that same were open to exploration, occupation, and purchase by the United States under the laws, rules, and regulations prescribed by the United States for the sale of mineral lands in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of said act of 1897. On the 9th day of June, 1920, while respondent was temporarily absent from the county of Tuolumne, the aforesaid lots were sold at public auction by appellant, as surveyor general of the state of California, pursuant to the provisions of chapter 389, page 605, Statutes of 1915, to defendants Holmes, Corcoran, and Knowles, and on the 10th day of June, 1920, said Knowles deeded a half interest in said lot 7 to defendant Webb. All of said defendants, at the time of the sale of said land and prior thereto knew and had known that respondent was in possession of the said mining claims, and that respondent claimed possession of same by virtue of said mining locations, and that he had for many years worked said property for the minerals contained herein; that on June 18, 1920, when respondent returned to said county of Tuolumne and learned of said sale, he filed in the office of appellant an application to contest the sale of said property; and that in June, 1920, he also filed a contest in the United States land office at Sacramento, but the Land Department of the United States dismissed same for the reason that the title to said section 16, together with the mineral therein contained, passed to the state of California upon the approval of the survey thereof in 1880 and that, therefore, the Land Department of the United States had no jurisdiction to entertain respondent's contest.

Appellant refused to refer the matter of the contest of the character of said land to the superior court of said county of Tuolumne, but, unless restrained by the court, will prepare and forward to the Governor of the state of California a patent for said land in favor of said defendants Holmes, Corcoran, and Knowles.

The judgment of the court, in substance, was that appellant, as surveyor general of the state of California and ex officio register of the state land office, be enjoined and restrained from preparing a state patent from the state of California to said defendants Holmes, Corcoran, and Knowles for any part of said lots embraced within the exterior boundaries of the said mining claims, and from sending such patent to said Governor, with recommendation and certificate to the effect that said defendants Holmes, Corcoran, and Knowles are entitled to a patent for said lands so embraced within the boundaries of said mining claims, and also that said defendants be enjoined and restrained from asserting any title in or to, or right of possession of, said lands lying within the boundaries of said mining claims.

Chapter 389, Statutes of 1915, approved May 19, 1915, provided that the surveyor general should sell at public auction all the unsold portions of the 500,000 acres granted to the state for school purposes, and the unsold portions of the listed land selected of the United States in lieu of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections, and losses to the school grant, and repealed all acts in conflict with that act. It was under the alleged authority conferred by this act that appellant sold the said sixteenth section to the said defendants Holmes, Corcoran, and Knowles.

Appellant contends that respondent, having failed to take advantage of the said act of 1915, or preceding acts, to acquire from the state title to the land embraced within the boundaries of his said mining claims, has, by the sale of said sixteenth section to defendants Holmes, Corcoran, and Knowles, lost his right to acquire such title, and that by virtue of the provisions of section 17 of chapter 303, page 404, Statutes of 1921, as amended by chapter 385, page 593, Statutes of 1923, he has become a trespasser upon said section 16.

Said section 17 provides in substance that any person who has entered upon lands coming under the provisions of this act (lands upon which there are mineral deposits), and is holding or developing such land, is guilty of a trespass, and the claims being exerted are declared null and void, and any property placed upon said land is forfeited to the state. It is conceded that, because of the fact that, when the title to said section 16 passed from the United States to the state of California in 1880, no mining claims were shown to be in said section, and that same had not been returned by the United States deputy surveyor as being mineral in character, not only did the state acquire title to said section 16, but also to all mineral therein contained. United States v. Sweet, 245 U. S. 563, 38 S. Ct. 193, 62 L. Ed. 473; Ivanhoe Min. Co. v. Keystone Consolidated Min. Co., 102 U. S. 167, 26 L. Ed. 126; Natoma Water & Min. Co. v. Bugbey, 96 U. S. 165, 24 L. Ed. 621; Saunders v. La Purisima Co., 125 Cal. 159, 57 P. 656.

[1] Section 2 of the act of 1897 prohibited the surveyor general, when it was shown by affidavit or otherwise, to his satisfaction, that any portion of said section 16 is valuable for mineral deposits, from approving any application for the purchase of same, and also prohibited the register of the state land office from issuing any certificate of purchase therefor, until the question of the character of the land had been referred for determination to a court of competent jurisdiction, and had been adjudged not to be valuable as mining land. It does not appear that any such reference was ever made, though it does appear that appellant was satisfied, from the affidavit that was filed in his office by respondent, that the lands embraced within the boundaries of respondent's mining claims contained valuable mineral deposits, for we find that respondent alleged in his complaint that during the year 1902 he communicated with appellant and asked him whether or not he had received the said affidavit and plat, and in reply to that communication appellant stated that he had received them, and that respondent's mining locations were all right, and that he would have no trouble, and this allegation was not denied by appellant. Under these conditions it was clearly the duty of appellant to withhold the land so claimed to contain valuable mineral deposits from sale until its character in that respect had been judicially determined.

[2] The trial court held, as a conclusion of law, that the act of 1897 was not repealed, as to the rights acquired thereunder, by the act approved May 19, 1915, and in this conclusion we are of the opinion that the trial court committed no error. The said act of 1915 merely changed the method by means of which the unsold portions of sections 16 and 36 could be sold, and of course would have application only to such land as the surveyor general was authorized to sell; that is to say, that if, pursuant to the provisions of section 2 of said act of 1897, it had been shown to the satisfaction of the surveyor general, by affidavits or otherwise, that any portion of sections 16 or 36 were valuable for mineral deposits, it was his duty to withhold the same from sale until the character of said land had been judicially determined, and same had not been adjudged valuable as mining land.

[3, 4] In 1921 an act of the Legislature was passed and approved (Stats. 1921, p. 1305), repealing the said act of the Legislature of 1897, but providing: "Such repeal shall be without prejudice to any rights or remedies of any person acquired under said act prior to February 15, 1921, or to any defenses then existing in behalf of the state or any officer thereof for any act performed in his official capacity, but all such rights, remedies and defenses are hereby expressly reserved to all such persons and to the state and its officers, respectively." It is manifest that by the act of 1897 the Legislature intended to permit the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections to be exploited, occupied and purchased where valuable mineral deposits were located upon them, in the same manner that the United States permitted same to be done. It is also manifest that the Legislature in passing the said act of 1897 labored under the erroneous belief that this purchase would have to be from the United States. However that may be, it was the intent of the Legislature, as shown by this act of 1897, to encourage the development of minerals upon the said sections.

Under the sanction of this act respondent entered upon that portion of said sixteenth section covered by his mining claims, has fully complied with all the requirements of the act, and in so doing has expended considerable sums of money in the development of said claims and in placing improvements thereon, and all this has been done with the knowledge of this appellant and the other defendants. In the case of Mery v. Brodt, 121 Cal. 332, 53 P. 818, the Supreme Court, speaking of the nature and character of the holding of the locator of a mining claim, said: "The locator of a mining claim under the laws of the United States has the right to the exclusive possession and enjoyment of that claim; he has an estate of inheritance; he has a title which can only pass by deed. The land is withdrawn from the public domain. There is an outstanding grant from the United States, and the government has no right to pass any title to a third party." It is clear that it was the intention of the Legislature, by the said act of 1897, to invest the locator of a mineral claim in the sixteenth or thirty-sixth sections with the same rights therein that were given the locator upon government land. Such being the case, respondent acquired a vested right to continue in the occupation and exploration of his said mining claims as long as he continued to comply with the requirements of said act of 1897. The state has no power to divest or to impair vested rights whether such attempt be made by legislative enactment, by municipal ordinance, or by change in the Constitution of the state. 12 C. J. p. 956; Estate of Wellings, 197 Cal. 189, 240 P. 21; Richmond Wharf & Dock Co. v. Blake, 39 Cal. App. 1, 177 P. 508; James v. Oakland Traction Co., 10 Cal. App. 785, 103 P. 1082; 6 English and American Ency. p. 955.

Regarding the questions as to whether or not respondent can acquire title to his said mining claims, and, if so, what procedure should be followed in so doing, we are not called upon to determine on this appeal.

We are of the opinion that the findings are sustained by the admitted facts of this case, and that the judgment should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

WHEELER v. BOARD OF MEDICAL EXAMINERS OF CALIFORNIA et al.
(Civ. 6797.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. April 13, 1929.

1. Appeal and error 🔑343—Trial 🔑388(1)—Findings were unnecessary, where judgment was decided on question of law, and failure to file them did not postpone running of period for appeal.

Where judgment was decided upon question of law, findings were not required, and failure to file them did not postpone running of 60-day period for appeal from judgment.

2. Appeal and error 🔑348(1)—Service of notice of entry of judgment held not essential to set time running for appeal (Code Civ. Proc. § 939).

Service of notice of entry of judgment held not essential to set time running within which appeal from judgment could be taken under Code Civ. Proc. § 939.

Proceeding by Clayton E. Wheeler against the Board of Medical Examiners of the State of California and others. From the judgment, defendants appeal. On motion to dismiss appeal. Dismissed.

Bradford M. Melvin and Melvin & Sullivan, all of San Francisco, and Otto Emme, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Livingston & Livingston, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. [1, 2] Motion to dismiss appeal. It appears from the record that the judgment appealed from was entered November 27, 1928. The time for taking an appeal expired 60 days thereafter or on January 26, 1929. The notice of appeal was filed February 14, 1929. No notice of intention to move for a new trial or notice of motion for a new trial has ever been made or filed. Appellants claim that, as no findings of fact or conclusions of law have ever been filed, judgment has never been rendered, and the 60-day period has not therefore commenced to run. No findings were necessary. The judgment sought to be appealed from was decided upon a question of law. Nor was notice of the entry of judgment necessary. Section 939 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not require the service of notice of entry of judgment in order to set the time running within which an appeal from may be taken. Schainman v. Kierce, 199 Cal. 249, 248 P. 905.

It follows that the appeal must be dismissed, and it is so ordered.

WOOD, State Superintendent of Banks, v. HAMAGUCHI et al. (Sac. 4228.)★

Supreme Court of California. April 18, 1929.

Rehearing Denied May 16, 1929.

1. Banks and banking 🔑44—Statute permitting superintendent of banks to assess bank stockholders without limit, for purpose of paying claims of creditors of bank in liquidation, held void (St. 1917, p. 581, as amended by St. 1925, p. 905; Const. art. 12, §§ 2, 3, 24; Civ. Code, §§ 322, 349).

St. 1917, p. 581, as amended by St. 1925, p. 905, permitting state superintendent of banks to make such assessments against stockholders as he may determine necessary for liquidating banks' affairs, without limit on amount of assessments to any one stockholder, and permitting levying of further assessment or assessments, if sums first collected are inadequate, held void as violative of Const. art. 12, § 3; Civ. Code, § 322, making stockholder of corporation individually liable for such proportion of corporation's debts, contracted while he was stockholder, as amount of his stock bears to entire subscribed capital stock of corporation, notwithstanding Const. art. 12, §§ 2, 24, permitting dues from corporation to be secured by individual liability of corporators and other means prescribed by law, and Civ. Code, § 349, authorizing directors of corporation to proceed by action to recover amount of assessments against stockholders.

2. Constitutional law 🔑34—Constitutional provision fixing stockholders' liability is self-executing, and effect thereof may not be limited by Legislature (Const. art. 12, § 3).

Const. art. 12, § 3, fixing liability of each stockholder of corporation for such proportion of corporation's debts, contracted during time he was stockholder, as amount of his stock bears to entire subscribed capital stock, is self-executing and any attempt by Legislature to limit its effect is unconstitutional and void.

3. Corporations 🔑217—Legislature may not create personal liability of stockholder for corporate debts in excess of liability created by Constitution (Const. art. 12, §§ 2, 3, 24; Civ. Code, §§ 322, 349).

Legislature may not create personal liability of stockholder for corporate debts in excess of liability provided by Const. art. 12, § 3, notwithstanding sections 2, 24, providing for securing dues from corporation by individual liability of corporators and Civ. Code, §§ 322, 349.

4. Banks and banking ⚷44—Statute providing for assessments against stockholders on liquidation of banks held not justified as exercise of police power because violative of constitution (St. 1917, p. 581, as amended by St. 1925, p. 905; Const. art. 12, § 3).

St. 1917, p. 581, as amended by St. 1925, p. 905, permitting superintendent of banks to make such assessments against stockholders as he may determine necessary for purpose of liquidating banks' affairs and paying creditors, held not authorized as exercise of police power on account of violation of Const. art. 12, § 3, fixing liability of stockholders of corporation.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; E. N. Rector, Judge.

Action by Will C. Wood, as Superintendent of Banks and trustee in charge of the liquidation of the First Bank of Livingston, against H. Hamaguchi, and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Albert A. Rosenshine and Elbert W. Davis, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Theodore M. Stuart, of Fresno, and F. M. Ostrander, of Merced, for respondents.

LANGDON, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of defendants in an action brought by appellant, as superintendent of banks of the state of California, to recover the amount of an assessment levied upon the stockholders of the First Bank of Livingston, a banking corporation in liquidation. The assessment was levied, and the action thereon was brought under and by virtue of chapter 496 of the Statutes of 1917, p. 581, as amended by chapter 420 of the Statutes of 1925, p. 905, the material portions of which read as follows:

"Section 1. Whenever the superintendent of banks shall hereafter take possession of the business and property of any bank doing business in this state for the purpose of liquidating its affairs, as provided by law, he may at any time during the process of such liquidation determine whether it shall be necessary to assess the members or stockholders of such bank in order to promptly pay the claims of the creditors of such bank in full and he shall make such assessments as he may determine to be necessary for that purpose.

"Section 2. Any such assessment shall be levied by order of the superintendent of banks, under his official seal, which order shall be executed in duplicate, one to be filed in the office of the superintendent of banks and one with the papers in the liquidation proceedings in the county in which said bank shall have been located.

"Said order shall specify the amount of the assessment, and shall fix a date on which the said assessment shall be due and payable, which said date shall not be less than thirty nor more than sixty days from the time of making the order levying the assessment. The said assessment shall be payable to the superintendent of banks at his office, or at such other place as may be specified in the order levying the assessment.

"Notice of such assessment shall be given by causing a copy of said order to be published once a week for four successive weeks in one or more newspapers of general circulation devoted to the publication of general news, published at the place where the principal place of business of the bank was located, or if there be no newspaper at such place, then the publication shall be made in some other newspaper of the county, if there be one, otherwise in a newspaper published in an adjoining county. Notice of such assessment shall also be given by causing a copy of said order to be personally served upon each stockholder, or, in lieu of personal service, sent through the mail, postage prepaid, addressed to such stockholder at his place of residence or business, if known, and if not known, at the place where the principal office of the bank was situated. Said copies of said order shall be so personally served or placed in the mail within fifteen days after the making of the order levying the assessment. * * *

"Section 3. If any stockholder of said bank shall fail to pay the said assessment in full upon the date specified in the said order as the date on which said assessment shall be due and payable, a right of action shall immediately accrue to the superintendent of banks to recover the amount of said assessment or the amount remaining unpaid thereon from the stockholder or stockholders failing to pay the same in full. * * *

"Section 5. All sums collected from any such assessment, less the reasonable expenses of collection, shall be used by the superintendent of banks in the liquidation of claims against the bank in the same manner as assets of the bank are so used. If such assessment, first made, shall prove inadequate to pay all of the creditors of the bank in full, the superintendent of banks may levy further assessment or assessments and proceed to collect same in like manner."

The complaint alleges the matters and things necessary to show compliance with the provisions of the statute above set forth, including the due levying of an assessment of $100 a share upon the capital stock and the refusal of the defendants to pay. Defendants demurred to the complaint, contending that the statute under which the assessment was levied violated the Constitutions of the state of California and of the United States. The demurrers were sustained, and, upon failure of the plaintiffs to amend, a judgment was entered dismissing the action as to each of the defendants.

The appeal is on the judgment roll alone, and the only question raised is as to the constitutionality of the assessment statute. It is the position of the trial court and of respondents here that the statute we are considering violates section 3 of article 12 of the state Constitution, as that section prescribes an exclusive liability of stockholders for corporate debts. The said constitutional provision reads as follows: "Each stockholder of a corporation, or joint-stock association, shall be individually and personally liable for such proportion of all its debts and liabilities contracted or incurred, during the time he was a stockholder, as the amount of stock or shares owned by him bears to the whole of the subscribed capital stock, or shares of the corporation."

It is the contention of appellant that the foregoing constitutional provision merely provides the minimum liability of a stockholder, and that the Legislature may prescribe an additional liability. This position, appellant contends, is aided by sections 2 and 24 of article 12 of the Constitution of California. Section 2 provides: "Dues from corporations shall be secured by such individual liability of the corporators and other means as may be prescribed by law." Section 24 provides that the Legislature shall pass all laws necessary for the enforcement of the provisions of the article.

[1, 2] It is to be observed that the statute under attack here comes into operation only when the superintendent of banks has taken possession of the business and property of a bank for the purpose of liquidation, while the constitutional provision (section 3, art. 12) draws no distinction between the individual liability of a stockholder in a solvent corporation and one in an insolvent corporation. Furthermore, the constitutional provision covers liability for debts and liabilities of the corporation, while the so-called Bank Act provides for an individual liability to meet all the charges of collection as well as the payment of the debts of the corporation. Furthermore, the constitutional provision restricts the liability of a stockholder to such proportion only of its debts, contracted while he was a stockholder, as the amount of stock or shares owned by him bears to the whole of the capital stock; while the so-called Bank Act permits recovery of assessments against a stockholder who had purchased his stock after all the debts of the corporation had been contracted. It also puts no limit upon the amount that one stockholder shall be compelled to pay except the limit of sufficient money to pay all expenses of liquidation and all debts. The superintendent of banks is given power to levy one assessment after another in the event that the first assessment does not result in the collection of the money required, and, as a consequence, there is an extreme possibility under the act, pointed out by respondents, that a single solvent stockholder, with one share of stock, which had been purchased after all the debts and liabilities of the bank had been contracted, may be compelled to pay the entire debts of the bank and the expenses of liquidation.

For many reasons, therefore, the statute we are considering is in violation of section 3 of article 12 of our Constitution; and, indeed, it is admitted to be so by appellant, who contends that it is permissible under sections 2 and 24 of said article 12 and under the general police power reserved to the people.

In the case of French v. Teschemaker, 24 Cal. 518, provisions almost identical with those of sections 2 and 3 of article 12 were considered by the court. Said section 2 appeared in our Constitution of 1849 as section 32 of article 4 and in identically the same language. Section 3 of article 12 appeared in our Constitution of 1849 as section 36 of article 4, but it did not contain the limitation that the liability existed only as to debts contracted or incurred while the person was a stockholder, nor did it declare the percentage of the stockholders' liability. Said section 36 of article 4 of the Constitution of 1849 read as follows: "Each stockholder of a corporation or joint stock association shall be individually and personally liable for his proportion of all its debts and liabilities." In the case of French v. Teschemaker, supra, the court remarked that there was an apparent repugnancy between the two provisions, but declared that if section 36 was read as imposing "a liability separate and distinct from that imposed by the thirty-second section, it is clear that the latter has no office to perform, and is, in effect, stricken from the constitution." It was also held that section 36 was not self-executing and required legislative action. The Legislature, at the time of the decision of the French Case, had enacted two measures, one in 1850 and one in 1853; one providing that "each stockholder of any corporation shall be individually and personally liable for a portion of all its debts and liabilities, proportioned to the amount of stock owned by him" (St. 1850, p. 350, § 32); and the other providing that "each stockholder shall be individually and personally liable for his proportion of all the debts and liabilities of the company contracted or incurred during the time that he was a stockholder." (St. 1853, p. 90, § 16.) Considering this situation, the opinion in the French Case states:

"It is true that the legislature, in supplying what was needed and omitted from the Act of 1850, left out the provision of that Act which defines the word 'proportion'; yet, although neither by itself affords a perfect rule, the two combined contain what is omitted in the thirty-sixth section of the Constitution and is needed to give it a practical operation.

"If we read the thirty-sixth section in the manner suggested it is made to harmonize with the thirty-second, and each is made to serve a useful purpose, and neither is allowed to sacrifice the other.

"Such seems to us to be the reasonable and proper construction to be given to the thirty-sixth and thirty-second sections of the Constitution. By such reading harmony is preserved and some force and effect is given to each. Any other reading must manifestly sacrifice one section to the ambition of the other, and practically strike it from the Constitution.

"Under this construction, the Legislature has the power to say, not that the stockholder shall not be liable for any of the debts of the corporation but that he shall be liable for his portion, and to say what that portion shall be. Thus the Constitution is made to say to the legislative department of the government, the stockholder shall be individually and personally liable for his proportion of the debts and liabilities of the corporation, but to your wisdom and sound discretion is intrusted the power to adjust the mode and measure of the liability. It is the duty of the legislature to carry out this provision according to its spirit, and to fix the liability of the stockholder at a figure adequate to guard effectually against the evils for which the Constitution seeks, through the co-operation of the legislature, to provide a remedy.

"But the exercise of this power is subject to the rule that 'all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform operation,' as provided in section eleven of article I of the Constitution, and the same rule of liability must be imposed upon all stockholders of corporations and joint stock associations. The Constitution knows no distinction between persons, and the legislature cannot discriminate, or grant an indulgence to one which is not accorded to another. Every general law must have a uniform operation; that is to say, it must operate equally on all persons and upon all things upon which it acts at all.

"Where, under the Constitution, a law must impose some indeterminate liability upon a class of persons, as, for example, stockholders of a corporation, it must impose the liability, at whatever rate it may be fixed, upon all alike, and cannot exempt one any more than it can exempt all; nor can it attach a lower rate of liability to one than it does to another; nor can it attach a greater or less liability to the stockholders of one corporation than it does to the stockholders of another."

The statutory limitation upon the stockholders' individual liability when the French Case was decided has now been incorporated into the Constitution itself, namely, that the stockholders' liability extends only to those debts contracted or incurred during the time he was a stockholder, and he cannot be held liable for any greater amount than the proportion which his stock ownership bears to the total amount of the subscribed capital stock, under section 3 of article 12.

It has been decided (Western Pacific Ry. Co. v. Godfrey, 166 Cal. 346, 136 P. 284, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 825) that section 3 of article 12 of our Constitution is self-executing, and any attempt by the Legislature to limit its effect is unconstitutional and void.

It appears from some of the decisions cited by appellant that a number of the states declare affirmatively in their Constitutions that stockholders in banking corporations carry a liability different from and greater than the stockholders in other corporations. The California Constitution draws no such distinction, but treats the stockholders of all corporations alike in this respect. In the case of McGowan v. McDonald, 111 Cal. 67, 43 P. 418, 52 Am. St. Rep. 149, the court said: "But the provisions of the Constitution of 1849 applied to the stockholders of all corporations, without regard to the character of the business to be transacted, and the same is true of the Constitution of 1879." Therefore, the decisions from other jurisdictions, based upon constitutional provisions different from our own, are not helpful here.

The complaint in this case discloses that the plaintiff is not seeking to collect from the defendants any unpaid installments upon the purchase price of their stock, and it makes no attempt to plead a cause of action under section 3 of article 12 or under section 322 of our Civil Code, which embodies in statutory form the provisions of said section 3.

It is contended by appellant that the Legislature has created, by section 349, Civil Code, a personal liability against stockholders of different corporations which is in excess of and in addition to the liability created by section 3 of article 12, and that these various liabilities have been enforced by the courts, and that they must be justified either under the general police power of the state or under the directions of sections 2 and 24 of article 12 of the Constitution. The cases cited relate, first, to liability for unpaid subscriptions, which is a liability dependent upon contract and enforceable without a specific code section; second, to assessments upon paid-up stock, enforceable by sale of the stock. The cases in these two groups do not deal with the personal liability of a stockholder, and hence are not in conflict with section 3 of article 12. But one case is cited which deals directly with the personal liability of a stockholder attempted to be created by section 349 of our Civil Code, and that is the case of Bottle Mining & Milling Co. v. Kern, 9 Cal. App. 527, 99 P. 994. That case contains the following language: "If the decisions, statutes and provisions of the constitution relating to the personal liability of a stockholder to the creditors of the corporation, and the principles upon which they are based, could be considered here, and the matter were an open question, we should have grave doubts of the right of the directors to collect by personal action any assessment levied to pay a debt of the corporation which was not alleged to have been created during the time the person sued was a holder of stock in such corporation. But the right of the corporation to proceed and sell stock in cases of delinquency has so often been held to be an entirely separate and distinct right from the personal liability of a stockholder to the creditors of the corporation because of his ownership of stock in the company, that we do not regard the question open for consideration here. (People's Home Savings Bank v. Stadtmuller, 150 Cal. 110 [88 P. 280].)" The case cited deals with an unpaid stock subscription, and no authority is cited which supports the statement that the question of the personal liability of a stockholder for an assessment levied to pay a debt of the corporation, which is not alleged to have been created during the time the person sued was a holder of the stock in such corporation, is no longer an open question. If the foregoing language from Bottle Mining & Milling Co. v. Kern be considered a determination of the validity of such personal liability of the stockholder under the provisions of section 349, Civil Code, or under any other legislative enactment, we decline to follow it, but prefer the reasoning in the case of In re South Mountain, etc., Mining Co., Bankrupt (D. C.) 5 F. 403, wherein the court, in speaking of section 349 of our Civil Code, said:

"The statute does not, in terms, declare or create the liability. It merely authorizes the directors 'to elect to proceed by action to recover the amount of the assessments.' Its language would be satisfied by restricting its operation to those cases where such an action can be maintained; that is, to those cases where stock has been subscribed for, and an obligation assumed to take and pay for it." The opinion continues: "Section 349 confers, as we have seen, the right to proceed by action to recover any delinquent assessment; and if this power be not restricted, as I have suggested, to cases wherein the stockholder has, by express or implied contract, agreed to pay, it will extend to all cases of assessments levied to meet expenses or conduct business, as well as to pay debts, and may be exercised against a stockholder who has paid his subscription in full, or who has already been assessed up to the par value of his stock. This result, startling and absurd as it is, seems to be the necessary consequence of the construction of section 349 contended for.

"It will not be disputed that the ordinary rule which requires such a construction to be given to the provisions of a statute as will make them consistent and harmonious should be applied to the provisions of our code with regard to corporations.

"By section 322, as amended March 15, 1876, the individual liability of a stockholder of a corporation is limited to such proportion of its debts and liabilities as the amount of stock or shares owned by him bears to the whole stock of the corporation; and, on payment of his proportion of any debts due from the corporation, incurred while he was a stockholder, he is relieved from any further personal liability for such debt.

"I am unable to reconcile these provisions with a construction of section 349 which would give it the effect and operation contended for. * * *

"The section just referred to limits his personal liability for the corporate debts incurred while he is a stockholder to such proportion of those debts as the number of shares owned by him bears to the whole number of shares of the capital stock. But, if he is personally liable on the assessment to be levied, he may be obliged, if he is the only solvent stockholder, to pay the whole amount of the indebtedness of the corporation, provided it does not exceed the fanciful and exaggerated par value mentioned in the articles. * * *

"Will it be contended that a stockholder who has paid his full proportion of the debts incurred, while he was a stockholder would still remain personally liable to pay any assessment that may be levied, and that such a payment, which the statute declares shall relieve him from any further personal liability for such debts, and shall be a good defense in an action brought by a creditor, shall be unavailable in an action brought by an assignee in bankruptcy in behalf of creditors to collect an assignment levied for the payment of debts?"

And, finally, the decision of the court is: "That section 349 does not create, and was not intended to create, any personal liability for assessments, unless from the terms of the stockholders' subscription such liability was incurred. That the remedy of the creditor against the stockholder personally is limited and defined by section 322 of the code, and his liability cannot be extended beyond the limits therein prescribed."

[3] It appears, therefore, that the liability asserted against the defendants here is in violation of section 3 of article 12, and that section 2 of the same article of the Constitution does not authorize, expressly or by implication, a legislative violation of the following section; that sections 322 to 349, inclusive, of the Civil Code are not to be construed as creating a personal liability of a stockholder for corporate debts which would be in excess of or in violation of the provisions of section 3 of article 12 of the Constitution.

[4] It but remains to consider the remaining contention of appellant that authority is found for the liability imposed by the so-called Bank Act, in the general police powers of the state. This contention requires little discussion. The case of Frost v. City of Los Angeles, 181 Cal. 22, 183 P. 342, 6 A. L. R. 468, cited by appellant in support of his contention, contains language to the effect that, while the legislature possesses the entire police power of the state, such power is limited by the provisions of the Constitution of California and the Constitution of the United States. Volume 12 of Corpus Juris, p. 929, states this limitation as follows: "However broad the scope of the police power it is always subject to the rule that the legislature may not exercise any power that is expressly or impliedly forbidden to it by the state constitution." The following cases are to the same effect: Ex parte Whitwell, 98 Cal. 73, 32 P. 870, 19 L. R. A. 727, 35 Am. St. Rep. 152; In re Smith, 143 Cal. 368, 77 P. 180; San Diego, etc., Ass'n v. City of East San Diego, 186 Cal. 254, 200 P. 393, 17 A. L. R. 513. And in People v. Holder, 53 Cal. App. 45, 199 P. 832, the court said: "It is well settled that the police power cannot be made a cloak under which to overthrow or disregard constitutional rights."

Having come to a conclusion, in harmony with the trial court, that our state Constitution limits the liability of a stockholder for corporate debts in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of article 12, we cannot hold that the police power is unrestrained by such constitutional provision.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

In re WIRT'S ESTATE.

HIRAM LODGE NO. 18, FREE AND ACCEPTED MASONS, OF DELAWARE, OHIO, et al. v. COX et al. (L. A. 9733.)

Supreme Court of California. April 23, 1929.

1. Evidence 🔑22(1)—California court will not take judicial knowledge that Masonic lodges outside state are "charitable" institutions; "eleemosynary" (Const. art. 20, § 9).

California court will not take judicial notice that Masonic lodges outside state are charitable institutions, within meaning of Const. art. 20, § 9, providing that no perpetuities shall be allowed except for eleemosynary purposes; term "eleemosynary" being synonymous with "charitable."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Eleemosynary; Second and Third Series, Charitable.]

2. Appeal and error 🔑891—Reviewing court will not hear original evidence as to eleemosynary character of lodge, where purpose was to secure reversal, but will remand case (Const. art. 20, § 9; Code Civ. Proc. § 956a, as added by St. 1927, p. 583).

Where Masonic lodge contended that bequest to it was absolute and did not create trust in perpetuity within Const. art. 20, § 9, but requested that if court made finding against its contention it be permitted to offer further proof on question whether it was eleemosynary in character, and court ignored such request, reviewing court will not hear such proof on appeal under Code Civ. Proc. § 956a, as added by St. 1927, p. 583, but will remand case, since such statute is inapplicable where production of original evidence is for purpose of securing reversal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank R. Willis, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Gary Wirt, deceased. Contest by Charles H. Cox and others, opposed by Hiram Lodge No. 18, Free and Accepted Masons of Delaware, Ohio, and another. From a judgment directing distribution, Hiram Lodge No. 18, Free and Accepted Masons of Delaware, Ohio, and another appeal. Reversed and remanded, with instructions.

Superseding former opinion in 263 P. 271.

Harry K. Sargent, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Ford, Johnson & Bourquin, of San Francisco, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. This appeal is from an order of decree of distribution of the estate of Gary Wirt, deceased, who died on or about November 6, 1924, at Long Beach, Cal., leaving a last will and testament, wherein, after providing for the payment of his just debts and liabilities, he devised the residue of his estate to a trustee, who is directed to hold, control, invest and reinvest the same, applying the income and such portion of the principal thereof as might be necessary for the support and maintenance of his brother, Sam V. Wirt, during the term of his natural life, and further providing that upon the death of his said brother all the residue of his estate should be equally divided between Hiram Lodge No. 18, F. & A. M. of Delaware, Ohio, and Jackson Lodge No. 146, F. & A. M. of Seymour, Ind., share and share alike, which lodges were each to place its share of the residue of his estate in a special fund, "to be known as the Gary Wirt fund, and only the income of said fund shall be used for current expenses" of each of said lodges. Said will was duly admitted to probate and the administration thereof proceeded up to the time for final distribution thereof, whereupon each of said Masonic lodges presented and filed a petition for distribution to them of the residue of said estate in accordance with the terms of the will. The heirs at law of said decedent appeared and filed their contest and objection to such distribution, alleging as the sole ground of such contest "that the bequest in the will of said deceased was and is void under the provisions of article XX, § 9 of the Constitution of the state of California"; wherefore they prayed for the distribution of the entire residue of the estate. The matter of this contest came on for hearing before the trial court, and upon such hearing it was decided by the court "that the bequest in said will to Hiram Lodge No. 18, F. & A. M. of Delaware, Ohio, and Jackson Lodge No. 146, F. & A. M. of Seymour, Ind., was and is void under the provisions of article XX, § 9, of the Constitution of the state of California." Thereupon the court made its order and decree for the distribution of the residue of said estate to the heirs at law of said deceased. The Masonic lodges in question have taken and are now prosecuting their appeal from said order of the court.

Section 9 of article 20 of the state Constitution provides that: "No perpetuities shall be allowed except for eleemosynary purposes." The term "eleemosynary" as used in the foregoing provision has been held to be synonymous with "charitable" as the latter word is used and understood in treatises and decisions upon the subject of trusts. Estate of Sutro, 155 Cal. 727, 102 P. 920. It is not confined to almsgiving or charity shown exclusively to the poor, but includes all charitable purposes, such as schools, asylums, hospitals, and religious institutions. People ex rel. Ellert v. Cogswell, 113 Cal. 129, 45 P. 270, 35 L. R. A. 269.

Upon the hearing of this matter in the trial court the appellants insisted upon an interpretation of the will of the testator to the effect that it was his intention as expressed therein that the bequest to these Masonic lodges was to be absolute and that no trust in perpetuity was intended to be created thereby. It was at the outset apparently conceded by them that if a trust in perpetuity was intended to be thus created, the devotion of the income of the subject-matter of said trust to the payment of the "current expenses" of these lodges was not a charitable or eleemosynary purpose. This concession, however, was subsequently and during the hearing of the matter in this court expressly withdrawn. From the record herein and from the briefs and argument of counsel upon this appeal, it appears that at the conclusion of the hearing in the trial court the question as to the proper interpretation of said will and as to whether or not a perpetuity such as would be void under the foregoing provision in the state Constitution was submitted for decision to the trial court upon briefs of counsel thereafter to be filed, and that in the briefs of counsel for the appellants the trial court was requested, in the event it should make its finding against the contention of these residuary legatees thus far made, it would permit them to offer further proof upon the question as to whether, in fact, these two Masonic lodges, as to their main purposes, were eleemosynary in character, and as to whether the matter of the application of the income to be derived from the residue of said estate to "current expenses" was incidental to the main object of these organizations, and hence was in the nature of a charitable bequest. The trial court, in deciding that these two bequests were void under the foregoing provision of the state Constitution, ignored the foregoing request. Upon the final presentation of this matter upon appeal to this court, counsel for the appellants presented an application purporting to be made under the provisions of section 956a of the Code of Civil Procedure (as added by St. 1927, p. 583) for leave to produce evidence before this court that said Masonic lodges were, in fact, charitable or eleemosynary institutions within the intent and meaning of the exception contained in the foregoing section of the state Constitution. Said application was supported by certain affidavits, and the question of the propriety of granting the same, or what order it would be appropriate to make in the premises, was presented to the court upon final argument upon the merits of this appeal. In the course of the argument the following colloquy occurred:

"Mr. Justice Richards: What do you say as to the appellants' position to the effect that when this matter was submitted on briefs in the trial court, he made the request in his brief, if the court should determine that the question as to whether these legacies were eleemosynary was a question of fact, that he be permitted to introduce evidence upon that subject, which request, apparently, the court ignored. Counsel comes here and renews that request?

"Mr. Ford (of counsel for respondents): Answering you honestly, if I were one of the members of the court I would be inclined to grant counsel's request.

"Mr. Justice Richards: You have no objection to this court referring it back to the trial court to take further testimonny on that subject?

"Mr. Ford: No; I have not."

[1] The primary question presented upon this appeal and argued elaborately by respective counsel was the question as to whether or not both the trial court and this court were bound and entitled to take judicial notice of the fact that the Masonic Order, as a most ancient and practically world-wide organization or group of organizations, was, as to the main and essential objects of its existence, a charitable institution, and was also bound and entitled to take judicial notice of the fact that the two particular lodges of Masonry named in the will of said testator, and located one in Ohio and the other in Indiana, were also, as a matter of judicial knowledge, to be held to be so essentially charitable as to the main objects and purposes of their organization as to bring them fairly within the terms of the exception to be found in the foregoing clause of the state Constitution as to entitle them to be the recipients of the benefits in perpetuity provided for in the will of said testator. An investigation of the foregoing two phases of this inquiry has satisfied us that there is considerable conflict in the authorities to which we have been cited from other jurisdictions bearing upon both phases of said inquiry. We do not deem it necessary to pass upon the first of these phases thereof, for the reason that whatever conclusion we might arrive at respecting the essentially eleemosynary character of the institutions of Masonry as exemplified by the numerous lodges thereof which exist within the state of California, and are therefore within the range of the immediate jurisdiction of this court, and hence possibly the proper subject for the application of the principle of judicial notice, we would not be entitled to extend the domain of such judicial knowledge or notice to institutions or organizations which, though more or less intimately connected with the Order of Masonry in general, are still in some degree independent in character and have their locus and sphere of operation in places beyond and distant from the immediate area to which the jurisdiction of this court extends. The question of what matters may be the proper subject of judicial notice or knowledge on the part of both original and appellate tribunals was made the subject of exhaustive consideration by this court in the case of Varcoe v. Lee, 180 Cal. 338, 181 P. 223, wherein the rule upon this subject, set forth in 15 R. C. L. 1057, was quoted with approval, wherein it was set forth in substance that, "While the power of judicial notice is to be exercised with caution, courts should take notice of whatever is or ought to be generally known, within the limits of their jurisdiction," and, further, that "a matter to be within judicial cognizance must be known 'within the limits of the jurisdiction of the court.'" Applying this principle to the facts as presented upon this appeal, we have become satisfied that the question as to whether or not certain lodges which are independent as to the detail of their local organization, but which in a general way belong to one branch of a widespread order of Masonry, are or are not charitable as to the main objects and purposes of their organization and conduct, but which exist at places remote from the area over which this court exercises jurisdiction, is a question as to which this court cannot, as matter of law, assume to take judicial notice, but which are essentially matters of fact to be made the subject of judicial inquiry and of the proffer of appropriate proofs before the trial court.

[2] This conclusion brings us to the inquiry as to what disposition should be made of the application of the appellants for permission to present such proof in this court and upon the hearing of this appeal. We have heretofore held that section 956a of the Code of Civil Procedure is not intended to have application to cases wherein the production of original evidence was sought to be permitted in this court and the purpose of the production of such evidence would be to lead us to a reversal of the cause upon appeal. Where, however, it sufficiently appears that the production of such evidence was from any cause prevented when the matter in question was still pending before the trial court for its proper determination, and where it further appears, as it does in this case from the colloquy quoted at an earlier stage in this opinion, that the respondents not only concede the propriety of permitting the introduction of such evidence before the proper tribunal, but also expressly waive all objection to the return of said cause to the trial court to the end that such evidence as the appellants seek to produce in this court may be there, if available, presented before the trial court, it would appear to be clear that in the interest of justice the judgment herein should be reversed, without cost to either party to this appeal, and that the cause should be remanded to the trial court, with instructions to reopen the same and to take such further proceedings therein as are in conformity with the views expressed in this opinion. It is therefore so ordered.

PEOPLE v. WICKERSHAM. (Cr. 1751.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. April 25, 1929.

Rehearing Denied May 9, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court May 23, 1929.

1. Larceny 🔑28(1)—Indictment for grand theft, charging that defendant stole, took, and carried away certain personal property, charged public offense, in absence of demurrer.

Indictment for grand theft, charging that defendant unlawfully and feloniously stole, took, and carried away a certain number of shares of corporate stock, a deed of trust, and a certain amount of money, the property of another, charged defendant with public offense, in absence of demurrer.

2. Larceny 🔑14(1)—Evidence that defendant obtained property by false representations, and converted property to own use, authorized finding of grand larceny (Pen. Code, § 484, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1046).

Evidence that defendant unlawfully obtained possession of personal property by representations that he was interested in mine, which he had incorporated and in which he would profitably invest for owners of securities and money obtained, but that defendant had neither mine nor corporation, and had surreptitiously secured property for his own benefit and converted it to personal uses, was sufficient to justify finding that defendant committed grand larceny, under Pen. Code, § 484, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1046, providing that person feloniously stealing, taking, carrying, or driving away personal property of another, or who shall fraudulently appropriate property intrusted to him, or fraudulently obtain possession of property of another, shall be guilty of theft.

3. Larceny 🔑55—Evidence of unsupported exaggerated inducements to gain another's property, and admissions that property was not so used, authorized finding that defendant fraudulently procured property (Pen. Code, § 484, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1046).

Evidence of exaggerated inducements utilized by defendant to gain possession of money and securities of others, coupled with absolute lack of foundation for expectation of their fulfillment and defendant's admission that he did not use funds or property in manner promised, warranted conclusion that there was preconceived and consummated a violation of Pen. Code, § 484, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1046, denouncing theft, and justified finding that defendant knowingly and designedly, by false and fraudulent representations, secured property and appropriated same for own use.

4. Larceny 🔑14(1)—Where property was obtained by fraud, no legal title passed.

Where defendant obtained possession of property by fraud, owners parted with property against their will and without their consent, and hence title did not pass, fraud taking place of force.

5. Larceny 🔑40(4)—Where indictment charging defendant with taking, stealing, and carrying away certain property was sufficient, defendant could not object to proof of other species of theft to sustain charge.

Where indictment charging that defendant did "take, steal, and carry away" certain property was sufficient, defendant had all information contemplated by law as to nature of charge, under Pen. Code, § 484, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1046, and could not object to proof of any species of theft named in section 484 as insufficient to sustain charge, on ground that indictment did not advise him whether he was accused of stealing, embezzling, or obtaining by false pretenses property of another.

6. Criminal law 🔑823(5)—Instruction defining fraud, not taking into account felonious intent and knowledge of false representations, though erroneous, standing alone, was not prejudicial error, where court further instructed on such elements (Pen. Code § 484, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1046; Civ. Code, § 1572).

In prosecution for grand theft, under Pen. Code, § 484, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1046, instruction defining actual fraud, as term is used in Civ. Code, § 1572, not taking into account felonious intent and knowledge of falsity of representations made, which are necessary to definition of fraud as element in grand theft by fraudulent misrepresentations, though erroneous, standing alone, was not prejudicial error, where court further instructed on need of proof of knowledge and falsity of representations.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Emmet H. Wilson, Judge.

Sam Wickersham was convicted of grand theft, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Marcus L. Roberts and Paul W. Schenck, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Frank Richards, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CRAIG, J. Appellant was charged, by indictment consisting of three counts, with grand theft; it being alleged that he unlawfully and feloniously stole, took, and carried away (1) 32,000 shares of corporate stock, (2) a deed of trust, and (3) $2,500 in money, the property of another. He was convicted upon all charges, a motion for a new trial was presented, which was denied, and he appeals from the judgments and order denying said motion.

[1] The evidence tended to show that the defendant unlawfully obtained possession of the personal property mentioned by representations that he was interested in a valuable mine, which he had incorporated, and in which he would profitably invest for the owners of the securities and money. It subsequently developed that Wickersham had neither a mine nor a corporation, but that he had surreptitiously secured about $70,000 worth of property of the complaining witnesses for his own benefit, and converted it to his personal uses and purposes. It is first contended that appellant was deprived of his constitutional rights by the failure of the indictment to inform him as to the manner in which the people intended to show that he was guilty of grand theft; that is, whether they would attempt to prove that he stole, took, and carried away the property of another, or obtained it by false pretenses, or embezzled it. No demurrer was interposed, and the indictment certainly charges the defendant with a public offense. Appellant relies upon article 6 of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States, which provides that in all criminal prosecutions the accused shall be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation. That this article is intended to be restrictive of the powers of the federal government is pointed out in People v. Wilson, 26 Cal. App. 336, 146 P. 1048.

[2] As far as the evidence is concerned, it is clearly sufficient to justify the jury in believing and deciding that Wickersham committed grand larceny in any of the ways mentioned in section 484 of the Penal Code, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1046, except its last specification. Said section reads as follows:

"Every person who shall feloniously steal, take, carry, lead, or drive away the personal property of another, or who shall fraudulently appropriate property which has been intrusted to him, or who shall knowingly and designedly, by any false or fraudulent representation or pretense, defraud any other person of money, labor, or real or personal property, or who causes or procures others to report falsely of his wealth or mercantile character and by thus imposing upon any person, obtains credit and thereby fraudulently gets or obtains possession of money or property or obtains the labor or service of another, is guilty of theft. * * *"

[3, 4] Much space is devoted in the briefs to an exhaustive outline and discussion of the evidence, but for the purposes of a decision of this proposition we do not deem it necessary or expedient to delineate details. The extremely exaggerated inducements utilized to gain possession of the money and securities from their owners, one of whom was ill in a hospital, coupled with an absolute lack of foundation for expectation of their fulfillment, and the defendant's admissions that he did not use any of the funds or property in the manner promised by him, warranted the conclusion that there had been a preconceived and consummated violation of the law which denounces theft. The jury were justified in finding that the defendant knowingly and designedly, by false and fraudulent representations and pretenses, secured money and personal property, and that he took and carried away and fraudulently appropriated it to his own use, after it was intrusted to him. That such acts constitute stealing has heretofore been decided. People v. Edwards, 72 Cal. App. 102, 236 P. 944. Having obtained possession of the property by fraud, the owners parted with it against their will and without their consent. The fraud used took the place of force, and legal title did not pass.

[5] It is argued that, the indictment having charged that he did "take, steal, and carry away" certain property, proof of one of the other species of theft named in section 484 is insufficient to sustain that charge. Precisely this objection was made in People v. Plum (Cal. App.) 263 P. 862, and People v. Lalor (Cal. App.) 272 P. 794. In each of these the ruling was adverse to the contention here advanced. It is argued that appellant was not advised when arraigned, and was unable to determine throughout the trial, as to whether he had been accused of stealing the property of another, embezzling it, or obtaining possession by false pretenses, or by trick and device, and that he was deprived of all opportunity to prepare for trial, or to defend himself, or to offer instructions to the jury, because the theory of the prosecution was not disclosed. The indictment being sufficient, appellant had all of the information contemplated by the law as to the nature of the charge.

[6] It is contended that the court did not clearly or properly instruct the jury as to the element of fraud necessarily contained in theft as charged in certain counts of the indictment. The court defined actual fraud as the term is used in section 1572 of the Civil Code. It is clear that this instruction, standing alone, would be erroneous. The last two subdivisions do not take into account the felonious intent and knowledge of the falsity of the representations made, which are necessary to the definition of fraud as an element in the species of grand theft here involved. The same is true of another instruction, that "deception, deliberately practiced for the purpose of gaining an unfair advantage of another, is fraud. Goods obtained by such practices are obtained by fraud. One deprived of his property by such means is defrauded." However, what is held in People v. Bowman, 24 Cal. App. 781, 142 P. 495, concerning the instruction just quoted, is applicable to both of these instructions; that is, that, even though erroneous, the defendant was not prejudiced. It is true that the law might properly have been expounded more favorably to the defendant. A principle of law, though substantial and settled, is nevertheless often susceptible of statement in such form as to incline in some degree toward the theory of the prosecution or defense in a given case. In this instance, other instructions given by the court informed the jury sufficiently, we think, of the need of proof of knowledge and falsity of the representations made and of the design to deceive. An instruction might have been so framed as to have stressed these essentials, and thus have insured fuller appreciation of them by the jury. In a number of instructions the need of proof of knowledge and design is mentioned, and a fair construction of them all, we think, requires the conclusion that the jury were sufficiently informed in that regard. Perhaps the most clear statement of the matter is to be found in the following instruction which was given:

"If a person knowingly and designedly, by any false or fraudulent representation or pretense, defrauds any other person of money or property, the offense is theft, but to constitute this offense, four things concur: (1) There must be an intent to defraud; (2) there must be actual fraud committed; (3) false pretenses must be used for the purpose of perpetrating the fraud; and (4) the fraud must be accomplished by means of the false pretenses made use of for the purpose, viz. they must be the cause which induced the owner to part with his property."

The judgments and order appealed from are affirmed.

O'NEIL v. ROSS et al. (Civ. 6644.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. April 16, 1929.

Rehearing Denied May 16, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court June 14, 1929.

1. Wills 🔑58(1)—One may contract to devise or bequeath property in certain way.

One may make a valid and binding contract to devise and bequeath certain property in a certain specified way.

2. Trusts 🔑35(3)—One obtaining legacy or devise in consideration of agreement to do certain things cannot repudiate promise while keeping benefits, but equity will impose trust.

One obtaining a legacy or devise in consideration of agreement to do certain things cannot keep benefits conferred on him by such promise and at the same time repudiate and refuse to carry out the promise, but equity will impose a trust on property bequeathed or devised.

3. Trusts 🔑35(3)—Wife signing addendum to husband's will was obliged to perform agreement therein to accept and carry out provision for her in full of community rights.

Testator's wife, signing addendum to will whereby she consented to provision therein for her in full of all community rights and agreed to carry out and fulfill it, was obliged to carry out such agreement according to its true intent and lawful meaning after her husband's death.

4. Wills 🔑66—Wife's consent to provision for her in lieu of community rights, did not irrevocably bind him to leave identical will, nor give ultimate beneficiaries vested rights during his lifetime.

Addendum to will, whereby testator's wife consented to, and agreed to, carry out provision made for her in full of all claim to community property, did not irrevocably bind testator to leave such identical will, nor give ultimate beneficiaries thereunder any vested rights in provisions for them during his lifetime.

5. Wills 🔑775—Whether codicils revoked provisions for devise of half of share devised to widow to testator's daughters, who predeceased him, held immaterial; provisions for them having lapsed.

Provisions of will for testator's two daughters having failed or lapsed on their deaths during his lifetime, their estates have no interest in subject-matter of action by administratrix thereof to determine her ownership of half of so much of widow's estate as came to it by husband's will, and question whether codicils revoked paragraph stating testator's understanding that widow should devise half of third of estate devised to her to such daughters need not be considered in determining rights of their estates.

6. Wills 🔑692, 693(1)—Widow's power to devise half of share devised to her in fee to testator's daughters held special or particular and mandatory, in view of her agreement to fulfill testamentary provisions.

Power of testator's widow, under will, to devise half of third of estate devised to her in fee to testator's daughters, held special or particular and mandatory, not general and discretionary, even if words were only precatory, in view of addendum, signed by her, whereby she consented to, and agreed to, carry out provision for her in full of all claims to community property.

7. Wills 🔑692, 693(7)—Interest of named appointees of donee of special power is contingent use or executory devise until appointment.

The interest of named persons, who are ultimately to benefit by appointment in exercise of special testamentary power, is a contingent use or executory devise until the legal estate is vested in them by appointment.

8. Powers 🔑35—Special mandatory power is obligatory and enforceable in equity as trust.

A special and mandatory power is obligatory on the donee thereof, and is raised in equity as a trust or power in trust, execution of which may be enforced in equity in the same way as a trust.

9. Powers 🔑39—In default of execution of power, gift to beneficiary is implied, especially where directed by testator.

In default of execution of power by donee, a gift will be implied to beneficiary of intended appointment, especially where original testator has directed a gift over to appointee in case donee fails to exercise power.

★Rehearing denied. Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

10. Powers 🔑36(1)—Power of appointment among children as class is not validly executed by appointment to grandchildren or deceased child's executor.

A power of appointment among children as a class is not validly executed by appointment among grandchildren or to the executor of a deceased child.

11. Wills 🔑523—Devise to named children is devise to them individually, and only those living at dates of will and testator's death take.

A devise to children specifically named is a devise to them as individuals, not as a fluctuating class, and only those alive at date of will take, if they survive testator, while shares of those predeceasing him lapse, in absence of prohibitory statute.

12. Wills 🔑849—Administratrix of estates of daughters predeceasing testator cannot represent surviving child of one of them with respect to his mother's share (Civ. Code, §§ 1310, 1343).

Testamentary disposition to testator's two daughters having failed on their deaths before him, under Civ. Code, § 1343, administratrix of their estates cannot represent surviving son of one of such daughters with respect to his share, if any, under section 1310; since he would take his mother's share, not through her estate, but directly from testator's estate.

13. Powers 🔑41—Appointees of power take from original testator.

The appointees of a power take from the original testator, and not from the appointer.

14. Wills 🔑692, 693(4)—Provision of will for wife's devise of half of her share to testator's daughters did not obligate her to make such will, notwithstanding daughters' deaths before testator.

Paragraph of will, stating testator's understanding that his wife would devise half of share of estate devised to her to testator's daughters by a former marriage, did not obligate wife to make such devise, notwithstanding daughters' deaths during testator's lifetime, as expression of her sense of contractual obligation, so as to prevent lapse of devise to daughters; agreement having become impossible of performance.

15. Appeal and error 🔑839(1)—Equity 🔑39(1)—Appellate court, as well as trial court sitting as court of equity, must determine all controversies necessary to complete determination within limits of its jurisdiction.

It is the duty of the Court of Appeal, as well as of the trial court sitting as court of equity, to determine all controversies with respect to subject-matter necessary to complete determination thereof within limits of its jurisdiction of subject-matter and person.

16. Judgment 🔑243—Whether widow's surviving son took half of her share, which she had agreed to devise to testator's daughters, who predeceased testator, held not determinable in suit to which surviving son of one daughter was not party (Civ. Code § 1310).

Surviving son of daughter, who predeceased testator, not being represented by administratrix of his mother's estate or executors of testator's estate in former's suit against estates of testator and his widow, court has no jurisdiction to determine right of latter's surviving son to half of share, which she agreed to devise to testator's daughters, on ground that she became vested therewith on their deaths before testator in absence of gift over, as such determination would deprive daughter's surviving son of claim to his mother's share, under Civ. Code § 1310, without representation or hearing.

17. Courts 🔑472(4)—Appellate court's jurisdiction to determine whether any provisions of will have been impliedly revoked is advisory on probate court and confined to matters incidentally necessary to determine question properly before court.

Jurisdiction of Court of Appeal to determine whether any provisions of will have been revoked by implication is advisory on the probate court and confined to matters incidentally necessary to determine a question properly before the court.

18. Courts 🔑472(4)—Probate court has jurisdiction of person of surviving son of daughter predeceasing testator to determine whether he or widow's surviving son is entitled to share of former's mother (Civ. Code, § 1310).

Probate court, having jurisdiction of will and estates of testator and his widow, has jurisdiction of person of surviving son of one of two daughters predeceasing testator to determine whether he is entitled to his mother's share, under Civ. Code, § 1310, or whether it passes to widow's surviving son for want of gift over in case of failure of appointment by widow.

19. Courts 🔑472(4)—Appellate court has jurisdiction to determine whether lapsed share of one of two daughters predeceasing testator vests in widow's estate, and amount of advances deductible from share of widow's surviving son and retained in residuary estate passing to other daughter's surviving child represented by testator's executors.

Surviving son of one of two daughters predeceasing testator, being represented by executors of testator's will in respect to his interest as testator's residuary legatee or heir, Court of Appeal has jurisdiction to determine whether lapsed share of the other daughter is vested in widow's estate or remains in testator's estate, and amount of advances to be deducted under will from share of widow's surviving son and retained in residuum of testator's estate.

20. Wills 🔑167—Testator could revoke provisions for daughters predeceasing him and provision for deducting advances to son of widow agreeing to accept provisions for her.

Widow not having purchased property, represented by provisions of husband's will for deduction of advances to her son from his share and devise of half of her share to testator's daughters, who predeceased him, by agreement to accept provisions of will for her in lieu of community property rights, testator could subsequently revoke provisions for his daughters' benefit and those requiring deduction of advances to widow's son.

21. Trusts ⚷35(3)—Contract whereby wife consented to provisions of husband's will for her created no trust in husband or wife respecting property she agreed to devise to husband's daughters.

Contract whereby testator's wife consented to and agreed to carry out provisions of will for her in lieu of community property rights was at most an agreement to make and carry out will, partaking only of nature of will which was ambulatory as to ultimate beneficiaries, and created no trust in testator or wife during his lifetime in respect to property to be devised by her to testator's daughters, who predeceased him.

22. Trusts ⚷140(1)—Execution of will and addendum, whereby testator's wife consented to provisions for her, vested no inheritable property interest in her or persons to whom will provided for devise of her share.

Execution of will and addendum, whereby testator's wife consented to provisions for her in lieu of community property rights, vested no inheritable property interest in wife, nor in her son or testator's two daughters, who predeceased him, under provisions for devise of half of her share to her son and such daughters at her death.

23. Wills ⚷64—Testator could rescind contract, whereby wife consented to provisions of will directing devise of half of her share to testator's daughters, so as to permit her to take such share without limitations, if considered as bilateral contract for benefit of third parties (Civ. Code, § 1559).

Contract, whereby testator's wife consented and agreed to carry out provisions of will for her in lieu of community property rights, vested no property interest in testator's daughters, to whom will provided that she should devise half of her share, and could be rescinded by testator under Civ. Code § 1559, if considered as bilateral contract for benefit of third parties, so as to permit wife to take share of devise to her without limitations; wife's will devising all of property as her own in fee constituting consent to rescission, if necessary.

24. Trusts ⚷35(3)—Wife, to whom testator devised third of estate in fee, with understanding that she should devise half thereof to his daughters, became equitable trustee at his death.

On death of testator, devising third of estate in fee to his wife, with expressed understanding that she should devise half thereof to his daughters, she became in equity a trustee with duty of devising unexpended remainder of her share in accordance with true intent and lawful meaning of such understanding.

25. Trusts ⚷35(3)—Equity will enforce widow's agreement to devise half of her share of estate to testator's daughters by decreeing proper intended beneficiaries to be equitable owners of property intended for them.

Equity will enforce widow's agreement to devise half of share of estate, devised to her, to testator's daughters by decreeing proper intended beneficiaries of such power of appointment to be equitable owners of property intended for them.

26. Trusts ⚷287—Court's sole object in exercising testamentary power in trust is to carry out testator's intent.

The sole object of the court in exercising a power in trust contained in a will is to carry out the intention of testator.

27. Trusts ⚷287—Court need not consider whether provision of will for wife's devise of half of share devised to her in fee to testator's daughters is precatory only, where she agreed to carry out provisions of will.

Where widow agreed, by signing addendum to will, to carry out provisions thereof in lieu of community property rights, court need not determine whether provision of paragraph, expressing testator's understanding that she should devise half of share devised to her to testator's daughters, is precatory only and cannot cut down fee devised to her in preceding paragraph; presumption being that different will would have been made had she not agreed.

28. Wills ⚷601(5)—Devise to wife in fee held not inconsistent with subsequent provision for devise of half of her share to testator's daughters, in view of her agreement to carry out provisions of will.

Devise of fee in one-third of estate to testator's wife held not inconsistent with paragraph expressing testator's understanding that she should devise half of such share to testator's daughters, contrary to rule that devise in fee cannot be cut down by devise of remainder in another part of will, in view of her contract, by signature of addendum to will, to carry out provisions thereof.

29. Wills ⚷601(5)—Devise of fee to widow, on understanding that she should devise half to testator's daughters, without gift over on daughters' deaths before testator, was devise of fee subject to divestiture by appointment.

Devise of fee to testator's widow, on expressed understanding that she should devise half of her share to testator's daughters, without directing gift over in case of failure of power of appointment because of daughters' deaths before testator, was devise of fee title, subject to be divested by intended appointment, so that fee was not divested, but remained in widow to extent that such power failed because of impossibility of performance.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Walter Perry Johnson, Judge.

Action by Lilliam B. O'Neil, as administratrix of the estates of Johanna O'Neil and Nellie Johnson, deceased, against William A. Ross, John I. Peterson, and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants Peterson and others appeal. Modified, and affirmed as modified.

Daniel A. Ryan, of San Francisco, for appellants John I. Peterson and others.

Marion Vecki, of San Francisco, for appellants Anna L. Peterson and others.

James M. Thomas, of San Francisco (George F. Snyder, and A. Walter Allen, both of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant Jennie Wright.

Corbet & Selby, of San Francisco, for respondents Lilliam B. O'Neil and others.

Louis V. Crowley, of San Francisco, for respondent Henry Johnson.

James P. Sweeney, of San Francisco, for defendants William A. Ross and others.

Corbet & Selby, of San Francisco, for executors of estate of Cyrus F. O'Neil.

KOFORD, P. J. The plaintiff is administratrix of the estates of the two decedents named above, who were children of Martin Johnson, deceased. The action is against the estate of their stepmother, Mary Johnson, who at the time of her death was the widow of said Martin Johnson, deceased. The other parties defendant are heirs and legatees under the will of Mary Johnson and the executors in the estate of Martin Johnson, deceased. This is an action in equity to have it determined that plaintiff is the owner of one-half of so much of the estate of Mary Johnson, deceased, as came to her estate by the will of her husband, said Martin Johnson, deceased. Plaintiff recovered judgment, and the defendants, claiming under the will of Mary Johnson, appeal.

The evidence at the trial was almost entirely documentary. It gives the history of the property in question, and shows the manner of its passing from Martin Johnson to his widow, Mary Johnson, which gives rise to this action and the contention of the parties hereto.

Martin Johnson's will was executed May 20, 1914. At that time his wife, Mary Johnson, was living, and also his three children by a former marriage—Johanna, Nellie, and Henry. By his will Martin Johnson gave two-thirds of his estate to his three children, share and share alike—that is, two-ninths to each, and one-third of his estate to his wife. The important provisions of the will in this respect are the following:

"First: I hereby declare that nearly all of the property and estate of which I am now seized or possessed or in which I may be interested is my separate property, and that only a small portion thereof is the community property of my beloved wife and myself, and for the purpose of maintaining my entire estate as one entity I have discussed the foregoing condition of my property relating to separate property and community property with my wife and she agrees with me and is satisfied that the same shall be considered and treated as separate property.

"Second: I hereby give, devise, and bequeath to my said beloved wife, Mary Johnson, in full of all community rights or interest, a one-third (⅓) interest in all the property and estate of which I may die seized or possessed, in consideration of my dearly beloved wife waiving all community property right or claim to my estate for her community interest under the law or community property rights therein."

Third: Two-ninths to his daughter Johanna.

Fourth: Two-ninths to his daughter Nellie.

Fifth: Two-ninths to his son Henry, less advances.

"Sixth: It is my understanding with my beloved wife, Mary Johnson, that of the one-third (⅓) of my estate devised and bequeathed to her remaining at the time of her death she is to devise and bequeath one-half (½) of it to my beloved daughters, Johanna Johnson and Nellie Johnson, in equal shares, and as I have always reposed great confidence in my said wife and know she will comply with my wish, I leave said disposition of that property bequeathed to her for her compliance without further direction; and that the said remaining one-half (½) of said one-third (⅓) of my estate so devised and bequeathed to her remaining at the time of her death be by her devised and bequeathed to her son, John A. Peterson, but there shall be deducted from said bequest and devise to him all sums by me advanced to said John A. Peterson as appears on the books of M. Johnson & Co. at the time of my death, with interest thereon at the rate of six (6) per cent per annum from the respective times when the same was so advanced by me to him."

At the end of the will was an addendum, duly signed by Mary Johnson on the date of the execution of the will. She was present at the time of the execution of the will, and Martin Johnson's attorney read said addendum over to her and explained to her her rights in the community property of her husband and herself and her right to an interest in his property that was not community property, and the nature of both interests, after which, and in his presence, Mary Johnson signed said addendum. "I, Mary Johnson, wife of Martin Johnson, hereby declare that I have read the foregoing will of Martin Johnson and I am satisfied with all of its provisions, and hereby consent to the provision therein made for and relating to me therein and agree to carry out and fulfill the same (italics ours), and consent that all of the estate of my husband, Martin Johnson, is and that the same be treated and considered in the distribution and disposition thereof as his separate property, and I hereby waive all claim to any part thereof as the community property of my said husband and myself, and accept the bequests and devises made to me in said will in full of all claim to community property or community rights. I further declare that I do this with a full knowledge of my property rights which have been explained to me: That I am entitled, in the event of surviving my said husband, to a family allowance and one-half (½) of the community property and to share as an heir in the remaining portion of the estate of my said husband."

Martin Johnson's two daughters, represented by plaintiff herein, predeceased him. They died in November, 1918. His daughter Johanna left surviving a husband and a son Robert Cyrus O'Neil.

In January, 1919, Martin Johnson executed the first codicil to his will. In this codicil he said: "First: By reason of the death of my dearly beloved daughters, Johanna M. O'Neil (formerly Johanna M. Johnson) and Nellie Johnson, the redistribution of my estate as in said will mentioned is required and the devise and bequest to my said daughters and my son, Henry Johnson, is hereby revoked." Martin Johnson by said codicil proceeds to dispose of "all the rest, residue and remainder of my estate, being the two-thirds (⅔) thereof," in trust for his grandson, Robert Cyrus O'Neil, and his son, Henry Johnson, with deductions for advances and spendthrift provisions for the latter. No mention or disposition is made in the first codicil of the one-third of the estate left the wife by the terms of the will, neither is it mentioned in any of the succeeding codicils.

The third codicil revoked the trust and spendthrift provisions for his son Henry and gave the one-third outright to him "for the reason that he has shown himself to be able, willing, desirous and capable of caring for and managing his property, and believing he should share equally with my grandson in my estate."

The remaining codicils may be omitted. Martin Johnson died June 14, 1921. His estate has not been closed, and none of it has been distributed except certain land in Monterey county which went to his son, Henry Johnson, as a part of his one-third share. The inventory and appraisement in his estate showed that he left real and personal property appraised at $206,838.62. Mary Johnson died March 12, 1922, and her estate is also still open and not distributed. One month before she died she executed a will by which, excepting some cash legacies to some of the defendants and appellants, she willed all her estate to her son John Peterson and wife, without deduction for advances and without mention of her deceased stepdaughters. Thus her son John received not only the one-half of the property which he was to have received according to the original plan, but also the advances and the one-half part which, according to that plan, was to have gone to the two daughters of Martin Johnson, but who predeceased both of their parents.

Thus the question is presented: Could Mary Johnson thus devise all of the property to her own son? The judgment appealed from decided that she could not—that upon her death the equitable title to one-half the property, less advances, vested in John Peterson and the other one-half in the estates of the deceased daughters of Martin Johnson.

Upon the documentary evidence introduced, the court found that on the 20th day of May, 1914, Martin Johnson was the owner of valuable properties, being largely his separate property, and on said date he made and entered into a certain contract in writing with his said wife, Mary Johnson; that the following is a copy of said contract, viz.: Here follows a complete copy of the last will and testament of Martin Johnson without codicils, immediately followed by a full copy of the addendum to said will signed by Mary Johnson. The findings then continue: That in and by said contract it was agreed by and between said Martin Johnson and his wife, Mary Johnson, as follows: (a) That most of his property was separate property; that only a small portion thereof was community property, but that all of said property was to be considered and treated as separate property; (b) that Martin Johnson would will to Mary Johnson a one-third interest of all his estate in consideration for which Mary Johnson agreed to surrender her community rights; that she would have the use and benefit of said property as long as she lived; and that at the time of her death she agreed to devise and bequeath whatever of said property was remaining as follows: One-half thereof to Johanna Johnson and Nellie Johnson, daughters of Martin Johnson. "And she purchased the right to devise and bequeath the other one-half thereof to John A. Peterson, her son by a former marriage, deducting from the one-half thereof going to John A. Peterson all sums of money advanced to said Peterson by said Martin Johnson up to the time of his death, as the same appeared on the books of M. Johnson & Co., together with interest thereon at the rate of six per cent per annum from the times the said several amounts were so advanced by Martin Johnson. The said Mary Johnson was thereby given the right and power to transmit to her son, John A. Peterson, a substantial part of Martin Johnson's estate."

From the foregoing findings it appears that the court not only found that Mary Johnson agreed to waive her community claims and to carry out the provisions of the will of her husband, but also that her husband, Martin Johnson, agreed in said contract to make the identical will therein set forth, at least in so far as any rights or benefits are therein and thereby conferred upon his wife, Mary Johnson, and her son.

[1] It is well settled by the decisions in this state that one may make a valid and binding contract to devise or bequeath certain property in a certain specified way. Morrison v. Land, 169 Cal. 580, at 584, 147 P. 259; DeLaurencel v. De Boom, 48 Cal. 581; Curdy v. Berton, 79 Cal. 420, 21 P. 858, 5 L. R. A. 189, 12 Am. St. Rep. 157; Chase v. Stevens, 34 Cal. App. 99, 166 P. 1035.

[2, 3] The findings of the court went further, perhaps, than the evidence demanded, in that it is found that by said contract Martin Johnson agreed that he would dispose of his property by will in that manner. It would be sufficient for the purposes of this case, had the findings merely determined that at the date of the transaction the contract was unilateral only. The contract is found to be entirely in writing, and we do not find in it any written words over the signature of Martin Johnson by which he bound himself irrevocably to make that identical will with respect to the provisions under consideration here. It seems more reasonable to interpret the transaction to mean that Mary Johnson agreed to do certain things if Martin Johnson made the will and left it until the time of his death. Most of the authorities on contracts to make a will show that one of the parties to the contract has performed. In such cases equitable principles are invoked. One who has obtained a legacy or devise in consideration of an agreement to do certain things is not permitted to keep the benefits conferred upon him by such promise and at the same time repudiate and refuse to carry out the promise. Equity will impose a trust upon such property. After the death of Martin Johnson, his widow was obliged to carry out her agreement according to its true intent and lawful meaning. O'Donnell v. Murphy, 17 Cal. App. 625 at 629, 120 P. 1076.

[4] To hold that, by said transaction between Martin Johnson and wife, the former thereby irrevocably bound himself to leave the said identical last will and testament at the time of his death, would be going further than we are willing to go. That would mean that Martin Johnson had no right thereafter to make a different will or to revoke the one he made no matter what might happen making such a course desirable. Equity and justice would be well satisfied by holding that, if Martin Johnson had revoked or changed the said will during his lifetime after the said arrangement with his wife, it would simply have had the effect of releasing his wife from her promises and have given her the right to claim her full community interest and make whatever other claim she wished during the administration of her husband's estate.

The difference between these two interpretations of the contract is not vital to the present case because Martin Johnson performed his part and did in fact make and leave the said will as contemplated, at least to the extent of performing the promises moving to Mary Johnson. This is true, even though it be determined that he revoked certain parts of his will, as contended for by appellant. The claimed revocation is of such a nature as to increase rather than diminish the estate devised to his wife, it being claimed that by his codicils he showed a testamentary intention to give her outright a fee simple title in the said one-third without any requirement as to how she should devise the unexpended remainder thereof. We hold herein that, if he wished to do so, no contract obligation to his wife prevented Martin Johnson from revoking the provisions of his will, including paragraph 6, beneficial to his own two daughters or not beneficial to his wife's son, John Peterson; and that the contract created no direct obligation between himself and the said ultimate beneficiaries giving them any vested rights in such provisions during his lifetime. If there is an exception to this last statement with respect to John Peterson, it should be noted that no claim of revocation is made respecting the provisions beneficial to John Peterson. In passing we wish to say that there is at least considerable force to the argument that the codicils made by Martin Johnson evince an intention to revoke the benefits of paragraph 6, beneficial to his two daughters, but we are unable to find in the codicils anything indicating a testamentary intention to forgive or release the requirement that there be deducted from John Peterson's share advances made to him by the testator. In this opinion we do not decide whether Martin Johnson revoked paragraph 6 of his will for reasons which are hereinafter set out.

[5] Whether or not said Martin Johnson, by any of the five codicils expresses an intention to revoke the provisions of paragraph 6 of his will, which were beneficial to his two daughters, is a matter which we need not consider in determining the rights of the estates of the said two daughters, because we have concluded that the provisions for the said two daughters have lapsed by reason of their death occurring not only before the death of their stepmother, Mary Johnson, but also before the death of their father, Martin Johnson. If the provisions for the benefit of the said two daughters failed or lapsed by reason of their having predeceased both parents, it follows that their estates have no interest in the subject-matter of this action.

[6, 7] Martin Johnson's will devised and bequeathed to Mary Johnson a fee with a special power to devise and bequeath the same at her death to certain specially named and designated children. If this special power was not mandatory, the contract made it so as far as it operated. The will did not undertake in express words to give her merely a life estate. The will did not give her discretion in the matter of devising the property, and, therefore, the power is special or particular and not general and discretionary. Although the words of the will in this respect may be only precatory (Underhill on the Law of Wills, vol. II, §§ 792 and 795), they being directed to the testator's wife and agreed to in writing by the wife, they should be considered as mandatory. "The interest of the persons named who are in the end to benefit by the appointment, if the power is special, is a contingent use or an executory devise until, by the appointment, the legal estate becomes vested in them. This equitable interest they take under the original instrument by which the power is created, and not by the appointing instrument." Underhill on the Laws of Wills, vol. II, § 798.

[8, 9] A special and mandatory power is obligatory upon the donee and is raised in equity as a trust or a power in trust, and the execution of that power may be enforced in equity in the same way as a trust. In default of the execution of the power by the donee, a gift will be implied to the beneficiary of the intended appointment, especially where the original testator has directed a gift over to the appointee in case the donee fails to exercise the power of appointment. Underhill on the Law of Wills, vol. II, § 802. From the same section we quote the following:

"A distinction is made, in the event of a total failure to exercise a power, between the case of an out and out gift to a class of persons with a power in some third person to appoint in what proportion each member of the class shall take, and a mere direction to the donee of a power to appoint by his will the property given to him among the class. In the former case, where the donee fails or neglects to execute the power, and there is no disposition of the property to strangers in default of an appointment, the gift is regarded as a vested gift to the members of the class who are living at the death of the testator, subject to being devested or diminished by the subsequent execution of the power by the donee, and upon a total default of an appointment the fund will be equally divided among all members of the class who were living at the death of the testator.

"But where there is no gift in express terms in the will to the class directly, but only a power of appointment is created directing the donee to divide by will property among the class, only those persons are objects of the power and take in default of an appointment who survive the donee when his will becomes effective at his death. In the latter case the court will imply an intention to give the property, on a default of an appointment, to those persons only among whom the donee might have distributed the property, and on the failure or the neglect of the donee to exercise the power it will be exercised accordingly among those persons. Where property is given to A. for life, with a power in him to devise the same to his children, but no express devise to the latter, nor any devise to them or strangers in default of an appointment, the court will execute the power among a class composed of A.'s children living at his death, and not among the children of A. living at the death of the donor of the power. The class will be ascertained and the power executed by the court upon a default in its execution by the donee as of the date of his death, excluding from its operation all persons who, though they would have been members of the class had they survived, have died before the donee."

In the instant case we are not concerned with the question of whether the provisions for the two daughters would have failed, if they had died before the donee and appointor but after the donor, because in this case the daughters predeceased both.

Smith v. Hardesty, 88 Md. 387, 41 A. 788, relied upon by respondent, is controlled by the principle that there the testator himself made a gift over in case of the failure of appointment, and also by the principle that, although the children of the donee and appointor died before her, yet they survived the testator and donor. It was held that, upon the failure to exercise the appointment, the title went to the children of the only intended appointee who left children, but in that case the testator himself made a direct devise to the children of all property which the donee failed to devise, so that it vested in the named appointee by the will and death of the original testator which occurred during the life of that intended appointee, and, so having vested, it descended.

[10, 11] A power of appointment among children as a class is not validly executed by appointment among grandchildren. Underhill on the Law of Wills, § 803; Sugden on Powers, vol. II, p. *253. Nor is any appointment authorized to the executor to a deceased child. Sugden on Powers, vol. II, p. *260; see, also, pages *264 and *271.

"* * * A devise to children who are specifically named is a devise to them as individuals and not as a fluctuating class. Those who are alive at the date of the will corresponding to the names, if they survive the testator, will take, but no others, and the shares of those who predecease him will lapse in the absence of a statute preventing lapse." Underhill on the Law of Wills, vol. II, p. 720, § 552. The estates of the two daughters, therefore, took nothing under the will of their father.

[12] The last quotation leads us to consider the effect of Civil Code section 1343 and section 1310. The former section provides that, if a devisee dies during the life of a testator, the testamentary disposition to him fails unless an intention appears to substitute some other in his place, except as provided in section 1310. Section 1310 provides that, if devisee is a child or relation of the testator and dies before the testator or even before the will is executed, leaving lineal descendants, then such descendants take the estate given by the will in the same manner as the devisee would have done had he survived the testator. These statutory provisions are of no benefit to the plaintiff in this case who is the administratrix of the estates of both of the deceased daughters. The testamentary disposition to the two daughters failed. If it be true that in the instant case Robert Cyrus O'Neil, the only surviving child of Johanna O'Neil, would take his mother's share by the operation of Civil Code section 1310, then he takes it directly from the estate of Martin Johnson, deceased, and not through the estate of his mother. Estate of Parsell, 190 Cal. 454, 213 P. 40, 25 A. L. R. 1561. Therefore, the administratrix of his mother's eestate cannot represent him with respect to his share, if any, and she is not entitled to invoke the jurisdiction of a court of equity in his behalf or to bind him in this litigation with respect to his share, if any, which would come to him by force of Civil Code section 1310.

[13, 14] Respondent claims that, where a devise is made in pursuance of a valid contract for a good or valuable consideration, as for a payment of a debt or for services and the like, the devise does not lapse upon the devisee predeceasing the testator. Respondent claims in one part of her brief that Mary Johnson should have carried out her agreement literally, and, notwithstanding the death of the two daughters, should have left a will devising to them one-half of the unspent remainder of the property devised to her by her husband; that in such case Mary Johnson would have been making a devise to them, not as her own gift or bounty, but expressing her sense of obligation by reason of her contract; that, therefore, such devise by her would not lapse, but would pass to the administratrix of the estates of the two daughters. We cannot agree with this argument. It is opposed to the principle that the appointees of a power take from the original testator and not from the appointor. Alexander, Commentaries on Wills, vol. II. § 700; vol. I, § 280; Underhill on Law of Wills, § 798; Lederer v. Pearce (C. C. A.) 266 F. 497, 18 A. L. R. 1466; Estate of Bowditch, 189 Cal. 377, 208 P. 282, 23 A. L. R. 735. It would be more proper to say, therefore, that such a devise by Mary Johnson would be expressing the bounty and parental affection of Martin Johnson as his agent. Furthermore, to say that such a devise by Mary Johnson would have been given out of a sense of obligation is to assume that first it must be done under her contract and then to say that, since it must be done, it does not lapse. There are no words used nor intention shown that Mary Johnson should make any devise to deceased persons. The agreement of Mary Johnson to devise one-half of the unspent portion of the property to the two daughters, as well as any obligation to do so apart from her contract, became impossible of performance because they predeceased both parents. 31 Cyc. pages 1052 and 1053.

The foregoing would seem to dispose of every claim which the plaintiff as administratrix of the two daughters' estates is entitled to make. The trial court, however, came to a different conclusion holding that the interests of the said two daughters did not lapse, but vested in their estates, and, because it had jurisdiction of all necessary parties upon that theory, it proceeded further to determine all the legal and equitable titles to the said property. In so doing, the court decided that John A. Peterson, also known as John I. Peterson, who was the principal devisee and legatee of his mother's will, could take no more of said property than was originally intended for him at the time of the transaction between his mother and his stepfather, Martin Johnson. For several different reasons John Peterson, who is appealing from the decree of the trial court, claims that his mother was vested with a fee simple in all of the property devised and bequeathed to her by Martin Johnson. He does not complain that his wife was made a cotenant with him in the property attempted to be given him by his mother's will, neither does he complain of the cash bequests made by his mother to several of the parties defendant who are also appellants here. He, of course, complains of the decree of the trial court which decrees that he shall have only one-half of the unexpended remainder of the mother's estate derived from Martin Johnson, less advances made by Martin Johnson, together with interest on the same amounting to $9,536.58.

[15] It is the duty of this court, as well as it was the duty of the trial court sitting as a court of equity, to determine all controversies with respect to the subject-matter necessary to a complete determination of the matter, but, of course, within the limits of its jurisdiction of subject-matter and person. 10 Cal. Jur. 496, 498; Barber v. Superior Court, 43 Cal. App. 221, 184 P. 952; Swan v. Talbot, 152 Cal. 142, 94 P. 238, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1006. Some of the grounds of appeal urged by appellant, John Peterson, are beyond the limits of our jurisdiction either of subject-matter or person.

[16] Having determined that the provisions of the original arrangement for the two daughters of Martin Johnson have lapsed and failed, we find John Peterson, of course, claiming that, inasmuch as the will undertook to devise his mother a fee, and there is no gift over in case of the failure of appointment, that his mother became immediately vested with that half portion which would have otherwise gone to the two deceased daughters of Martin Johnson. We may consider this with respect to that share which would have gone to Nellie Johnson who died without issue, because we have sufficient jurisdiction. With respect to that part, however, which would have gone to Johanna Johnson and who died leaving her surviving an only son, Robert Cyrus O'Neil, we find a limitation upon our jurisdiction of person. If Robert Cyrus O'Neil wishes to claim that by force of Civil Code, § 1310, he is entitled to the share which would have gone to his mother Johanna, had she survived Martin Johnson, then a controversy arises between John Peterson and the estate of his mother on the one hand, and Robert Cyrus O'Neil on the other hand claiming in his original right directly and not through his mother's estate or the administratrix thereof. In this controversy he is not represented by the plaintiff administratrix for such property would not pass through his mother's estate. Neither is Robert Cyrus O'Neil represented in that controversy by the executors of the estate of his grandfather, Martin Johnson, deceased. They no more represent him than they do John Peterson or the estate of Mary Johnson deceased, in that controversy. Estate of Parsell, 190 Cal. 456, 213 P. 40, 25 A. L. R. 1561. Therefore, should we now decide that Robert Cyrus O'Neil had no interest in this part of the subject-matter of this action, it would have the effect of taking from him his claim to property of considerable value without his having been represented or without having had his day in court.

[17, 18] It is also the claim of John Peterson upon this appeal that by some of the five codicils to the last will and testament of Martin Johnson, deceased, he expressed an intention to and did revoke those provisions of his will contained in paragraph 6 beneficial to the daughters. In other words he argues for such a revocation of certain parts of the will as would make the devise to his mother an unlimited fee instead of a mere life estate with power of appointment. With respect to this contention, our jurisdiction of person is also limited by reason of Robert Cyrus O'Neil's not being a party to this action nor represented. Our jurisdiction to determine whether any of the provisions of said will have been revoked by implication is advisory upon the probate court, and is confined to those matters that are incidentally necessary to determine a question which is properly before the court. 11 Cal. Jur. 266, 267; Adams v. Prather, 176 Cal. 33, 167 P. 534; Burton v. Burton, 79 Cal. 490, 21 P. 847; 12 Cal. Jur. 203. This may be a matter exclusively within the jurisdiction of the probate court. But if we assume jurisdiction of the subject-matter and proceeded to decide that the provisions of Martin Johnson's will which may be beneficial to Robert Cyrus O'Neil have been revoked by implication, we would also be deciding upon Robert Cyrus O'Neil's claim of property without his being a party to this suit and without his being represented. He is entitled to his day in court upon that question so far as it affects him. Of course the probate court, having jurisdiction of the will and estate of Martin Johnson, deceased, and also the probate court having jurisdiction of the estate of Mary Johnson, deceased, has jurisdiction of the person of Robert Cyrus O'Neil in determining who are entitled to take by distribution the property of either one of those estates.

[19] While we do not have jurisdiction to declare Robert Cyrus O'Neil's rights under Civil Code, § 1310, nor his rights under that section as they would be affected by a revocation of the provisions of paragraph 6 beneficial to his mother, there are other aspects of the case in which his interest as a residuary legatee or heir of Martin Johnson, deceased, are indirectly affected and in which the executors of the latter's will represent him. Among these are whether the lapsed share originally intended for Nellie Johnson is vested in Mary Johnson's estate or remains in Martin Johnson's estate and the determination which the trial court made of the amount of advances which are to be deducted from John Peterson's share and retained in the residuum of Martin Johnson's estate.

The jurisdiction of this court is to interpret and declare the rights of the parties before it within the limits of its jurisdiction. We proceed therefore to interpret the contract, declaring the rights in said contract between those who are parties to this action or represented, determining what interest, if any vested by said contract, in whom it vested and when, and also determining what provisions of said will, if any, Martin Johnson was not prohibited by said contract from revoking.

[20] The contract in its essence was that Mary Johnson waived her community property rights in consideration of Martin Johnson's giving her a one-third interest in his estate which she was at liberty to use, both income and corpus during her lifetime as she saw fit, with the privilege of devising one-half the remainder less advances to her own son, John Peterson, and with the duty and obligation of devising the remaining one-half of the property to the two named daughters of her husband. She was interested in what she was to receive during her lifetime and what she could do for her own son upon her death. This is the most, if anything, she purchased—the consideration moving to her. The provision requiring deduction of advances made to John Peterson, and the provision requiring a devise to the two daughters of Martin Johnson, were not considerations moving to Mary Johnson. She did not purchase them. The provisions last mentioned represented property which was in effect withheld from her and neither granted nor promised to her by Martin Johnson. These provisions represented property remaining in Martin Johnson. To say that she purchased the property represented by these said last-named provisions by her agreement to be content with the provisions in the will made for her is contrary to the facts as disclosed by the findings, by the will, and by what is known of the wishes of persons similarly situated. If we should concede that Mary Johnson by her agreement purchased an interest in the property for the two daughters of Martin Johnson by agreeing to be content with the one-third as devised and bequeathed to her and by not demanding more, the same thing could be said with respect to all the remaining two-thirds of the estate of Martin Johnson thus released for all the remaining devisees and legatees amongst whom it is divided by Martin Johnson's will. This, of course, was foreign to their intentions. From this it follows that Martin Johnson, if he wished to do so after the execution of his will and the addendum thereto, could revoke the provisions in his will made for the benefit of his said two daughters, and that for the same reason, if he wished to do so, he could also revoke the provisions requiring deduction of advances made to John Peterson. On the other hand, he could not, if he wished to do so, revoke any provision which would injuriously affect the benefits conferred by the will upon Mary Johnson personally or upon her son John Peterson. No claim is made that he did the latter.

What we have said about the right of Martin Johnson to revoke certain provisions of his will is said while assuming that the contract at the time it was made was a bilateral and irrevocable contract upon the part of Martin Johnson. Considered as a unilateral contract it should be understood as declaring what Martin Johnson had to perform in order to make it obligatory upon his widow to carry out her promises after his death.

[21, 22] Respondent claims that the contract created an express voluntary trust which could not be revoked without the consent of the trustor, Martin Johnson, the trustee, Mary Johnson, and the beneficiaries, the two daughters of the former and the son of the latter. The agreement was at most merely an agreement to make a will on the part of the one and an agreement to carry it out on the part of the other, and, therefore, it partook only of the nature of a will which was ambulatory so far as the ultimate beneficiaries were concerned. Buckley v. Gray, 110 Cal. 339, 42 P. 900, 31 L. R. A. 862, 52 Am. St. Rep. 88. There was no conveyance. The contract, as such, did not convey any property to Mary Johnson and she, therefore, was not a trustee during the lifetime of her husband. Nichols v. Emery, 109 Cal. 323, 41 P. 1089, 50 Am. St. Rep. 43. Neither was it a declaration of trust on the part of Martin Johnson making himself trustee. It was not the understanding of the parties to those documents, nor is it the law, that at the instant the said will and addendum were executed there vested an inheritable property interest in Mary Johnson nor in John Peterson nor in Martin Johnson's two daughters.

[23] The contract if considered as a bilateral contract made for the benefit of third parties did not vest any property interest in the daughters at the time it was made. Considered as such a contract, it could be rescinded under the provisions of Civil Code, § 1559. If Martin Johnson wished to rescind the contract in so far as its provisions were for the benefit of his two daughters and permit the surviving wife to take one-third of his estate without any limitations, he could do so in this case, for, in so far as the consent of the other contracting party would be necessary to such rescission, it is found in the will of Mary Johnson where she undertook to devise all of the property as her own in fee. The contract, however, was not made expressly for the benefit of the two daughters and was not enforceable by them during Martin Johnson's life. His two daughters were only incidentally benefited by the contract with respect to their possible ultimate share in the one-third part of his estate in substantially the same way as those who were to share in the remaining two-thirds of his property.

With respect to the share of John Peterson it is immaterial whether any interest therein vested at the date of the contract, because no attempt to revoke his devise and bequest was made nor claimed by his adversaries, and because in any event his proper intended interest has vested in him as from Martin Johnson's estate. We need not, therefore, compare a wife's promise to waive certain community property rights and to carry out her husband's will as a consideration for the latter's promise to make a certain will with cases where the devisee has taken possession and made expenditures and assumed obligations upon the faith of that promise such as the case of Ballard v. Camplin, 161 Ind. 16, 67 N. E. 506, cited by respondent.

[24-26] No interest having vested in the two daughters during the lifetime of Martin Johnson, there was no trust until his death. At that time, in so far as he had devised a fee title to his widow, for purposes of enforcement, she was considered in equity a trustee with the duty of devising the unexpended remainder in accordance with the true intent and lawful meaning of the written understanding by which she obtained that fee. To the extent that she may have failed to carry out said agreement and to execute the power of appointment contained in Martin Johnson's will, equity will enforce the agreement by decreeing that the proper intended beneficiaries of that power are the equitable owners of the property intended for them. The sole object of the court in exercising the power in trust, which is contained in a will, is to carry out the intention of the testator. Underhill on the Law of Wills, § 802.

Having determined that the share intended for Nellie Johnson has lapsed and has become impossible of performance, and that the same thing is true as to Johanna Johnson O'Neil's share in case the probate court does not determine that it has vested in Robert Cyrus O'Neil, it is necessary to determine in whom the share intended for said daughters vested to the extent that said share or shares have lapsed. We consider three points in this connection. First: Whether the provisions of paragraph 6 of the will are precatory, and for that reason Mary Johnson at the death of her husband became vested with a fee title free from any condition or limitation. Second: The same contention is made, even though the provisions of paragraph 6 are held not to be precatory; it being claimed that a devise of a remainder after a devise of the fee is nugatory. Third: The two foregoing points are urged irrespective of whether the two daughtrs predeceased their father or not, but we consider them in connection with the fact that the daughters did predecease their father.

We need not consider the contention that Martin Johnson revoked the provisions of paragraph 6 of his will intending thereby to devise his widow a fee-simple title in the one-third interest of his estate any further than to state that in such case, of course, the title vested in his widow under the terms of his will at his death.

[27] 1. In passing upon the first two contentions last named, it must be borne in mind that we are interpreting a contract rather than a will. The agreement of Mary Johnson to carry out the provisions of the will make it unnecessary for us to determine whether the provisions of paragraph 6, if they stood alone, would be precatory only and could not cut down the fee devised to her in paragraph 2. She agreed to carry out and fulfill the provisions of the will relating to her, and this agreement could have no application if it did not refer to paragraph 6. She could agree to carry out her husband's wish and understanding as well as his command. As said in DeLaurencel v. De Boom, 48 Cal. 581, 585, it is to be assumed that, had she not agreed, a different will would have been made. Specifically, in this case he could have given his wife a life estate only with remainder to the children in express words. This feature distinguishes this case from those cases where no express contract was made by the devisee such as, Tillman v. Ogren, 182 App. Div. 672, 169 N. Y. S. 949; Estate of Marti, 132 Cal. 667, 61 P. 964, 64 P. 1071, and Estate of Hull, 77 Cal. App. 792, 247 P. 1093.

[28] 2. The same thing can be said about appellants' argument that a devise in fee in one part of the will cannot be cut down by a devise of the remainder. We have here a contract to perform certain things with that fee. The devise of the fee, therefore, is not inconsistent with paragraph 6 for that devise is a part of the performance of that contract. We cannot follow appellants in their argument, which amounts to a contention that we must first interpret the will by itself and that, if we find that, by reason of its precatory words, or attempted devise of a remainder following the devise of a fee, the provisions of paragraph 6 are nugatory, and Mary Johnson could keep the whole title free from any obligation to carry out paragraph 6. This is the equivalent of saying that she agreed to carry out only those provisions of the will which would be enforced by the probate court, or that she contracted to do only those things which the law would compel her to do without the said contract. Such a contention is in effect an argument that she assumed no contract obligations whatever.

[29] 3. In determining the title to the lapsed share of Nellie Johnson and the shares of Johanna Johnson O'Neil in case it has not passed to Robert Cyrus O'Neil under Civil Code § 1310, we are not guided by the contract, because it made no provision for such contingency. In this contingency the property remains as it is devised by the will according to its lawful meaning. The will did not expressly limit Mary Johnson to a life estate only. Neither did it do so by implication by making a gift over in case of the failure of the power of appointment. This case is, therefore, not governed by Hardy v. Mayhew, 158 Cal. 97, 100, 101, 110 P. 113, 115 (139 Am. St. Rep. 73), where it is said: "The distinction between the case of an intended gift of an absolute title to one with an attempted gift over of simply 'what remains unexpended' by the donee at the time of his death, where the gift over is void because in derogation of the absolute fee given the first taker, and the case of a gift of a life estate with a power of disposition for a particular purpose only, with an express gift over of what remains unused for such purpose, is recognized by all the authorities." The last-cited case and the numerous authorities reviewed therein are cases in which either the testator expressly limited the interest of the first taker to a life estate or did the same thing by expressly devising the unexpended remainder himself directly by his will, so that in no event could the first taker have more than a life estate with power to use the principal for certain purposes during his life. In the present case Martin Johnson not only devised a fee to his widow, but also failed to direct a gift over by his own will in case of failure of the power of appointment by its becoming impossible of performance. The devise to Mary Johnson was, therefore, a fee title subject to be divested by the intended appointment and to the extent that the power of appointment failed by becoming impossible; the fee was not divested, but remained in Mary Johnson. Underhill on Law of Wills, vol. II, §§ 876, 868; Alexander, Commentaries on Wills, vol. II, § 1045; Estate of Marti, 132 Cal. 666, 672, 61 P. 964, 64 P. 1071. Upon the death of Martin Johnson the share intended for his deceased daughter, Nellie Johnson, vested in his widow, and also the share of Johanna Johnson O'Neil unless her son, Robert Cyrus O'Neil took it under Civil Code, § 1310. It did not remain in his own estate, because his will does not show an intention that in any event his widow should not have more than a life estate.

We conclude that, to the extent that the probate court, having jurisdiction of the administration of the estate of Martin Johnson, deceased, may determine that said testator revoked any of the said provisions of his will beneficial to his own two daughters, or even to his stepson, John Peterson, that part of the unexpended remainder of the one-third portion of his estate devised and bequeathed to his widow affected by such revocation vested upon his death in Mary Johnson in her lifetime and is distributable to her estate in fee. That to the extent that said provisions may be found by said court not to have been revoked, such one-third portion of his estate remaining unexpended, after deducting for Mary Johnson's estate the portion she took or used during the brief period of her survivorship after Martin Johnson's death, has vested as follows: The one-fourth interest intended for Nellie Johnson, now deceased, in Mary Johnson's estate; the one-fourth interest intended for Johanna Johnson O'Neil in Mary Johnson's estate, provided the probate court decides that Robert Cyrus O'Neil does not take it under Civil Code, § 1310, otherwise in said Robert Cyrus O'Neil; the one-half interest intended for John Peterson in said John Peterson, and is distributable to him directly from Martin Johnson's estate, but first deducting therefrom advances and interest to the date of Mary Johnson's death as determined by the trial court in the sum of $9,635.58, which sum remains the property of the estate of Martin Johnson, deceased.
